Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 1. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1880. WHOLE NO. 1

Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

[illegible]Y FRIDAY MORNING

[illegible] time to meet the early mails.

[illegible] the Latest Foreign and Provincial [illegible] Local Intelligence, County Busine[illegible] [illegible]rcial Matters and an Instruct[illegible] [illegible]any.

[illegible] in advance, $1.50 in three months [illegible] not paid till end of the year. No p[illegible] continued until all arrearages are [illegible] at the option of the publisher, [illegible] refusing papers without paying [illegible] held responsible for the subscrip[illegible] [illegible] they comply with the rules.

[illegible]ters addressed to the Editor must [illegible] paid, otherwise they may not be [illegible]m the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

[illegible]mn, one year	$50 00
[illegible] do	30 00
[illegible] do	18 00
[illegible] do	10 00
do	4 60
[illegible] and under, first insertion	50
[illegible] subsequent insertion	15
[illegible] to ten lines, first insertion	75
[illegible] subsequent insertion	25
[illegible] lines, first insertion per line	8
[illegible] subsequent insertion	2

[illegible] number of lines to be reckoned by [illegible] occupied measured by a scale of [illegible]revier. Advertisements without directions will be published till for[illegible] charged accordingly. All transitory [illegible]ements must be in the office of pub[illegible] by 11 o'clock on the Thursday [illegible] preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

ALL SORTS.

Life.

[illegible] live but one life here," he said;
[illegible] soul needs love, the body bread."
[illegible] the needy and the poor
[illegible]e, nor turned one from the door
[illegible] asked admittance to his heart.
[illegible], with a blessing, did depart.
[illegible] man will find, when death arrives,
[illegible] lived a part of many lives.

Have You?

[illegible]ve you ever helped the drunkard
To become a sober man?
[illegible] you have not, from this moment
Do for him whate'er you can;
[illegible]e's your brother—though so fallen—
And his "keeper" you should be;
[illegible]lking, coaxing, helping, loving,
Is the work for you and me.

[illegible] is ended and autumn is here,
[illegible]gh for the present we're not very far in it;
[illegible] are back again—awfully dear;
[illegible] they are back, for the month has an R in it.

[illegible] many young men there are who like [illegible] turn white when they pop.

[illegible]enerally takes two to make a quarrel, [illegible]ery often one mother-in-law is sufficient.

[illegible]REAT many men are cottage built; that [illegible]y, they have but one story. And they [illegible] ever telling it.

[illegible] you ever know a man who talked of himself who did not have a poor [illegible]t for his conversation?

[illegible] ever know a man named Jimmy," said a little [illegible] "who would you vote for, Hancock or Garfield?" "I'd go with [illegible]."

[illegible]ADWOOD mine played base-ball with [illegible] of nitro-glycerine [illegible]. The only trace of him was a hole in [illegible].

[illegible] your father in?" asked a landlord, in [illegible] back rent, from a little boy. "No, [illegible] suppose you go up stairs and ask him." [illegible]

[illegible]ural Religion: Bishop (reproving [illegible] page)—"Wretched boy! who [illegible]?" [illegible] you, my lord."

[illegible] of 12 years, dining at his uncle's, [illegible] a good dinner that his aunt observed: "Johnny, you appear to eat well." [illegible] replied the urchin, "I've been [illegible] eating all my life."

[illegible]ting of the prodigal son, on exhibition in one of the Paris galleries, is [illegible] as follows: "The prodigal son in [illegible] his parents." [illegible]

[illegible] Bachelor's Ball lately given at Kensington House, in London, the Princess of [illegible] who danced several times, wore a [illegible] gold brocade and satin, with deep [illegible] fringes, and yellow roses with [illegible] in her hair.

[illegible] her little grandson: "Go [illegible] my child, you look unhappy. Go [illegible] to the yard and feed the [illegible] and take a boat ride." "Thanks, [illegible]ma, I'd rather go to the balcony and [illegible]."

[illegible]ARATOGA has now another diamond lady, [illegible] not being enough. The present candidate [illegible]Mrs. Bell, of California. Her diamonds [illegible] said to be worth about two hundred and [illegible] thousand dollars, and she is followed [illegible] valet who is their especial custodian.

[illegible]EDDY MILES, of Cleveland, aged four, [illegible]mpanied his parents to church. On en[illegible]ng they knelt and bowed low. As they [illegible]med their seats, thus Master Fred: "Is [illegible] 'fraid 'cause God is here?" "Why, no, [illegible]!" "Then what makes you hide?"

[illegible]RGYMEN in Philadelphia who are un[illegible] to get away to the watering-places are [illegible]ching what they call sermonettes, [illegible] little ones, not intended to save [illegible], but to simply keep his majesty from [illegible]ving in and occupying the churches dur[illegible] the dull season.

[illegible] the death of his mother, Lady Cowper, [illegible] had property in five counties, one es[illegible] alone paying fifty thousand dollars a [illegible], the Viceroy of Ireland becomes one of [illegible] wealthiest men in Great Britain, and, it [illegible]aid, will probably resign, in order to look [illegible] his revenues.

[illegible]UST as the visitors in the country and at [illegible] seaside get fairly used to washing their [illegible] in a tin basin of water and wiping [illegible] on a very familiar towel, it is time to [illegible] up and go home, where the comforts of [illegible] are abundant. The season isn't quite [illegible] enough to permit of having a real good [illegible]

[illegible] son of a distinguished Paris surgeon [illegible] a prize at the "grand competition." [illegible] delighted father clasps his boy to his [illegible] and says: "Well done, my noble [illegible] I'll give you your choice. [illegible] go the theatre or to [illegible] [illegible] the post-mortem [illegible] [illegible] the happy youth.

[illegible] Sunday School Union [illegible] Board of Managers [illegible] why so few British cler[illegible] attended the Robert Raikes [illegible] which were in charge of the [illegible] clergy of the Church of En[illegible] very few exceptions, gave the [illegible] cold shoulder. They are inter[illegible] own Sunday school work, but [illegible] part with outsiders and [illegible] religious proceedings.

[illegible] the annual meeting of the Poor Clergy [illegible] poration in London, a report was [illegible] which stated that the number of ap[illegible]als to the Corporation had been unusually [illegible]merous, and that, owing to the agricul[illegible]al depression, some of the clergy had been [illegible]duced to great privations. In many cases [illegible]re livings were endowed with glebe, the [illegible]nge in the value of lands produced a sud[illegible] and almost ruinous loss, thus the com[illegible]tee rejoiced that, in spite of this depres[illegible], their funds had increased, and 427 [illegible] had been made, ranging from £5 to [illegible], as against 356 in the previous year.

[illegible] CLERGYMAN, on his way home from [illegible]p-meeting, was detailing some incidents [illegible]amp-life. Among others was one of an [illegible] couple who had supplied themselves [illegible] a bottle of penny-royal oil, with which [illegible] keep of the mosquitoes. They extin[illegible]hed their light, and retired, forgetting [illegible]r antidote. The mosquitoes were very [illegible], and, after standing it as long as they [illegible]d, the old lady got up, and, getting a [illegible]-filled ink-bottle instead of the oil, gave [illegible] old gentleman a thorough lubricating [illegible] the liquid, face, hands, and feet; she [illegible] anointed herself in like manner. They [illegible] essayed to court the drowsy god, but [illegible] only get an occasional nap. Finally [illegible] old lady got up and struck a light, [illegible]ng a glance at the bed she had just left, [illegible]eheld to her horror a colored "pus[illegible] as she supposed, stretched in the [illegible] of her spouse. She quietly got the [illegible]r and nearly beat the old fellow's brains [illegible] before discovering her mistake. Later [illegible] the night we discovered the old couple [illegible] on board the boat with us, he with his [illegible] nearly as big as a bale of hay, and she [illegible] for him with the greatest solicitude.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

The New Arrival.

A charming little tiddy iddy bit of mother's bliss,
A tiny toddles, sweet as flow'rs of spring;
A precious popsy wopsy—give its mammy, dear, a kiss,
A pretty darling itsy witsy ting!

PA.

So that's the little fellow! H'm. A hea thy looking chap.
Another mouth to feed, as sure as fate!
No, wife, I don't consider that his coming's a mishap,
But still I could have done with less than eight.

BROTHER.

My eye! Is that the baby? What a jolly little pup!
But I say, ma, wherever is its nose?
And I say, father, by and by, when he grows up,
He'll wear my worn-out jackets, I suppose.

UNCLE.

Another? Well, thank goodness I am not a married man.
What! Don't I think him pretty? No, I don't.
To keep him from the workhouse you must do the best you can;
Don't think that I'll assist you, for I won't!

DOCTOR.

How are we getting on to-day? I trust we are doing well.
We mustn't think we're strong just yet, you know;
We'd better take something which this afternoon I'll send.
And let me see—hum!—ha! Ah, yes, just so.

NURSE.

He's lovely, that he is, mum! See them sturdy little legs!
He's twice the size of Lady Smither's third!
And when he comes a cutting of his little toothy pegs,
He'll be a man, he will, upon my word.

NEIGHBOUR.

Oh yes, dear, he looks healthy, but you mustn't trust to that—
I do not wish, of course, your hopes to dash,
But when I see a tender babe so ruddy, strong, and fat,
I—look, dear, on his face! Is that a rash?

MA (da capo.)

A charming little tiddy iddy bit of mother's bliss,
A tiny toddles, sweet as flow'rs of spring;
A precious popsy wopsy—give its mammy, dear, a kiss,
A pretty darling itsy witsy ting!

Fashion Notes.

PILGRIM suits are destined to great popularity.

TEA and coffee stained laces are much worn.

TRAVELLING suits of gray cheviot are in pilgrim style.

LARGE red chenille cords will be used in millinery.

BONNETS will be trimmed with long piled silk plush.

JET and garnet will be used in dresses and bonnets.

HOODS or capes appear on straight directory mantles.

LONG straight directory mantles will be the fall wraps.

STRINGS of new bonnets are of plush, lined with satin.

SKIRTS are either very plain or much ruffled and draped.

A PEARL or diamond fastened in the ear is the most fashionable style of earring.

OLD India shawls are cut up to make trimmings for nun's vailing costumes.

WOOLEN goods bordered on one selvage with stripes are a feature on fall goods.

THE new metal ornaments for hats and bonnets are large and very handsomely finished.

PLUSH and furry felt hats and bonnets are among the first fall productions and importations.

BAGS, or reticules, carried on the arm or fastened to the waist, accompany nearly all new costumes.

CLOTH of gold, embroidered with pearl, garnet, and amber beads, appears among choice fall importations.

COIFFURES are not quite so low in the back as they have been, but the tendency is to plain and flat, not fluffy, hair dressing.

GOLD and silver brocaded stuffs for evening wear, as parts of costumes, are still further enriched with seal and crystal bead embroideries.

LARGE and finely-finished clasps, resembling cloak clasps, but more ornate and jewelled, will be used to fasten the plush strings of bonnets.

A PRETTY sash to wear with a white tume can be made of white toileresliense, finished at the ends with sections of India shawl patterns.

THE richest evening and full dress toilets are made more ornate with bead embroideries of jet, pearls, crystal, amber, and garnet, than ever.

LARGE, widespread, deeply-notched Directoire collars of silk, plush, satin, and velvet are edged with ruffles of Languedoc lace and worn with any costume.

A FAVOURITE combination for fall suits is [illegible]chman's drab for the principal part of the [illegible]tume, with borderings of shaded stripes [illegible] heliotrope and Ophelia.

THE hair is now dressed very loosely, and [illegible] great art of the coiffeur is to arrange the [illegible] so that it seems quite "neglige." It [illegible] rather low in the back of the neck.

THE style of dress consisting of a skirt and polonaise is come quite into fashion again after being given up for some time. This style admits of a number of pretty arrangements, especially for light fabrics.

LACE enjoys renewed favour, and will continue until the winter toilets appear. To be handsome they must be yellow, and white laces are dipped in an infusion of tea to make them the acceptable shade. They are put on all kinds of dresses and millinery.

THE fashion of tacking on a narrow fluting of some bright contrasting colour round the edge of the dress inside, but so as to show beyond, has now become very general. Crimson satin is especially handsome on a black dress.

A PRETTY wrap of early autumn is called the directoire mantle, gathered about the neck and shoulders, very long, and decidedly graceful. It is sometimes made of light-coloured Indian cashmere, trimmed with yellow Mechlin lace, and with amber, gold, and gray beads.

IN London brown, blue, dark green, and olive are the leading colours in riding habits made still in cloth, but often in stockingette. No braiding is used and horn buttons. Ladies in London all wear floral bouquets on horseback and low-crowned felt hats are superseding the high silk ones.

THE colours for the early fall will be heliotrope in all shades (which include mauves and violets), sea-browns and coffee-browns (coffee in the bean, roasted and ground), vanilla, a shade of yellow resembling Indian corn, slate-gray, willow-green, steel-blue, and porcelain-blue.

ELOPEMENTS are becoming quite fashionable. A horse ran away with one of the oldest maids in Hamilton.

MRS. LANGTRY has looked so lovely since she wore old gold satin that her popular name has been changed to the Amber Witch.

THE ladies of the Eastern harems now begin for the first time to feel the burdens of the late war in the plentiful lack of their attar of roses. The producers used to be obliged to furnish it to the Sultan's family at a nominal price, but are now at liberty to ask prices which put it beyond the reach of the royal ladies.

How Lovely.

Here is a short story about an English damsel: "She had a perfect inspiration about a dress. Only one woman in London could carry it out. But was she to be trusted? Well, it must be risked, for no one else could do it. Mme. —— promises the strictest secrecy, but being an artist cannot keep to herself her enthusiasm about this wonderful dress. It was an idyll, a fugue, a sonata, I know not what of [illegible]. The evening comes on which the dress is to be worn, the delightful owner struggling up the stairs and, advancing to greet her hostess, beholds her in a [illegible] on. Words are powerless to depict her agony of mind, increased by the observations of one or two intimates, "Oh, your dress is exactly like Lady ——'s. How lovely it is!" Like Lady ——'s, when the idea was entirely her own. It was hard."

Hypocrite Gold in Kentucky.

"Sy, mister," as he walked up to the proprietor of a jewellery store who stood behind the counter, "have you got any of these here finger rings—these here—these—oh, I forgit what you call 'em?"

"Gold rings?" asked the proprietor.

"No, not quite gold rings—oh, yes; hypocrite gold rings; that's it."

"I can't understand what you mean by that," said the proprietor, with a stare.

"I mean," said the young man, "this kind of gold that looks like gold and isn't gold; the kind that most everybody is wearing now-a-days. I want a ring for my girl, and I want you to scratch on the inside 'Jim Brown to Sallie Jones.' Don't care what it costs. You can go as high as half a dollar for it all if you want to. It's a be-gagement ring."

The boss took it all in, and soon fixed him off with a "hypocrite" gold ring, done up in the softest cotton.

Neilson's Bouquet.

Her intellectual grasp of Shakspeare, writes Nym Crinkle, was not a fine one. She did not give greater or nearer sense to his [illegible] her will to [illegible] heights. But she cast the [illegible] shimmer of her beauty over them, and the public mistook the external shine for an internal fire. Such an alabaster vase, illuminated so splendidly, quite filled the bill of sweetness and light for some of the poetic reviewers, and the files of the New York papers will yet unfold to the curious [illegible] some of the most erratic effusions expended in her praise that ever passed muster under the name of criticism. The best acting that the writer of this article ever saw Miss Neilson do was between the acts. He called upon her one afternoon at the Fifth Avenue hotel, and while there three enormous baskets of flowers were sent in by the [illegible] of a millionaire banker. From this collection she was to choose the one that should be sent up to her upon the stage in the evening. She was severely critical, turned them around, and finally, with delightful disdain, thought "that one would do." The florist bowed and went away. That night, after the second act of "Romeo and Juliet," she was recalled. While bowing and blushing at the footlights, there was a stir in the aisle and two ushers made their way to the orchestra with the ponderous and beautiful basket of flowers. I never saw anything so spontaneous, so childishly natural, and so unspeakably charming as her astonishment. She looked at it with her handsome eyes filled with tears of surprise, and then she looked at the audience as if there must be some mistake and the gift could not be intended for so unworthy an artist as herself. The audience encouraged her by applause, and she clasped her hands and peered over its edge and trembled a little from the force of the unexpected honor. Then she picked it up, and, beaming [illegible], flowers and actress were one in one variegated mass of loveliness. I never saw her do anything which, for high art, compared with that. But her Rosalind was to my mind one of the most beautiful stage exhibitions I ever witnessed. Miss Neilson opened up a new order of dramatic criticism in New York. One of the most poetic, if not one of the best, of the critics made a shrine for her in his literature, and wove all the adjectives in the language into his wampum. He has now thrown upon her grave the astonishing but grateful opinion that she was the greatest and noblest actress of her epoch.

Petroleum as Fuel.

The mail steamer Cesarewitch is described by the special correspondent of the London Daily News. It is English built, and is the swiftest mail steamer on the Caspian, being only surpassed in speed by the Nasr Eddin Shah war steamer. To convey it from the Baltic to the Caspian, it was necessary that it should traverse the whole of the Neva ship canal, and afterwards descend the Volga to Astrakan. On the Neva Canal are fifty-four locks, and the Cesarwitch's length was too great to allow of her entering them. Her present chief engineer, Mr. Vine, an Englishman, cut her into two pieces amidships and filling up the open extremities with iron bulkheads, floated her in this guise through the canal. At Astrakan the same gentleman put her together again, and has remained ever since in charge of her machinery. Her boilers are heated by petroleum refuse instead of coal, a system which effects an enormous saving of expense and labour, the heating apparatus being as thoroughly under control as a gas jet, and requiring but one man to manipulate it. It consists of two tubes, about an inch in diameter, terminating at the same point in a small oblong brass box. Through one of these tubes the black residual naphtha (astatki) drops slowly, being blown into spray by a jet of steam from the boiler, conveyed through the second tube. This spray when ignited, forms a great sheet of flame, which is projected into the hallow of the boiler. It has the immense advantage of requiring no stoking, as no ashes are produced; and by turning down the flame to the required degree, the steam can always be kept up to the pressure required for immediate starting without the tedious and more or less wasteful process of "banking" the fires. An arrangement like this is invaluable for cruisers lying off an enemy's port, and requiring to hold their steam in readiness. It is intended to apply the same system of heating to the locomotives on the Tiflis Baku Railway, when completed; and it will, doubtless, play an important part in the steam communicatio[redacted] night attracts many foreigners in Swedish Lapland during the month of June. For six weeks there is scarcely any night in the north of Sweden; the sun never sets, and the soil, constantly heated, produces in a month and a half barley and other crops. At that time of the year Laplanders pen up their reindeers and move their huts toward the cultivated fields. Being very hospitable, they greet with joy the arrival of tourists, who generally meet at Mount Gellaware, about ninety miles from Lurea. From the hill, which is about six hundred yards high, the beautiful spectacle of the "midnight sun" can be admired in better conditions than from any other place. The 24th of June is the day selected for the observation; it is the longest day in the year, the sun being twenty-two hours above the horizon. This year the 24th of June was not favoured by fine weather, and owing to a cloudy sky the sun was not visible at midnight, but the following day travellers were well rewarded for their trouble, the sun shining brightly at midnight.

THE Turks are excessively irritated against the Armenian Patriarch, and not long ago, during a visit he paid to a pasha, poison was given him in a cup of coffee. The Patriarch was made very ill, but after returning home he called physicians, who relieved him.

A Queen's Baby.

THE RITES AND VEXATIONS THAT ATTEND THE BIRTH OF ROYAL INFANTS IN SPAIN.

The Queen of Spain is going to have a baby. The cable has records of the agitation in Madrid and the aspect of the court. Never was the birth of an heir to the throne awaited with greater anxiety. The Liberals, confident of the progress of democracy, await the event with smiles; but bitter quarrels are fomenting among the partisans of the sister of the King and the enemies of her friend, Premier Canovas. And yet in the monarchical ranks you can hear only shouts of joy. The courtiers cannot see what is at their feet. They believe that the birth of the child of the king will permanently establish the Spanish monarchy.

The Spaniards will be charmed by the majestic pomp that will attend the birth of the child. The Spanish women, who regard every son of their King as in a measure their own child, will openly express their delight. For the sake of the royal baby, they will pardon the Queen's Austrian birth. But the singular disdain which all the democratic journals have shown for the absurdities of court etiquette on this occasion shows the little importance that they attach to the birth of a son of Alphonso.

No efforts have been spared to give to this event a solemn aspect. All the old etiquette is to be revived. The mother is forbidden to nurse her first baby. They have compelled this woman, when taken with the first pains of child birth, to consent to receive strangers in her presence. Three habitations, furnished modestly to please the poor people, are set apart for the expected heir, and all the ceremonies that gave such eclat to the birth of Alphonso will be reenacted for his son. One rite, neglected then, will be performed to-day. The name of the child will be written in the Civil Register. Kings, therefore, are the sons of citizens, the same as other people. They are no longer the sons of God. The King will acknowledge this by the registry. It is a fair sign of the progress of the times. It shows the inevitable subordination in Spain, as elsewhere, of royal authority to the authority of the people. The essential ideas of revolutions are recognized in this concession. Such reactions are hours of repose for the growing strength of democratic ideas.

Not a single movement of the Queen mother will escape the notice of the envious public. With the first pains of her approaching maternity, Premier Canovas and his Minister of Justice, dressed in court uniform, will walk into the apartments of Queen Christine. The doctor will certify that she is about to become a mother, and the Ministers will announce the news to the great crowd of guests invited by the King's decree of the 6th of August.

A brilliant assembly will fill the superb salons of the palace. Numbers of ladies, with long-trained dresses, will majestically move up the grand staircase, one of the handsomest and largest in the world. Glance at the salons, and you will see an historical procession. The old, however, must take warmth from the new. The different military orders will stand at the side of committees of Congress and of the Senate. Near them will stand the deputies of Asturias, privileged province from the time when King Pelayo and his bear-killing sons made it the rampart of Spanish liberty. All will appear in uniforms embellished in gold and silver. Plumed hats and silk stockings are to be worn. The cavaliers of Santiago, wrapped in long cloaks, will march at the side of the chevaliers of the orders of the good King Charles III. and of that strong woman called Isabella the Catholic. Christian Rome, which has played so important a part in the history of Spain, will be represented by the Archbishop of Toledo, by the Patriarch of the Indes, and by a committee from the Tribunal de las Rota, a unique tribunal created specially for Spain, an offshoot from the Papacy rooted in the heart of the faithful nation.

The nobility are to be represented by a committee dressed in sumptuous and picturesque costumes, and the army by the Minister and Captain General of Castile, of which Madrid is the capital. The people will also be represented by a committee from the Ayuntamiento, a corporation elected by them. Representatives of great nations are also to contribute to this pompous display, made exclusively in the interests of the dying Bourbon dynasty. All the diplomatic corps have been invited.

When the child is born the venerable Marchioness de Santa Cruz, who performs the functions of chief lady of the bedchamber, will announce to Senor Canovas the happy event, the sex of the child, and the condition of its august mother. Then Senor Canovas, in his sharp and telling voice, will give the news to the invited guests. The times are tempestuous. Monarchy seems to be on its last legs. This birth in a salon so crowded, so gay, so excited, so full of all sorts of passions, will actually be saluted as the birth of an established monarchy. Alphonso will appear bearing his newly born son or daughter on a salver. Senor Canovas will raise the tray aloft and exhibit the child to the diplomatic corps and to all the assembled guests. The Minister of Justice will act as notary and register the birth. Then the roar of artillery will announce to all Madrid that the child has seen the light of the beautiful land of Spain. If a boy, twenty-five guns will be fired; if a girl, only fifteen. A white flag will also be raised if it is a girl, and if it is a boy the red and yellow flag of the nation will be hoisted. The baptismal ceremonies are to be new and gorgeous. It is intended to welcome this child as a redeemer, who comes, according to monarchists, to save his father. Like Jesus, he will be baptized with the water of the Jordan. The Marquis de Villa y Mantilla has sent to the King water from the holy river in a magnificent vessel of Bohemian crystal, adorned with silver ornaments. The King received it with extreme pleasure.

Royalty and religion travel through life together, and religion, grateful for the good services of King Alphonso, has consented to emerge from its home to meet the child that comes to it so apropos. The nuns of the Meson de Paredes have sent to the palace the font in which Santo Domingo de Guzman, a saint, born in Madrid, and profoundly revered, was baptized. From this font the son of the King will receive his baptism.

But what a great ado is made over this little unborn innocent! The ambitions of the court are pursuing the child before its birth. The powerful hand of the King's sister has made itself felt in all his decisions and decrees in reference to the birth of his child. From the old times of the weak King, Don Juan II., the first son of the Kings of Spain was proclaimed and acknowledged as the inheritor of the crown. They called him Prince d'Asturias. His patri[redacted] Francisca Isabella, the sister of the King. As the son of Alphonso must naturally be the Prince d'Asturias, his birth will rob the King's sister of her title of Princess, a dignity that makes her the superior of all her sisters. She cannot avoid this terrible blow to her pride, if the child is a boy; but she has tried to escape it, and to remain Princess, or at least to prevent anybody else from gaining the title, provided the child should prove to be a girl. Senor Canovas is the servile fanatic of royalty in Spain, and the despotic master of the monarch. He is a thorough believer in the importance of the actual Princess, who has the same hatred of the people and the same supercilious airs as himself. He is sincere in his belief that the energy and intelligence of the Princess are necessary for the pristige of the monarchy in Spain, and he has desired to spare her by compelling the King to sign a decree confirming her title, even if he should be the father of a daughter. Even if the daughter were made Princess d'Asturias she might lose the title, for the King is still young, and he may yet have a son. A son's birth would rob the daughter of the dignity. It remains to be seen whether Queen Christine, who does not love her sister-in-law, will consent to allow her to carry off a dignity claimed by the Liberal party for her child. This same Canovas, who holds in 1880 that the daughters of kings ought not to be Princesses of Asturias, forced the honor upon the sister of the King in 1875. In 1875 he wished to honour and elevate her, and to-day he tries to confirm her dignity and power.

The reactionary nobles, the most powerful soldiers, and all those who form the Liberal opposition in the monarchy, hate and fear the sister of the Queen, and have united in a protest against the proposed robbery of the daughter of a monarch of a rightful title. They act thus with the object of shaking the indisputable power of the Princess, and of flattering the Queen by fanning the antipathies that are supposed to exist between the two women, thereby gaining for themselves a foothold in the court.

If the child is a son, the cross of Victoria, in memory of the oak cross which was the only banner of Pelayo when from the Asturian Mountains he began his struggles with the Moors, will be presented to the inheritor of the crown, together with the insignia of the Golden Fleece, and the crosses of Isabella the Catholic, Charles III., and San Juan de Jerusalem, which will secure for him the dignity of Prince d'Asturias.

A Royal Encore.

I am told that at a German concert or opera they hardly ever encore a song; that though they may be dying to hear it again, their good breeding usually preserves them against requiring the repetition. The King may encore; that is quite another matter; it delights everybody to see that the King is pleased, and as to the actor encored his pride and gratification are simply boundless.

The King of Bavaria is a poet and has a poet's eccentricities, with the advantage over all other poets of being able to gratify them, no matter what form they may take. He is fond of opera, but not fond of sitting in the presence of an audience; therefore, it has sometimes occurred in Munich, that when an opera has been concluded and the players are getting off their paint and finery again. Presently the King would arrive solitary and alone, and the players would begin at the beginning and do the entire opera over again, with only that one individual for an audience.

Once he took an odd freak in his head. High up and out of sight, over the prodigous stage of the Court Theatre, is a maze of interlacing water pipes, so pierced that in case of fire innumerable little thread-like streams of water can be caused to descend, and in case of need this discharge can be augmented to a pouring flood. American managers might make a note of that. The King was the sole audience. The opera proceeded. It was a piece with a storm in it; the mimic thunder began to mutter, the mimic wind began to wail and sough, and the mimic rain to patter. The King's interest rose higher and higher; it developed into enthusiasm. He cried out:

"It is good, very good, indeed! But I will have real rain. Turn on the water."

The manager pleaded for a reversal of the command, said it would ruin the costly scenery and the splendid costumes, but the King cried:

"No matter, no matter, I will have real rain! Turn on the water!"

So the real rain was turned on and began to descend in gossamer lances [illegible] the mimic flower beds and gravel walk[illegible]. The richly dressed actress[illegible] tripped about singing bravely [illegible] ing not to mind it. The K[illegible] ed; his enthusiasm grew h[illegible] out, "Bravo, bravo! More [illegible] lightning! Turn on more rain!"

The thunder boomed, the lightning glared, the storm wind raged, the deluge poured down. The mimic royalty of the stage, with their soaked satins clinging to their bodies, slopped around ankle deep in water, warbling their sweetest and best, the fiddlers under the eaves of the stage sawed away for dear life, with the cold overflow spouting down the backs of their necks, and the dry and happy King sat in his lofty box and wore his gloves to ribbons applauding.

"More yet!" cried the King; "more yet; let loose all the thunder, turn on all the water. I will hang the man that raises an umbrella!"

When the most tremendous and effective storm that had ever been produced in any theatre was at last over the King's approbation was measureless. He cried:

"Magnificent, magnificent! Encore! Do it again!"

But the management succeeded in persuading him to recall the encore, and said the company would feel sufficiently rewarded and complimented in the mere fact that the encore was demanded by his Majesty, without fatiguing him with a repetition to gratify their own vanity.

During the remainder of the act the lucky performers were those whose parts required changes of dress; the others were a soaked, bedraggled and uncomfortable lot, but in the last degree picturesque. The stage scenery was ruined; trap doors were so swollen that they wouldn't work for a week afterward; the fine costumes were spoiled, and no end of minor damage was done by that remarkable storm.

It was a royal idea—that storm—and royally carried out. But observe the moderation of the King; he did not insist upon his encore. If he had been a gladsome, unreflecting American opera audience he probably would have had his storm repeated and repeated until he drowned all those people.

MARK TWAIN.

About Long Sermons.

This is a matter for the pew rather than the pulpit to settle. And for obvious reasons. The main purpose of all preaching is the good of the occupants of the pew, not the exhibition of the preacher's staying powers of speaking or reading. The latter should be exhibited always as subservient to, and regulated by, the amount of good likely to be done. It is, or ought to be, quite a secondary matter how much personal honour and glory shall accrue to the preacher. Now in order that his grand object may be served the preacher must be swayed by various considerations. The taste of his audience must be consulted. Not in the way of servile truckling to prejudices, but in the spirit that influenced Paul "to be all things to all men." Their comfort must be taken into account also, for if people are in a state of discomfort, or weariness, they cannot possibly attend to or be influenced by a preacher, unless, indeed, he be of such an exceptional kind as is only met with once or twice in a generation. Above all, the occupant of the pulpit should see to it that the spiritual food he provides for the occupants of the pews should not be of that heavy, cloying, and mentally indigestible kind that is so often served up by injudicious prosers. Let the [redacted] of doctrine or scientific subjects of dispute,—for the press has opened up a wide and appropriate field for these,—but plain, and yet well constructed, declarations of those eternal principles of Gospel Truth that bear on the life of man in the great hereafter, and on the regulation of his life here. The limit of human endurance can pretty well be fixed by the system of averages, and we are not far wide of the mark when we say that twenty-five to thirty minutes of a sermon is as much as is desirable, or likely to be productive of good. If the subject be too wide to be exhausted in that time it can be taken up again, and even a series of discourses on it prepared. But the series system also may be pushed too far, especially if the subject be intrinsically a narrow one, such was that selected by the Irish minister who gave eight discourses on the subject of Balaam's ass. A ninth was in preparation, when one of his elders remonstrated with him, and said that the whole congregation were, by this time, earnestly wishing "that Balaam's ass had never been foaled!"

IT is stated that nearly thirty steamers, each averaging four thousand tons actual carrying weight, leave America every week for England laden with provisions of various kinds.

GENERAL.

THE Italian Parliament has ordered of monument to Victor Emmanuel, at a cost a $1,300,000.

IT is customary to mine coal so closely as to leave pillars of insufficient size and strength to support the earth which is left on top. The people of the Plains, near Wilkesbarre, are greatly distressed by the caving in of the earth beneath them from this cause. The fall goes on piecemeal, with a succession of petty earthquakes. These wreck houses and barns, and produce general alarm among the residents, who cannot tell at what moment any house may be tipped over and demolished.

NEWS comes from India that the famous car of Juggernaut was not as usual dragged through the streets of Puri on the 9th of July; and it seems that by religious custom or law, if it be not drawn on the ninth day of the car festival twelve years must elapse before it is again used. The fact of the car not being brought out this time is attributed by a correspondent to what he calls "an act of unpardonable negligence on the part of meddling Government officials," and that is all he has to say about it.

GUY'S, the greatest hospital in London, has of late been in the hubbub of a fierce conflict between the nursing and medical authorities. Public opinion is largely on the side of the latter. The Treasurer has been publicly hissed by the students in a body. Guy's was endowed, with property now worth $200,000 a year, by a bookseller who had speculated in South Sea stock. He was on the eve of matrimony with his servant girl, but the marriage is said to have been frustrated by the exhibition of a tendency on her part to "wear the breeches," by giving an order to a workman.

THE Empress Eugenie will leave England in the autumn to take up her permanent residence at her chateau in Switzerland, which was the home of the third Emperor's mother after the Bourbon restoration. It is understood that the Empress will remove the remains of her husband and son to the oratory attached to the chateau. All the furniture of Camden House not removed to Switzerland will be distributed for remembrance among friends, nothing being allowed to pass under the hammer of the auctioneer. The Empress can afford this respect for the imperial tradition, as she possesses an income of over $200,000 a year, and does not spend a sixth of it.

MANUEL RODRIGUEZ, a nephew of Malibran, well known in Spanish society as a financist and political agent, has been condemned in Paris to three months imprisonment for theft. He is 50 years old, and has long enjoyed a reputation for probity. His counsel pleaded kleptomania. Rodriguez latterly made a trade of stealing opera glasses in theatres and selling them. Sixty were found in his lodging. One belonged to the Duc d'Aumale and another to the Prince de Joinville, with whom he was personally acquainted. He was also in the habit of stealing waistcoats from Bachelor friends. In 1870 he founded an ambulance corps, for which Jules Simon, Thiers, and Jules Favre thanked him in autograph letters.

"WHAT is the origin of the sign '$' for the American dollar?" was the question propounded at a London dinner not long ago. The [illegible] did not know; neither [illegible]. An extensive research re[illegible]: The American dollar [illegible] Spanish dollar, and the [illegible] of course, in the [illegible] of the Spanish dollar. On the reverse side of a Spanish dollar is a representation of the Pillars of Hercules, and round each pillar is a scroll, with the inscription, "Plus ultra." This device in the course of time has degenerated into the sign which stands at present for American as well as Spanish dollars—"$." The scroll round the pillars represents the two serpents sent by Juno to destroy Hercules in his cradle.

A NEW process for the preservation of forage crops in their green state is being tested at Suffield Con. Into a cutter, which goes by steam, are run half a dozen cornstalks at a time, which are cut into very small pieces. Afterward they fall into a slide, which takes them to a vault fourteen by twenty-six feet long and ten deep, which has thick concrete walls, and is capable of holding eighty-five tons. When the vault is filled and closely packed down, thirty ton of stone is placed on top. It is claimed that the fodder will keep green and retain its sweetness as long as it is kept covered, thus making it one of the best as well as the cheapest kinds of feed obtainable for cattle the year round. It is not intended, however, that this feed shall be sold, and indeed it could not be, as after twenty-four hours, exposure fermentation would set in, which, of course, would ruin it. It can be taken out only a little at a time as it is needed for use.

The Crater of Mount Etna.

(London News.)

Prof. Orazio Silvestri wrote from Catania on the 15th of July that since his report on the 1st of last May about the eruption of ashes from Mount Etna he has observed many other interesting phenomena. On the 16th and 17th of last May some slight shocks of earthquake were felt on the east side of Mount Etna, especially in the district of Acireale. About a month later the shocks commenced again, and were repeated on several consecutive days—that is, on the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18 of June. The motion was undulating. The inhabitants were so alarmed by the coincidence of time with the terrible earthquake of the year before, that they left the village and camped in the open air. About two days before these manifestations a new and very active phase of mud eruptions set in at Paterno, on the southeast of Etna.

Two craters opened, which violently ejected gaseous matter with abundant torrents of mud, more consistent than usual, and of higher temperature (one hundred and forty degrees Fahrenheit), which, accumulating in the basis in large masses, finally broke through all barriers overflowed and destroyed the adjoining fields, and buried several mills and farm-houses. In this eruption Prof. Silvestri noticed an abundant development and pressure of gaseous matter, of such force that it produced oscillation strong enough to tear up old lava, forming rents out of which the gas rushed with the noise of a boiler letting off its steam. Coincident with these phenomena clouds of vapour issued from the eruptive fissure of last year, confirming the opinion formed by the professor before, namely, that this fissure, lying between the two principal craters of 1879 and the great central one, had not been blocked with lava, but was still in commu[redacted] central eruptive axis, for [redacted] ashes, which fell all over [redacted] from the central crater. [redacted] tinued during several days, [redacted] with decreased intensity, [redacted] in the shape of dense clouds covering the whole summit of Etna in a clear sky.

Changes have taken place which have entirely altered the form of the central crater. The old ravine which formerly crossed the crater, and made two-thirds of it into an ample and easily accessible basin—a natur[redacted] laboratory for the study of the products [redacted] the valcano—now exists no longer. T[redacted] central crater, from the effects of vio[redacted] commotions, has crumbled, and, with p[redacted] its sides and the high point whence i[redacted] formerly possible to enjoy the sunris[redacted] been precipitated into the ravine, di[redacted] ing the height of the mountain b[redacted] forty feet, while the circumferenc[redacted] crater has become wider by half a [redacted] The general destruction of the old [redacted] in a certain way, rejuvenized [redacted] which has regained its characte[redacted] a funnel, at the bottom of whi[redacted] eruptive mouth.

THERE are in Germany twenty-[redacted] universities, with nearly 2,000 professors. In each university there are classes in the five principal faculties of theology, law, medicine, philosophy, and letters. A writer on the subject notes that the most popular faculty is philosophy, which includes mathematics, save at Strasburg, where it is a different faculty.

About Oysters.

According to Butler's "Dyet's Dry Dinner" (1599), "it is unseasonable and unwholesome in all months that have not an R in their name to eat an oyster," an oracular opinion not altogether accepted by modern ichthyologists—though, by the way, under the treasury ruling of April last, an oyster is not a fish,—who claim that even in midsummer the oyster is edible, due attention being paid to his selection. Whatever the truth may be, certain it is that folk, otherwise sane and logical, who consider the oyster rank poison at 11.59.59 on the night of Aug. 31, will devour him with avidity at 12.00.01 on the morning of Sept. 1, the first stroke of the midnight bell excercising upon him the saving and regenerating effect of a sacrament. Whether or not there is a great Primeval Oyster as the origin of all things, something like that tortoise which in Oriental mythology supports this world of ours, it must be admitted that the first man that took his "one raw" was one of the boldest benefactors of humanity. As Gay says:

That man had surely a palate covered o'er
With brass or steel, that on the rocky shore
First broke the oozy oyster's pearly coat,

And whisked the living morsel down his throat. Possibly the origin of oyster-eating was something like that of the eating of roast pig, as described by Charles Lamb: A prehistoric man inserted his fingers within the shells of a prehistoric oyster, and having them pinched applied his digits to his mouth, tasted the liquor of the oyster, and invented the benign science of ostreaphagy. Anyway, around the names of all the great of the earth, in all ages, there is a deathless halo of oyster shells. The ancient Greeks and Romans were which, we learn from Pliny, were of three colours,—yellow, black, and green, delighted to be transferred to new waters, and sometimes grew to the size of a foot, so that it took three bites to dispose of one of them. There were nine famous beds from which the markets of Rome were supplied, and it is recorded that the first man who took to artificial breeding did so to make money, not out of love for the oyster. Oyster shells cured no end of disorders, and, powdered, were employed as a dentrifice. The Romans believed that oysters ate best in the full of the moon. Horace's preference was for those of Circei; Vitellius put away twelve hundred of the bivalves at one luncheon. "Oysters raw, as many as you like," is usually the first entry on the menus of classical entertainments that have been preserved for our delectation. Louis VIII. of France, who died in 1226, so keenly appreciated his cook's way of cooking the oyster, of which he was so fond, that he gave him a patent of nobility and a liberal annual allowance. Louis XI. gave annual oyster suppers to the College of the Sorbonne—the pupils of the College of France had, long before that, been in the habit of rehearsing their disputations on oysters—until at one merry meeting a learned doctor fell into the Seine and was drowned. Bentley, the great classical scholar, never could pass an oyster-stall without stopping at it, to talk about oysters, if he could eat no more, and in 1740, two years before his death, and just at the conclusion of the twenty-seven years' law-suit to eject him from the mastership of Trinity, to which De Quincey has devoted such a fascinating essay, he wrote to a friend: "My great re[illegible] amusement here is my regular supply of [illegible]. These things must have [illegible] Pope, a lover of [illegible] broke exists, offering to accept an invitation to dinner, but only on condition that there was a dish of stewed oysters. Thomson, who ate peaches on the tree with his hands in his pockets, greatly loved oysters, and died of over-indulgence in them, or of exposure in a boat to have a feed of them. Johnson, I fancy, loved oysters. I know he went to market to buy them for his cat when the footman was too proud to do so. Goldsmith did, and devoted an interesting chapter in his "Animated Nature" to them, telling how he knew a horse that was fond of eating oysters, and how the oysters of India are two feet big, and one of the "natives" of Coromandel furnishes a meal for ten men. No animal, "Noll" tells us, will venture to open the oyster's shell, which, like too many statements in "Animated Nature," is not strictly true, since, apart from the starfish and other marine enemies, the oyster is the prey of a bird, the hæmotopus, the "bloody foot" of English popular ornithology and the oyster-fisher of America.

GREAT DEVOURERS OF OYSTERS,

THE OYSTER-SHOPS OF PARIS

were great political centres during the revolution, Robespierre, Danton, and Couthon having one favoured haunt near the prison of La Force, and Brissot, Condorcet, and the other Girondins affecting a rival establishment near the site of La Bastille. Peter the Great had always oysters served two or three ways at his meals; fraternized with the old oyster-women of Woolwich shipyard, and dignified the dealers of St. Petersburg and Moscow with the title of his "life-preservers." Junot ate three hundred oysters every day before breakfast during the oyster season, and Cambaceres was long regarded as the champion oyster-eater of Paris, until the academician Baour-Larmian sat down to breakfast with him one day, ate oyster for oyster until the arch-chancellor of the empire owned his defeat, then swallowed a few dozen more by himself, and desisted lest he should spoil his breakfast. There are traditions of the English oyster-eaters who swallowed oysters by the dozen, but the English oyster is a trifle beside the oyster of New York, which reminded Thackeray of the ear of Calphas' servant, and again of swallowing a baby, and the oyster of our more southern waters, which Sala told his English readers was in size and shape just like the knife-board of an omnibus. It is worthy of remark that the oyster is almost the only animal substance which we eat raw habitually, and from preference, and that we do this from sound physiological reasons. The fawn-coloured liver of the oyster as Dr. William Roberts in his "Lectures on the Digestive Ferments," points out, is little else than a mass of glycogen, associated with but withheld from actual contact with life, is its appropriate digestive ferment, the hepatic diastase. The act of crushing the oyster brings the two bodies together, and the oyster digests itself. Mem—if you cook an oyster the heat destroys the digestive ferment, and you must digest the oyster yourself.

A Desperate Five-Y[redacted]

Ed[redacted] a nei[redacted] mon[redacted] ut it [redacted] he succeeded [redacted] who so [redacted] love-poisoned dart [redacted] the simple [redacted] ry home [redacted] lover's heart by [redacted] loved his brother better [redacted] him. When the father came [redacted] Eddie button-holed him and sobbed "Papa, papa, Mildred said she won't [redacted] me." "Oh, son, she was only joking." [redacted]-n-o, s-sir, she wasn't, 'cause she told me [redacted]ee times." Their being "no balm in [redacted]ilead" for his lacerated heart, he decided [redacted] to take arms against a sea of troubles," and with a curtain cord end them. Having securely fastened the loose end of the green cord around his neck, he jumped out of the parlour window, a distance of four or five feet from the ground. Fortunately, the cord broke, and left no marks of suicide save a blood ring around his neck.

THE Princess Dora d' Istria is the daughter of Prince Michael Ghika, and married in her twentieth year Prince Massalsky, a descendant of Rurik, the legendary founder of the Russian Empire.

The Queen of Italy has made a gift to a Catholic church in Boston of a bronze statue of Augustus Cæsar, an antique of exquisite workmanship.

THE [illegible] stage repre[illegible] lanxes in S[illegible] curtain of cloud[illegible] to hide them, whi[illegible] alone

ONE of the pet ecce[illegible] Ludwig of Bavaria is to [illegible] drive every night, enjoyin[illegible] when, as an the other nigh[illegible] der-storm so frightened th[illegible] barely escaped with his life.

MR. W. H. SMITH, late [illegible] Admiralty, in England, wh[illegible] boys, on the occasion of h[illegible] LL.D., greeted with the air [illegible] Porter, K.C.B.," has just bo[illegible] in Grosvenor Place, London, fo[illegible] and ninety-five thousand dollars.

THE Knight of Kerry, who died lat[illegible] was one of the three remaining hereditary knights of Ireland, and was baroneted but a little while ago. He has probably done more to relieve distress in Ireland than any other person. The Irish terminus of the Atlantic cable is on a portion of his estate of Valentia Island.

THE Duke of Marlborough having sold his gems, which were brought together by the great Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel, for thirty-five thousand guineas, is now about to sell his library, which is as valuable in its way as the gems. Neither the gems nor the books were heirlooms, but came through connections.

THE Hungarian nobility do things on a sumptuous scale of expenditure. Count Emanuel Andrassy is building a private theatre at his country-seat, and another Hungarian proprietor of one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land has followed the general fashion, and built one to seat eight hundred persons.

MR. RUSKIN has been selling his cast-off books, and owing to the fact of his writing in them such sentences as were to be read on the fly-leaf of Demosthenes's Orations—"Old school trash, never read a line of it," and on that of Pliny, "Poor stuff, not worth the paper it's printed on"—the books brought twenty times their value.

COUNT ADLERBERG is the son of the confidant of the Czar Nicholas, and inherited the office, as he is the friend and favourite of the Czar Alexander. It was through his careless good-nature in not removing an inefficient officer of the guard there that the Winter Palace explosion took place. A sister-in-law of his was Madame Skobeloff, the lately murdered mother of the Russian General of that name.

A PAIR of boots made for Annie Louise Cary to wear in opera are of light blue satin, with blue lacings and tassels, lined with cardinal kid, and banded with inch-wide gold braid. There are some stage boots that are sold for one hundred and twenty-five dollars a pair. They are made of gold or silver thread and silk, with gems for buttons, and the stockings worn with them cost seventy-five dollars a pair.

PRINCE VICTOR, the present heir to the Napoleonic pretensions, is a comely, well-grown lad, who has seen little of the world except at the theatres and at his aunt Mathilde's. His expenditures are closely examined, and their largest item is his horses and riding lessons. He is truthful, obstinate, reticent, and modest, and in his father's presence does not speak till he is spoken to.

NOT long since, Mr. Gladstone and Lord Elcho rose at the same time in Parliament to present petitions. Lord Elcho gave way, and Mr. Gladstone's petition proved to be from the farmers of Lord Elcho's constituency, in favour of the Hares and Rabbits Bill, which Lord Elcho had violently opposed. When Lord Elcho's turn came, he presented a petition against the bill which Mr. Gladstone supports, from Sir Thomas Gladstone, the Prime Minister's elder brother.

A SICILIAN gentleman, Signor Marolda, arrived in England a few years ago with thirty-five francs between himself and friend. He had a talent for decoration, and they lived on ninepence a day until the signor had put himself in communication with various firms of house decorators. He has so prospered that he recently gave a house-warming, and his ateliers looked like the palace of some old Florentine prince, only richer with the masterpieces ransacked and harmoniously combined from other centuries. At the house-warming [illegible] played, and [illegible] sang.

THIS [illegible] rest[illegible] in consequence of the will of Mr. Thelluson, a S[illegible] merchant in London, who intended his fortune—which he had made in part from the purchase of the jewels of the French émigrés—to accumulate till it reached seven hundred million dollars; and it being thought undesirable that any subject should have any such wealth, Parliament passed a bill limiting entail to life and twenty-one years thereafter. Contrary to general belief, there is no such thing as a law of primogeniture there, but merely a custom. If he pleases to do so, a duke may leave his fortune to his valet. The estates of the Duke of Hamilton and of many other nobles are entirely unentailed.

THERE'S no great satisfaction to anyone in bringing forth a royal youngster in Spain. The mother is crushed under a mass of absurd and untimely ceremony. The palace is overrun at the time of parturition with fellows in jack-boots who take a perfunctory interest in royal obstetrics and insist upon seeing the whole operation. A woman of good sense, the queen of Spain, proposed to give suck to the babe she hopes to have and would be glad to cherish, but Sp[illegible] quette forbids such a proceedin[illegible] multitude of wet-nurses now add [illegible] fusion of the palace. Perhaps [illegible] quette might manage to impro[illegible] processes by which Spanish mo[illegible] gotten. It is an age of invention[illegible] some ingenious grandee patent a royal baby incubator?

The Sandwich Islands.

AN ACCOUNT OF THEIR PRESENT PROSPERITY AND THEIR INDUSTRIES.

We arrived in Honolulu at 5.30 a.m. on Monday, the 10th of May, and what struck us at once was the business activity of the place. This has been caused by the reciprocity treaty with the United States. Sugar plantations are springing into existence all over the group, and the amount of sugar exported to 'Frisco is enormous. This ship took in during our stay of twelve hours 700 tons, and large quantities are sent regularly by sailing vessels. The export this year is little short of 20,000 tons, and next year it is estimated to reach 30,000 tons, so great has been the growth in number and size of the plantations. A gentleman named Claus Spreckels of San Francisco is the greatest, and nearly the only, operator in the purchase of Honolulu sugars. He is pretty well liked, and has spent very large sums of money in irrigating his plantations—th[redacted] plan he could adopt with th[redacted] leased. He has intr[redacted] large extent, and [redacted] Chinese l[redacted] grown [redacted] that were [redacted] they are growing [redacted] give quite a high price to [redacted] description of land. For one piece belonging to the dowager Queen Emma, of 1,000 acres, near Honolulu, they pay a rental of $5000 per annum. The natives do not like the Chinese at all, and many of the white population view the influx with dismay, but what is to be done? The natives will not work, and even in all the tirades written against the Chinese the admission is made that the race possess the virtues of industry and perseverance.

The King is having an extensive new palace built, which is to cost a heap of money; and while I am on houses I may say I was much pleased to see the very handsome wooden residences there are in Honolulu. Auckland has nothing to compare with them for elegance, finish or anything else. There are in Honolulu 14,000 inhabitants, and the place has an appearance of far greater activity than Auckland. Freehold property is booming. Land that could be got a few years ago at $10 per acre, is now bringing from $100 to $150. City property is increasing in a similar manner. About twelve months ago a corner piece, fronting the main street ninety feet, brought $10,000.

EVERY gentleman should have a melon-patch on his country seat.

... of Time.

[illegible]NDAY, 3rd NOV. trains [illegible]

[illegible]G NORTH.

[illegible] Station,	[illegible]2:20 p. m.	5:00 p. m.
[illegible]	[illegible]a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
[illegible]	[illegible]5 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
[illegible]	[illegible]0 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
[illegible]	[illegible]45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
[illegible]	[illegible].05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
[illegible]	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
[illegible] Road	9 50 a.m.	3.05 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
[illegible]rleston	10.35 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4 45 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p.m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Pricev'e	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2 50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
Williamsford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Fleshert'n & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.16 a.m.	3.10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10.15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a.m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11 00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arr.	11:15 a.m.	5:20 p.m.
Dep.	7.15 a.m.	11.35 a.m.	5.40 p.m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Smt	9.40 a.m.	2.05 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2.27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
TORONTO,—Union Station,
Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Sept. 17th, 1880.

VALEDICTORY.

This week we publish our last issue of the MARKDALE EXPOSITOR, having sold out the business to Mr. Charles W. Rutledge, of the Township of Glenelg, who has rented his farm and concluded to go into the publishing business. During the five years we have been in business in Markdale we have received a generous support, not only from all classes of business men in Markdale, but also from the business men of the Villages of Flesherton, Priceville, Dundalk, Maxwell, Durham, Feversham, and the farming public of the surrounding country.—Like all pioneer publishers, we have had a fair share of difficulties to contend with; but have succeeded in keeping the wolf outside the entrance to the fold, and now propose retiring upon the interest of what we owe, and the enormous fortune we have amassed in the [illegible] short years we have been engaged in the pub[illegible]ation of the EXPOSITOR. Our num[illegible]ous customers will please accept ou[r] sincere thanks for the handsome p[at]ronage they bestowed upon us in the past, and we trust that o[ur] successor will do as well [or b]etter, than we did. It would [be] an easy matter to run a newspaper in a country village if every person "came down with the dust" in advance, or even later; but when one has got to winter a large family of hungry printers on promises of cordwood, potatoes, and occasionally a few turnips, and half the time does not get as much cordwood as would keep one fire going, the prospect is not as bright as one could wish for. However, we have managed to worry through this far, and it would be ungrateful on our part were we to deny the fact that by the majority of business men in the places previously named, as well as by a good many of our best farmers, we have been well and promptly paid; but there is a class who never think of paying the printer or anybody else, and we are sorry to say that we have had too many of that class on our books. On the whole we have reason to believe that we have given fair satisfaction, and if the enterprise we are about giving up has in any manner assisted in advancing the interests of this section of country and brought it into prominence, we are pleased to have had a share in the work and trust our successor will keep the ball rolling. As our patrons are scattered over too large an extent of country for us to visit them personally, and shake hands with their good wives and kiss their babies, we raise our hat and waft a metaphorical kiss in final adieu.

GEO. J. BLYTH.

With reference to the foregoing, and in presenting this the first issue of the MARKDALE STANDARD before a deserving public, it becomes our duty to [state] the principles upon which this [journal will be] conducted;

[illegible] purpose be[illegible] [illegible] political [illegible] will we allow our co[illegible] in [illegible] of either party, [illegible] of a national character [illegible] more partic[illegible] rection.

As a local journal it is our int[ention] to gather and publish all such matter connected with this village and the surrounding country generally, and neighboring villages, as will be interesting, thereby making the paper one that will be enquired after, and appreciated for its energy in procuring what may be going on, and truthfully laying it before our readers, at as early a date as practicable.

IN Agriculture, we shall glean and publish from time to time such articles as may be conducive to the interest of the farmer, thereby making the STANDARD a paper that will b[e] sought after by this class of the community.

IN Provincial, Dominion and Foreign news, as also articles of a literary character, we present this issue as a fair specimen of what may be weekly expected.

CORRESPONDENCE.—We purpose perfecting arrangements throughout the country whereby we will be enabled to lay before our patrons such matters of interest as may from time to time transpire, (this of itself will incur a considerable outlay) which we have no doubt will be appreciated.

TO ADVERTISERS.—It will be seen that although the STANDARD is in size much larger than the generality of county papers, its rates of advertising are no higher than those of lesser dimensions,—this should be noted.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The subscription price of the STANDARD will be $1.25 per annum, payable strictly in advance; $1.50 if not paid for three months, and $2.00 if allowed to run to the end of the year. We send this issue to all the subscribers of the late Expositor, as we also do to many who did not take that paper; those who retain it we will be pleased to put on our books as subscribers, and those who do not want the paper will please return it to the office of publication with their name and post office address written thereon.

Correspondence.

PRICEVILLE.

From a Correspondent.

A shooting and hunting match was indulged in by the sports of the village and vicinity on Friday last. A party of crack shots, captained by John McLeod, and a similar party, captained by Thomas Conkey, set out to try which could capture the largest quantity of game during the day, the loosing party to pay for a dinner for the company. After a bloody day's execution Mr. Conkey's party proved victorious. A dinner prepared in Mrs. Tuck's best style was vigorously attacked by the opposing forces. A review of the exploits of the various characters was rather amusing and interesting, for instance, an ardent student of the whip and spurs, secured, by means best known to himself, the appendage of a most odoriferous animal. This fond trophy was much prized and admired by the winners, as by that they won the day. A disciple of Esculapius, by no means a dwarf, succeeding in wading to the middle, bursting a double barrelled gun, and finally shooting a sand snipe.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

DEAR SIR,—I noticed an article in the last effort of the now defunct Expositor anonymously signed "Artemesia." In examining it, I find the writer moved by motives quite aside from the R. R. question, for imputations and inuendoes are hurled at persons generally and myself in particular.

It is fair to presume that he professes to be an honorable man, an honest one, and an intelligent one, yet the article in question carries on its face dishonorableness, dishonesty, and ignorance, touching the subject whereupon he dilates. Let me state first then, that personally I have no objection to fair criticism on either Municipal or R. R. questions; I would provoke it if possible.

He refers to a communication of mine published in the Mail a short time ago—admits the facts, but assigns as reasons-interested motives, and therefore Reeves and Deputy Reeves are serfs seeking their own interests by making refunds, especially in the months of December. I think any honorable Reeve or Deputy Reeve would endeavor to represent the wishes of his municipality. This has been done faithfully as far as Artemesia is concerned, and as the recent election fully justifies. As to refunds, I say more are made in December than in any other month, for the simple reason, that it is the month of tax paying, and therefore errors discovered are corrected; but to twist it out of its natural bearing and insinuate evil purposes, stamps the writer as a double-dyed insinuator. I challenge him or any one else to produce the evidence of such prostitution of trusts.

He says, "There are some low-minded men who can scarcely be considered able, from some cause or other, to judge for themselves, who will take Dr. Christoe's ipse dixit for anything, but the great majority of the ratepayers of Artemesia judge for themselves." The paragraph quoted is amusingly disingenuous. I quite agree that the great majority of the ratepayers of Artemesia judge for themselves!! And I am proud to know that during the past eight years I have been the faithful representative of the great majority of the free and independent electors, and have represented their views on the R. R. question as I felt it my duty to do, and I may add that their views are quite in keeping with my own.

He next charges the Council with malfeasance, and tries to show that the schedule of taxes handed to the ratepayers are cooked for a purpose, viz.:—to show the R. R. rate at a disadvantage.

If I mistake not he prides himself somewhat on municipal knowledge, and I can scarcely conceive any motive but a wilful mistatement of facts to mislead the public, and to cultivate [prejudice] against the Council. As I [illegible] but what can be [illegible] I [illegible] and [illegible] sent down [illegible] and must be [illegible]ed [illegible] alteration; our B[illegible] County [illegible] is the [illegible] manipulate. [illegible] solve is, how much do [illegible] run the Township? Second[—how] much have we on hand? Third—ho[w] much must we raise as a Township rate? This is the mode I presume any business man would adopt. Well, we find that it will require, say, $1,800 or $2,000 to pay the running expenses; but we have an income, license fees, fines, land improvement fund, &c., besides perhaps money at credit in the bank. This is deducted and the balance raised. According to the logic of this writer, because we do not show in this schedule a rate to meet the full sum, $2,000, which certainly would be cruelty to the ratepayers, and wrong in principle, we must be denounced as public frauds and deceivers. It never crept into the cranium of this financier par excellence! the probability of income to be deducted. It could not, because cowardice, jealousy and venom are blind as bats. I therefore state that the schedules are approximately correct. I may add further that, the Council are only careful to set out the several amounts in the By-law and the number of mills required to cover the sum required; the subdivisions are entrusted to the Clerk: errors or mispoints may occur, but in no case has it changed the totals in each case.

After discharging his personal missles at the Reeves and Deputy Reeves, the Council, the Innkeeper, and the public in general—raises their ire, and at the same time a storm against the institution he tries to bolster up; exhausted his artillery against the honor and probity of honest men—he tries the sympathetic role, and ventures a little wishy-washy argument for his suffering prodigy, the R. R. He says, "We cannot understand why Dr. Christoe is so hard on the R. R., &c." The editorial "We" stands forth very prominently.

I take the broad ground that the bonus system is a vicious one, and I believe its days are about numbered, and the sooner communities like the Ontario Government shut down on it the better. There are generally selfish motives at the bottom of it, and under the gloss that it is of public importance far in excess of its realization, a picture is drawn and presented to the people, and by pressure of every description the unwary are led to their own hurt; but there is a revulsion setting in rapidly, as witness the late refusal by the Government, as also the Township of Egremont, with corresponding feeling in other municipalities, the Grey group in particular.

I scarcely think it necessary to follow my friend in his stereotyped remarks, for they are as stale as sour lager. To show, however, how weakly he reasons, take this as a sample: In short he says, Grey paid $300,000 with profits, the Company paid $300,000 without them. Certainly that places the matter in a most favorable light for the Company, that is supposing the undertaking to have been a mutual one. But according to figures mentioned during the campaign this road cost $4,000,000. The bonholders paid of this $2,000,000, the Company, according to the writer, paid $300,000; but who paid the balance of $1,700,000? This is a fair question, and one easily answered. The Municipalities and the Government. I contend that the proportion actually advanced by the Company is small—very small—and dispels the gist of this argument.

It must not be forgotten that the project was their own—for their own benefit; not a sod was turned with the primary object of benefiting the Municipalities, although it followed as a natural consequence. Those Municipalities who have given their money have no control in its management, although it is seen they have by far the larger interest in it.

The idea of dishonesty put to the front, and to be tacked to every ratepayer who refuses additional bonus is serious, if true; but it isn't true. No pledge has been made, no promises given, and, therefore, no faith has been broken. Artemesia is keeping her pledges in the payment of nearly $900 a year towards the road, and when she promises more she will pay it; but she is under no obligation to give more, nor can the special pleadings of this person make it appear that it is to her interest to give more. The argument based on the traffic in ties, cordwood, telegraph poles, &c., amounts just to this, that but for the income to the road they would be permitted to rot by the track, and instances many, more profit to the farmer is found in the ashes of the wood, and to put up with the perpetual annoyance of shipping it bars the further trial. You see, Mr. Editor, there are always two sides to such questions. The through freight argument is also trotted out, having no better to introduce.

It is well known that the directors can and do discriminate rates, and then the business connections are, and are likely to be, with the chief city of the Province, so that whatever advantage there might be, the many wheels prevent the benefits finding their way into the farmers' pockets. Indeed, a prominent grain buyer, and a very firm friend of the road, told me a short time ago, that it might appear as a feasible argument, but their was nothing in it. If, Mr. Editor, my views and efforts have a tendency to prevent the ratepayers being unduly taxed, and also to cause the proper parties to repair their own property, as I firmly believe it their duty to do, I shall bear patiently the insults of anonymous scribblers. Until the new scheme be laid before us, I shall not enter into further discussion upon the question.

I have now done with this gentleman. If he comes out in his own name and discusses either Municipal or R. R. matters in an open and gentlemanly manner, I shall be but too happy to do so with him, or any one else; but to discuss questions with a base, insinuating coward under an assumed name, I have no desire further to do.

In conclusion, sir, permit me to congratulate you in your new undertaking. I am confident you will not permit in your columns such a general onslaught on the characters of as honorable a body of men as can usually be found around a Council Board, unless you also give the name of the individual who is the author; and it is unaccountable to us, after the treatment the late Editor [received at] our hands, he should have [illegible] it. Yours,

DR. [illegible]

Flesherton, Sept. 6, 188[0].

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL.

The Council met in the Town Hall, [Fl]esherton, on Monday, Sept. 6th, 188[0]. Members all present. Minutes of previous meeting read and [approv]ed. Communications from [the fol]lowing parties presented and [read]:—F. Wait re Saugeen bridge, [illegible] Clerk of Euphrasia, re Uni[on S. S.] No. 1, Artemesia and Euphrasia; [A.] L. Wilson, M. A., Toronto, [munic]ipal stationery! Mr. C. W. [Rutledge] personally waited upon the [Council re] Township printing. Accounts [as fol]lows were ordered to be paid: [illegible] road job Ward No. 4, [illegible]; Wm. Smith, road job Ward No. 4, $4.00; Thomas Addison, repairing scraper, $1.75. By-Law No. 817, levying school trustee rates for 1880, read a third time and passed. By-Law No. 318, appointing Collectors for 1880, passed in the usual way. The following are the Collectors:—Ward No. 1, John Hazard; Ward No. 2, James Brodie; Ward No. 3, John Higginbotham; Ward No. 4, W. T. McKee. Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That the Reeve correspond with the Warden of Grey in reference to the bridge on Gravel Road over the Saugeen River at Priceville, said bridge being in a dangerous condition.—Carried. Mr. McLeod moved, seconded by Mr. Elliott, That the Reeve issue his order in favor of David and William Henderson, for balance due them for road deviation, upon proper signature and delivery of deed of said deviation.—Carried. Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, that the Township printing be given to Mr. Rutledge, providing the work is as good and as cheap as can be procured at other offices.—Carried. Mr. Pedlar moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That the Reeve and Mr. Wright be a Committee to receive Collectors' bonds; said bonds to be delivered to the Committee on or before the next meeting of Council.—Carried. Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. McLeod, that the Clerk procure blank By-Law book, and two dozen Collector's bonds in blank, from A. L. Wilson, M. A., of Toronto.—Carried. Council adjourned to meet on the first Monday in October.

W. J. BELLAMY, Clerk.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment on the 28th day of August, 1880. Members all present. Minutes of last session of Council read and approved. Moved by Mr. Hurlbert, sec. by Mr. Ellis, That J. Boyd, Esq., be appointed to act in behalf of this Corporation, with the person appointed by the Township of Collingwood, to take into consideration the petition of James Holmes and twenty-four others, for the formation of a Union School Section between this Township and Collingwood.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Fawcett, seconded by Mr. Hurlburt, That as James Paterson, Esq., through illness, is unable to attend to the equalization in behalf of this Township of the Union School Sections connected with this Township and Collingwood, that James Kerr, Esq., be appointed to act in his stead as referee in behalf of this Corporation.—Carried. The Commissioner of No. 5 Division was authorized to get repairs made in side-line 27 and 28, the crosswaying therein being reported unsafe. Moved by Mr. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Boyd, That whereas subscriptions amounting to over $60 have been presented by Andrew Grier, Esq., for improving side-line 18 and 19, in the 1st and 2nd concessions of the Township, that the Council hereby authorize Mr. Fawcett to expend an equivalent thereto for said purpose; and providing that this subscription should amount to $100, Mr. Fawcett is also authorized to spend an equal amount.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Boyd, seconded by Mr. Hurlburt, That as the T., G. & B. R. R. Company are seeking to obtain a bonus from this Municipality to aid them in improving their line, that this Council are determined to oppose any such measure to their uttermost; and that should steps be taken to submit a By-Law for such purpose, that this Council refuse to acknowledge the same, unless a petition according to law be presented, and a deposit of $200 made to cover the expenses in connection therewith.—Carried. Mr. Ellis was authorized to expend an equivalent to the amount expended by Artemesia Council, on Nelson's Hill, Town-line. By Law No. 290, appointing a Collector in the seven westerly concessions in this Township, was carried through the different stages and passed. Moved by Mr. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Hurlbut, That the Reeve, Deputy Reeve, and Mr. Fawcett, be a Committee to attend to the building or repairing of a bridge on 21 and 22 side road over Beaver River, known as Kerr's Bridge, as said bridge is reported to be in a very unsafe state for travel.—Carried. The petition of James Mick and others, in reference to opening 27 and 28 side-line, in the 11th and 12t concessions, and the appropriation of St. Vincent Council for cutting down hill on Town-line, 8th concession, were referred to the Commissioner of that Division. The Treasurer was ordered to remit to John Rutherford, Esq., printer, Owen Sound, $32.50, for printing Voter's List for current year. The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows:—To John Wiley, $16 for repairing bridge on 7th line; Samuel Wiley, $2.75 for plank furnished for use at culvert on side-line 6 and 7, concession 7; Robert Dunlop, Clerk, $25 for getting up Voter's List for current year, and $5 for serving notices to attend Court of revision, and furnishing the School Inspector copies of assessment of School Sections as now required by law; Samuel A. Kerr, $6.50 for work performed on 21 and 22 side-road. On motion being made and seconded, the Council adjourned until the last Saturday in September.

ROBERT DUNLOP. Tp. Clerk.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The STANDARD will be given to the first of January, 1882, for $1.25. Now is the time to subscribe.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received several communications intended for this issue, but the great influx of advertisements [prevent their appearing. We trust] our friends will [illegible] [illegible] hope [illegible] [in a] position [illegible]

MARRIED

At the residence of the bride's father, on the 1st inst., by the Rev. G. Keys, Mr. Wm. R. Gilbert, Agent T. G. & B. Railway, Klineburg, to Esther A., second daughter of M. Smith, Esq., Holland Centre Mills.

DIED.

At Flesherton, on Tuesday, the 7th inst., the infant son of Mr. Elder.

At Toronto, on Wednesday, the 8th inst., Mrs. Frederick Armstrong of Flesherton.

At Markdale, on the 9th inst., at the residence of his father, Wm. Brown, Esq., Gladstone, aged 11 years.

STRAYED

FROM the premises of JOHN MOORE, lot 10, concession 13, Holland, about the 15th of June. Three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white, one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 1[4]th, 1880. 1-3t

THE MARKETS

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Sep. 16th, 1880.

Flour	5.25	to	5.50
Spring Wheat per bush., new	0.90	to	0.95
Fall do. do. do.	0.90	to	0.90
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.30	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes,	0.35	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	0.15	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.10
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese, per lb.	0.05	"	0.05
Ducks, per pair	0.30	"	0.40
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.25
Turkeys, per lb	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1 00
Hides	6.00	"	6.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	3 00	"	3.40
Wool	0.25	"	0.25
Green Apples, per. bushel	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Sep. 16th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.85	to	0.90
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.88
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.27	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.20	"	0.22
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5 00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	5.00	"	6.00
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.35
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

TORONTO.

(Special to the Standard.)

TORONTO, Sep. 16, 1880.

Wheat, fall, per bush	$1 05	to	$1 3
Wheat, spring, do.	1 10	to	1 6
Barley, do.	0 55	to	0 6
Oats, do.	0 38	to	0 5
Peas, do.	0 60	to	0 2
Rye, do.	0 58	to	0 5
Clover Seed do.	3 85	to	4 6
Dressed hogs, per 100 lbs.	7 00	to	7 5
Beef, hind quarters	6 00	to	7 5
Beef, fore quarters	3 50	to	5 2
Chickens, per pair	25	to	0 2
Fowls, do.	50	to	0 0
Ducks, per brace	55	to	0 5
Geese, each	60	to	0 6
Turkeys	75	to	1 7
Butter, large rolls	12	to	0 7
Butter, tub dairy	15	to	0 5
Butter, store-packed	12	to	0 1
Eggs, fresh, per doz		to	0 1
Eggs, packed		to	0 1
Apples, per brl	3 50	to	4 1
Potatoes, per bag	0 50	to	0 1
Onions, per bag	2 50	to	3 5
Hay	00	to	16 5

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED from the premises of the subscriber, lots 91 & 92, 3rd Range, W. T. & S. Road, one white heifer with white nose, a red and white heifer with lined back, and a red steer with white spots through it, and white hind feet—all yearlings. Any person giving information that will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

ROBERT TORRY.

Glenelg, Sept. 2, 1880. 1-4in

STRAY STEER.

CAME into the premises of the subscriber lot 5, con. 12, Euphrasia, on or about the 15th July last, a red and white STEER, about one year old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take it away.

1-3* JAS. BLANEY.

STRAY STEERS.

STRAYED into the premises of Mrs. David Bradley, lot 62, 2nd East of T. & S. Road, Holland, one steer rising three years old, and one rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take them away.

MRS. BRADLEY.

Holland, Sept. 10, 1880. 1-3*

STRAYED

INTO the premises of James Farding, lot 16, con. 9, Euphrasia, two RED YEARLING STEERS and one brindled yearling. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-3in.

VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulation Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood, (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!

GRANT & CHELLEW [illegible]

[illegible] NEXT 30 DAYS! [illegible]

Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing! in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing! promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

E. D. WILCOX,

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, &c. &c.

This space to be occupied by E. D. Wilcox's Advertisement as soon as his new Brick Store, now being fitted for him is completed.

MARKDALE.

Stoves! Stoves !Stoves!

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

TAILORING.

F, J. PRIDHAM

FASHIONABLE TAILOR,

WISHES to inform the public of Markdale and surrounding country, that he is prepared to

FILL ALL ORDERS PROMPTLY.

THE LATEST FASHIONS ALWAYS ON HAND.

CUTTING DONE while customers are waiting.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

CHARGES MODERATE.

PLACE OF BUSINESS

OVER M'FARLAND'S STORE,

Corner of Mill & Toronto Sts.,

MARKDALE.

September 17, 1880. 1-tf

W. MASON,

Carriage Builder & Painter

MARKDALE.

Wishes to inform the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country that he is prepared to attend to their wants by giving them an article that will give satisfaction

WAGGONS, BUGGIES,

AND [illegible]

[illegible]

PAINTING!

I call your attention to the fact that I am prepared to do all kinds of painting in the carriage line, and wish you to give me a call and see my work as it speaks for itself. I have a large stock always on hand so that you have not to wait half a year to get a job done, but you get attended to at once.

SPECIAL ATTENTION PAID TO REPAIRING!

Remember the place, over Noble's Blacksmith shop, where you will find him in the best of humor and ready to attend to his customers.

W. MASON.

Markdale, Sept. 17 1880. 1

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books!

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS! TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions, AND VETERINARY PREPERATIONS, CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880. 1-tf

HILL BROS.,

When their new building is completed.

Space to be occupied by

HILL BROS.

when they remove.

Advertisement will appear in this space.

MARKDALE.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCH[ES],

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TAB[LES], DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,

Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mills

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

CLOCKS for 75 cents, at Doll's.

SILVER Watches from $3.50 up, at Doll's.

REVERE HOUSE.—This hotel has been enlarged, and will, [when] completed, be quite co[mmodious and im]proved in appearance.

Go where you can get the worth of your money, [and] the right change back, at McIntyre's.

GO TO Mrs. Burch's for new designs in Laces, Embroidery, and Fringes, Harper's Cut Paper Patterns, 25c., [f]all [and winter]; all new styles.

FLOUR.—W. J. Ford's Flour sold [at] McIntyre's. The only place in [t]own that sell's it, and the only kind [h]e sells. Warranted to be good.

TAKE your watch to Doll and have [i]t repaired properly. Watch and Clock repairing and cleaning a specialty.

THE building of the mansion of Dr. Sproule is being pushed forward, and [i]t is expected to be ready for roofing before winter sets in.

Now for Fruit of every kind. McIntyre has a large stock on hand, [v]ery cheap for cash.

THE MANSION HOUSE.—It will be [se]en by advertisement that this old [p]ublic house is under the manage[me]nt of Mr. John Van Horn. The [pl]ace is well kept and is deserving of [th]e travelling patronage.

Do you want a Watch that will give [y]ou every satisfaction. Doll has them [a]t bottom prices.

SAW MILL.—Mr. Ed. Davis re[s]umes the saw milling business on lot 21, con. 3, Artemesia, on or about the [1]st October. This will be a great [b]oon not only to the neighborhood [a]nd those having logs to dispose of, [b]ut to the community generally. Particulars will be announced by posters in a few days.

LADIES' Solid Gold Watches from $20 up, at Doll's.

THE fence lately placed in front of the English Church has been painted and adds much to the appearance of the place. Rev. Mr. Ward, the Incumbent, together with the members of the congregation deserve credit for the taste displayed in the building and beautifying of their place of worship.

WALTHAM Watches that weigh from 1½ ozs. to ½ lb., at Doll's.

VETERINARY SURGEON.—It will be seen by referring to our advertising columns that Mr. Bloomfield has commenced the practice of his profession in this village. Mr. B. comes to us with high testimonials of abilit[y] from England, and also from places he has visited in Canada. The services of such a person will no doubt be fully appreciated in this locality.

Subscribe for the Standard. [W]e will give it from now till the First of [J]anuary, 1882, for one year's subscription [$]1.25.

AT MCINTYRE'S.—We are no advocate of intoxicating drinks; on the contrary, advise temperance in all things; but if people will indulge in that which some think they should not, then by all means procure the pure article which is said to be had at McIntyre's. It will be seen by sundry small notices in this issue, that McIntyre has a select stock of family groceries to which we draw the attention of the public.

Go where you can get cheap Groceries, at McIntyre's.

DESECRATING THE SANCTUARY.—Some [ill]disposed person as yet unknown [ent]ered St. Mary's Church, Maxwell [last] week and mutilated the altar [clot]h, with a view to steal the com[mun]ion linen. A reward of fifty dol[lars] has been offered for the convic[tion] of the perpetrator, and it is to [be h]oped he may be discovered and [bro]ught to justice. Such wanton acts [des]erve severe punishment.

[S]tudy your own interest and go to [Mc]Intyre's for all kinds of Groceries, [whe]re you can get them cheap for [cas]h.

[illegible] CHANGE OF STATION AGENTS.—[Mr.] John Davidson, for a few months [S]tation Agent here, having tendered [his] resignation, the Company accept[ed] of it, and Mr. D. is no longer in [th]e employ of the T., G. & B. R. R. [M]r. Davidson, though but a short time [in] the village, has gained the good [wi]shes of the business part of the com[m]unity for his straightforwardness [an]d punctuality in the discharge of [hi]s duty, and made many friends who [de]eply regret his departure. We [h]ave not learned where it is Mr. D.'s [in]tention to go or what he intends to [em]bark in, but we are confident that [we] express the feelings of the village [wh]en we say his departure is much [re]gretted. Mr. John Saesar, late [F]reight Agent at Orangeville, is now [in] charge of the station in this place.

FOR Groceries, Liquors and Provisions of all kinds, go to McIntyre's.

BELDEN'S DOMINION ATLAS.—We [ha]ve before us a copy of this great [u]ndertaking, and we desire to speak [of] it as we believe its merits demand. [Th]is village is accurately spoken of [illegible] range and Grange Halls and [illegible] [h]ouses, creeks, mills, churches [illegible] 814, [illegible] names of those who subscrib[ed] for the work are on their lots; and the same may be said of the whole of the County. The maps are excel[le]nt, and we believe accurate. The maps of the Provinces of the Domin[i]on, the Dominion itself, and other portions of the world, are equal to any [w]e have seen. Of course special at[t]ention has been given to Canada. The letter press and quality of paper and binding is of No. 1 quality. A contemporary says, with whom we agree, that the historical part of the [wo]rk is full and concise. The history of the County of Grey will be found very interesting. Besides all this, the [w]ork contains a vast amount of ex[tr]emely useful information, relating [to] the geological, climatic, chronolo[g]ical, political, statistical, &c., con[dit]ions of Canada. It contains the new Canadian tariff, postal rates, &c., &c. [o]f Canada, the work contains rail[ro]ad, electoral, post office and other [ma]ps, and is in every respect up to [th]e prospectus. The work should be [in] the house of every one in the [coun]ty, as its worth cannot be too [hig]hly estimated. We wish the pub[lis]hers every success.

[illegible] is no use in saying much about [Mc]Intyre's Liquors. Every one knows [the]y are the right brands.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

Clocks for 75 cents, at Doll's.

Silver Watches from $9.50 up, at Doll's.

Revere House.—This hotel has been enlarged, and will, when completed, be quite commo... improved in appearance.

Go where you can get the worth of your money, and the right change back, at McIntyre's.

Go to Miss Burch's for new designs in Laces, Embroidery, and Fringes, Harper's Cut Paper Patterns, 25c., suit; all new styles.

Flour.—W. J. Ford's Flour sold at McIntyre's. The only place in town that sell's it, and the only kind he sells. Warranted to be good.

Take your watch to Doll and have it repaired properly. Watch and Clock repairing and cleaning a specialty.

The building of the mansion of Dr. Sproule is being pushed forward, and it is expected to be ready for roofing before winter sets in.

Now for Fruit of every kind. McIntyre has a large stock on hand, very cheap for cash.

The Mansion House.—It will be seen by advertisement that this old public house is under the management of Mr. John Van Horn. The place is well kept and is deserving of the travelling patronage.

Do you want a Watch that will give you every satisfaction. Doll has them at bottom prices.

Saw Mill.—Mr. Ed. Davis resumes the saw milling business on lot 21, con. 3, Artemesia, on or about the 1st October. This will be a great boon not only to the neighborhood and those having logs to dispose of, but to the community generally. Particulars will be announced by posters in a few days.

Ladies' Solid Gold Watches from $20 up, at Doll's.

The fence lately placed in front of the English Church has been painted and adds much to the appearance of the place. Rev. Mr. Ward, the Incumbent, together with the members of the congregation deserve credit for the taste displayed in the building and beautifying of their place of worship.

Waltham Watches that weigh from 1¼ ozs. to ½ lb., at Doll's.

Veterinay Surgeon.—It will be seen by referring to our advertising columns that Mr. Bloomfield has commenced the practice of his profession in this village. Mr. B. comes to us with high testimonials of ability from England, and also from places he has visited in Canada. The services of such a person will no doubt be fully appreciated in this locality.

Subscribe for the Standard. We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription, $1.25.

At McIntyre's.—We are no advocate of intoxicating drinks, on the contrary, advise temperance in all things; but if people will indulge in that which some think they should not, then by all means procure the pure article which is said to be had at McIntyre's. It will be seen by sundry small notices in this issue, that McIntyre has a select stock of family groceries to which we draw the attention of the public.

Go where you can get cheap Groceries, at McIntyre's.

Desecrating the Sanctuary.—Some evil disposed person as yet unknown entered St. Mary's Church, Maxwell, last week and mutilated the altar cloth, with a view to steal the communion linen. A reward of fifty dollars has been offered for the conviction of the perpetrator, and it is to be hoped he may be discovered and brought to justice. Such wanton acts deserve severe punishment.

Study your own interest and go to McIntyre's for all kinds of Groceries, where you can get them cheap for cash.

Change of Station Agents.—Mr. John Davidson, for a few months Station Agent here, having tendered his resignation, the Company accepted of it, and Mr. D. is no longer in the employ of the T., G. & B. R. R. Mr. Davidson, though but a short time in the village, has gained the good wishes of the business part of the community for his straightforwardness and punctuality in the discharge of his duty, and made many friends who deeply regret his departure. We have not learned where it is Mr. D.'s intention to go or what he intends to embark in, but we are confident that we express the feelings of the village when we say his departure is much regretted. Mr. John Saesar, late Freight Agent at Orangeville, is now in charge of the station in this place.

For Groceries, Liquors and Provisions of all kinds, go to McIntyre's

Belden's Dominion Atlas.—We have before us a copy of this great undertaking, and we desire to speak of it as we believe its merits demand. ... village is accurately spoken of. ... Orange and Grange Halls and ... houses, creeks, mills, churches; ... names of those who subscribed for the work are on their lots; and the same may be said of the whole of the County. The maps are excellent, and we believe accurate. The maps of the Provinces of the Dominion, the Dominion itself, and other portions of the world, are equal to any we have seen. Of course special attention has been given to Canada. The letter press and quality of paper and binding is of No. 1 quality. A contemporary says, with whom we agree, that the historical part of the work is full and concise. The history of the County of Grey will be found very interesting. Besides all this, the work contains a vast amount of extremely useful information, relating to the geological, climatic, chronological, political, statistical, &c., condition of Canada. It contains the new Canadian tariff, postal rates, &c., &c. ... Canada, the work contains railroad, electoral, post office and other maps, and is in every respect up to the prospectus. The work should be in the house of every one in the County, as its worth cannot be too highly estimated. We wish the publishers every success.

There is no use in saying much about McIntyre's Liquors. Every one knows he keeps the right brands.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

J. B. McMillan,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR in Chancery, Conveyancer, &c., &c.
Owen Sound, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

McFayden & Robarts,
BARRISTERS, Solicitors in Chancery, &c. Office, one door east of the Merchants' Bank, Union-st., Owen Sound.
C. McFayden. J. T. Robarts.
Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
Alfred Frost, J. W. Frost, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
Offices—at Owen Sound and Markdale.
N. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. McFarland's store, open on Thursday of every week. 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept, 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer,
DUNDALK.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

David Jackson, Jr.,
LOAN AND LAND AGENT, CONVEYancer, &c. Money to lend at the lowest rate of Interest ever offered in this part of the country. Principal money will be taken in sums of $100 and upwards yearly with the interest if desired.
Durham, Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable half-yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end of the year 8½ per cent.—principal payable at the end of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal and interest yearly to suit Borrowers.
Lands for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1 y

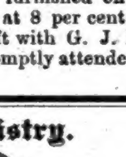
Carson Price,
GENERAL MERCHANT, HOLLAND Centre. Land Agent and Commissioner in B. R. &c. Mortgages, Leases, &c., drawn with neatness and despatch.
Holland, Centre, Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments.
☞ A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, Meaford and Markdale. Having purchased Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's entire stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys done within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates for Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Orders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

Dentistry.



W. C. Jewell, L.D.S.,
WILL be at the MARKDALE HOUSE, Markdale, the First FRIDAY and following day in each month. Parties wanting Extracting, Filling or Teeth Inserted, from one to a full set, would do well to call and see prices. Satisfaction given in all cases. Head Office—opposite Post Office, Meaford.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1 y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
J. & J. McGIRR, - - - Proprietors.
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the choicest Wines and Liquors and the best brands of Cigars.
Free 'bus to and from all trains.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Auctioneers.

J. M. Webster,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
☞ LOAN ND LAND AGENT,
Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.
EUGENIA P. O.
Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursey Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880, 1

CHASE BROS. & BOWMAN,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
Nurseries at Rochester, N.Y.
ENOCH BALL, MEAFORD,
Agent to sell and collect for them
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

WILLIAM FOX,
Plain and Ornamental Plasterer.
Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Sheep and Cattle.
FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave there names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.
C. W. & A. SPEERS.
Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER
Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.
☞ Meat delivered at any house in town.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Meat for All
AT
W. B. Sarjent's.
The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of
MARKDALE
and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as
CHEAP
as any one north of Toronto.
Fresh and Corned Meats
delivered promptly on receipt of orders.
SAUSAGE & POULTRY
always kept in their Season.
Special inducements to large Purchasers
☞ Shop on Mill sreett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."
☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep
Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continuance of your support.
W. B. SARJEANT.
Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

James Sullivan,
FLESHERTON.
Manufacturer and Dealer in
Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and Japanned Wares,
Eave Troughing, &c.
A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware.
Wooden Wares, Washboards, Brooms, Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.
Stove Ovens Lined.
Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.
☞ Prices most reasonable,
JAMES SULLIVAN.
Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

New Boot & Shoe SHOP.
THE subscriber wishes to intimate to the inhabitants of
MARKDALE
and surrounding country that he has opened his Boot and Shoe Shop
In the premises lately occupied by Mr. R. C. Tackabery, NEXT DOOR TO
MR. MONTGOMERY'S BAKERY, and hopes by close attention to business
Good Workmanship
AND MODERATE CHARGES!
to merit a share of public patronage.
ALEX. KAY.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1

STOVES.

STOVES. STOVES.

Haskett Bros.
BOTTOM PRICE FOUND
AT LAST.
Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.
THINK OF OUR PRICES.
A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18.
Same, with Low Oven, $17.
5 BOX STOVE, $4
All other sizes Equally Low
These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.
A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.
Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.
HASKETT Bros.,
Sept. 17, 1880. 1

A Word to the Public.

The era of prosperity which now happily reigns throughout the length and breadth of our glorious dominion benefits every branch of industry, and has very materially benefited my business, which has increased in volume several thousands of dollars over any previous year, and is steadily increasing.

Appreciating the tastes and requirements of the Public I have studiously, and I trust successfully, labored for 18 years to meet the wishes of purchasers. The support and patronage I have had justifies me in increasing my stock, extending my facilities, and at the same time materially reducing my prices.

Ambitious as I have ever been to be first and foremost in my business, I am resolved that henceforth the reputation I have achieved in this particular, shall be promoted and enhanced. Egotistical mention is not essential, but I do feel warranted in calling attention to my present full and complete stock of Goods, a stock, the greater part of which has been purchased for cash, and direct from the manufacturers, and the equal of which, for extent or variety, I do not think can be found north of Toronto. I solicit from strangers an inspection, and to my friends and customers say, that I have for them in goods and prices a succession of what I believe will be very agreeable surprises. I am in a position to fill all orders, and it will not be necessary to send to Toronto or elsewhere for goods. Give me a chance to supply your wants, and I guarantee the best Goods at the most economical rates.

A call and examination will be gratifying to me, for I feel sure that an experience in patronizing me will fully confirm all that I claim for my goods.

W. J. McFARLAND,
WHOLESASE AND RETAIL,
MARKDALE.
September 17, 1880. 1

W. F. DOLL,

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

Special inducements = Waltham Watches
A SPECIAL LINE OF
LADIES GOLD WATCHES
Just to hand. Also Ladies Col. Gold Lockets, Chains, Necklets, &c.
A LARGE LINE OF
Wedding and Gem Rings, $1 to $10.
HALL, PARLOR, BRACKET AND BEDROOM CLOCKS AT ALL PRICES.
Silver and Electro-Plated Ware.
Owing to the increased demand for this line of goods I have been forced to purchase larger and better cases. Am now offering
Cake Baskets, Fruit Stands, Cruets, Butter Coolers, Sugar Bowls, Pickle Dishes, Napkin Rings, Fruit Knives, Spoons, Dinner and Desert Knives, &c., all of the latest and most improved designs.
A Call Respectfully Solicited.
☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.
W. F. DOLL, Flesherton and Dundalk.
Flesherton, Sept. 13th, 1880. 1

THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND CAN. MORT. CO.
(LIMITED.)
R. DAVIS, Agent, - - - - FLESHERTON.
THE ABOVE COMPANY ARE NOW PRE[PARED]
☞ LEND MO[NE]Y! ☜
At 7½ per cent., half yearly, or 8 per cent., yearly. Note a few of the advantages derived from the North of Scotland. You are not obliged to pay any part of the principal until the end of the term. You can arrange to pay in instalments if you choose and interest immediately ceases on such amounts when paid. You can arrange to pay your interest or principal in any month to suit you. You can arrange to repay the loan in any time from 1 to 20 years. Simple interest only charged. No equalization of payments. No 12 per cent. interest nor fines charged. The following example will show one of the many ways in which a loan may be repaid.

EXAMPLE:
$1000 borrowed, repaid by ten equal annual instalments, simple interest, at 8 per cent. yearly, the payments will be as follows:

1st year, interest 8 per cent on $1000	$80 00
Instalment	100 00	180 00
2nd year, interest 8 per cent. on $900	$72 00
Instalment	100 00	172 00
3rd year, interest 8 per cent. on $800	$64 00
Instalment	100 00	164 00
4th year, interest 8 per cent. on $700	$56 00
Instalment	100 00	156 00
5th year, interest 8 per cent. on $600	$48 00
Instalment	100 00	148 00
6th year, interest 8 per cent. on $500	$40 00
Instalment	100 00	140 00
7th year, interest 8 per cent. on $400	$32 00
Instalment	100 00	132 00
8th year, interest 8 per cent. on $300	$24 00
Instalment	100 00	124 00
9th year, interest 8 per cent. on $200	$16 00
Instalment	100 00	116 00
10th year, interest 8 per cent. on $100	$8 00
Instalment	100 00	108 00
Making a total payment of		$1440 00

The borrower is not obliged however, to repay any part of the principal by instalments but may do so if convenient. Expenses low and a detailed statement of disbursements given to each borrower. Deeds, Leases, Wills, Agreements, &c., neatly and carefully prepared. Insurance affected in the old favorite Companies. Accounts, notes, and rents collected and returns promptly made. Farms for sale and to rent. Private funds invested. Auction Sales attended. Charges low. All business strictly confidential.

ROBT. DAVIS,
Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Auctioneer, Real Estate and Ins. Agt., &c.
FLESHERTON.

BOOTS and SHOES!
FOR THE MILLION.
A NOVELTY in these Goods!
The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.
Call and Examine Stock and Prices!
before purchasing "shop" goods elsewhere.
FULL LINES IN
Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing, (Ready made,) Crockery and Glassware!
—AT THE—
"TORONTO HOUSE,"
MARKDALE.
WM. BROWN.
Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880. 1

FACTS.

"Facts are chiels that winna ding."

Our stock of

SPRING GOODS!

Is now complete in every department. We invite special attention to the following lines:

GENTS' FURNISHINGS

West of England Broadcloths	Canada Straws, etc., etc.
" " Doeskins,	White Shirts,
Diagonal Coatings,	Regatta "
" Overcoatings,	Oxford "
French Trouserings,	Windsor and Club Houses
Canadian Tweeds,	Scarfs.
SUITS made to order in good style, none but first-class Trimmings used.	Bows, Collars, (in linen and paper,)
Hard and soft, fur and felt Hats in all the latest styles.	Gloves, Hose, Braces, &c., in endless variety.

STAPLES.

GROCERIES—Fresh.	DRY GOODS—well selected.
Sugars, Syrups, Teas, Coffees, Tobacco, Currants, Raisins, Prunes, Dried Apples, Soaps, Oatmeal, Cornmeal, Beans, Turnips, and other field and garden seeds, all new and true to name. A large assortment of Crockery, Glassware & Earthenware.	Dress Stuffs, all shades and patterns. Black and colored Lustres. Buttons, every shape and shade. Ladies' Compendiums. Prints, Ginghams, gray and white Cottons, Chambreys, Hollands, Tickings, Tablings, Towellings, Winceys, Shirtings, checked and stripped, Sheetings, Ducks—brown, ringed, spotted and striped.

BOOTS and SHOES!
We have just received a large lot of Sessions, Cooper and Smith's celebrated make, all sizes, from an infant's slipper to a No. 11 brogan. Ask for this make and buy no other.
N. B.—We pay special attention to the TAILORING DEPARTMENT. Young men, if you want a PERFECT FITTING SUIT give us a trial. We Guarantee Satisfaction.
BUTTER & RAE,
Douglass' Brick Block, Mill-st., Markdale.
March 23rd, 1880.

PERSONS ABOUT BUYING
Threshing Machines!
should see my DUSTLESS GRAIN SAVING SEPARATOR and Horse-Power before ordering elsewhere. Don't wait for agents to call.
A. COCHRANE.
Durham Foundry, August 3rd, 1880.
249-6w

[Dr. Clark Johnson's] Indian [Blood Syrup]
77 W. 3d [St.]

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Disease, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Billiousness, Nervous Debility, etc.
The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870
9.000.000 Bottles.
This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.
It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.
It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.
It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.
There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.
PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - 50
Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.
Mrs. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed [a physician]. After using your Indian [Blood] Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.
Mrs. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.
Burford, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.
ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.
Mrs. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.
MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.
W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.
NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.
Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.
Mrs. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.
Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.
Dear Sir:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.
DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.
Westport, Ont., Jan. 20, 1879.
Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.
W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northrop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST HOW RESTORED
We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.
☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of a knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
Address
THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 Ann St., New York.
Post Office Box, 4586.

Advertisement will appear in this space

[illegible] spread [illegible] of Time. [illegible] NDAY, 3rd NOV. [illegible] NORTH. [illegible] Station, [illegible]

[illegible] shing ye [illegible] tory. [illegible] tra by day, [illegible] the horse away; [illegible] with grace be- [illegible] horse could not be [illegible] day [illegible] of another tribe, [illegible] ower bribe; [illegible] money, skill, nor breath, [illegible] the owner from his horse till death.

Then Daher, who was subtle, mean and sly,
Concluded, next, some stratagem to try;
So, clothed in rags, and masked in form and face,
He as a beggar walked with limping pace,
And, meeting Nebar, with the horse one day,
He fell, and prostrate on the desert lay.

The ruse succeeded; for, when Nebar found
A helpless man in sorrow on the ground,
He took him up, and on the noble steed
Gave him a place; but what a thankless deed!
For Daher shouted, laughed, and giving rein,
Said, "You will never see your horse again."

"Take him," said Nebar, "but, for Mercy's sake,
Tell no man in what way you choose to take,
Lest others, seeing what has happened to me,
Omit to do some needed charity."
Pierced by these words, the robber's keen remorse
Thwarted his plan, and he returned the horse;
Shame-faced and sorrowful; then slunk away
As if he feared the very light of day!

—From Wide Awake.

Biddy's Song of the Dress.

Wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
While the chickens are crowin' aloof !
Ah wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
While the cats are out on the roof !
Och ! I am makin' a dress,
Cut bias, wid spangles galore ;
An' I'll be the belle at the picnic and ball
Wid its buttons behind and before.

Wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
Till me brain begins to schwim !
Wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
Till the moon at the window comes in !
Seam an' bustle an' band,
Band an' bustle an' seam—
[illegible]
Och, I see it all in a dream.

Och, men, wid sisters dear !
Och, men, wid mothers and wives !
I'll show them such an illegant dress
As they never saw in their lives.
Stitch ! stitch ! stitch !
That brazen-faced Polly McFlirt,
She never can shine with Bridget McFine,
When arrayed in my pollynaze skirt.

Wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
From tin till breakfast time !
Wurk ! wurk ! wurk !
As a poet wud wurk at a rhyme !
Band an' bustle an' seam,
Seam an' bustle an' band—
Till me heart's in a flutter, me brain's in a whirl,
Wid a dress that is perfectly ghrand !

Och, but to brathe the breath
As the cowslip and primrose schwate,
Wid a sun umbrella above me head,
And slippers upon me feet.
An' thin, for wan short hour
[illegible]
Wid its ribbons an' flounces an' furbelows—
[illegible]

JANE HEARN'S TRIAL.

A STORY IN THREE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

"One may mistake a fancy for a passion; but never a passion for a fancy, when once it comes." Thus says one of our best and purest writers; and truly the story of many a human heart lies folded in the truth of these few words. [illegible]

Jane Hearn, when she was a girl of eighteen, made a mistake in life. She took a fancy for a passion, followed its leading, and married a man [illegible]

[illegible]

Jane was a slight slip of a girl, graceful in every movement; she had soft, dark eyes, a wealth of dusky locks, and a high-bred look that promised well for her powers of endurance. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] ings he no [illegible] geological [illegible] When Jane [illegible] one. When [illegible] with him in [illegible] to cultivate [illegible] tasteful to [illegible] He made [illegible] thing indif- [illegible] me to him [illegible] nature to [illegible] dignity of [illegible] admir- [illegible] of manner [illegible] his wife, he [illegible] thought, all [illegible] oried in the [illegible] oved. She [illegible] ny barrier [illegible] of her for- [illegible] Daubeney, [illegible] companion [illegible] persistence, [illegible] herself and [illegible] he could [illegible] elf protec- [illegible] upon as a [illegible] hich, in his [illegible] Hearn most [illegible] confidence [illegible] a "med- [illegible] ong run for [illegible] of any kind [illegible] events to [illegible] after the [illegible] arn (in con- [illegible] ction that [illegible] d light of [illegible] friend, and [illegible] fact of his [illegible] hose he had [illegible] found to [illegible] ning to her

[illegible]

To say that she did not mourn for her husband would not be true. Any good woman will mourn a man who has once been to her in the closest and most sacred relation in life, no matter how that life may have been saddened and blighted by his influence. [illegible]

[illegible]

"Do you love me enough?" he said, looking into her eyes, so dark and bright.

"Don't you know?" she answered, hiding their happy light upon his breast.

[illegible]

"I will love thee to the death,
And, so beloved, will die."

[illegible]

"Then I can come after you," she said, with her eyes suspiciously bright and a quiver about her lips. "You can write for me from the Orkneys, or from anywhere that you are likely to stay in your cruise."

"Can I!" he said, kissing the tremble from her mouth.

[illegible]

[illegible] so happy, Guy, these last few weeks ! I have been so happy that my happiness has frightened me sometimes—it is only a short time, and yet it seems more than all the years of my life before. It is foolish, I suppose, to write you such long letters, and you away for so short a time, and coming back so soon ? It is unworthy of the wisdom that should have gathered round my seven-and-twenty years—is it not ? When you get this there will only be two days more before you set out north again, so that very soon I shall be beginning the day that has only to wear to seven o'clock before it brings you to me. The lilies of the valley are all out in the garden, and I shall fill the vase upon your writing-table with the pretty bells early that morning. Then I shall go for a long walk along the shore. You will think me a baby for writing like this. Do you know I really thought I was growing quite a sensible, almost strong-minded woman—a matter-of-fact, common-sense sort of person—once. Before I met you, I mean —before the day when under the lilac I sat with the leaf-shadows flickering on my book, and Mrs. Bayard touched me on the shoulder to make me look up. You know what I saw when I did look up, Guy ? Oh, my darling, how fair the [illegible] has seemed to me—how beautiful a thing life has grown since the moment when I met your dear eyes looking into mine with a strange, calm, questioning, as though they had found something they had been looking for ever so long ! You see they had found me—and they were very glad. No; you are not good-looking, Guy ; no one could call you that, Sir ! You are a plain man, clever, as one can see at a glance, and—yes —a little—just a little—hard and stern. You are not very young either, you know— what is it ? Thirty-three and a bit. Now you will say there is a spice of impertinence in my nature, and this must be it coming out. But, Guy, no one knows but Jane how

[illegible]

It was a fair Summer's day, the day on which Guy reached that fair home beside the sea. [illegible]

No one was astir. He looked in vain for the substantial forms of the Colonel and his wife, usually to be seen wandering in the garden at that hour on a fine evening, or for a slight figure, book in hand—a woman with earnest quiet eyes and a crown of dusky hair.

How quiet the place seemed!

He quickly passed through the hall-door, [illegible]

By the mantel-shelf stood the old Colonel, a letter in his hand, a look of pain and terror on his face [illegible]

"Great Heaven!" he said, hoarsely, letting the letter in his hand flutter to the ground, "is that you, Guy? Has any one told you?"

"Told me what?" said Guy, white to the lips, but master of himself as usual. "Where is Janey?"

"She is gone up the shore—she knows nothing—come in, old fellow. Call your courage to you, man. You will need it all. Read this."

Guy drew a deep breath as he took the closely-written sheet of foreign paper, and went with it to the window.

And as he did so Mrs. Daubeney covered her face with her hands, and began rocking herself to and fro in a perfect frenzy of grief.

[illegible]

CHAPTER II.

When Guy Challoner had finished reading through the letter in a silence broken only by Mrs. Daubeney's stifled sobs, he laid it down upon the table, and, turning to the window, stood there silent and motionless. [illegible]

[illegible]

For a life [illegible] wise and [illegible] tend again [illegible]

Guy ha[illegible] ly, and s[illegible] Colonel c[illegible]

The del[illegible] rance, yet [illegible]

"What [illegible] spite of al[illegible]

"I say, [illegible] us make t[illegible] This fello[illegible] to suppos[illegible] saint in th[illegible] get rid of [illegible]

"Yes, [illegible] that would [illegible] thing but [illegible] I think th[illegible] her life in [illegible] between h[illegible] lives. M[illegible] ing his ca[illegible] you not th[illegible] all? My [illegible] us can co[illegible]

Listenin[illegible] Colonel f[illegible] advisedly [illegible] well alone[illegible]

"If I fi[illegible] to return [illegible] will you [illegible] tion, and [illegible] charge to [illegible]

The Col[illegible] that tongu[illegible] mischief.

Another [illegible] calm, bea[illegible] gently st[illegible] over a tim[illegible] on the s[illegible] faintly ov[illegible]

[illegible] drooping against the rocks along the shore, was mirrored in the quiet water that washed their feet. Birds sang, but softly, as though the hush of the coming night was over them, and the lazy wafting of a seagull's wings now and again shone white between sea and sky.

A peaceful brooding spirit seemed abroad. The Summer was past, but a harvest of content had been garnered in, and Autumn was fair with a calm and mature beauty all its own.

But of its sweet ripeness of perfection the man hurrying on with eager, strained eyes and pale set lips wotted nothing. The rocks dappled all gold and ruddy-brown with the dying ferns; the lovely purple shadows sleeping on the sea; the waft of white wings; the faint star-shine above, the gentle-sobbing water below; what were they all to him? Eager, mad, craving for the sight of a woman's face, (ay, though it might be the last time he should ever gaze upon it, he still longed for the sight of it;) agonizing, quick-coming questions as to how best he might spare his love all possible pain in telling of the terrible story, such were the thoughts that surged like the waves of a troubled sea in Guy Challoner's mind. For him all the beauty of earth and sea and sky around him might as well have been but desolation, storm, and tempest.

Jane did not expect him—he had thought to come upon her as a sweet surprise. All the way on his journey down from London his mind had been full of anticipations of what her joy would be in his un-looked for coming. That last letter of hers, so full of all womanly tenderness, of passionate devotion, of perfect comprehension of his aims and ends in life, his love and his ambitions, was still in the breast-pocket of his coat. It seemed like carrying some murdered thing about with him.

What would Jane say when she saw him? How should he meet her; how should he greet her—his lost love—his darling—torn from his side by a cruel fate? In time to come, no doubt hot indignation against Walter Hearn would take possession of Guy's soul. At present there seemed no room in his heart save for thoughts of Jane—room for nothing beyond unutterable pity and tenderness toward Jane.

At last, just at a turn of the shore, he came in sight of her. She was coming slowly homeward, a few yellow fern-fronds and a scarlet bunch of orchid-fruit in her hands. Catching sight of Guy, Jane let ferns and berries fall to the ground as she ran to meet her lover. How often, how often in the weary days to come did Guy Challoner think of his lost love as he saw her then!—her dust-coloured dress blown back; the slight, graceful form running on to meet him; the outstretched hands; the eyes at once soft and eager; the red lips parted, and the gentle breast panting a little, for she had run quickly along the sands, wondering, as she ran, at Guy having come before his time.

The shore was a quiet, lonely place; indeed, there was absolutely no one to see what went on except the lazy sea-gulls floating in the offing, and a robin singing sadly, as it is his wont to do at eventide, in a bush hard by.

So Guy caught his love in his arms, and their lips met in a long, long kiss.

But Jane felt a strange thrill of fear even in that happy moment of greeting.

The lips that pressed hers so madly were cold and trembling; Guy was deadly pale, too, and his eyes had a look in them that she had never seen there before.

"What is it?" she said, the soft rosy colour dying from her cheek as she clung to his arm; and she looked up into his face with eyes full of fear.

Then, as he did not speak, only catching her hand in his and holding it tight against his breast, she added:

"Have they ordered you away at once? Oh, Guy, tell me, are you going to leave me before we are married? are you going at once —to-morrow, perhaps to-night?"

"Are you going to leave me?" His heart echoed the pitiful question; a question to which he might well have answered: "Ay, my love, for ever and for aye."

That is what he thought. What he said was this:

"There are no new orders, dear. I found I could get off a day sooner than I expected and so I came; that is all."

"All?" she said wistfully.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Neilson's Burial and Will.

(From the New York Dramatic News.)

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian states that Miss Neilson's will leaves £40,000 to the Rear Admiral Glyn and £1,000 to Mr. Compton. We do not believe this news to be authentic. Her attachment to Admiral Glyn was well known to those who were intimately associated with her here. The mere fact that he had offered her marriage after the scandals that had touched her name filled her with gratitude, and though she refused to marry him, she seemed to consider him always as a brother. All matters which touched her nearly were referred to him, and on his advice she determined everything that was important. It was a standing offer that he would marry her at any time she pleased; and yet, singular woman, she preferred the intimate companionship of other men of whom she did not think one tithe of what she thought of him. If she had left the bulk of her fortune to him, it is out of gratitude for his loyal and consistent friendship for her. But we doubt the story of this legacy. First because Admiral Glyn would hardly be likely to accept the earnings of this actress as his own— that is, if he cares to keep any sort of position in English society, and second, because Miss Neilson must have had a much larger sum than this to leave behind her. She did not live expensively, and has made for several seasons an average of $50,000 a year. Her fortune must have reached an aggregate of at least $350,000. It has been said that she had married Mr. Compton, the actor, before she came here the last time. This is not true. They should have been married, perhaps, but were not as a matter of ceremony. It is not very flattering to Mr. Compton that she left him a paltry £1,000 out of her large fortune, for whatever he ought, or ought not to have, in the peculiar relation of her secretary, there is not doubt that she interfered greatly with his professional prospects. He has lost caste immensely since the relation he consented to occupy toward her, and he will have difficulty in getting back where he was now that this little dramatic episode in his life is over. It is probable that if Admiral Glyn accepts this gift of his dead friend he will devote it to some charitable purpose, and not to his own use. If the legacy has been really made, there are, perhaps, some reservations in it as to the ultimate objects, and possibly it is only placed in his hands in trust. If the legacy is true this is most likely to be the explanation of this singular will. All that was mortal of Miss Neilson was buried in Brompton Cemetery on Friday last. This Cemetery is just outside of what may be considered London proper, and is a pretty spot. A number of professional people accompanied the remains of this brilliant woman to their last resting place. The body was taken from the railway station to an undertaker's, and from there to the grave. Miss Neilson had no home. All the surroundings of her death and burial were inexpressibly sad. She died on an old green lounge in a public restaurant, frequented solely by people of a fast class. Her last sigh floated away in the presence of two strangers. Thence she was taken to the Morgue and cut and quartered, no portion of the once beautiful frame escaping from the scalpel of the curious men of science. Mutilated and almost falling apart, the body, but two days before that of a bright particular star among women, was placed in a temporary coffin and taken to London. There it was placed in an oak casket, but no one was permitted to inspect the dead, as the sight was found to be too horrible and repulsive.

A liberal-minded little fellow visiting on Cape Cod, who found the inscription in the village grave yard, "Not dead, but sleepeth," ran in alarm to his mother and said: "We must go home right off! I won't stay here all night anyhow. They bury people when they go to sleep. I saw one of them out in the graveyard, and do you suppose I'd sleep here to-night and have them bury me?"

"THIS making a vacation pleasant by walking about the country in the disguise of a tramp isn't what it is laid out to be," said Job Shuttle. "I've got four dog bites on my right calf, been clubbed over the head by a hired man twice, and every time I attempted to flirt with a girl she'd scream and yell for the men folks. I'll go by the cars next year, like a civilized heathen.

THE greatest hail-storm ever known recently prevailed at Stevens Point Wisconsin. Hailstones from six to ten inches large fell, and covered the ground from four to eight inches deep, killing thousands of sheep and other animals, and turkeys, geese, and prairie-chickens. Three of the hailstones were found to weigh one pound. Several farms had all the wheat, corn and hay destroyed. The loss will not fall short of $75,000.

YOUNG FOLKS.

How the Geese saved the Baby.

John Evans was raking hay in a field on the south side of his cottage, while his wife was in the dairy printing butter for market. Little Elsy, their two-year-old baby, was playing with blocks on the sitting-room floor, and old Robin Hood, the dog, was asleep on the grass close by the door that opened to the lawn.

The sky was almost cloudless, and the sun blazed warm in the fields.

"Just the weather to make the corn grow," said John Evans, resting a quarter of a minute, and looking contentedly over the wall at his flourishing corn blades, already two good inches at least above those of his rich neighbor, Mr. Haverly.

"Elsy is safe," said Barbara, the trim little house-maid. "I might as well knead up the bread." And she whisked through the sitting-room so fast, and with so little noise, that Elsy only looked up to see if a bird had flown in over the low half-door.

Tired of her blocks at last, Elsy went and tugged at the door, and made the latch rattle. Robin opened one eye— the one toward the house—and half-cocked an ear. But Elsy kept up the rattle long enough for him to get used to it, and drawing his tail closer under his nose, he ceased paying any attention to the child. He knew she was behind the door. He had done his full duty by standing on his hind-legs against it, and looking to see what she was about before he settled himself for a nap. She rattled the latch every day, but she had never been able to lift it—he needn't have that on his mind.

So by-and-by, when the crown of her little white head showed itself above the door, Robin was dozing away, more sleepy than ever.

She had pushed her block-box close to the sill, and stepped on it to take another view of the latch. For Elsy was enterprising, and had no more idea than have other two-year-old babies of of remaining in ignorance of any new and untried danger. Of course she succeeded at last, and so easily that she pushed the door open and let herself backward down the steps without waking the dog.

The oldest mother goose in the barnyard was as energetic as Elsy. She quacked about among her neighbors until she collected the whole flock, and then matronized them down to the big shallow pond in front of the house. They pottered a good deal on the way among mud-puddles, for there had been a shower the night before.

Dame Evans pottered too in the dairy, but that was because pretty Miss Ruth Haverly called to bespeak some of the butter before it should be sent to market, and was trying her hands at the printing. Very soft white hands they were, and Mrs. Evans enjoyed watching them.

"There," she said, "that one is a beauty!" as Ruth turned one of the yellow balls into a dish. But she never would have allowed anybody else to meddle so with her butter. A spot on the dairy shelf would have have been as great a crime as a speck on the snow-white kerchief crossed on her bosom.

But no thought would she have taken of the butter, nor even of dainty Miss Ruth, had she known what Elsy was doing. Nor would Barbara have cared so much about the bread. She was singing, and did not hear Elsy fumbling with the door-latch.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

CORN in the hill or drill—which? One plant every foot ought to do better than three or four plants struggling together in a hill. In the former method it is at least twice as much trouble to keep weeds from each plant as in the other. Is the difference in yield enough to pay for the difference in labour?

LONG LADDERS are the most easily moved to any considerable distance upon the farm by strapping them upon a wheelbarrow, the rear end being used as the handles, by means of which the whole is trundled along. The entire ladder is before the person, and there is no danger of doing any injury to surrounding objects, as is the case when carried upon the shoulder.

OATS WITH WHEAT.—The sowing of a bushel of oats per acre, with the winter wheat, has often proved of material benefit to the wheat crop. The oats grow more vigorously than the wheat and aid in catching and holding the snow. The oats act as a protection or mulch to the wheat. The little food the young oat plants draw from the soil is returned during the spring when, being killed by the winter, they rapidly decay.

COAL-OIL BARRELS.—Some months ago we asked those who had succeeded in rendering barrels which had held kerosene or petroleum fit for use for cider or vinegar to give us their method. It is rarely that we have had such a number of replies to a like question, they have come by dozens and scores. We thank all who have thus responded, and would say that while a few have advised burning out the barrels, by far the greater number have found that soaking in water will answer. Some advise immersing the barrel in a stream, but the majority of those who have written us find that filling with water, and allowing the barrel to soak for several days, occasionally changing the water, accomplishes the object.

GATHER THE LEAVES.—The leaves that fall from the trees in autumn may be turned to good account if they are gathered and used for litter in the stables. They furnish an excellent absorbent for liquid manure and are of themselves a valuable fertilizer, as they contain large per cents of potash, phosphoric acid and other essential elements of plant food. To gather the leaves rapidly a long-headed rake provided with stout teeth should be used, and the leaves loaded into a cart or wagon, and taken to a place where they may be kept dry and handy for use. Besides the direct value of the leaves, the raking of them from the door-yard, for example, gives it a neat appearance, when it would otherwise look ill-kept.

VENTILATOR FOR ROOT PIT.—In pitting roots, openings should be left for the escape of the moisture that will rise from the heap of roots. If such openings are not provided the vapours will accumulate and decomposition will soon begin, and in a short time the roots will be rotten. A simple opening at the top of the pit, or at intervals along the ridge, if the heap is one of considerable size, is not sufficient. The ventilator should run down into the heap, even to the bottom. Such an one can be made by tying three or four short rails together, and setting them in the ground before the roots are deposited. The rails should project a few inches above the top of the pit, after the covering of earth has been put in place. A layer of straw may be put over the top of the ventilator to keep rain from running in.

CUTTING GREEN CORN.—Each year we are asked to give directions for preserving green corn in cans, and each year we are obliged to say that we know of no successful method other than that practised at the canning factories. This requires tin cans and the use of the soldering iron; and only those who can solder can put up the corn. The points to be observed are these: The best and sweetest corn, in just the right state for the table, is picked and used at once. The canners use a bent knife to cut it rapidly from the cob, and some have a machine for the purpose. The corn is cut from the cobs, and packed closely in the cans. The cobs are put into a boiler, covered with water, and boiled for about an hour. This liquid is used to fill up the space among the kernels in the cans, enough being used to cover them, and, unless the corn is very sweet, a teaspoonful of white sugar is added. The caps of the cans are then soldered on, each cap having a small vent-hole pricked in its centre. The cans being soldered, the next step is what the canners call "processing," which is to boil the cans in water. A wash boiler, or any convenient kettle can be used; it should have at the bottom a rack made of strips of wood, on which to set the cans. The cans of corn are put in the "processing" kettle, with the vent-hole open, and are boiled briskly for two hours. They are then lifted out, one by one, using tongs made for the purpose, setting each down with a sharp rap, to knock down any corn that may be upon the inside of the cap. The cover is then pressed in as much as possible, and the vent-hole stopped by a drop of solder. The cans are then returned to the kettle, and boiled four hours longer. Operators differ as to the time of "processing," some of them making it a secret, but from 6 to 8 hours in all seems to be necessary for corn.

The Art of Sleeping.

Most of the men who have made their mark as successful leaders have been good sleepers as well as hearty workers. Napoleon Bonaparte lost no opporounity either for a good sleep or a good meal. Even before going into battle he would take a few hours for sleep if possible. The Duke of Wellington was such a sound sleeper that he seldom moved from the time he closed his eyes until he awoke. He used a very narrow bed, and said that when it was time for a man to turn in his bed it was time to get up. Henry Ward Beecher is known to be a good sleeper. He falls asleep in a moment after his head has touched the pillow. These men and other great workers have had a faculty which is an important addition to the mere taking of sleep. It is the power of withdrawing one's self from all surrounding persons and objects and finding immediate rest in slumber. The man who can thus take rest is refreshed and strengthened under many circumstances which would keep other people weary and wakeful. He is master of every situation as regards his own rest. Some men, by long habit, find themselves able to take sleep with the same ease that others would take a glass of water. They can sleep either while perched on a high stool or rattling along in a railroad car at forty miles an hour. The economy of wear and tear on the lives of such people is wonderful. The man who cannot sleep unless he has first removed his clothes, put out the light and climbed into his bed is at a great disadvantage. Greater yet is his disadvantage if he can sleep in no bed but his own. There are some who are possessed with the notion that their own bed is the only one in which they can slumber. These people are utterly wretched when they go to the country where the beds are stuffed with straw or shavings, and where the springs are made of noisy material, which resounds whenever touched. When they go to Europe and are forced either to stay awake or to sleep in quarters not much larger than the shelf of a mantlepiece, their misery is too great for utterance. Much of the comfort and discomfort experienced in sleeping and in trying to sleep is the result of habit. There are some people who toss on their beds for half the night, as if they were uneasy ghosts. They have never learned to sleep.

It is the power to shut one's self within one's self that constitutes one of the approaches to healthful sleep. There are objections to sleeping in church which need not in this connection be recounted. But the man who has, by patient habit, accustomed himself to slumbering under a sermon can learn to sleep anywhere and under any circumstances. He is sometimes seen in a snug corner of a street car, when several ladies appeared on the platform seeking seats. He often finds it convenient when a bore addresses him to be able to subside into slumber. When his mother-in-law wearies him with protracted discussion of uninteresting subjects, it is ever so delightful to sleep, or to seem to sleep. Good sleep is a blessing from heaven, and he who can sleep, whether flies crawl on him, mosquitoes bite him cross people scold him, or noisy children dance and play in his presence, is blessed, indeed.

African Explorers Killed.

(London Standard.)

The sad news which has reached Zanzibar of the murder of Capt. Carter and Mr. Cadenhead adds two more victims to the long list of those who have sacrificed their lives in the interest of African exploration. Hitherto, disease, and not violence, has been the cause of the fatality which has overtaken so many of the explorers of the dark continent. From the facts which have reached us it would, however, appear that the gallant pioneers whose loss we have now to deplore met their death at the hands of a chief named "Wrambo." But as the expedition which they commanded was at the latest date in the country of a robber king called Mercambo, not far from Lake Tanganyika, the name has in all probability been altered in telegraphing. Messrs. Carter and Caidenhead, though Englishmen, were employed under the auspices of the Belgian branch of the international Society for the Exploration of Africa. The leading object of the expedition sent out under its auspices is not so much geographical discovery as the establishment of centres of civilizing influence and commerce at various points of the interior. The first of these stations was founded in August, 1879, by M. Cambier, at Karema, on the eastern shore of Lake Tanganyika, one hundred and forty miles south of Ujiji. In December M. Cambier, was joined by Messrs. Popelin and Carter with the Indian elephants, of which only one remained. Another reinforcement, constituting the fourth expedition, under Messrs. Burdo, Rogers and Cadenhead, was far on its way when last heard of, and was sanguine of soon communicating with Mr. Stanley. The latter, by the aid of steam launches, is endeavouring to ascend the Congo, which, amid so many perils, he descended three years ago. The introduction of elephants into African exploration was a great step in advance, and it was fondly believed that one of the chief difficulties in the path of travel had at last been overcome. Whether all the Europeans have met the fate of Messrs. Carter and Cadenhead we have no means as yet of learning.

THE Drum Major, as described by a Chicago Tribune reporter: "His feet rose and fell with the regularity of quartz-crushers; his bearskin was as towering and fluffy as a cat's tail in spring time. His gauntleted left hand was glued to his hip, and his gauntleted right hand to his staff, sawing right and left for dear life. Then he reached the second line of review and prepared to salute. First he raised the staff shoulder high and wobbled it four times like the walking beam of an engine. Then he reversed it and gave one gilderflake to the right and two flabdabs to the left, twirled the knob seven times, hung the staff twenty feet in air, and made a motion as if he were going to turn a triple somersault before it came down again. Instead of this, however, he caught it deftly, tucked it under his right arm, shot out his left horizontally, crooked his elbow and laid the back of his hand on his brow. And he did all this with such skill, rapidity, and pride that the small boy cried: 'Oh, looker him, Jimmy! My eye! don't he look like a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] this'!"

[illegible] Life in New York.

The metropolis abounds with contrasts of splendid intentions and miscarried achievements. Princeliness of space and brilliance of architecture are confronted by dilapidation and uncleanliness, and even on Murray hill, that pinnacle of all earthly ambition, disreputable little taverns and tenements exist in sight of the fashionable mansions with their carved balustrades and ample porticoes. But these contrasts, which has led one writer to describe New York as Paris with a touch of the backwoods, and another to say that the city is more like a savage, the resplendence of his trinkets, war-paint, and chromatic blanket only half covering his abundant dirt—these anomalies are nowhere so apparent as above the southern borders of Central park.

Reaching as far as Manhattanville on the west, and to the Harlem on the east, the land has nearly all been graded, and many streets have been laid out, and in some instances, paved, curbed, and illuminated. Ten years ago, or more, when the imperial Tweed was seated with apparent firmness on the municipal throne, this region, with the splendid park as a centre, was seized upon by real estate speculators, and predictions were made that in a very few years it would be covered with handsome dwellings. But the tide of success turned another way, with what effect, as concerns Tweed and his ambitions, is well known; and though on the east side some of the vacant spaces have become populous, and some notable churches, hospitals, armouries and houses have been put up, the west side has altered so little that it has seemed to be lifeless. The new museum of natural history, with its imposing facade looking over the hill and dale of the park, glances from its rear upon a neighbourhood which, in my experience, is quite unique. It is not to be precisely described as city, nor as suburb, nor as the unsettled but broken territory that outlines most cities while waiting to be absorbed in their advance. The anticipations that led to the grading and paving of the streets have had a very limited fruition in isolated rows of pretentious and rectangular "brown-stone fronts," which seem oddly out of place. Here and there a vestige of old times remains in a pre-metropolitan homestead, with an impoverished orchard around it, or in a grand mansion with a classic front of Doric columns, and a genesis far antedating Fifth avenue. But it is not the new buildings, premonitory of the city's advance, nor the old ones reflecting the past, nor these two in contrast that gives the city its characteristics and peculiar interest. All down in the hollows between the graded streets, and in spaces where, no streets have been opened, the gray Laurentian rock stands with but a superficial layer of soil upon it, thousands of acres are under cultivation by squatters, and without other enclosure to the land than the embankments formed around the hollows by the trap rock foundations of the streets. Agriculture is carried on with a primitive simplicity of life and under a picturesqueness of condition that set an artist on the edge of desire. Many square miles are green with vegetables. You see the gardeners with their wives and mothers bending to their work; you hear the querulous call of geese and the contentions of pigs; and if you could shut out from the view the immature streets and the precursory dwellings, you would never realize that you are within the limits of the city, or that immense steamers are loading with grain by the river-side a quarter of a mile away, and that the buzzing that vibrates the air comes from an elevated railroad.

The lodgings are of various proportions, sometimes being limited to an irregular strip, and sometimes embracing three or four blocks in possession of one man. It is not an occasional load, the product of one batch, that goes to Washington market, but a large proportion of all the green stuff consumed in the city is grown in these hollows—the lettuce, the parsley, the celery, the cabbages and the potatoes. But though one man trebles the quantity his neighbour produces, he is no better off nor more ambitious in the matter of architecture than the poorest; and in the corners, or in the centre of the hollows, or perched high up on the wintry gneiss, is found a grotesque valley of make-shift dwellings, mere concessions to exigencies in many cases, which by no means indicate the pecuniary recources of the occupants. Some of them are simply squalid, but upon others the sunshine and the rain have brought out a soft colour, and the scraps of which they are built have borrowed a quaint grace from the weathering. It is scarcely safe to let an artist loose among them. They abound with picturesque "bits," which he declares it next to impossible to exhaust; and not long ago, when I soared into the skyward region were C—— has his studio, I found him black to the wrists with ink, with which he was printing etchings of some things that he had discovered among these shanties.

Gen. Melikoff and the Nihilists.

(London Telegraph.)

According to a Vienna contemporary, usually well informed with respect to Russian home affairs, Count Loris Melikoff has succeeded in squelching nihilism, if not in killing it, by a process which does equal credit to his ingenuity and his perspicacity. Discarding the intimidation method so disastrously practiced by his predecessors in irresponsible power, he addressed himself, shortly after accepting office, to the delicate enterprise of making terms with some of the leading members of the secret association, then in custody and awaiting their trial. Toward these persons he employed such convincing arguments that they imparted to him the names of their principal accomplices, upon the condition that they should not be molested by the authorities—a condition which Count Melikoff has honorably fulfilled to the letter. The revelations, however, thus made to the dictator enabled him to approach the persons in question with such directness that they could not but perceive themselves to be absolutely at his mercy, and feel that it would be to their interests rather to come to some advantageous arrangement with him than to persevere in machinations which he was obviously in a position to frustrate at any moment. With admirable sagacity and discretion, Count Melikoff kept each amenable conspirator's secret to himself, and conducted all his conciliatory negotiations in person, trusting to no official and betraying no seceder from the revolutionary organization. He privily sent a large number of his "converts" out of Russia in the character of secret political agents to Roumelia, Bulgaria, and so forth, keeping others at home on "retaining salaries" until an opportunity for employing them actively should arise. By such astute proceedings as these he has cut the very tap-roots of nihilism from which once formidable phenomenon no further danger to the Russian state need at present be apprehended.

Drinking Toasts.

In private life, toasting has almost entirely disappeared. A hundred years ago and less, it was rife in the extreme. Half a dozen men could not sit down to dinner without drinking toasts. In the event of any great victory, there was no end of toasting. The nation was for a time half insane in drinking the health of Nelson, Wellington, or other successful commanders by sea and land. It was part of a young's man's education to get familiar with a few toasts, which he could bring out when "called upon" in turn at evening entertainments. At the ripe age of 50, he had become so hackneyed in toasting as never to be at a loss for a hero, or for a sentiment suitable to the character of the company. At the very least he could give "The rising generation," "All ships at sea," or "May the wings of friendship never lose a feather." Curious and not a little melancholy to think that vast numbers of worthy people now gone to their rest habitually killed time in soaking and trying to amuse themselves over this kind of driveling nonsense. As yet, the popular mind has not been roused to inquiry on a variety of important questions. A great part of life was consumed in dawdling and drinking, as is still the case among certain classes in small country towns. Discountenanced in general society, complimentary toasting holds its ground in public festivities. There, the libations are observedly as copious, as provocative of oratorial display, and as much attended with senseless uproar, as ever. Corporation dinners, charity dinners, reception and farewell dinners, are all alike in these respects. Every toast must be prefaced by a drink all round. The quantity of champagne consumed on some occasions is immense, the removal of a wagon-load of empty bottles is not at all unusual. What may be the different degrees of intoxication we shall not attempt to specify. One would not like to be too severe on a matter admitting of many extenuations. At the same time, we may be permitted to say that the example set at these festive demonstrations is not quite in accordance with the solemn counsels ordinarily uttered on the evils of intemperance. Men in high position who are nimble at toasting at grand dinners do not seem to perceive that they are [illegible] acting inconsistently in holding [illegible] example to the poor, whom they are constantly lecturing on the terrible [illegible] of misexpenditure on drink.

Religion and Morality.

Verily Saul is among the prophets. [illegible] the most unlikely persons in these days may be found adopting the role of the preacher. Time was when it was supposed to [illegible] special training to fit men, or women [illegible] [illegible], to be public instructors [illegible] morality. Even men who [illegible] discourse sensibly enough on law, [illegible] of politics, and were fairly [illegible] ture, science and art, did not consider [illegible] selves to be necessarily qualified [illegible] with what were supposed to be the [illegible] of all themes. The times have [illegible] however. Every man, aye, and every woman, too, now is supposed to be, if [illegible] else, almost a moral philosopher and a theologian. So much has come of the handling of sacred themes. If our fathers erred in one direction—if we might say it without offence—we are possibly in danger of running too far toward the opposite extreme. If they relegated the discussion of these subjects too exclusively to priests and to professional religionists and moralists, it is just possible that the world may be a gainer by handing it over to every ignoramus who may have what honest George Stephenson was wont to call, "the gift of the gob," or who may happen to be affected with an itch for scribbling.

Some educated men, men, too, making enormous pretentions to profundity of theological learning, make sorry enough work in the manipulation of these sacred subjects. The fact is, they now and again get things so mixed that we find it next to impossible to make anything of them. In the endless babblement about religion and morality which "ding our lugs," we are in danger of losing all right notion of either the one or the other of them. Even a reverend writer in the British Quarterly, from whom we would have expected better things, writing upon this august theme, for the enlightenment, as we may suppose, of a select and superior class of readers, confuses matters in such a way that we find it no easy task to make either head or tail of them. Religion is defined as "an aspect of life"—the Godward aspect of it, if we may be allowed to translate—as "a natural instinct in man; a phenomenon characterizing his existence;" more rightly, "the faculty in us which recognizes the ultimate and Supreme Being,"—as "something consisting in the recognition of such an absolute and perfect being." Now this may be all very clear to the clerical understanding; "learned clerks" may have no difficulty in comprehending it; but, evidently, the ordinary lay mind cannot readily take it in. How the capacity for a thing and the thing itself, the capacity for religion and religion, can be identical is not quite obvious to the mind of the uninitiated. Religion may indeed be "an aspect of human life," if we could only be quite sure of the ideas which these words were intended to represent. It may be a "phenomenon"—though the phrase is a little ambiguous as it is here used—but a phenomenon which is "a natural instinct," "a faculty," and at the same time "something which consists in the recognition of an absolute and perfect Being" perplexes us. Nor is our perplexity lessened when we read, further on, of "the demand of the "religious sense" for "an authoritative religion." What does this mean? An authoritative "instinct," "faculty," "aspect of life," "phenomenon," something which consists in the recognition of the ultimate and absolute Being!" We confess this does not convey a very definite notion to our mind.

Surely it was scarcely worth while to quote Greek, and otherwise make a great display of wisdom and learning in order to put us in possession of such barren results. And when this learned theologian proceeds to distinguish between religion and morality, and makes the first of these to consist of the duties of the first table of the law, and the latter of the duties of the second table, the uninitiated lay mind—for which alone we presume to speak—finds itself in almost as great difficulty. What? is all religion embraced in the first four commandments of the Decalogue; or is all the morality included in the remaining six? Has morality nothing to do with a man's relation to his Maker, or are the relative duties of man as to a member of society be beyond the sphere of religion! We are not to be drawn into controversy on a subject beyond our depth, and we do not want to incur the charge of inconsistency by acting contrary to the ground taken in the opening paragraph of this article, but we may [illegible] say, that the average lay mind all this will not be quite clear. We suspect that to not a few of this sort, the distinction between religion and morality will appear to be something more subtle and spiritual than the writer of this article in question has dreamed of. And if these sacred themes are to be kept out of the hands of the ignorant and profane, such writers as the Rev. Stanley Seathes will have to treat them with greater care.

The Humours of an Election.

It is impossible to carry on the Government of a country without party opposing party. This is proved beyond doubt wherever the form of Government is, even in but a slight degree, representative and constitutional. Russia, China, Persia, or Mandalay of course, are not included; for in those countries there is no Government in the strict sense of the term, but an unmodified autocracy or tyranny, and their rulers are but too seldom of the type of Miltiades who although he was "The tyrant of the Chersonnese,

Was Greece's best and bravest friend."

Now, it being acknowledged that party feelings will exist, and that they are founded on certain definite principles, the question suggests itself,—how is it that principles so utterly opposed to each other arise and continue to exist among men whose birth, nationality, and education, have so many points of identity? The true answer, however seems to be that the opposition of party is really more apparent than actual, more traditional than rational. In a state, too, where the prevailing tone is not one of high morality, the thirst for place and power has a great influence in keeping up the opposition, and inducing men to support those by whose help they expect to climb to the position or obtain the office they aspire to. So in the individual politician; his creed is dependent on hereditary or educational leanings, and the shallowness of his convictions is often shown when in consequence of pique at some real or fancied neglect received at the hands of his party, he turns completely round and backs up his former opponent. There is verily not a little of sham in the average politician.

It is very amusing to watch a collision between two bodies of electors when they have to decide who shall occupy the seat in the House of Commons. The eagerness, plausible affability, and lavish promises of the candidates and their friends, the crowded, noisy, sometimes witty, and always more or less uproarious meetings, the free fights that often result, and the other preliminaries of the polling-day, give a good opportunity of studying human nature in one of its most humorous aspects. The stump speeches of the more or less candidates, the burning words of hot repudiation of any unworthy motives in their candidature, and the positive certainty with which they hurl innuendo and sneer at the principles of their opponents, are positively delightful to one with the least sense of the humorous in his composition.

Finally comes the polling-day—big with the fate of the rivals. Hacks hurry to and fro to bring the voters to time. Money is expended freely. Somewhat dubious dodges are not seldom resorted to in the shape of personation, etc., and, when the appointed hour has passed, the excitement becomes tremendous,—stands at fever heat indeed— and it is well if collisions involving copious blood-letting be not resorted to while the electors await the decision. The successful candidate's name is at length declared. According to his temperament and his powers of self-control is the expression of his feelings. Sometimes he smiles serenely, bows gracefully his acknowledgments of the honour," etc., or, if he is excitable, becomes incoherent and possibly hysterical. Over the sensations of his defeated rival it is best to draw a veil. A certain amount of respect is due to dignified misfortune and disappointment. Cato, on the ruins of Carthage, and Cæsar, as he fell in the forum, hid their faces in their mantles, and so probably doth the victim of misplaced confidence in the voice of the people.

The moral of an election seems to be briefly summarized thus:—It is little matter what shade of politics carries the day, provided the elected man be fairly capable, moderately intelligent, able to express himself intelligibly, and "indifferent honest."

WHEN you see a man take off his hat to you it is a sign that he respects you; but when he is seen divesting himself of his coat you can make up your mind that he intends that you shall respect him.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY FRIDAY MORNING
In time to meet the early mails.
It contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.
$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, $2 if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying up will be held responsible for the subscriptions until they comply with the rules.
All letters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year			$50 00
Half do	do		30 00
Quarter do	do		18 00
Eight do	do		10 00
Cards	do		1 00
Six lines and under, first insertion			50
Each subsequent insertion			15
From six to ten lines, first insertion			75
Each subsequent insertion			25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line			8
Each subsequent insertion			2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

THE French revenue for 1880 is over $15,000,000 above the estimates.

THERE have been 140 duels in France within eight months, without the loss of a single life.

A STALWART woman got employment in male attire as a farm hand at Hutchinson, Ill., but the farmer discharged her on learning her sex. She has brought a suit to recover wages for the whole contract.

MISS FLORA SHARON, daughter of Senator Sharon, is betrothed to Sir Thomas Hesketh, a wealthy Englishman, who, in the course of a tour round the world in his steam yacht, has been making a stop at San Francisco.

THE Wartha has followed the grim example set her by the Oder, the Elbe and other German rivers, which overflowing their banks, have wrought destruction over an enormous extent of country. The damage effected by floods in Upper Silesia is terrible.

STYRIAN woodcutters in the forest of Dromming discovered a human skeleton in a half-decayed oak tree. A watch, on which was engraved "H. Von Krackowitz, 1812," lay by his side. It is supposed that the man climbed the tree and accidently dropped into the hallow trunk, from which there was no escape.

A WELSHMAN was on exhibition in London for some days as a faster. He was to forfeit 850 dollars for every day he tasted food for two weeks. A watch was organized, and the public were admitted on condition of purchasing drinks. The man made a strong attempt to carry out his undertaking, but after six days he fell from the sofa in a state of coma, and only recived when fed.

AMONG the many Heidelberg traditions of duelling is the following: Two students fought, and each sliced off the other's nose. The noses fell to the ground, and, being picked up by the seconds, were plastered again on the faces of the duellists. The operation succeeded, but in the hurry the noses had been changed. The aquiline man henceforward had a snub, and the snub man had an aquiline.

THE latest statistics of the Old Catholic Church in Germany show that it has one Bishop and 47 priests at work. There are besides 4 Professors, two invalid priests, and 4 who withdrew on account of the celibacy decision. During the past year three priests died, two were removed, and two were received. About a dozen of the priests have taken wives. The number of Old Catholics is estimated at 45,000.

THE appeal from the Church authorities at Rome for liberal contributions from the faithful for the support of the Pope is made with urgency and persuasion. The contributors are told that in giving to the Pope they give to the most august mendicant on earth and for the greatest works of beneficence in the world. They give for the benefit of the Church, of hospitals, orphanages, and of their own souls.

A SENTRY placed before a powder magazine sees his colonel approach, smoking an imported Havana cigar. He presents arms and says, firmly, but respectfully, "Pardon me, colonel, but smoking is not allowed here." The colonel, with a superb gesture, flings away the cigar and gives the faithful sentinel a louis d'or. As soon as he got around the corner the faithful sentinel with proud tears on his rugged countenance, picks up the cigar and finishes it with every manifestation of delight.

JACOB DUNLAP, an eccentric old bachelor, died a few days ago in Ashland, Ohio, and on reading his will it was found that he had bequeathed all his property—consisting of $25,000 in bonds, besides considerable real estate—to P. B. Clawson of Hayesville, Ohio, for an act of charity done him while travelling some years ago. It is stipulated in the will, however, that Clawson must marry some girl not known to him now, on or before the 4th of March, 1881. Failing to do this, the money goes to charitable objects, and only the real estate to Clawson.

A MAGISTRATE at Stockport, England, stated under oath that he overheard a woman tramp say to her sister: "How much has thee got to day?" "Fifteen shillings, (nearly $4) after a deal of rambling about. How much has thee got?" "Five shillings, but I have not been about much." He saw a man who had been hanging on one of the bridges at Stockport, enter a public house, where, after refreshing himself with liquor, he got his coppers changed for silver to the extent of seven shillings and sixpence, boasting that he had collected that in two hours.

THE Irish correspondent of the London Times writes: "The potato crop is simply magnificent. What few men can recollect seeing is now seen on all hands—fields beginning to wither naturally, without a sign of disease. This is chiefly owing to the change of seed, the 'Champions,' being planted on all hands east to west, and fully bearing out the good things spoken of them. The price of oats and cattle has doubled since last year, that of pigs more than doubled. Oats are a good crop, and turnips and mangels never looked better."

THE writer of the words and music of "God Save the King," is now unmistakably [illegible] to be Rouget de l'Ile, the author of the Marseillaise. It is true the sovereign whom the Frenchman invooked divine [illegible] tion was not one of the four Georges, [illegible] Louis XVIII., at whose first restoration in 1814, Rouget wrote a hymn with the title and refrain of "Dieu preserve le Roi." The French "God-Save the King," the words of which were a bold paraphrase of the Hanoverian anthem, was republished, and is now resuscitated by the Paris press for the purpose of showing that Rouget de l'Ile was not a republican.

CHICAGO women beat the world. One of them at least contrived to beat the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Like Schneider, she wanted to buy a dog, and she bought it in San Francisco and had it sent by express to Chicago. When the dog arrived the hair was all off, and she sued the company for $75 for allowing a locomotive to scald all the hair off her dog. She obtained judgment, and, what is more remarkable, the money. Afterwards the company found out that the dog was a Japanese dog and never had any hair. The company tried to catch the woman who played this bald trick on them, but she escaped—probably had a hairbreadth escape.

IN the leading journal of Geneva a well-known Alpine tourist, publishes an account of the proceedings of a raven tribunal in the Swiss mountains. Descending from the region of glaciers, he came upon a small secluded glen, surrounded by thick cover. From sixty to seventy ravens had formed a circle round one of their fellows, obviously a culprit, whose case they were discussing with much croaking and wing flapping. Now and then they interrupted their debates to listen to the energetic representations of the prisoner, who conducted his own defence with amazing fervour, the judges breaking out into a deafening chorus of comment, and refutations after his every statement. Presently, having arrived at the unanimous conclusion that the arraigned bird had failed to exculpate itself, they flew upon him from all sides, and tore him to pieces with their beaks.

Markdale Standard.

VOL. I.—NO. 2. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY. SEPTEMBER 24, 1880. WHOLE NO. 2

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

It contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, $2 if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying up will be held responsible for the subscriptions until they comply with the rules.

All letters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year	$50 00
Half do do	30 00
Quarter do do	18 00
Eight do do	10 00
Cards do	4 60
Six lines and under, first insertion..	50
Each subsequent insertion.......	15
From six to ten lines, first insertion..	75
Each subsequent insertion......	25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion......	2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

THE French revenue for 1880 is over $15,000,000 above the estimates.

THERE have been 140 duels in France within eight months, without the loss of a single life.

A STALWART woman got employment in male attire as a farm hand at Hutchinson, Ill., but the farmer discharged her on learning her sex. She has brought a suit to recover wages for the whole contract.

MISS FLORA SHARON, daughter of Senator Sharon, is betrothed to Sir Thomas Hesketh, a wealthy Englishman, who, in the course of a tour round the world in his steam yacht, has been making a stop at San Francisco.

THE Wartha has followed the grim example set her by the Oder, the Elbe and other German rivers, which overflowing their banks, have wrought destruction over an enormous extent of country. The damage effected by floods in Upper Silesia is terrible.

STYRIAN woodcutters in the forest of Dromming discovered a human skeleton in a half-decayed oak tree. A watch, on which was engraved "H. Von Krackowitz, 1812," lay by his side. It is supposed that the man climbed the tree and accidently dropped into the hallow trunk, from which there was no escape.

A WELSHMAN was on exhibition in London for some days as a faster. He was to forfeit $50 dollars for every day he tasted food for two weeks. A watch was organized, and the public were admitted on condition of purchasing drinks. The man made a strong attempt to carry out his undertaking, but after six days he fell from the sofa in a state of coma, and only revived when fed.

AMONG the many Heidelberg traditions of duelling is the following: Two students fought, and each sliced off the other's nose. The noses fell to the ground, and, being picked up by the seconds, were plastered again on the faces of the duellists. The operation succeeded, but in the hurry the noses had been changed. The aquiline man henceforward had a snub, and the snub man had an aquiline.

THE latest statistics of the Old Catholic Church in Germany show that it has one Bishop and 47 priests at work. There are besides 4 Professors, two invalid priests, and 4 who withdrew on account of the celibacy decision. During the past year three priests died, two were removed, and two were received. About a dozen of the priests have taken wives. The number of Old Catholics is estimated at 45,000.

THE appeal from the Church authorities at Rome for liberal contributions from the faithful for the support of the Pope is made with urgency and persuasion. The contributors are told that in giving to the Pope they give to the most august mendicant on earth and for the greatest works of beneficence in the world. They give for the benefit of the Church, of hospitals, orphanages, and of their own souls.

A SENTRY placed before a powder magazine sees his colonel approach, smoking an imported Havana cigar. He presents arms and says firmly, but respectfully, "Pardon me, colonel, but smoking is not allowed here." The colonel, with a superb gesture, flings away the cigar and gives the faithful sentinel a louis d'or. As soon as he got around the corner the faithful sentinel with proud tears on his rugged countenance, picks up the cigar and finishes it with every manifestation of delight.

JACOB DUNLAP, an eccentric old bachelor, died a few days ago in Ashland, Ohio, and on reading his will it was found that he had bequeathed all his property—consisting of $25,000 in bonds, besides considerable real estate—to P. B. Clawson of Hayesville, Ohio, for an act of charity done him while travelling some years ago. It is stipulated in the will, however, that Clawson must marry some girl not known to him now, on or before the 4th of March, 1881. Failing to do this, the money goes to charitable objects, and only the real estate to Clawson.

A MAGISTRATE at Stockport, England, stated under oath that he overheard a woman tramp say to her sister: "How much has thee got to day?" "Fifteen shillings, (nearly $4) after a deal of rambling about. How much has thee got?" "Five shillings, but I have not been about much." He saw a man who had been hanging on one of the bridges at Stockport, enter a public house, where, after refreshing himself with liquor, he got his coppers changed for silver to the extent of seven shillings and sixpence, boasting that he had collected that in two hours.

THE Irish correspondent of the London Times writes: "The potato crop is simply magnificent. What few men can recollect seeing is now seen on all hands—fields beginning to wither naturally, without a sign of disease. This is chiefly owing to the change of seed, the 'Champions,' being planted on all hands east to west, and fully bearing out the good things spoken of them. The price of oats and cattle has doubled since last year, that of pigs more than doubled. Oats are a good crop, and turnips and mangols never looked better."

THE writer of the words and music of "God Save the King," is now unmistakably shown to be Rouget de l'Ile, the author of the "Marseillaise." It is true the sovereign whom the Frenchman invoked divine protection was not one of the four Georges, but Louis XVIII., at whose first restoration in 1814, Rouget wrote a hymn with the title and refrain of "Dieu preserve le Roi." The French "God Save the King," the words of which were a bold paraphrase of the Hanoverian anthem, was republished, and is now resuscitated by the Paris press for the purpose of showing that Rouget de l'Ile was not a republican.

CHICAGO women beat the world. One of them at least contrived to beat the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Like Schneider, she wanted to buy a dog, and she bought it in San Francisco and had it sent by express to Chicago. When the dog arrived the hair was all off, and she sued the company for $75 for allowing a locomotive to scald all the hair off her dog. She obtained judgment, and, what is more remarkable, the money. Afterwards the company found out that the dog was a Japanese dog and never had any hair. The company tried to catch the woman who played this bald trick on them, but she escaped—probably had a hairbreadth escape.

IN the leading journal of Geneva a well-known Alpine tourist, publishes an account of the proceedings of a raven tribunal in the Swiss mountains. Descending from the region of glaciers, he came upon a small secluded glen, surrounded by thick cover. From sixty to seventy ravens had formed a circle round one of their fellows, obviously a culprit, whose case they were discussing with much croaking and wing flapping. Now and then they interrupted their debates to listen to the energetic representations of the prisoner, who conducted his own defence with amazing fervour, the judges breaking out into a deafening chorus of comment, and refutations after his every statement. Presently, having arrived at the unanimous conclusion that the arraigned bird had failed to exculpate itself, they flew upon him from all sides, and tore him to pieces with their beaks.

Seeing the Shah at Teheran.

THE SCATTERING OF FLOWERS ALONG HIS PATHWAY BY TWO UGLY MEN.

(From the London Daily News.)

I have had an opportunity of seeing his Majesty proceeding in state to visit his First Minister. Though daily, necessarily, in contact with his Minister, the Shah annually pays him three public visits to do him honour, the entire royal household as well as the sovereign being entertained at dinner.

From the door of the house at Teheran where the Shah was paying a visit, up to the mansion of the Minister, a distance of over a mile, the thoroughfare was lined with troops. Though they had taken up their position at six in the morning, the Shah did not appear till nearly twelve o'clock. Some half hour previous to this sundry old-fashioned carriages, drawn by a couple of horses each and driven by nondescript-looking coachmen, who to all appearances might have been royal scullions in undisguised professional costume, might be seen making their way, outside the ranks of the troops, in the direction of the Minister's residence. These carriages contained some of the principal harem favourites, and were preceded by a crowd of men in ordinary Persian civilian costume, beating the air and the ground with long ozier rods, and vociferating to the bystanders to "be blind" and to turn their faces to the wall, lest by any ill luck they might catch sight of any of the "lights of the harem" in the carriages. The arrival of the Shah was heralded by the advent of a number of mounted policemen dashing along the ranks in an impetuous manner. These police, organized by the Count de Monteforte, an Italian officer, arrived at Teheran within the last two years, are very creditably got up, and, I am told, are very efficient in maintaining order in the capital. They wear a black tunic with violet facings on collar and cuffs, and a stripe of the same colour down the dark trousers. A small black cylindrical shako and long boots complete the costume. The foot police carry short sabres of a European model, that of the mounted men being longer. After the police came a crowd of some thirty horsemen bearing large silver maces; and, behind these, about a hundred others armed with sabres and having double-barrelled fowling pieces and old-fashioned Persian muskets slung at their backs. All these people were dressed very plainly in sombre coloured civilian costumes. To these succeeded some fifty oddly costumed persons, proceeding at a trot on either side of the way. They were the King's running footmen.

Each man wore a rather long-skirted red tunic, ornamented with a few scraps of gold lace sewn horizontally on the breast; a pair of dark knee breeches, white cotton stockings, and shoes with buckles and rosettes. The oddest part of the costume was the hat. It was of black glazed leather, and was not unlike a fireman's helmet developing into a lancer's casque, or the head-dress worn by the eccentric pencil merchant in Paris some years ago, when he used to drive about the streets in a carriage selling his wares. From the centre and forward and rear ends of the tall, straight crest rise three bunches of red artificial flowers, made to resemble sweet-william blossoms. These are fixed on long stems, that in the centre being the tallest, all three nodding comically with every movement of the head of the wearer. On all occasions when the Shah appears in public he is invariably accompanied by these comical-looking persons, who run ahead, on each side of, and behind his horse or carriage. In the midst of these rode a group of forty or fifty of the highest dignitaries of the State, including the First Minister and the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, the Hessem el Seltaueh, or "Sword of the Kingdom." All these functionaries were dressed in an exceedingly plain manner. At their head rode the Shah himself, if possibly still more plainly dressed than the group around him. Were it not for the crimson umbrella which he carried open above his head as an emblem of supreme authority, I should certainly have been unable to make him out in the crowd. As I saw him, he seemed to be a much younger and handsomer man than his photographs would lead one to believe. Perhaps it was the glow cast by the red umbrella which made him seem younger. Behind him came an immense concourse of horsemen, presumably belonging to the royal household. Then followed a closed carriage, resplendent with plate glass and gilding, not unlike the Lord Mayor's state coach. Next come some led horses, splendidly caparisoned; and a number of police closed the procession. Perhaps the oddest part of the procession consisted of the apes and baboons led along by their keepers, and intended to amuse the ladies of the harem. There was a new feature introduced into the scene—new for Persia, I believe—the scattering of flowers along the way in front of the Shah. One would have expected that children, or at least some tolerably good-looking persons, would have performed this graceful act. Instead, there was a couple of ugly old men, whose ordinary avocation is to throw water from leather bags they carry on their backs, to allay the dust when the Shah passes, and who, having first performed the more useful part of their duties, were now to be seen hurrying about with articles resembling wooden coal scuttles under their arms, scattering what looked like the sweeping of a nursery garden in a very business-like fashion.

At the moment Teheran, with its telegraphs and its police, of M. Schindler and its Count de Monteforte, is no longer the remote Eastern capital such as Marco Polo might have hinted at. There may be holes two feet square in the thoroughfares that flank the King's palace, and at the bottom of which, at unknown depths, run hidden watercourses; and there may be rumours afloat that the half dozen adventurous thieves who stole the Shah's regalia from the old man who was conveying them to the jeweller are to be blown from the mouths of the guns in the main square (for which civilized punishment the King might claim a well-known precedent); but, practically speaking, Teheran, with its Italian police, its Austrian soldiery, (and Russian Cossacks), its macadamized thoroughfares, its electric light, and its two cafes, has ceased to have claims upon romance.

A Young Girl Sleeps for Many Months

(From the Daily Telegraph.)

Scarcely less astonishing that Dr. Tanner's recent feat of fasting is the condition of a young lady, the daughter of the Mayor of Grambke, a village near Bremen, who is said to have been fast asleep ever since the second week in January, with the exception of a few hours of semi-wakefulness at intervals of from six to eight weeks. An interesting account of her extraordinary state is published in the Hanover Courier. It appears that she lies, plunged in a profound slumber and entirely unconscious of all that goes on around her, night and day, reclining on her left side, warmly covered up and with a light gauze spread over her head. Nourishment, chiefly in a liquid form, is daily administered to her, which she swallows without awakening for a second.

She is a pretty, slender girl, of a pallid complexion, but she does not lose in weight during her trances of from forty to sixty days, and when awake, exhibits a cheerful disposition and an eager desire to perform such small household tasks as her strength enables her to fulfil. Her father is a well-to-do man, who has consulted several eminent medical men, in the hope of discovering some remedy for his daughter's abnormal condition, which entails serious inconvenience and constant anxiety upon the other members of the family; but all efforts hitherto made to keep the unlucky girl awake have resulted in total failure. Since the case of the sleeping Uhlan at Potsdam, no such interesting subject for study and observation on the part of the faculty has arisen as that of the strangely somnolent Burgomaster's daughter of Grambke.

AMONG the stonelayers employed upon the building of the new House of Parliament was one of a peculiarly thoughtful turn of mind, a man of speech and ambition above his trade. That man now sits in the House he helped to build, and he is Mr. Broadhurst, the member for Stoke, whose speech on the Employers' Liability bill has marked him out for Parliamentary success.

The Great Steamship, City of Rome.

At a recent meeting of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, Barrow-in Furness, an interesting paper, from which we take the following, was read by Mr. James Humphreys, on the Inman steamship City of Rome, now in course of construction by the Barrow Shipbuilding Company. We hope in an early number to publish Mr. Humphrey's paper in a complete form, with diagrams, but in the meantime we may give some of the leading particulars of the vessel to which it relates. This splendid steamer will, when completed, be the largest vessel afloat, with the exception of the Great Eastern. Her dimensions are: Length between perpendiculars, 546 feet; length over all, 600 feet; extreme breadth, 52 feet 3 inches; and depth of hold, 37 feet. She will have staterooms for 271 passengers, and accommodation for 1,500 emigrants, provision being made for carrying about 260 emigrants at the fore end and 240 at the aft end on the main deck, and for 1,000 more on the lower deck. The grand dining saloon is 72 feet long, 52 feet wide, and 9 feet high, or 17 feet in the way of the large opening through the drawing room above; this saloon will afford accommodation for dining 248 persons at once. The estimated weight of the City of Rome complete and ready for sea is 8,000 tons, while her displacement on 28 feet mean draught is 13,500 tons, so that she will have a dead weight carrying-power of 5,500 tons: Her holds, however, have a cubical capacity of 38,600 cubic feet, equivalent to 7,720 tons measurement at 50 cubic per ton.

In the constructive details of the City of Rome every endeavour has been made to insure strength combined with high-class accommodation. The hull is divided into water-tight compartments by a number of bulkheads, the maximum of any one of these compartments being about 60 feet. All the bulkheads are fitted with water-tight doors of the Admiralty pattern, worked either from above or below, and provided with tell-tales on deck. At the fore end a double bottom is provided for a length of about 160 feet from the stern to give greater safety in the event of stranding. The framing is of the ordinary type. The vessel has two complete iron decks above, while the lower deck is complete for half its length, and has wide side plating for the remainder. There are nine tiers of keelsons running fore and aft, the five central ones being of uniform height, and being carried unbroken through engine and boiler rooms. The stern frame, which is now being made at the Mersey Steel and Iron Works, is estimated to weigh 33 tons when finished, and will be the largest single forging of its kind ever made.

The City of Rome will have a single screw, 24 feet in diameter, driven by three sets of compound engines of the inverted tandem type, these engines actuating cranks set at 120°. Each engine has a high pressure cylinder 43 inches, and low-pressure cylinder 86 inches in diameter, the stroke being 6 feet. The high-pressure cylinder is supported above the corresponding low-pressure cylinder by three wrought iron columns, the arrangement giving ready access to the stuffing boxes, etc. The cylinder covers are made in halves for easy removal. The valve faces are on the fronts of the cylinders, the valves being driven by eccentrics on an independent shaft coupled to the main shaft at each end by a pair of mortise wheels. The crank-shaft is a built up shaft, and is being made by Sir Joseph Whitworth &Co., of their compressed steel. It will weigh complete 64 tons, and will have main bearings 25 inches in diameter by 33½ inches long, and crank-pins 26 inches in diameter by 28 inches long. The screw shafting is also being made of the Whitworth compressed steel, and will be hollow. The intermediate shafting is 24 inches in diameter, with a 14 inch hole running through it, while the propeller shaft is 25 inches in diameter by 30½ feet long, and will weigh 18 tons. The thrust shaft will weigh 17 tons and will have 13 collars 39½ inches in diameter, giving a surface of 6,000 square inches. The engine bed plate will weigh 100 tons. The surface condensers contain nearly 17 miles of tubing, exposing 17,000 square feet of surface, and the condensing water will be supplied by two double-acting circulating pumps, 26 inches in diameter, with 3 feet stroke, worked by the forward and aft engines respectively, as are also the bilge and feed pumps, and the air pumps, the latter being 39 inches in diameter, with 3 feet stroke. There are also a large centrifugal pumping engine (for pumping heavy leaks, and which can be arranged to discharge through the condensers), and three auxiliary pumping engines for boiler feeding, bilge pumping, etc.

The boilers are eight in number, arranged in two boiler rooms of moderate size separated by a water-tight bulkhead. The boilers, which are of the cylindrical double-ended type, 14 feet in diameter by 19 feet long, are arranged fore and aft in four blocks of two each, the two central blocks being separated by the transverse bulkhead just mentioned. The coal bunkers are along the sides of the ship and form part of the structure; it is intended to make these bunkers and keelsons water-tight so as to constitute the inner skin at the points where they occur. Each boiler has six furnaces, 3 feet 9 inches in diameter, and with separate combustion chambers. The fire grates are six feet long, the total area being 1,080 square feet. Each boiler has a steam receiver, 13 feet long by 4 feet diameter. The furnaces and combustion chambers are of Bowling iron, and the shells of iron made by Sir John Brown & Co., the plates being 24 feet 8 inches long by 4 feet 4½ inches wide and 1¼ inches thick, the weight being nearly 2½ tons each. The boilers are made for a working pressure of 90 pounds per square inch.

The engines are intended to develop in regular work 8,000 indicated horse power, but to be capable of developing 10,000 horse power. The speed expected is 18 knots per hour. The vessel will have four masts, and will be full ship-rigged, with the addition of the fore and aft rigged jigger mast; she is expected to be ready for service next summer and will ply between New York and Liverpool.

Press Censorship in Russia.

(From the London Examiner.)

Again the Tiflis journal, Obzor, has "come to grief." For five years the editor, Mr. Nicoladze, has waged warfare with the censor, and three parts of that time his journal has been in a suppressed condition. In 1875 Nicoladze, who had made a mark as contributor to the Golos, went to Tiflis with the express purpose of fighting there the battle of the Russian provincial press. Between the latter and the newspapers of the two capitals a marked difference exists. The Golos, Moscow Gazette, and other large newspapers of St. Petersburg, and Moscow, are allowed to publish their news and articles without previously submitting them to the Censor, while the provincial sheets cannot print advertisements, let alone paragraphs, without obtaining first the sanction of the local press authorities. By law, the proof of a leading article, after being corrected in red ink by the Censor, has to be submitted again to that functionary before it can be published, and, as Russian Censors are usually as deficient of energy as Government officials in our own country, an article sent in on Monday and corrected on Wednesday can hardly be issued, if it contains alterations, before the following week. If a town has no Censor, the Police-master, or some other official, supervises the local press, reading carefully everything, from the puff of somebody's pills to the official announcements copied from the Government gazettes. Nicoladze made it his practice to publish the shreds of the articles expurgated by the Censor, without taking the trouble to fill in the gap with fresh words. When he had sufficiently stimulated public opinion against the Censor, by this practice he openly discredited him by inserting the articles with the expurgations, which showed how ridiculous the provincial Censors act in erasing words and sentences having nothing illegal or obnoxious in them. This led to repeated suppressions, and at last to a trial, which lasted two years, and resulted in the Supreme Court at Tiflis finding a verdict in Nicoladze's favour. Since then he has been elected a municipal Councillor, and was one of the members who recently impeached the Governor of Tiflis of malpractices.

Mad Elephants.

THE HAVOC THE GREAT BEAST CAUSES WHEN HE REBELS AGAINST IRKSOME CAPTIVITY.

A writer in the London Telegraph, who has spent a morning in the "Zoo," moralizes as follows on the character of the elephant: "Nor, when we speak loftily of the elephant's 'docility,' should we forget that the measure of this virtue may be gauged by the individual's capacities for the reverse. A white mouse is the most docile of mammals, but what would it matter if it were not? A pinch of the tail would always suffice to frighten it into abject submission. But when the sagacious elephant decides for itself, as it often does, that docility is not worth the candle, that occasional turbulence, good all-round rebellion, is wholesome for its temper and constitution, who is going to pinch its tail? With one swing of its trunk it lays all its attendants flat, butts its head through an inconvenient wall, and is free! They are brave men who capture the wild elephants, but no one, however brave, tries to capture 'a rogue.' It has to be shot in its tracks, dropped standing, for it is then something more than a mere wild animal. It has developed into a creature of deliberate will, and having in its own mind weighed the pros and cons, has come to a fixed conclusion that captivity is a mistake, and proceeds, therefore, on a definite plan of intelligent and malignant action. Indeed, among the episodes of Indian rural life there are few more appalling than such a one of the Mad Elephant of Mundia. It has been for many years a docile inmate of a government stud, but one day made up its mind to be infamous. Wise men have before now told the world that it is well to be drunk once a month, and others that we should not always abstain from that which is hurtful; so the elephant, determined upon a bout of wrong-doing, had some precedent to excuse him. The elephantine proportions of his misdemeanors, however, made him lapse from docility appalling to mere men and women whose individual wicked acts are naturally on so diminutive scale; but, comparatively speaking, the gigantic mammal was 'simply on a spree.' Nevertheless, in desolated villages with nearly every horrible circumstance of cruelty lately practised by the Christians of Bulgaria, and laid its plans with such consummate cunning that skilled police, well mounted and patrolling the country, were baffled for many days in their pursuit of the midnight terror. It came and went with extraordinary secrecy and speed from point to point, leaving none alone upon the highroads to tell the pursuers which way it had gone, and only a smashed village and trampled corpses to show where it had last appeared. It confused its own tracks by doubling upon its pursuers and by crossing the spoor of the other elephants that accompanied them. It was not merely wild—it was 'mad,' and as cunning and as cruel as a madman. But insanity itself is a tribute to the animal's intelligence, for sudden downright madness presumes strong brain power. Owls never go mad. They may go 'silly,' or they may be born idiots; but as Oliver Wendell Holmes says, a weak mind does not accumulate force enough to hurt itself."

Personating Charley Ross.

LITTLE MAX STEINBERGER'S ECONOMY OF TRUTH.

(From the New York Times.)

A neatly-dressed, flaxen-haired boy, apparently about ten years of age, was found strolling down Pavonia-avenue, Jersey City, early yesterday morning. A policeman who stopped him was unable to obtain satisfactory answers to his questions, and he took the lad to the station-house. Later in the day he was sent to the office of Chief Murphy, who questioned him closely. He said his first name was Charley, but he did not know his last name. "About six years ago," he said, "I was kidnapped from home. Two men took me a long distance away and left me with an old woman, whom I knew only as 'granny.' I don't know where she lived, but I think it was in Newark. I haven't any idea what street she lived in. I was always kept in doors. She never let me out."

"Was she a married woman?" asked the Chief.

"I don't know," replied the boy. "Some horrible-looking man called to see her sometimes."

Up to this time the Chief had listened to the boy's narrative with patience. He now assumed to be angry, and peremptorily demanded of the lad why he had lied to him so persistently.

"I'm not lying," the boy returned earnestly. "I swear I have told you nothing but the truth."

"I know you have not," said the Chief, "and I propose to lock you up till you do."

"You can lock me up if you will, but I have, indeed, told you nothing but the truth," the lad protested. The Chief sent him to a cell and directed that nothing be given him to eat or drink till he was ready to confess his falsehood. An hour or two later the Chief went to his cell door.

"We have found your father," he said to the boy, "and he will be over here soon to take you home."

The lad's face brightened up. "I shall be ever so grateful," he said, "if you can tell me who I am. I have been wondering for six years who I may be, and haven't been able to find out. And as for ever seeing my father's face again, that I despaired of."

Finding that his ruse did not accomplish the desired result, the Chief had another boy put in the cell with him. The newcomer was instructed, in the hope that there might be an interchange of confidences, to pretend that he was a runaway. Still, in answer to his fellow-prisoner's inquiries, the strange boy told the same story. Last evening, however he asked to be taken to the Chief, and when he met him said: "I owe you an apology. I never told so many lies in all my life before as I have told you to day." Then he confessed that his name was Max Steinberger. His mother, who is a widow, resides at No. 131 East Fifty-ninth-street, but he has lived for five years with his grandmother, Mrs. Rothschild, and his uncles, at No. 168 East Sixty-third-street. Information was sent to his relatives, and his uncles soon called for him. They said that the lad, who is unusually bright, is very self-willed. His mother, finding herself unable to control him, put him with his uncles for correction. Two or three days ago his grandmother wanted to give him a bath, but he was opposed to it. He told her that some one was at the basement door to see her, and during her absence slipped out of the front door and ran away. He proposed, he told Chief Murphy, to go out West, make money, buy a farm, and then take his mother to live with him. He had learned the little he knew of the Charley Ross story by reading the newspapers before his uncles got down stairs in the mornings.

Mlle. Tua.

Mlle. Tua, the young violinist, now so much talked of in Paris, is the daughter of a Turin mason who taught himself the violin, his wife the guitar, and put an instrument into the hands of his little girl, then 6 years old. When they had mastered a few tunes they left Turin and visited, one after another, the winter cities of the coast. At Nice a lady was so struck with the child's talent that she gave the father an introduction to M. Massart, professor of the violin at the Conservatoire, and the whole family came to Paris, to find a friend in the professor, who, with a few of his acquaintances, raised a fund which enabled them to live while the daughter followed the classes of the Conservatoire, where she has now gained the highest reward at 13. An American impresario has, it is reported, offered to take the young prodigy to America, with her parents, pay all their expenses for five years, and give them $40,000 at the end of that time. M. Tua has refused; he thinks his daughter can do better in Europe. Her first prize at the Conservatoire gives her $100 and a superb instrument.

A GOOD conversationalist may make himself head at a feast, but the small boy takes the cake.

The Warning of Kandahar.

The recent Afghan campaign has given fresh significance to Marshal Saxe's pithy definition of the British Army as "lions commanded by asses;" and England has triumphed, not through her officers, but in spite of them. To blunder by rule and precedent, to apply the maxims of the parade ground to the jungle, the desert, or the mountain; to treat bloodthirsty and treacherous savages as civilized troops—such is the system which, pursued in defiance of the gravest warnings, has stained the flag of one of the bravest nations in existence with such blots as Kurd-Kabul, Isandula, and Khushk-i-Nakud. At times, indeed, the rules of sound common sense and clear judgment, followed out by such captains as Clive, Coote, Lake, Wellesley, Napier, and Havelock, have formed a brilliant, though momentary, exception to this interminable blundering. But, for the most part, England's Eastern wars present the lamentable spectacle of a gallant army perpetually thrust into difficulty and danger by the incapacity of its leaders, and extricated solely by its own characteristic quality of never knowing when it is beaten.

The recent operations around Kandahar may be briefly summarized as follows: In the beginning of July a brigade was detached from the garrison to aid a loyal native chief known as the Wali, who was then threatened by the forces of Ayoob Khan. Gen. Burrows, who led the detachment, reached the town of Girishk, on the Helmund, (100 miles from Kandahar,) upon the 11th, and at once established himself opposite that place, on the left bank of the river. It then became evident that the Wali's own troops were ready to mutiny, which they did on the 14th, marching off in a body to join Ayoob Khan, who was then barely one "march" distant. In drawing off, the mutineers lost 50 men and several guns by a brilliant charge of the English cavalry; but, despite this success, Gen. Burrows thought it advisable, weakened as he was by this wholesale desertion, to fall back upon the town of Khushk-i-Nakud, 31 miles nearer Kandahar. This moment was completed, without molestation, on the 17th, although Ayoob Khan was reported to be at hand with over 4,000 men.

So far, no fault could be found with the English leader's dispositions. He was now occupying a strong position, with his stores, sick, and beasts of burden in the centre. He commanded the junction of several roads, and possessed an abundant supply of every necessary but wood. Several Afghan chiefs of note, capable of being used as hostages in case of need, were in his camp. Could he but have been content to hold his ground, he might have defied the superior numbers of the enemy. Unhappily for himself, he did the very reverse. Wishing, no doubt, to redeem by some brilliant exploit an expedition which had certainly been anything but glorious, he allowed himself to be misled into the belief that the force in his front was merely a detachment, instead of the whole Afghan Army. On the morning of the 27th he attacked the Afghan cavalry that hovered around him. The latter, feigning a panic—a device so hackneyed that no experienced officer should have been deceived by it—drew the pursuing British into a well-planned ambuscade. Their cavalry and artillery, decimated by a crushing fire, melted away at once; but the honour of the day was saved by the English infantry, whose resolute stand, with the heavy losses sustained by it, did much to check a pursuit which might otherwise have annihilated the whole brigade. As it was, the rout of the British force was complete, and had the victor pressed forward at once, he would probably have entered Candahar at the heels of the fugitives. His delay, from whatever cause it may have proceeded, saved the city. When he at length appeared before it, his repeated assaults were repelled as vigorously as they were made. Meanwhile General Roberts and Gen. Phayre, converging upon the place from opposite sides, triumphantly asserted the superiority of discipline over fanaticism; and the latest dispatches announce the relief of the besieged city and the defat of its late assailant.

Such a story points its own moral. Few errors are more common or more fatal than the belief that to overrun a country is to conquer it. Napoleon himself fell into it in 1808, and the result of that blunder was the Peninsular war and his own final overthrow. Afghanistan is an Oriental Spain, and the position of the British Commander-in-Chief at Candahar is precisely that of Joseph Bonaparte at Madrid. The English grenadier is, indeed, more than a match, in a pitched field, for the undisciplined Afghan, just as the French grenadier was for the undisciplined Spaniard. But all this does not bring the invaders one step nearer to their object. Twenty defeats, each more crushing than any which they have yet sustained, would never quell the resistance of the Afghans, nor prevent their rallying again whenever they please. It is this impalpability, this want of any vital and vulnerable point, which distinguishes the barbaric warfare of the East from the civilized warfare of the West. The organized States of Europe resemble a single and palpable adversary, pervious by shot or steel. The fierce mountain clans of the Hindu-Kush are like a swarm of hornets, everywhere and yet nowhere, always assailing, never assailable. Moreover, were every foot of Afghanistan conquered to-morrow, its occupation would only cost far more than it is worth, without any counterbalancing advantage whatever. It is full time for England to recognize the uselessness as well as costliness of her self imposed task, and to refrain from adding more valuable lives to the thousands already sacrificed in vain.

Smuggling by Cabinet Couriers.

(From the London Telegraph.)

Cabinet couriers of all European nations enjoy the privilege of exemption, as far as their persons and luggage are concerned, from the Customhouse officers' examinations to which the general travelling public is still subjected at the frontiers of the several European States. Some time ago, however, the suspicions of a french douanier at Pagny were aroused by the unusual number and dimensions of certain boxes for which the usual exemption was claimed by a "courier extraordinary" of the Russian Government, passing the Franco-German frontier, on his route from St. Petersburg to Paris. Although the luggage in question was duly provided with the imperial seal, the inspecting official remembered that, a few days previously, notification of the mysterious disappearance of a Russian departmental signet had reached his bureau from the Ministry of Commerce in Paris. He therefore politely declined to pass the courier's trunks, and reported the grounds of his refusal to his superior officer, who at once took upon him himself the responsibility of opening and examining the suspected luggage, despite its proprietor's indignant protest. His courage was rewarded by the discovery of 24,000 cigars, which the pretended Cabinetcourier had intended to smuggle into France. Next day another Russian courier arrived at Pagny, also accompanied by an inordinate amount of luggage under seal, which, upon being inspected, was found to contain 27,000 cigars. Both smugglers were arrested and conveyed to Nancy, were they have been detained in "preventive seclusion," while the French Police, under the superintendence of Commissary Clement, specially charged with inquiry into the case, have pursued their investigations, resulting in the detection of a widely spread smuggling association, with branches established in Paris and several leading French provincial towns. To any one acquainted with the venality, of the Russian tchinovnik, it is easy to guess how this association became possessed of the imperial signet, under cover of which they carried on their wholesale frauds upon the revenue of the French Republic.

A 4-YEAR-OLD Sunday school girl did the best she could with a question that was asked of the infant class. Said the teacher:—"'And it came to pass, when King Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes.' Now, what does that mean, children, 'he rent his clothes?'" Up went a little hand. "Well, if you know, tell us." "Please, ma'am," said the child timidly, "I spose he hired 'em out."

Germany's Chronic Fears.

THE ALARMING PLOTS WHICH NEWSPAPERS ARE ALWAYS DISCOVERING.

(Berlin Despatch to the London Times.)

The Emperor has returned from Ischl. Prince Bismarck has hitherto given no sign at Kissingen, but now that the two Emperors have withdrawn from the stage it is reasonable to hope that the Chancellor, in accordance with his invariable practice, will soon proceed to entertain the European public with some diverting entr'acte, in which surprise, not unmingled, perhaps, with mystery, is likely to be the prevailing element. The journals here would be heartily grateful to his Highness for the creation of some incident calculated to engross their attention and employ their pens. For it must be obvious to the most cursory observer that their columns now are painfully contracted, dull and bare. They have all squeezed and strained the very last drop out of the Eastern question, nor is there any immediate prospect of grass for the poor depleished beast. A blade of sustaining vegetation in the shape of an atrocity telegram from Prisrend, a canard from Athens, or a dementi from Stamboul is regarded here as a perfect godsend in the way of verdant provender, and the life of the animal does thereby not altogether evaporate, but its productive power has for the time being sadly dwindled, and there is no saying what the graziers may have to do if prospects of pastures new are not speedily unfolded to them. Meanwhile, for lack of matter more attractive, the newspapers here have eagerly caught at M. Gambetta's Cherbourg speech, and are cudgelling their brains to make out exactly what the ex-Dictator meant. That his words are capable of two, and even three, interpretations, all seem to be agreed, but as to which is the right one there is little consensus of opinion. Suspicion, however, plainly appears to lurk at the bottom of all their comments, and some of the Liberal journals even write as if they were clearly convinced that France is patiently biding her time and slowly but surely maturing her imputed policy of revenge. Two Liberal papers, in fact, reason as if M. Gambetta had the other day boldly declared as much, one openly asserting its conviction that the President's speech is an "unconcealed defence of the revenge idea which is becoming popular among the French people in proportion to the increasing power they feel of being able to realize it." The semi-official and conservative press, it is true, has not yet indulged in much criticism on the subject, though its silence is no less ominous than the remarks of the Liberal organs are outspoken, but it is very evident to all that the festivities and speechifying which cheered the simple inhabitants of Cherbourg have had a somewhat opposite effect on the susceptible politicians of Berlin. At the same time, it must be said that on the subject of their international relations with the rest of Europe the Germans have lately begun to show a tetchiness and sensitiveness quite unworthy of the race of calm and penetrating thinkers which they boast themselves to be. They seem to be incessantly haunted by the suspicion of some baneful design against their new and innocent Empire by one or more of their envious and banded neighbors, and the press is hardly ever done denouncing the anti-German aims of some of the powers. Austria, it is true, since last Autumn has enjoyed a chartered immunity from these reproaches, but the other States have had to suffer severely for it. Now it is France, with a well-delivered side thrust at poor, unoffending Italy; again, the terrors of patriotic wrath are let loose on Russia, and the other day the journalists even defiantly shook their indignant fists at the honest and dumbfounded John Bull for having darkly conspired with the ambitious Muscovite to thwart and destroy the Austro-German influence on the banks of the Danube. When Germans, therefore, forget themselves so far as, on evidence of the very flimsiest and second-hand nature to impute treachery to a well-wishing and well tried friend, it can scarcely excite surprise that they should continue to be infected with an unhappy suspicion of a nation which they hold to be their hereditary foe, that they should examine all its ordinary actions with the painful minuteness of a microscopist, and pervert the words and meaning of its rulers with all the purblind obstinacy of a scholastic dogmatist.

A Chinese Theatre.

THE AUSPICIOUS OPENING OF A CELESTIAL HOME OF THE DRAMA IN PORTLAND.

(From the Portland Oregonian.)

Coung Ye Lung & Co.'s new theatre was opened the other day. The performance began at 4 p.m. and lasted till past midnight. At 7 p.m. the theatre was crowded, five-sixths of the audience being Celestials and one-sixth Caucasians. About thirty Chinese women occupied seats in the gallery, set apart for the gentler sex. The play presented is entitled "The Treaty Between the Six Asiatic Nations," and is embellished with the incidents connected with that treaty. The play embraces every shade of acting, from light comedy to heavy tragedy. The actors knew their lines and their cues, and they also knew how to act; there were no quarrels between the leading lady and the soubrette, and the star and the leading man; there were not half a hundred deadheads; there were no bouquets bought by members of the company and sent to themselves by the usher; there were no tedious waits between the acts, but there were some tedious acts between the waits; the orchestra consisted of a fiddle, two banjos, a machine that made a noise like two boys with sticks striking a paling fence going at full speed, and three pairs of cymbols—one pair as large as washtubs. The ensemble playing was a happy medium between the sounds of two pigs under a gate and the melody of a boiler factory, with a slight preponderation of the latter. The most thrilling scene was when ten actors, dressed kind of like a fairy and kind of like an Indian, and kind of like a turkey gobbler, came out and threatened to wipe the ground with their opponents' army. They tackled an old woman, threw her across a block, and sawed away for a minute with wooden swords, after which the woman turned a summersault, and walked off the stage, dead. The heroine of the play had her face painted like the sunrise of a six-bit chromo, and four young Romeos, after squandering a week's salary on picnic tickets and boat rides for the idol of their hearts, without gaining her affections, threatened to have the life's be-lud of the other three. Taken all in all, the first Chinese performance must be recorded as a grand financial and artistic success.

A French Heroine.

One of the celebrities of the Paris markets, says The Pall Mall Gazette, is a woman who keeps a vegetable stall, and who wears the red ribbon of the Legion of Honour. This woman, Annette Dreyon by name, was formerly cantinier to the 3rd regiment of infantry, and the 2nd regiment of Zouaves, which she accompanied through the campaigns of Africa and Italy, and during the war with Germany. Of the seven or eight female members of the Legion of Honour, she is the only one who received the distinction for an act of valor upon the field of battle; and she was decorated after the battle of Magenta for rescuing the regimental colours from Austrian soldiers who had captured them.

During the war with Germany she was with the 32nd regiment in Metz, and upon the surrender of that fortress she was sent off to Germany with the survivors. Just outside Metz a Bavarian soldier insulted her, and she pulled out her revolver and shot him through the heart. For this she was condemned to death, and would have been shot but for the intervention of Prince Frederick Charles, who hearing a woman was to be executed, made inquiries into the case, the result being that Annette Drevon was set at liberty. She lived in great poverty for some time; but Marshal MacMahon happening to hear about her, gave her a sum of money sufficient to enable her to set up the stall at which she now sells carrots, turnips, and other aids to digestion.

SIX poets who have passed three-score and ten: Longfellow, Tennyson, Hugo, Whittier, Browning, and Holmes.

WOMAN GOSSIP

The Fashionable Girl.

The thoroughly fashionable girl looks as if she had stepped out of a picture painted in the middle of last century. She droops her shoulders, represses her bosom, and humps her back until she is interestingly shaped like a consumptive in the stages next preceding death. Her shoulder blades show like rudimentary wings through the thin muslin of her white dress, and her hair is arranged with angelic simplicity. Over her shoulders and chest is a fichu like the neckerchief familiar in the standard portrait of Martha Washington. Her skirt is gathered in at the waist, and hangs as straight and plain as an old-fashioned petticoat to within six inches of the ground. The only suggestion of modern earthliness is the glimpse of gay stockings underneath.

THE London people who are not æsthetic are having a good deal of amusement over those that are: over the ruffled and short coiffures of the women, the tousled and long hair of the men, some of whom even wear a fringe; over the male attitude against wall or chimney-piece; over the female immobility when sitting with head thrown back and hands thrown forward, throat and arms stretched at fullest length; over the yellow-greens and unwholesome reds of their draperies; over the affectations of their talk, and countless other peculiarities. One of the clan, it is said, after rapt contemplation of a hideous little plate, began extemporizing some tuneless music on the piano; and on being asked what he was about, replied, "I am playing the plate."

Fashion Notes

HOODS are the coming craze.

JET will be worn to excess this winter.

NEW ostrich feathers are very thick and heavy.

ARTISTIC embroideries are being prepared for the coming season.

THE caleche bonnets of our grandmothers and the small capote are the new fall styles.

SCARVES and fichus of mauve-coloured Spanish blonde and lace are coming into fashion.

MOMIE cloths of fine, pure wool, and in stylish colours, are offered for winter dresses. They are a yard wide.

A STYLISH combination for the fall will be old gold and prune colour. Green and old gold will vie with it in favour.

VELVET will be the prevailing material for winter dresses, and the plain will be matched with the figured, the latter used for trimming.

GREEN is a colour that will be brought into prominence this fall. It will be used in combination with the new copper colours, with which it contrasts well.

BUTTONS in the form of large hooks and eyes in glittering steel are used for dresses or are worn singly for fastening the collar at the throat, the cuffs at the wrists.

THE long polonaise, which will be retained the coming season, is longer than ever, and is perhaps handsomer than heretofore because of the attention paid to its fit.

THE new ribbons are as variegated in colour and as striking in design as the new dress fabrics. Many of them have figures in exact pattern of the bright cashmere brocades.

SOME of the new basques are cut long and square in front, with a pocket put on each side of this square front; the backs of such basques are short, and cut to form two points.

SOME capes for wearing overdresses are made entirely of coloured hackle feathers. They are finished off with a coloured cord and tassels in front. In red and pale blue they are most fashionable.

THE newest long silk mittens have beads worked on them. They are to be had in white, with white or silver or gold beads; in black, with black beads; and in old gold and many other colours.

RED tints are in much favour still. Ruby, garnet, and copper, are much seen in good dresses; the mixture of blue and garnet is at present very fashionable; green and grenat, plum and gold, are also great favourites.

PLAIDS, which are introduced the early part of each winter season, are already in the market. They are not, however, tartans of Scotch clans, but are fanciful plaids which show French taste in their combination of colours.

ALL the recent dresses, of whatever material, are made with shirred backs, short apron fronts, and all-round bodices. The skirt hangs straight at the back, and the shirring consists of from five to seven rows below the line of the belt.

POLONAISES almost invariably fasten down the back, and are the most stylish way of making up light stuffs, such as bunting, nuns' cloth, sateens, and even ivory serge and cashmere. They are often accompanied by a hood to match the costume

THE basque and lower skirt of the dress of last season are retained, the former being made long or short, according to the use for which they are designed. Some basques have long collarettes, ending in shirred points, which pass under the belt.

THE fashion of wearing a silk lower skirt with flounces and a woolen over-dress has been abandoned by French dressmakers, and a woollen suit, in order to be stylish, must have only woolen seen on the outside, silk being relegated to linings.

WREATHS of flowers are worn round the throat, and also edging square-cut dresses. Those round the neck, which are made full like a ruche, are used in the daytime for dressy occasions. The lace stands up round the throat above the collarette of flowers.

THE new styles in carpets, like those in dress goods, are richer in colouring this season, and the majority of tapestry goods are worked in floral styles. In Brussels, small figures are in demand, and, like tapestries, very few designs are made on black ground.

HANDKERCHIEF dresses are now reproduced in woolen material, the stuff being printed in squares in such mixtures as violet and black, old gold and green, red and black, red and blue. They are made up in the same way as the cotton handkerchief dresses.

THOMAS YOUNG of Perkinsville, Ind., looked into the mouth of a cannon to see if it was loaded, while somebody touched it off. His head was blown away.

THE widow of the Jewish Cologne banker, Baron Abraham von Oppenheim, who, in 1870, gave the munificent sum of £150,000 for a hospital for poor children of all confessions, in memory of her late husband.

MARWOOD, the English hangman, has retired. He has trained up an assistant in the way he should hang. Marwood has realized a fair competency, and his pupil pays about the price of a snug benefice for the privilege of stepping into the shoes of his master.

THE first Pan-Presbyterian Council appointed Dr. Beadle Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for the coming council. Dr. Beadle died and Dr. Henry A. Boardman was appointed in his place. Recently Dr. Boardman also died, and now Dr. W. P. Breed is to perform the duties of the position. Dr. William Adams, who was to preach the opening sermon, having passed away, the service will be discharged by Dr. William M. Paxton, Moderator of the last General Assembly.

A BROTHERLY EXPRESSION.—Clergymen, like other mortals, occasionally find that they have chosen unaccommodating helpmates. One of these ladies made a rather awkward mistake. Her husband having brought a brother clergyman home to dine with him, went into another apartment to speak to his spouse about the repast, when she attacked him and abused him for bringing a parcel of idle fellows to eat up their income. The husband, provoked at her behaviour, said in a pretty loud tone: "If it were not for the stranger, I would give you a good drubbing." "Oh," cried the visitor, who overheard the remark, "I beg you will make no stranger of me."

PERSONAL.

THE Duchess of Connaught received on her twentieth birthday the gift of a superb bracelet from her husband's rifle brigade corps.

THE King of Italy has offered the use of the royal villas of Capo di Monte and Marochetti to Mr. Gladstone if he wishes to recuperate in Italy.

THE late Dowager Lady Cowper's father was once Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and she lived long enough to see her son occupying the same vice-regal throne.

LORD ARDILAUN has presented the city of Dublin with a park, with avenues, sylvan nooks, and lakes, on which he has spent more than twenty thousand pounds.

THE English ladies in Portugal have adopted a lawn tennis costume with some Moorish features, consisting of full trousers, laced at the ankle, a sleeveless, bright-colored square bodice and a loose skirt to the knee.

THE gold and silver plate belonging to the present Duke of Wellington is worth a million and a half of dollars. The Shah of Persia remonstrated with the Queen for allowing such wealthy and powerful subjects to live.

THE Queen of Denmark recently sent her chamberlain to offer Mlle. Van Zandt, the grandaughter of Signor Blatiz, an engagement in Copenhagen, and the singer opens Mignon, she singing French, and the rest of the company Danish.

CLELIA BERTINA, a young improvisatrice who two years ago astonished the Roman world, is about to marry the Marquis de Bavilla, a handsome rich young Spaniard. She is about eighteen years old, somewhat sad-looking, tall and delicate, with fair face and dark eyes and hair.

MR. MEREDITH READ, while in England recently, dined en famille at Osborne with the Queen, the Princess of Wales, Princess Beatrice, and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. He is the first American that has been thus kindly and familiarly entreated by British royalty.

PRINCE CHARLES of Monaca has annulled the civil contract of marriage between his son, the hereditary Prince Albert, and the Princess Marie Victoria, daughter of the late Duke of Hamilton. The ecclesiastical marriage was declared void by the Pope several months ago. The lady has since married Count Thassilo Festetics, a young Hungarian.

AT the recent French military ceremony at Longchamps, the foreign ambassadors were notified that they must alight at the gate, and walk to the pavillion, only the Presidents of the Republic, of the Senate and the Chamber being allowed to drive all the way; and that furthermore they must take their places on the left instead of the right of the Presidents, the right being reserved for the French Ministers. Prince Orloff meekly obeyed instructions; but Lord Lyons said, as the representative of his sovereign, he was entitled to different treatment, and he drove all the way to the pavilion; and took his place on the right side of President Grevy, and not on the left.

IT has been thought worth while to cable the description and cost of Sara Bernhardt's new dresses. Some of them are quite fine, as notably that for Camille—a white satin ball dress, with camellias embroidered on a ground-work entirely of pearls; another dress is of nothing but Valenciennes lace and pearls; for Frou-Frou there is an ivory satin covered with embroidery of mother of pearl; for the Sphinx, a yellow satin skirt, with jet-covered cuirass, and two huge ravens upholding the skirt. It is no wonder that the mademoiselle declares herself incapable of living on less than twenty thousand dollars a year, and the American public may as well understand what it is that is expected of them.

JAY GOULD has no eyebrows, and a correspondent of the St. Louis Republican professes to tell why. He had his all staked on the Union Pacific, and the stock has been worked up from 9 to 66. The lower court had decided in his favour in a vital lawsuit, and it was with feverish anxiety that the result of the appeal was awaited. The rumour got about in Wall street that the decision of the court above would be adverse to Gould, and, in spite of the private assurances that it would be against the Government, the adverse rumours so unstrung Gould that it was hard for him to keep on his feet. A private telegraph wire was hired, with one terminus in Mr. Gould's office, and the other in the room adjoining the Supreme Court chamber in Washington. The operators sent all the decisions as they were read. Great nervousness was caused by the long, tedious opinions telegraphed in which Gould had no interest. This was kept up for hours. Gould was almost prostrated. At length the operator announced that the reading of the opinion in the Union Pacific Railway case had been commenced. The first of the opinion began to come over the wire, and it was a mere history of the case. "Oh, shut him off," cried Mr. Gould, "and ask him whether the decision of the lower court is affirmed." The answer was awaited with breathless anxiety. Gould sank in his chair, as pale as a dead man, and those about him were much concerned for fear that if the decision was adverse he would be killed by it. The operator at length gave the news that the decision of the lower court had been affirmed. Mr. Gould was prostrated, though the decision gave him millions. He was carried to his home in Fifth avenue, and a long sickness followed. All his hair came out, including his eyebrows, and those nature never restored.

Not Regarded with Favour.

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL CODE OF SIGNALS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA.

(From the New York Sun.)

The new international code for preventing collisions at sea went into use recently. The remark that has been made regarding the new rules by the members of the Order in Council at the Isle of Wight, that they "contain no radical changes from the old rules," is apparent in every line, and is considered a bad omen. Seamen and intelligent persons who are accustomed to travel by water have generally acknowledged that the old code was efficient in clear weather. It is only in foggy or thick weather that it has been proved useless; and there was a hope that in the new code provision would be made by which a master of a ship would be able to ascertain in advance, by a simple system of signalling, the course that an approaching ship was making, so as to intelligently prepare to avoid a meeting. Instead of any such provision, article 19 says, when two ships are about to meet, "One short blast means, 'I am directing my course to starboard.' Two short blasts mean, 'I am directing my course to port. Three short blasts, 'I am going full speed astern.'"

Seamen say that in thick weather, when, owing to a quartering wind, it is impossible to detect by sound whence a ship is approaching, if the lookout heard the starboard course whistle he would be unable to tell whether the approaching ship was crossing his bows or running clear. What is wanted, they say, is a system by which the course of a vessel may be made known. Then, if it be a sailing ship, arrangements may easily be made not to crowd an approaching vessel too close to the wind, or, if she have the wind with her, to make her observe the rule of the road at sea and starboard her helm.

So little interest is taken in the new rules that no copy was to be seen among the pilots in the pilot office, and a United States supervisor of vessels in the Post Office acknowledged that he had no copy of the code.

The English Gentleman.

Heaven forbid that I should speak in dispraise of that unique and most English class which Mr. Charles Sumner extols—the large class of gentlemen, not of the landed class or of nobility, but cultivated and refined. They are a seemly product of the energy and of the power to rise in our race. Without, in general, ranks and splendour and wealth and luxury to polish them, they have made their own the high standard of life and manners of an aristocratic and refined class. Not having all the dissipations of this class, they are much more seriously alive to the power of intellect and knowledge, to the power of beauty. The sense of conduct, too, meets with fewer trials in this class. To some extent, however, their contiguousness to the aristocratic class has now the effect of materializing them, as it does the class of newly-enriched people. The most palpable action is on the young among them, and on their standard of life and enjoyment. But in general, for this whole class, established facts, the materialism, which they see regnant, too much block their mental horizon and limit the possibilities of things to them. They are deficient in openness and flexibility of mind, in free play of ideas, in faith and ardor. Civilized they are, but they are not much of a civilising force; they are somehow bounded and ineffected.—Mixed Essays, Matthew Arnold.

Toronto, Grey & Bruce R'y.

Change of Time.

On and after MONDAY, 3rd NOV. trains will run as follows:—

GOING NORTH.

Toronto,—Union Station,
Dep.	7:30 a. m.	12:20 p. m.	5:00 p. m.
Carlton	7.52 a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
Weston	8.04 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
Humber Sum't	8.30 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
Woodbridge	8.45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
Bolton	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
Mono Road	9 50 a.m.	3.05 p m.	7.05 p.m.
Charleston	10.25 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4 45 p.m.
Orangevil'e Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Pricev'e	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2 50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
William ford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Fleshert'n & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.15 a.m.	3 10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10 15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arr.	11:15 a. m.	5:20 p. m.
Dep.	7.15 a.m.	11.35 a. m.	5.40 p. m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Smt	9.40 a.m.	2.15 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2.27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
TORONTO,—Union Station,
Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Sept. 24th, 1880.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The STANDARD will be given to the first of January, 1882, for $1.25. Now is the time to subscribe. Those of our subscribers who call at the office for their paper, will please bear in mind that the place of publication is in Hill's new brick block, on Toronto-street, opposite the Markdale House. We would again draw the attention of intending subscribers to the fact that we offer special inducements to those who may now choose to order the STANDARD. The charge will be $1.25 from now till 1st January, 1882—one year and over three months' for a year's subscription. This, we think, is very liberal on our part, and we have no doubt of the result.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We will be pleased to receive communications from those who may desire to write us on subjects of news or of general importance, as it is our desire to make the STANDARD a medium through which all matters of interest may be laid before the public. No anonymous communication will appear in this journal, we must have the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but that we may know with whom we are dealing. Communications only of public interest will be received. Matters of a private or personal character, and in which the community are in no way interested, will not receive publicity through our columns.

T., G. & B. RAILWAY.

THE Shareholders of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company at their annual meeting, which was held in Toronto on the 8th inst., received and adopted the report of the Bondholders, who have now control of the road. The report contains the usual financial statements, &c.; but the portion of it most interesting to the municipalities is that having reference to the agreement to be made with the Grand Trunk Company for the working of the line. We are informed that the agreement adopted by the Board is a favorable one for the municipalities, as it provides for putting the road into firstrate order, and for maintaining it in a thoroughly efficient state of repair. It is expected that the appeal to the municipalities for the amount required from them will be made at once.

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO REV. A. WILSON.

On Monday evening, the 20th inst., the Manse in Markdale was the scene of a pleasant entertainment. A large number of the members and friends of the Presbyterian Congregation of Flesherton took possession of it, and for a few hours enjoyed themselves very pleasantly. The duties of the Chair were most efficiently performed by Mr. J. Anderson. Before the company separated, the Chairman called upon Miss Blain, who read the following address:—

To Rev. A. Wilson.

REV. AND DEAR SIR.—As you are about to depart from our midst, we cannot allow the event to pass without having at least a social meeting to tender to you our heartfelt wishes for your future welfare, and in doing so we wish you to obliterate from your mind that this is done because it is a prevalent custom on the departure of a minister from his field of labor; but on the contrary, let us assure you that it is the undisguised feeling of the members and friends here assembled from the Flesherton Congregation, especially when we call to mind the many excellent qualities of head and heart you have evinced, and the exertions you have used in the promotion of every movement which had for its object the welfare of the Congregation of Flesherton. You have not been many years amongst us, but during your stay here we have learned to recognize in you an able expounder of the Word of God, and a strict adherer to the Church of our fathers. Engaged as you are in the glorious work of directing sinners to the Cross of Christ, where we believe you have succeeded under God's blessing in setting many on the straight and narrow way. Your exertions in the interest of the Sabbath School and Bible Class we recognize with gratitude, and feel that when you return to College we will loose a friend and counsellor. We would also convey to you our appreciation of the active and intelligent interest you manifested in our public school of Flesherton, and while it is not our place to speak of the high standing you have gained as a Minister of the Gospel, we wish at the same time, as your friends and acquaintances, to offer an expression of the estimation in which you are held by us, both on account of your private virtues and your ability as a Minister in the Presbyterian Church. In offering you these expressions of regard, we would not forget your partner in life. We assure her of our regard, and both of you of our best wishes for your future happiness and prosperity. We request your acceptance of the accompanying purse as a small token of our regard, and commending you and your family to the Providence and Grace of God, we affectionately bid you farewell.

Signed, JENNIE B. BLAIN,
On behalf the Ladies' Aid Association.

Mr. Wilson made a brief but appropriate reply under strong emotions, feeling quite unable adequately to convey in words his sense of their kindness. The company shortly after separated, much pleased with the evenings entertainment.

IRON MINING IN MANITOULIN.

For some time past it has been considered that iron might be procured in paying quantities on the Manitoulin Island, but the lack of enterprise, and perhaps money, to enable parties to fully investigate the resources of the district prevented any action being taken. Lately, however, a shrewd American who appears to fully understand the matter, and having funds at his command, went to the Island, and after but little search found the sought for article. The lots on which he made the discovery had been taken up by a Mr. Trouch, the mate of the steamer Sovereign, who it appears some time ago took up 1,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Killarney, and but recently learned that there are rich beds of ore on the property. A few days ago, the American gentleman above referred to came to Canada and after a conversation with Mr. Trouch, and paying him a sum for the privelege of getting a look at the best veins, became so thoroughly convinced of their richness that he at once offered to advance all the money required for developing and working the mines. Some of the ore has been assayed in New York and pronouced of the finest quality, and capable of being manufactured into first-class steel. Mr. Trouch, we are informed, will leave the steamer after making another trip, and he and the American gentleman will immediately engage in active mining operations. We wish Mr. Trouch and his associate every success, and as to the Islanders, this branch of industry will very much facilitate their progress.

BANKING.

For sometime past a great want for banking accommodation has been felt by our business men in this section of country, they having been obliged to transact their business in Owen Sound, Meaford or Collingwood; now all this trouble and great inconvenience is about being done away with, inasmuch, as it will be seen by advertisement in to-day's issue that Messrs. Wm. Lucas & Co. have leased a portion of Hill's new brick Block, for banking purposes. Burglar and fire-proof safes have been erected, and everything appears secure. This institution will be of great benefit not only to the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic, but in fact to all who are in any way engaged in business. We learn that Mr. Lucas, the manager, has been connected with the largest private banking house in Canada; and comes to us highly recommended as a straightforward and thorough business man. Drafts payable in all parts of Canada and the United States will be issued, and in fact all business usual to such institutions will be transacted here. Further information on this subject may be learned on reference to advertisement.

COUNTY ITEMS.

THE Sydenham and Holland Shows will both be held this year on the same day—Friday, Oct. 1st.

SOUTH GREY Agricultural Show in Durham, Thursday and Friday, 30th and 1st Oct.

KEPPEL Agricultural Society's Fall Show will be held at Oxenden on the 12th of October.

EAST GREY Agricultural Show in Flesherton, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 28th any 29th inst.

THE Fall Show at Clarksburg this year will be for two days, and will be the most important Exhibition in Grey. The 6th and 7th of October, Wednesday and Thursday are the dates.—Standard.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A lad of fifteen years of age, named Henery Chesterfield, of Tara, was kicked by a horse and instantly killed, on Friday morning last. He was trying to catch a horse in the pasture field when the accident occurred.

DIVORCE.—Notice is given in Saturday's Canada Gazette that an application will be made to the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada at its next session, on behalf of Matthew Gardiner, of the township of Sydenham, in the County of Grey, farmer, for a bill of divorce from Elizabeth Ann Gardiner, his wife, on the ground of adultery.

AS WILL be seen by our market report in another column, spring wheat ranges from 96 to 98 cents per bushel, while fall wheat ranges from 86 to 88—just 10 cents lower. It seldom occurs that a higher price is paid for spring than fall wheat, and we are at a loss to account for it.—Thornbury Standard.

FROM the Wiarton Echo we learn that the grading on the Stratford and Lake Huron Railway, between Listowell and the northern terminus at Wiarton, is all but completed—will, with the exception of the bridging, be completed and ready for the rails before winter sets in. Nothing more, however, will be done until it is ascertained whether the expected Government aid can be had,

THE thirteenth annual exhibition of the Melancthon Agricultural Society will be held in Shelburne on Thursday and Friday, September 30th and October 1st, 1880. On the days of the show return tickets will be issued at single fare by the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway to Shelburne from all stations south to Charleston, and from all stations north to Markdale, good to return on Saturday, the 2nd of October.

WORRIED BY A DOG.—A little girl 8 years old, daughter of Mr. Richard Ball, was attacked and worried by a ferocious brute of a dog, kept and owned by William Knott. Knott owns four acres of land close to the school house, and keeps this fierce brute to protect his orchard while he is away. On one of these occasions, the children being out at play, were attacked, the result of which might have been very serious.

THE Thornburry Standard says that Mr. Fawcett has let the job of crosswaying and ditching 18 and 19 side road to good and reliable men, who will perform their work according to contract. On the completion of this portion of the road, it will then be open from boundary to boundary, and will give a direct road to Clarksburg and Thornbury to a large number of Euphrasiaites; an advantage they will eagerly avail themselves of—especially in the winter, when such places as the Epping and St. Vincent Rocks are blocked with snown.

THE case known as the Organ Question of the Presbyterian Church at Durham, was up before a meeting of the Saugeen Presbytery, at Mount Forest, on Wednesday last. The prayer of the dissentients for the organization of another congregation at Durham was not granted, on the ground that a large proportion of the petitioners were still members of the Presbyterian Church here. In the mean time a special meeting of the Presbytery was appointed to be held at Durham on the first Tuesday of October, for the purpose of investigating the whole matter, and considering whether some means cannot be devised whereby harmony may be restored in the congregation.

TORONTO, GREY AND BRUCE RAILWAY.—The annual general meeting of the shareholders of this railway was held in Toronto on wednesday, the 15th inst. The following gentlemen were elected Directors for the ensuing year: Messrs. John Gordon, Wm. Ramsay, Donald McKay, J. G. Worts, George Gooderham, A. B. Lee, John Leys, Wm. Hendrie, Thomas Gibson, M. P. P., of Wroxeter. At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, held in the afternoon, Mr. John Gordon was re-ellected President of the Company, and Mr. Wm. Ramsy, Vice-President. Among the items of interest in the annual report was the statement that formal negotiations had been entered into by the Board of Directors with the General Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the purpose of making arrangements with that Company to work the line; also an arrangement to that effect, is now being prepared, the same being, however, based on the understanding that the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Company is to receive liberal support from the municipalities towards the change of gauge scheme and the necessary improvements.

EAST GREY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—The semi-annual meeting of the above Association will be held in Andrews' Hall, Thornbury, on Thursday and Friday, the 14th and 15th days of Obtober next. The following is the programme:—1. Lecture on Education by A. Grier, to be given on the afternoon of the first day. 2. Robert Hamilton on the Art of Teaching. 3. D. Honeywell, Factoring. 4. George Lindsay, Provincial Assocition. 5. R. J. Hall, How to teach Spelling. 5. John White, Fractions. 7. J. H. W. York, Penmanship. 8. Dr. Donaldson, Chemistry. Other subjects will be taken up by Messrs. Tait, DeLeMatter, McKinnon, Farewell, Finch, Revs. Colter, Gee, Elliott, Bell, Brown and others. Questions for the Question Drawer must be sent to the president before the opening of the Convention. There will be an entertainment on the evening of the first day, under the management of Mr. Henderson. Admission 10 cents. Proceeds to be applied to the Band Fund.

SOUTH GREY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—The semi-annual meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association will be held in Durham, on Thursday and Friday, October 7th and 8th. The following is the programme for the two days:—1: President's Address. 2. Joseph Reid, B. A., Algebra to beginners. 3, Mr. M. N. Armstrong, Recitation. 4. Mr. W. J. Galbrafth, Geometry to Beginners. 5. Mr. R. Walker, Some methods of Reward and Punishment. 6. Mr Dixon, Teaching Writing to Juniors. 7. Mr. Charles Ramage, Teach Reading to Juniors. 9. Mr. D Allan, Report from Provincial Association. 10. Mr. W. K. Reid, Music in Schools. 11. Mr. Jenkins, Drawing with Illustrations. 12. Mr. S. Acheson, Natural Philosophy. 13. Mr. M. P. McMaster, Teacher's Duty outside Schoolroom. The best methods of teaching Arithmetic, Reading and Geography will be illustrated with classes by Misses Corry and Armstrong, and Messrs. Jones and Blagbourne. A suitable entertainment will be provided for Thursday evening. It is hoped that all Teachers in the district will consider it their duty to be present.

DIED.

At the residence of their father, John Whitby, Esq., Township of Artemesia, on the 9th inst., Herbert Homer, aged 7 years and 10 months; and on the 10th, Kate Estilla, aged 6 years and 4 months.

Rev. Mr. McDiarmid will preach a memorial sermon of the above on Sabbath morning next, at 10:30.

JOB WORK done neat and prompt at the STANDARD Office.

MARRIED

On the 21st inst., by the Rev. T. Hicks, Mr. Henry Reid to Miss Elizabeth Jane Foster, both of Holland Township.

On the 21st inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Mr. Wm. Jackson, jr., of the Township of Holland, to Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, eldest daughter of John Hamilton, Esq., of Glenelg.

In Kintail, on the 31st ult., at the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, by the Rev. Mr. Grant, Mr. Donald McLeod, late of Markdale, to Miss Mary Dick, of Ripley.

CHURCH DIRECTORY.

CHRIST CHURCH.

Services—Sept. 26, 10:30 a. m.; Oct. 3rd, 6:30 p. m.; 10th, 10:30 a. m.; 17th, 10:30 a. m.; 24th, 6:30 p. m.; 31st, 6:30 p. m.; Nov. 7th 10:30 a. m.; 14th, 10:30 a. m.; 21st, 10:30 a. m.; 28th, 6.30 p. m.; Dec. 5th, 6:30 p. m.; 12th, 10:30 a. m.; 19th, 10:30 a. m.; 27th, 6:30 p. m, Sabbath School, 2:30 p. m. Rev. James Ward, Incumbent.

CANADA METHODIST CHURCH.

Services every Sabbath at 10:30 a.m., and 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. G. S. Bowes, Superintendent. Prayer Meeting, Thursday Evenings at 7:30. Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Pastor.

PRIMATIVE METHODIST,

Services every 1st and 3rd Sabbath at 3 o'clock p. m. Every 2nd & 4th Sabbath at 10:30 a. m. C. C. Garrett, Pastor.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Services in Dufferin Hall every alternate Sabbath at 11 a. m., and intervening Sabbaths at 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. Bible Class and Prayer Meeting on Fridays at 7:30 p. m.

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Sep. 23rd, 1880.

Flour	5.00	to	5.00
Spring Wheat per bush., new	0.90	to	0.95
Fall do. do. do.	0.85	to	0.85
Barley	0.40	"	0.55
Oats	0.25	"	0.25
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes.	0.30	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	0.15	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.10
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese per lb.	0.05	"	0.05
Ducks, per pair	0.30	"	0.40
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.25
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1.00
Hides	6.00	"	6.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	3.00	"	3.40
Wool	0.25	"	0.25
Green Apples, per. bushel.	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Sep. 23rd, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.85	to	0.90
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.88
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.27	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.20	"	0.22
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5 00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	5.00	"	6.00
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.35
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

McINTYRE

Is now opening out a well selected stock of

GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS!

and Liquors,

of which a more detailed statement will be given next week.

☞ Shop next door to the Drug Store.

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880. 2-y

Wm. Foster,

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

Wholesale and Retail dealer in all kinds of

Pine and Hardwood Lumber,

LATH, SHINGLES, CEDAR POSTS, AND CORDWOOD.

☞ Office and yard opposite SHELDON'S HOTEL,

OWEN SOUND, ONT.

N.B.—Lumber, etc. shipped to all parts, by rail or water.

September. 1880. 2-4

Wm. Lucas & Co., BANKERS,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

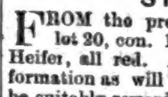
WM. LUCAS & Co.

September. 1880. 2-y

STRAYED

FROM the premises of William Lyons, lot 20, con. 12, Holland, one year old Heifer, all red. Any party giving such information as will lead to her recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 20, 1880. 2-3in



STRAYED from the premises of the subscriber, lots 91 & 92, 3rd Range, W T. & S. Load, one white heifer with white nose, a red and white heifer with lined back, and a red steer with white spots through it, and white hind feet—all yearlings. Any person giving information that will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

ROBERT TORRY.

Glenelg, Sept. 2, 1880. 1-4in

STRAY STEERS.

STRAYED into the premises of Mrs David Bradley, lot 82, 2nd East of T. & S. Road, Holland, one steer rising three years old, and one rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take them away.

MRS. BRADLEY.

Holland, Sept. 10, 1880. 1-3

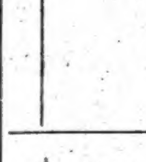
Subscribe for the Standard, We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

E. D. WILCOX,

Watches, Clocks, — Jewellery, &c. &c.

This space to be occupied by E. D. Wilcox's Advertisement as soon as his new Brick Store, now being fitted for him is completed.

MARKDALE.



TAILORING.

F. J. PRIDHAM

FASHIONABLE TAILOR,

WISHES to inform the public of Markdale and surrounding country, that he is prepared to

FILL ALL ORDERS PROMPTLY.

THE LATEST FASHIONS ALWAYS ON HAND.

CUTTING DONE while customers are waiting.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

CHARGES MODERATE.

PLACE OF BUSINESS

OVER M'FARLAND'S STORE,

Corner of Mill & Toronto Sts.,

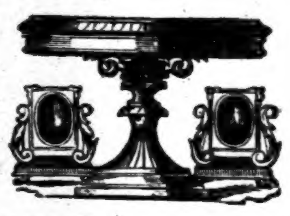
MARKDALE.

September 17, 1880. 1-tf

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!



GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing! in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing! promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

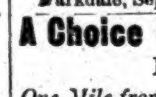
A Choice Farm of 150 Acres FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood, (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.



VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

STRAYED

INTO the premises of James Farding, lot 16, con. 9, Euphrasia, two RED YEARLING STEERS and one brindled yearling. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-3in

STRAY STEER.

CAME into the premises of the subscriber lot 6, con. 12, Euphrasia, on or about the 15th July last, a red and white STEER, about one year old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take it away.

1-3

JAS. BLANEY.

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals!

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books! IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS! TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions, AND VETERINARY PREPERATIONS. CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880. 1-tf

HILL BROS.,

Space to be occupied by HILL BROS. when they remove.

When their new building is completed.

Advertisement will appear in this space

MARKDALE.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER.

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mil

General Advertisements.

WILLIAM FOX,

Plain and Ornamental Plasterer.

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All AT W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past ... years, and begs to remind them that ... prepared to supply the ... in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of order,

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill strett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors by trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continnance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

James Sullivan,

FLESHERTON,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and Japanned Wares,

Eave Troughing, &c.

A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware.

Wooden Wares, Washboards, Brooms, Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.

Stove Ovens Lined.

Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.

☞ Prices most reasonable,

JAMES SULLIVAN.

Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

STOVES.

Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES.

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18

Same, with Low Oven, $17

5 BOX STOVE, $

All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c at low prices.

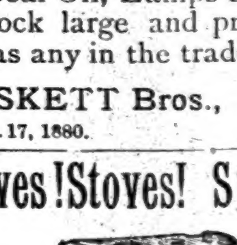
TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.,

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!



At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND B... STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, it will last you your lifetime.

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shartest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, near the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

STRAYED

FROM the premises of JOHN MOORE, lot 10, concession 12, Holland, about the 15th of June. Three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white, one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 14th, 1880. 1-3

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

In time to meet the wants ... contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, $2 if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid except at the option of the publisher. Parties refusing papers without paying them will be held responsible for the subscription ... they comply with the rules.

Letters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year	$50 00
Half do do	30 00
Quarter do do	18 00
... do do	10 00
... do do	4 00
Six lines and under, first insertion	50
Each subsequent insertion	25
From six to ten lines, first insertion	75
Each subsequent insertion	25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion	2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Editors.

EXTRACTS FROM A SPEECH DELIVERED BY CHARLES S. FREEMAN TO THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW YORK PRESS ASSOCIATION AT TROY.

Editors are born, not made. You cannot grind them up in heaps as you can do doctors, or lawyers, or clergymen. There is no college where they are taught. There is no curriculum for them to study. There are no professors of newspapers. There are no diplomas and there are no degree for an editor. Perhaps I should say that none of the ordinary schools in which other professions are taught, answer for the newspa... The best school is the printing ...

GRAIN is coming in freely.

BARGAINS in Watches at Doll's.

A GOOD opening for a foundry in this village.

GO TO Wm. Bulmer's Flesherton, for a good Photograph.

TAILORING.—Just read Pridham's advertisement. Nuf ced.

GLENELG Agricultural Show next Monday in Markdale.

DON'T you forget to call at Doll's shop the first time you are in Flesherton.

FACTS CANNA BE DENIED.—For the sequel to this read Butter & Rae's advertisement.

OUR farming friends who have sheep or cattle for sale, should read Speers Bros. advertisement.

MRS. Bulmer, Dressmaker, Flesherton; also Harper's Bazaar Patterns for sale.

A MONTHLY Cattle Fair should be established here. Farmers are complaining of having to drive their cattle to other places.

IN the Prize List for Glenelg the following were omitted:—Year old Colts; Spring Colts; Spring Calves; for which suitable prizes will be given.

EVERY one busy these times. No street loafers hanging round the hotels and street corners during working hours.

MR. DUNLOP, Baker and Confectioner, has bought the vacant lot between McIntyre's and Markett Bros', and purposes building this fall.

CREDIT sale of Farm Stock, Implements, Household Furniture, &c., on Wednesday, Oct. 6th, on the farm of Edward Rutledge, Sr.

STRAY CATTLE.—Quite a number of stray cattle are advertised in to-day's issue. Those who have lost such, should read the notices.

BUSINESS is brisk in Markdale and times are looking up. Every house both private dwelling and business is occupied or engaged.

HILL BROS. are pushing their beautiful brick block to completion rapidly. One appartment is already occupied by the PRINTING OFFICE.

WILCOX is anxiously wating the completion of his part, next door to the Printing Office; and has just returned from the market, where he has ordered a large stock of jewelry, &c.

MR. LUCAS (the Banker) is wishing his office was completed, and Hill Bros. are as anxious as any for the completion of their portion on the corner of Toronto and Mill streets.

THE young men of Flesherton had a meeting recently, with the object of reorganizing and enlarging the Brass Band. We have not learned the result.

ROYAL HOTEL, MEAFORD.—This first-class house, under the management of the Messrs. McGirr is worthy of the patronage of the traveling public. See advertisement in another column.

DENTISTRY.—Mr. J. J. White, Surgeon Dentist of Owen Sound, will be seen by advertisement, will be at the Revere Hotel, in this village, on Wednesday next, the 29th inst.

EXTENSIVE credit sale at C. W. Rutledge's farm on Saturday, the 2nd of October. See Posters. There is also a fine colt rising two years, which was omitted in the posters, will be offered at the above sale.

FURNITURE, &c.—Parties residing in Flesherton and vicinity, who require anything in this line, should read Hoopers' advertisement. They certainly appear to have everything, and defy competition as to price.

BILL HEADS.—As the time is fast approaching when accounts have to be rendered, parties should call early at the STANDARD Office and order their Bill Heads, which can be had neat and cheap.

DR. SPROULE has commenced rebuilding on Mill street, and expects to complete a three story brick in two months. The Doctor is also pushing the building of his mansion, which, when completed, will be a credit to the place.

GRANT AND CHELLEW.—This enterprising firm are said to be driving a successful business. We recommend those in want of anything in their way, to read what they have to say, and see if it would be desirable to give them a call.

THE Canadian North West is the title of a new monthly journal published at Selkirk, Manitoba, by Mr. Jas. Waddsman. It is printed in magazine form and is devoted to the general interests of the North West. Price $1 per annum.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

GRAIN is coming in freely.

BARGAINS in Watches at Doll's.

A GOOD opening for a foundry in this village.

GO TO Wm. Bulmer's Flesherton, for a good Photograph.

TAILORING.—Just read Pridham's advertisement. Nuf ced.

GLENELG Agricultural Show next Monday in Markdale.

DON'T you forget to call at Doll's shop the first time you are in Flesherton.

FACTS CANNA BE DENIED.—For the sequel to this read Butter & Rae's advertisement.

OUR farming friends who have sheep or cattle for sale, should read Speers Bros. advertisement.

MRS. Bulmer, Dressmaker, Flesherton; also Harper's Bazaar Patters for sale.

A MONTHLY Cattle Fair should be established here. Farmers are complaining of having to drive their cattle to other places.

IN the Prize List for Glenelg the following were omitted:—Year old Colts; Spring Colts; Spring Calves: for which suitaple prizes will be given.

Every one busy these times. No street leafers hanging round the hotels and street corners during working hours.

MR. DUNLOP, Baker and Confectioner, has bought the vacant lot between McIntyre's and Haskett Bros.', and purposes building this fall.

CREDIT sale of Farm Stock, Implements, Household Furniture, &c., on Wednesday, Oct. 6th, on the farm of Edward Rutledge, Sr.

STRAY CATTLE.—Quite a number of stray cattle are advertised in to-day's issue. Those who have lost such, should read the notices.

BUSINESS is brisk in Markdale and times are looking up. Every house both private dwelling and business is occupied or engaged.

HILL Bros. are pushing their beautiful brick block to completion rapidly. One appartment is already occupied by the PRINTING OFFICE.

WILCOX is anxiously wating the completion of his part, next door to the Printing Office, and has just returned from the market, where he has ordered a large stock of jewelry, &c.

Mr. Lucas (the Banker) is wishing his office was completed, and Hill Bros. are as anxious as any for the completion of their portion on the corner of Toronto and Mill streets.

THE young men of Flesherton had a meeting recently, with the object of reorganizing and enlarging the Brass Band. We have not learned the result.

ROYAL HOTEL, MEAFORD.—This first-class house, under the management of the Messrs. McGirr is worthy of the patronage of the travelling public. See advertisement in another column.

DENTISTRY.—Mr. J. J. White, Surgeon Dentist of Owen Sound, as will be seen by advertisement, will be at the Revere Hotel, in this village, on Wednesday next, the 29th inst.

EXTENSIVE credit sale at C. W. Rutledge's farm on Saturday, the 2nd of October. See Posters. There is also a fine colt rising two years, which was omitted in the posters, will be offered at the above sale.

FURNITURE, &c.—Parties residing in Flesherton and vicinity, who require anything in this line, should read Hoopers' advertisement. They certainly appear to have everything, and defy competition as to price.

BILL HEADS.—As the time is fast approaching when accounts have to be rendered, parties should call early at the STANDARD Office and order their Bill Heads, which can be had both neat and cheap.

DR. SPROULE has commenced rebuilding on Mill street, and expects to complete a three story brick in two months. The Doctor is also pushing the building of his mansion, which, when completed, will be a credit to the place.

GRANT AND CHELLEW.—This enterprising firm are said to be driving a successful business. We recommend those in want of anything in their way, to read what they have to say, and see if it would be desirable to give them a call.

THE Canadian North West is the title of a new montly journal published at Selkirk, Manitoba, by Mr. Jas. Weidman. It is printed in magazine form and is devoted to the general interests of the North West. Price $1 per annum.

ATTENTION is directed to Mr. Foster's adv. which appears in to-day's issue.

TO THE HUNGRY AND THIRSTY.—Read McIntyre's adv. He does not promise to clothe the naked. No! But, see what he does promise.

NIGHT SCHOOL.—T. Hall will open a night school up stairs in the Douglas Block, on Wednesday next, at 8 o'clock p. m. Terms—$1.00 for ten nights, cash in advance.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL which was closed for a few days owing to sore throat prevailing among the children, is now open and parents may be in no way afraid of any contagious disease—the village is very healthy.

BOOK AGENT.—Mr. Charles Brown, book agent, of Collingwooe, called on us a day or two ago. Mr. B. looks the picture of health. He is agent for some very popular and useful works deserving of a place in every library.

FIRE.—We regret to be compelled to announce that on Saturday last the house and stabling of Finlay McRae, Esq., Warden of Grey, was totally destroyed by fire. We have not room for particulars, but learn that the loss is estimated at $2,000.

PERSONAL.—W. K. Flesher, Esq., of Flesherton, has returned from England, looking well. M. Richardson, Esq., of Flesherton, is home from Europe looking well after his rough passage by the City of Brussels. His daughter Edith remained in England for her health.

BAZAAR.—Remember that on Monday next, the 27th inst., a bazaar takes place in Dufferin Hall, under the auspices of the Ladies' Association of the Presbyterian congregation. Hot meals will be served from 12 to 5 p. m.; price 20 cents. Proceeds in aid of the Society's funds.

STOVES.—Haskett Bros. have a large supply of every description of stove on hand, which they propose selling at the lowest remunerative prices. W. R. Walker, not to be outdone, has added largely to his stock of stoves, so that parties requiring anything in this line need not go from home to procure it.

FIRE.—About 2 o'clock Sunday morning, the 19th inst., Mr. Joseph Dormer, lot 9 con. 14, Artemesia, discovered his barn in flames, and the roof just falling in. He had finished harvesting a few days before, consequently his grain and hay was consumed, together with democrat buggy, fanning mill, &c.; in fact he saved nothing that was in the barn. Cause of fire unknown. Loss $1,200; insured for $640.

MEAFORD MARBLE WORKS.—These works, the property of Mr. Hogg, are so well and favorably known that comment would be futile. We may say, however, that we have seen some of the work turned out from this establishment which would do credit to houses of greater noteriety. Mr. John McKenzie, agent for these works, is now in town, taking orders, and those requiring anything in this line should at least have a conversation with him.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.—We understand Mr. J. F. Sproule purposes opening in Hill Bros. old shop, where he intends keeping a stock of Dry Goods, Millinery, Ready-Made Clothing, Gents' Furnishings, Groceries &c. He intends doing business there till the new brick block now being built by Doctor Sproule, and pushed forward very rapidly, will be completed. Mr. Sproule intends doing strictly a cash and produce business, and selling at bottom prices. We very much admire the principle, as we think it is time that the old credit system was abandoned. Look out for his advertisement in next week's issue.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.—In view of the prevalence of cattle stealing throughout the country, a Western paper very sensibly suggests that inducements should be held out for the capture of thieves. It says:—"A few Township Councils might combine and offer a standing reward of five or ten dollars each for the arrest and conviction of the thief or theives who might be proven to have stolen cattle within their limits. Or the reward might be made up of private subscriptions; but this plan would involve considerable trouble, and also throw the whole expense upon a few individuals. The Township Councils would be the fairer and more satisfactory way, and the amounts that would be called for during the year would be so small as to be imperceptible when spread over the whole of the ratepayers. We commend the matter to the thoughtful consideration of the authorities in the neighboring municipalities. That a rather uncertain state of affairs exists cannot be denied. That some remedy is needed will be universally conceded. And it is absurd, unreasonable and unfair to leave the whole trouble and expense of catching theives to be borne by the unfortunate party who happens to be made the victim of the depredations."

PRICEVILLE.

From our Correspondent.

The Cattle Fair of last Monday was well attended; both buyers and stock were in abundance. Fat animals changed hands rapidly at fair prices. Some cattle were not in the best condition in consequence of the recent drouth.

With regret we record the departure from our village of two of the most esteemed citizens in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wood. Mr. and Mrs. W. have been residents of Priceville for about four years, during which time they have gained the confidence and respect of all who had the pleasure of coming in contact with them. They now go to Arthur village, where Mr. W. has purchased the Stationery and Fancy Goods business. One and all heartily join in wishing them success and continued happiness.

Mr. Riley has all the material on the ground for the construction of a new blacksmith shop. Mr. George Simpson is the contractor.

Eligible young ladies and gentlemen contemplate getting up a concert in aid of the sidewalk fund; the pleasure of their evening peregrinations having been materially enhanced.

GO TO

W. J. McFarland's

FOR

BOOTS AND SHOES!

Newest thing out. Warranted not to rip. 1

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.

OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

J. B. McMillan,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR in Chancery, Conveyancer, &c., &c.
Owen Sound, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

McFayden & Robarts,
BARRISTERS, Solicitors in Chancery, &c. Office, one door east of the Merchants' Bank, Union-st., Owen Sound.
C. McFAYDEN. J. T. ROBARTS.
Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
OFFICES—at Owen Sound and Markdale.
N. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. McFarland's store, open on Thursday of every week. 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept, 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
Money loaned at lowest rates on personal and real estate. Lands bought and sold. Buyer and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

David Jackson, Jr.,
LOAN AND LAND AGENT, CONVEYancer, &c. Money to lend at the lowest rate of Interest ever offered in this part of the country. Principal money will be taken in sums of $100 and upwards yearly with the interest if desired.
Durham, Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable half-yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end of the year 8½ per cent.—principal payable at the end of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal and interest yearly to suit Borrowers.
Lands for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1 y

Carson Price,
GENERAL MERCHANT, HOLLAND Centre. Land Agent and Commissioner in B. R. &c. Mortgages, Leases, &c., drawn with neatness and despatch.
Holland, Centre, Sept. 17, 1880, 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments.
☞A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, Meaford and Markdale. Having purchased Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's entire stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys done within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates for Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Orders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

W. C. Jewell, L.D.S.,
WILL be at the MARKDALE HOUSE, Markdale, the First FRIDAY and following day in each month. Parties wanting Extracting, Filling or Teeth Inserted, from one to a full set, would do well to call and see prices. Satisfaction given in all cases. Head Office—opposite Post Office, Meaford.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1 y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
J. & J. McGIRR, - - - PROPRIETORS.
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the choicest Wines and Liquors and the best brands of Cigars.
Free 'bus to and from all trains.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.
Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.
Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880. 2-3m

J. M. Webster,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
☞LOAN ND LAND AGENT,
Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.
EUGENIA P. O.
Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1

A Word to the Public.

The era of prosperity which now happily reigns throughout the length and breadth of our glorious dominion benefits every branch of industry, and has very materially benefited my business, which has increased in volume several thousands of dollars over any previous year, and is steadily increasing.

Appreciating the tastes and requirements of the Public I have studiously, and I trust successfully, labored for 18 years to meet the wishes of purchasers. The support and patronage I have had justifies me in increasing my stock, extending my facilities, and at the same time materially reducing my prices.

Ambitious as I have ever been to be first and foremost in my business, I am resolved that henceforth the reputation I have achieved in this particular, shall be promoted and enhanced. Egotistical mention is not essential, but I do feel warranted in calling attention to my present full and complete stock of Goods, a stock, the greater part of which has been purchased for cash, and direct from the manufacturers, and the equal of which, for extent or variety, I do not think can be found north of Toronto. I solicit from strangers an inspection, and to my friends and customers say, that I have for them in goods and prices a succession of what I believe will be very agreeable surprises. I am in a position to fill all orders, and it will not be necessary to send to Toronto or elsewhere for goods. Give me a chance to supply your wants, and I guarantee the best Goods at the most economical rates.

A call and examination will be gratifying to me, for I feel sure that an experience in patronizing me will fully confirm all that I claim for my goods.

W. J. McFARLAND,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

MARKDALE.

September 17, 1880. 1

W. F. DOLL,

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK. FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

Special inducements in Waltham Watches

A SPECIAL LINE OF

LADIES GOLD WATCHES

Just to hand. Also Ladies Col. Gold Lockets, Chains, Necklets, &c.

A LARGE LINE OF

Wedding and Gem Rings, $1 to $10.

HALL, PARLOR, BRACKET AND BEDROOM CLOCKS AT ALL PRICES.

Silver and Electro-Plated Ware.

Owing to the increased demand for this line of goods I have been forced to purchase larger and better cases. Am now offering

Cake Baskets, Fruit Stands, Cruets, Butter Coolers, Sugar Bowls, Pickle Dishes, Napkin Rings, Fruit Knives, Spoons, Dinner and Desert Knives, &c., all of the latest and most improved designs.

A Call Respectfully Solicited.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Flesherton and Dundalk.

Flesherton, Sept. 13th, 1880. 1

THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND CAN. MORT. CO.

(LIMITED.)

R. DAVIS, Agent, - - - - FLESHERTON.

THE ABOVE COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO

☞LEND MONEY!☜

At 7½ per cent., half yearly, or 8 per cent., yearly. Note a few of the advantages derived from the North of Scotland. You are not obliged to pay any part of the principal until the end of the term. You can arrange to pay in instalments if your choose and interest immediately ceases on such amounts when paid. You can arrange to pay your interest or principal in any month to suit you. You can arrange to repay the loan in any time from 1 to 20 years. Simple interest only charged. No equalization of payments. No 12 per cent. interest nor fines charged. The following example will show one of the many ways in which a loan may be repaid.

EXAMPLE:

$1000 borrowed, repaid by ten equal annual instalments, simple interest, at 8 per cent. yearly, the payments will be as follows:

1st year, interest 8 per cent on $1000	$80 00
Instalment	100 00	180 00
2nd year, interest 8 per cent. on $900	$72 00
Instalment	100 00	172 00
3rd year, interest 8 per cent. on $800	$64 00
Instalment	100 00	164 00
4th year, interest 8 per cent. on $700	$56 00
Instalment	100 00	156 00
5th year, interest 8 per cent. on $600	$48 00
Instalment	100 00	148 00
6th year, interest 8 per cent. on $500	$40 00
Instalment	100 00	140 00
7th year, interest 8 per cent. on $400	$32 00
Instalment	100 00	132 00
8th year, interest 8 per cent. on $300	$24 00
Instalment	100 00	124 00
9th year, interest 8 per cent. on $200	$16 00
Instalment	100 00	116 00
10th year, interest 8 per cent. on $100	$8 00
Instalment	100 00	108 00
Making a total payment of		$1440 00

The borrower is not obliged however, to repay any part of the principal by instalments but may do so if convenient. Expenses low and a detailed statement of disbursements given to each borrower. Deeds, Leases, Wills, Agreements, &c., neatly and carefully prepared. Insurance affected in the old favorite Companies. Accounts, notes, and rents collected and returns promptly made. Farms for sale and to rent. Private funds invested. Auction Sales attended. Charges low. All business strictly confidential.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Auctioneer, Real Estate and Ins. Agt., &c.,

FLESHERTON.

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

September 21st, 1880. BUTTER & RAE. 1

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse.

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,

Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880. 2

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880. WM. BROWN. 1

PERSONS ABOUT BUYING

Threshing Machines!

should see my DUSTLESS GRAIN SAVING SEPARATOR and Horse-Power before ordering elsewhere. Don't wait for agents to call.

A. COCHRANE.

Durham Foundry, August 3rd, 1880. 40-6m

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.

☞Meat delivered at any house in town.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Sheep and Cattle.

FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave there names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & A. SPEERS.

Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S

Indian Blood Syrup.

LABORATORY,

77 W. 3d St., New York City

LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

10,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870

9,000,000 Bottles.

This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties:

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases, and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.

MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed any one. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.

MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.

Burford, Brant Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.

ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me. MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Indian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.

MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.

W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves. NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.

Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy. MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.

DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial. W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

MANHOOD:

HOW LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

☞Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of a knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Address

THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,

41 Ann St., New York;

Post Office Box, 4586.

Autumn Song.

Into the fields flew a little bird;
In the joyous sunshine his song was heard;
And wondrous sweet was the song of his lay.
"Farewell, I am going!" it seemed to say,—
"Far, far away
Must I travel to-day."

To that sweet field-music I lent an ear;
It made me sorry and glad to hear;
With an aching joy, with a gladsome pain,
My heart rose lightly, then sank again.
"Say heart, say heart,
Art thou breaking for pleasure, or breaking for pain?"

The leaves around me fell sadly down,
Then I said, "Alas! the Autumn is nigh!
The Summer swallow has homeward flown.
Perchance, thus love and longing fly,—
Far, far and swift,
With time they drift."

But the sunshine streamed around me anew;
Back to me quickly the little bird flew,
And sang, as he saw my falling tears,—
"Love knows no Winter in his years.
Nay, nay!
For love, there is no such thing;
It is, and it must be always, Spring!"

JANE HEARN'S TRIAL.

A STORY IN THREE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

He could not meet her gaze. He felt as if he were stifling, though the breeze blew softly in from the sea and the freshness of an Autumn evening was in the air.

"Isn't this the path that leads into the pine wood—our favourite walk?" he said presently.

And Jane answered "Yes."

She was awed by the sure intuition of some coming evil; she felt like a child whom some one was leading into a dark room full of mysterious horrors. Guy had some dreadful thing to tell her; of that she was sure. Well, she was no coward, and she would show him how brave she could be. Linked hand in hand the two followed the pathway that led into the woods that were now gray and ghostly with the gathering shadows.

Robin sang no more. A thousand stars in place of one here and there shone overhead, the sea sobbed against the rocks more loudly, for the wind was rising as the night fell.

Colonel Daubeney, looking like a silhouette against the dusky sky, paced restlessly up and down, up and down, the garden.

If those two for whom he watched and waited had not been Guy Challoner and Jane Hearn, he might have thought that passion and despair had won the day, and that never more should he see his ward's sweet face or listen to her gentle voice. As things were, the Colonel knew that though the parting between the one-time lovers might be as the very blackness and bitterness of death itself, Guy would strengthen the woman he loved to do the right, and shrink from the thought of seeing her fair white life sullied, even for his own sake, as from the touch of a red-hot iron. He trusted Guy utterly; but this waiting tried him sorely. How would Jane look when she came back from that fateful walk along the shore? What should he do to try and comfort her? Would Guy come with her or would she come alone, widowed and desolate indeed, even though still a wife?

Just before she went out she had been singing; should he ever hear her sing again? What was to be done about Walter Hearn? Doubtless he could oblige Jane to go back to him; and then there was her income—the residue of the fortune that had been so miserably squandered; yes, that would be a temptation to the man, no doubt. How the Colonel wished that Walter Hearn were one of those men, actively cruel, repellent, gross, from whom the law can easily protect any woman! As it was, there was no law against a man slowly breaking his wife's heart by neglect and indifference; no law against a man treating his wife with rather less consideration than he would an article of furniture in his household; nor yet, if a woman were fool enough to leave her worldly possessions unguarded, could a man be prosecuted for making away with them.

No; there was no appeal against Walter Hearn—none—unless he had led a dissolute life under cover of a false name and false position. Granted this, what end was to be gained by dragging Jane's name before the public and giving that unrighteous critic the chance of saying that there had been "faults on both sides, no doubt!" Even when a woman's womanhood would be dragged through the mire by staying with a man whose only pleasure is to degrade her, there are still found cruel and unrighteous ones who will say that, be things how they may, her place is by her husband's side, while hands are not wanting to cast a stone at her bowed head. What chance, then, was there for Jane, who had no blackened bruises to show, but only a bleeding heart?

"Perhaps the blackguard may not want her back," thought the Colonel, trying to cheer himself up a bit; "perhaps he might be willing to accept a—a—consideration to leave her alone."

Jane, forever separated from Guy Challoner; Jane, weary-hearted and sad-eyed; Jane, never singing about the house as she used to do; but yet Jane safe under his own roof, watched over, loved, comforted perhaps a little in God's own good time, by himself and that dear wife of his—these were the visions that the old man was conjuring up as he passed to and fro in the gathering darkness. But the visions quickly fled at last, chased away into the land of dreams by a pitiable reality. A solitary figure came slowly toward him through the gloom.

Jane, her clasped hands falling against her dress, the ghastly whiteness of her face showing strangely in the faint gray light that still lingered.

"Where is—where is—" stammered the Colonel, losing his head completely, and wishing Ellen were near to help him in his sore extremity.

"Guy?" said Jane, completing his sentence for him. "I left him in the wood, the wood above the shore where we have had so many walks and talks together. I went because he told me it was best so. I looked back and saw him lying on the ground. I was glad I could not see his face. If he had looked up, I might have gone back, and then I should never have left him any more. Guy will not come here again; he is going away to night; we have said good-bye to each other, you know. It will be a long good-bye, guardy—a long, long good-bye."

If she had wept, if she had sobbed her heart out over this sorrow that had come upon her, the Colonel thought he could have borne it better; but those dim, lack-lustre eyes, those pallid lips that spoke so calmly, and in such strange, dreamy fashion, of this terrible parting in the words!

"Come in, my dear, come in," he said, trembling.

Jane smiled. "Great heaven!" he thought; "what a smile." And putting her hand in his, she let him lead her in as he might have led a little child.

Jane's eyes were dry; they had the dull and vacant look you may see in those of a sleep-walker. Her brain was numbed, dazed by excess of misery; she only knew that she and her dear love had given each other a kiss good-bye, and that it was for a long, long time.

CHAPTER III.

"Let it be as a dream that is past, and like a tale that is told—let it be as though it had never been."

Jane Hearn was going back into the old barren, arid life; the old life of ceaseless self-repression, of utter lack of sympathy, of cheerless days, one following the other in an endless monotonous procession

She was like one who, footsore and weary, had been led to the gates of a paradise of peace and rest, a beautiful land "flowing with milk and honey," and then dragged back into the sandy desert already traversed with sore pain and travail.

She had learned what were the possibilities of life, and then been set face to face with its black realities.

Walter Hearn's last "whim" had been most successfully carried out. He had had his fling, and now, as he pleasantly put it, he was coming home again to settle down into an exemplary domestic character.

Jane knew full well what that meant. She knew the old routine off by heart—the utter disregard of everything and everybody save the whim of the hour; the utter indifference to his wife's happiness that had characterized his conduct from the early days of their married life; the cultivation of a kind of society utterly detestable to her; the spending of every possible farthing he could lay his hands upon, and, worst of all, the posing as a gentle-spirited victim to domestic worry—a great soul linked to a woman who neither understood or appreciated him.

She knew what had been the galling of the chain that bound her life, and now had she not also tasted of the sweetness of liberty and peace and love? And now the old struggle must begin again, and the story of Guy's love, his tenderness, his ceaseless thought of her, all their happy companionship together, must be "as a dream that is past, and as a tale that is told." There were no half measures in Jane's creed. Believing herself free she had given herself up body, heart, and soul to the new life, the exquisite new life that had opened out before her. Her days, her nights, had been full of thought and full of dreaming of Guy Challoner. She had searched her own mind to discover its fullest capabilities in the way of entering into those grand pursuits he loved. She did not want to try and turn herself into an aggressively learned woman; she only wanted to attain to the power of being receptive and appreciative, to be at once ambitious for him and proud of him, and to be both these things with understanding.

The old life of pain and struggle had once grown dim and misty; it had seemed a thing unreal, as though it were the story of some other woman that Jane had once read with a mighty pity stirring at her heart.

Now it was the new life, the new beautiful happy life that had opened like a flower-strewn vista before her, that must be set aside at the call of right and duty.

In Jane's eyes marriage was a holy thing, not a mere contract to be broken at will. If a woman, for the sake of, and in defense of, the purity of her own womanhood had to leave her husband, then henceforth she must face the world alone. As long as the man to whom she had vowed to consecrate her life lived, no matter what his sins against her, no other man could be more to her than a true and loyal friend.

This was Jane's creed—an old-fashioned one, no doubt, as the world goes now, but sweet and pure as the scent of those old-fashioned garden flowers that are going out of favour now-a-days, too.

"I have done no wrong," she said, lifting her sad, tired eyes to the old Colonel's face, and making him feel as if it would do him good to swear a good round oath at things in general and Walter Hearn and his whims in particular; "and Guy had done no wrong. We do not know, either of us. When we did we kissed each other many times, and said good-bye."

The quite, hopeless resignation of Jane's look and voice maddened the Colonel. And yet there was nothing to be done—absolutely nothing.

Mrs. Daubeney was so frightened by Jane's stony calmness, dim eyes, and white, weary face, that she hardly dared speak at all; which was perhaps a good thing, since there are times in life when even the gentlest words sear like hot irons, and such a time had come to Jane Hearn.

She made all her own plans, packed all her own things, went about the house quietly seeing to this or that—more able to think of what ought to be done than either her guardian or his sorrowing wife. She had determined to go down to Southampton and meet her husband.

"I want to leave all the old life behind me," she said. "You will not see me for ever so long. Walter will not care to come, I know—you remember he never did. He will write to you, I dare say, and I shall write. You must not mind if I have not much to say about myself. I do not think there will be much to say."

"Won't you be very lonely in London, my dearie!" Mrs. Daubeney ventured to say, gently stroking Jane's hand—the hand whereon the wedding-ring glistened, and where once a single amethyst, Guy's gift, had shone with softest lustre. "London is a lonely place for any one who has no friends."

"I shall not mind," said Jane. "I think I am a person who is better without friends—an unsympathetic sort of person, you know," she added, with a smile the sight of which sent poor Mrs. Daubeney out of the room.

The story of Guy's love for Jane Hearn, and hers for him—the story of those madly happy months by the Western sea—was to be buried deep down beneath the earth of forgetfulness. Few people knew anything about it, and Jane was going away from all her late surroundings into a life and an atmosphere far removed from any of them.

She could nerve herself to kiss the dear dead face of her lost hope and calmly draw the covering shroud about it; but she could not bear to let others look upon it laid so low. It was lost, dead to her forever, but sacred beyond all words—hers it was and Guy's. No one else had part or lot in it.

The Colonel and his wife felt that it was best that Walter Hearn should never know of this one episode in Jane's life. Why should he, indeed? He had no right to such knowledge. He had acted a lie; he had been utterly unfaithful to the woman he had vowed to love and cherish.

In his heart the Colonel girded terribly against the determination of Jane—this going back to a miserable life—but he knew it was no use to protest. You cannot bring the law to bear upon a man because he blots out all the brightness from a woman's life and starves her heart. He may care not one jot or tittle, though she weep herself blind, and yet the world sees no flaw in his conduct. He may see her sick and suffering, and show her less sympathy than he would give to a lame hunter in his stables or a sick hound in his kennels, and the world will only call the woman "exacting." The Colonel knew that these things were so, and felt his own helplessness to stand between Jane and coming trouble.

About a week before the date of Walter Hearn's expected arrival in England, the ship to which Guy Challoner was now attached sailed on that scientific quest which was absorbing the interests of nations. The Colonel saw the notice of this and secreted the paper that contained it; but he subsequently wore such a guilty air that Jane suspected the truth.

"Do not keep anything from me," she said, coming up behind him and laying her arm about his neck; "it is no real kindness; tell me—is Guy gone?"

"Yes, yes, my dear; he sailed yesterday," stammered the troubled man. At the time Jane said nothing; she only shivered and crept up to the fire, leaning closely over it and holding out her hands to the blaze. Afterward, Mrs. Daubeney, going softly to her room, opened the door stealthily to see Jane kneeling by the bed with her arms thrown up across the coverlet. No sobs shook the slight frame thus prostrate at the feet of God; better, indeed, if it had been so; better if tears had come as some relief to the bitter aching of the poor tortured heart.

A few days later Jane Hearn left that pleasant home beside the sea. No more should she watch the changing shadows come and go upon the bosom of the waters; no more should she watch the little boats, with red sails set, hie seawards bending to the wind; no more wander along the rocky shore or under the tall spires of the pine wood—that fateful wood where she had seen her lover lying prone upon the dark earth, his face hidden on his outstretched arms—the arms that might never more enfold her!

Jane was gone, and the house she had left seemed to the old Colonel and his wife like a cage from which a sweet-voiced bird had flown, leaving it empty and desolate.

The Winter was past, the Spring was coming. The buds began to swell upon the branches of the trees in the London parks. Last year's leaves, lying brown and withered on the ground, were swept up into heaps, so that the young grass-shoots had a chance to peep up and try what they could do to make the waking world fair with a soft green carpet. But though these first signs of coming verdure were plentiful enough, it was what is called a "late Spring;" and furious gales presently swept the sea and scoured the land, bending down the trees and doing their best to shake the tiny buds off and scare the birds from their wooing. A shadow, too, a ghastly shadow of great dread, was over the land.

The ship that had sailed upon that momentous quest was missing. In vain was search made upon the broad wide sea for any traces of what had been so fair and brave a thing; eager watching, agonized listening for gleam of hope or sound of tidings, were alike in vain. Day by day were to be seen in the papers paragraphs headed, "The Missing Ship;" day by day hope pined and died; day by day the shadow on the land and in men's hearts deepened and grew.

One woman read those cheerless daily records dry-eyed. She went about her daily duties; she was gentle, uncomplaining, ready of eye and hand as ever; but Jane Hearn's heart was breaking within her—for that missing ship was Guy Challoner's.

She could not realize the idea of death coming in such swift and terrible form to him who seemed so strong, so brave, so full of all manly endurance.

Through all the trouble of the old life begun again; through this second cruel experience of neglect and selfish indifference; through strivings after better things—efforts such as only a woman brave and true could be capable of to draw her husband nearer to her, to win him closer to her side; the thought of Guy and of that short story of their loves and hopes in the Summer that was gone had cheered and strengthened her.

The more worthy she could be, the more she could conquer herself, the higher the standard to which she could live, the more would she feel as if, in spite of all outward severance, in spite of all width of separation here on earth from the man she loved and revered, yet should she and Guy in heart and soul stand side by side, as those who strive together to "endure unto the end," living life patiently and bravely as heaven had ordered it for them.

She had striven after the ideal, and to a certain extent she had not failed, for Walter Hearn admitted that his wife was "improved," and joked about that whim of his as a thing that had had good results, and taught Jane many lessons of common sense. She was not always fretting herself over things nowadays, he said, but had learned to take things quietly. Also, she cared little for outward show, and spending little on herself, left all the more for him, though he had the grace to refrain from saying so openly. At all times the sources of Walter Hearn's income had been wrapped in mystery. The supply fluctuated, too, like the waters of the Nile; now overflowing his coffers as the river its banks; again, showing nothing but a vast expanse of desolations. Since those years spent in America this intermittent character had become more marked.

Jane's income he kindly forestalled as a rule, and when he did leave her any residue of it, took great credit to himself for so doing, and made expansive reference to men who were "close in money matters to their wives." People (women mostly) said what a pity it was that Walter Hearn's wife dressed so shabbily, (which was not true, for though simply, Jane was always daintily and neatly dressed.) They also said it was no wonder he left her at home so much and preferred to be seen with more "stylish" women. The truth was that when he was going out anywhere, Jane's husband would say to her: "You can come with me if you like, but it will cost twice as much as my going alone," and there was an end of the matter.

Well, things had gone on in this sort of way, sometimes better, sometimes worse, always cheerless for the patient wife, and Jane thought she was getting used to it; getting less sensitive than of yore, pleasing her husband better, in that his indifference did not make her suffer and annoy him by evidence of the same, as it used to do.

Jane thought these things and was thankful for them, not knowing that the real truth lay in the fact that her physical powers were failing under a long-continued strain, and that she did not feel things as acutely as she once had done simply because the tired heart began to beat more feebly than of yore. What she mistook for patient resignation, was in truth but a bodily lassitude that, if there had been any loving eye to watch her, would have told a sorry tale. And then, upon these worn-out nerves of hers came the ordeal of the waiting and watching for news of that missing ship.

While life lasts hope never quite dies. She had thought that in a time to come—a time still very far away, but somehow and somewhere—when they were very old, she and Guy might meet again, might be friends and companions, might perhaps speak together of the dear old times.

But now, as a two-edged sword, the thought that she might never see Guy again, pierced her heart. When a vessel is reported "missing," hope ever dies a lingering death. There always seems to be a chance, and the mind clings to that chance as a drowning man to a rope.

It was so in this case; the slow agony went on day after day, week after week. Once, as Jane was searching for the expected paragraph, a strange and wonderful sensation came over her, the letters danced and wavered a moment before her eyes, and then—yes, she was away on the shore near the dear old home, she carried a long tangle of sea-weed in her hand, and Guy was beside her. She heard the low murmur of the sea, felt the warmth of the sunshine, and the close grasp of her lover's hand on hers.

But just as Guy turned and looked upon her, just as she met the exquisite sudden sweetness of the smile that she had loved, the vision faded and she awoke to reality—a strange and commonplace reality too—for she was lying on her bedroom floor, underneath the window, with the paper crumpled in her hand. "I must have fainted," she said to herself, rising with some difficulty, and making her way to the bed. How weak she felt, lying there; and surely the rushing sound of the sea beating upon the shore was still in her ears!

Walter Hearn was going out for the day with some friends of his, a lady and her husband, people whom Jane disliked and thoroughly distrusted. He came noisily up the stairs with his great-coat on, flung the bedroom door open widely, and then stood still, staring with no particular sympathy, but a good deal of annoyance, at the prone figure on the bed.

"Why, Jane, here you are, are you? I've been hunting you all over the place."

Then, as he noticed the pale face and shadow-darkened eyes on the pillow: "What the devil's the matter with you? Belle Craven and her husband are here, and it looks deucedly uncivil, you know, for you not to show."

Jane dragged herself wearily from the bed; the room swam before her eyes, the rushing sound was still in her ears, but somehow, she hardly knew how, she got down stairs, and greeted the loud-voiced, over-dressed woman who was called "Belle," and the man with dyed hair and lacquered moustache, who had the good luck to be her husband.

It was Mrs. Craven's habit to say that she and her husband "understood one another thoroughly," which was certainly true, since perhaps two more perfectly unscrupulous people never lived, and each played into the hands of the other perfectly. Walter Hearn was a vain fool, and Mrs. Craven fooled him to his heart's content—and her own. She treated him as a man thrown away—absolutely thrown away in marriage; managed to insinuate that his wife was a "dowdy," an ailing, spiritless creature, and the like; and he was cur enough to let her say these things—or rather hint them—unrebuked. While the fair Belle duped the man, her husband won his money at ecarte; a double game which this precious pair played steadily, with a constant change of victims, much to their own advantage.

Laughing, talking, and making more noise than was at all well-bred, the trio at last set out upon their day's pleasuring, and Jane was left in peace.

Then she laid her down once more—rest, silence, time to think, those were the things she craved for. The rest was coming; the silence was near. The day was unusually fine and warm for so early in the year. It seemed as if the wind had worn itself out with its own violence, and the storm and gales of the last week changed to quiet, while fitful gleams of sunshine brightened a sky flecked with fleecy clouds white as driven snow.

Jane was sleeping with a smile upon her lips. Three hours later, when the housemaid stole up stairs to see if she could get her mistress to take a cup of tea, she was sleeping still more soundly.

Softly the shadows lay upon the bosom of the sea; birds were singing their sweet farewell to the day that was done; the room where Colonel Daubeney and his wife sat by a cheery pine knot fire began to grow dark, save for the flicker of the resinous flames. The old people loved the gloaming, and always put off ringing for the lamp as long as they could. Many a time and oft did they hold long converse at such times about their dear child Jane, she who had gone out of their lives and left a silence such as may be felt when a strain of music, passing sweet, dies into silence. This evening their hearts seemed more than ever full of her. The Colonel had just said he would give anything he had in the world to hear her singing once again about the house as she used to do, when, all at once, he grasped his wife's hand, and the two listened intently with straining ears.

What was that low far-off sound! Was it the sound of a voice loved and lost? They could catch no words, listen as they might, but the old familiar melody of a song both had loved came plainly enough through the stillness, and then, between the parted curtains of the portiere opposite, they saw Jane herself moving slowly toward them. Upon her face was a tender shadowy smile; her eyes shone with a soft and lambent light; her hands, white as lily-blossoms, fell in front of her, clasped the one in the other.

"Jane, Jane!" cried the Colonel, and would have risen from his place but that his wife held him back; "Let me go," he said hoarsely, putting her aside, but by that time he reached the other side of the room nothing was there save the growing shadows.

"Wife," he said, coming back pale and shaking, "we have both been dreaming."

Mrs. Daubeney only wept silently in answer. Her heart was full—full of dire and dread forebodings which she shrank from putting into words.

The next day strange news came to that quiet house.

Walter Hearn's wife had been found lying dead upon her bed; she had died in sleep, the smile still lingering about her lips, her cheek pillowed on her hand.

Jane Hearn's Trial was over. Her tired spirit, weary from the battle of life, from the struggle to hold the right, no matter at what cost, had drifted out into the "dream to come."

Not alone, for no tidings ever reached England of the missing ship in which Guy Challoner had sailed away from his dear love. That story is one that will never be told "until the sea gives up its dead."

Gold as the Tool for Exchange.

Gold possesses many merits for serving as money. It is clean and beautiful, light of weight in combination with high value, hard and slow to wear away by use, capable of great subdivision, and—what is very important—as coin admits of being remelted at once and without trouble or loss into the metal of which the coin is made. Thus remelted, it recovers all its full powers as a commodity. As to the great point of steadiness in value, it is not perfect; no commodity whatever is. Nevertheless, it exhibits great powers of retaining an unchanged market value. At one or two great epochs it has undergone great changes of cost of production, and of consequent worth, mainly due to exceptional circumstances in the yield of the mines; but they have been comparatively rare. Allegations of serious alterations of value have been brought against it within the last half century, but we maintain that they have never been proved. It is very easy to say that the discoveries in California and Australia have acted largely on the value of gold, but there is no harder matter than to give a proof that all prices—and all must be effected in the value of the money of which prices are formed—have been really and markedly affected by new contributions of the metal from unlooked-for mines. Mr. Bagehot did not believe that such proof had been established, nor is Prof. Walker far removed from this feeling. It may be that corn has maintained a steadier cost of production and value down the ages; but corn is manifestly too heavy and too bulky to do the work of money. It is obvious that it cannot be made common money; but contracts, such as leases or bequests, might be framed on the basis of payments of definite quantities of corn, estimated in the prices of the day. Such contracts have been made, often with great success. Gold further possesses the enormous merit of being largely used in the arts. The demand for it for ornaments, chains, plate, and other articles is very large throughout the globe, and is a powerful supporter of its steadiness of value as money. It is a metal widely used and possessing a distinct market of its own. The demand in that market, of course, comprises every object for which it is employed—money as well as ornaments. It would be a great loss if its use were confined to money alone; for then there would be no second force to counteract the fluctuations in the demand for it for money. By being used simply as a metal, as it becomes dearer or cheaper in its own market a tendency arises to increase or diminish the demand for it for metallic purposes, and thus the disturbing force on its value is weakened by having to work over a large area. As coining is unlimited and (except for the State) costless in England, gold can be taken from the circulation or added to it with the greatest ease. One further recourse which England possesses in maintaining equilibrium in the value of her gold money is her excellent system of Bank of England notes. Under the law of 1844 a vast supply of thoroughly safe notes is constantly supplied to the money of the nation. Fifteen millions of paper pounds costs but a trifle; for no expensive gold has been bought and kept in store for them. The paper circulation has never fallen so low as to reach them. They are made safe by excellent securities pledged by the bank for obtaining them, and are a faultless currency. One function still remained to be supplied. Gold is too valuable a metal to serve as small coin. Every nation requires a large stock of these small tools. England called in silver to perform this small but necessary work; but she did not thereby, in the true sense, become bi-metallic. Shillings are a legal tender for debts only to the extent of 40s. Their supply is limited; for the Government is under no legal obligation to coin silver, as it is to coin gold. Further, though they are rated to the sovereign in the proportion of 20s., they do not possess silver worth the twentieth part of that coin. Thus they are not full, true money, possessing as metal as much value as they claim in respect of the sovereign. They are in reality counters; and their definition is not silver coin passing for what they are worth as silver, but tickets for the twentieth part of a sovereign. If silver should decline very seriously in value, they would be exposed to the danger that shillings of correct value might be forged with good silver, and, being slipped into circulation, render their numbers excessive. If such a peril were to befall them, a new coinage of shillings of greater weight of silver would become inevitable. As counters, they do the work of money as well as if they were full coins, the positive want of the country for such small tools giving them an unassailable position.

English Society of the Present Day.

Mr. Jennings, the London correspondent of the New York World, who is far from being one of those who purvey scandals for the purpose of lending piquancy to his letters, or "lashes the vices of the aristocracy" for the American market, complains of the great degeneracy of morals and manners which has taken place in the latter days of the reign of Victoria. He compares it not only with the days of the Prince Regent, but of Louis XV. of France, and the restoration in England, not in grossness of manner and speech, but in cynical contempt of good character and the impunity which known immorality enjoys. Aristocratic ladies against whose characters scandal has become certainty are not only received but sought for in the best society, and only on exceptional publicity is there condemnation or ostracism. "The prince of Wales' set" is notorious as a collection of rowdy and dissipated young noblemen, and the whole tone of the higher society in London is such as has called forth the indignant invective of John Bright. The reception of Sara Bernhardt in the best English society, which was considered a wonder and an eccentricity on this side of the water—and which, by the way, it is to be hoped we may not imitate—may be accounted for in an easier way, and Adelina Patti is in a fair way to recover something of her position in the fashionable world. All this is very different from the early years of the reign of Queen Victoria, when the Lady Flora Hastings was done to death by slanderous tongues, and no woman, who had been divorced for whatever cause, could approach the virtuous skirts of royalty. It was supposed that the days were forever past when such a ruler as George Prince Regent, and the society which he gathered about him, would be tolerated in England, and that virtue and decorum were henceforth to be characteristics of the English court. But the reaction has come. The eminently respectable, commonplace and decorous Prince Albert has been succeeded by his son, who is familiar with the coulisses of the French theatres and goes to Parisian races on Sunday. The widowed queen has retired into seclusion and the tone of society is that of a younger and later date. Perhaps it is a revulsion from the too respectable and eminently tedious life of the court as revealed in the diaries of the queen and the memoirs of the prince consort, as the license of the restoration followed the asceticism of the commonwealth, and the debauchery and infidelity of the regency succeeded the devotion of the latter years of Louis XIV.; and if decorum had not been so tedious and commonplace, it would not have been followed by cynical disregard for reputation, and a seeking for liveliness and pleasure under any form. It is a bad sign, however, and, if there is not a change, it may bear more serious results in the growth of radicalism than are confined to the manners and morals of the aristocratic class themselves. It is not impossible that the continuance of the house of lords and royalty itself may depend upon the personal good character and the respect of the people for those who compose them, and at present, to say the least, they are not strengthening themselves by their conduct.

GEN. PLEASONTON claims to have had the best horse in the army during the war. "I bought him," he says, "from Prince de Joinville. The Prince paid $3,000 for him, and I got him when the Prince was going away for $600. He was as gentle as a lamb, with the courage of the devil and the speed of the wind. He could go without eating or drinking, and was as pretty as a woman. He could jump anything before him. I left him in charge of a bugler one day, and that was the last I ever saw of either the bugler or the horse. They went over to the enemy."

THE English correspondent of the Churchman has the most dismal forebodings in regard to the effects of the Burials bill when it becomes a law. He says: "All protection to the church in its churches as well as church-yards is gone forever. This is, of course, the disestablishment, and with the Disestablished Church will go old England. The peerage and crown will go next; India and the colonies after that."

YOUNG FOLKS.

True Courage, Boys.

True courage, my boys, do you know what it means,
Know what makes the heroes in hundreds of scenes?
Its birth was in Heaven, its parent is love,
And 'twas sent to us here, a rare gift from above.

The soldier, while bullets around him are flying,
Will oft risk his life, on the field of the dying,
To shelter his comrade, the wounded to save:
Such deeds we count worthy, and class with the brave.

No day passes o'er us but comes to our ear
Some story of daring performed without fear;
Some sinking one snatched from a watery grave;
All honour to heroes, on land or on wave.

But the truest of courage, boys, often requires
More pluck than it takes to face battles or fires;
And real self-denial, over selfishness won,
Is a struggle that never while life lasts is done.

Who sticks to the right for the sake of the right,
Upholding it manfully, truth against might;
Who scorns to deceive, though a prize be the gain,
The stamp of true courage is on him set plain.

The man who meets insult, contumely, dispraise,
While fallen humanity helping to raise,
Who seeks no reward, and who works without noise,
I think you will grant he has true courage, boys!

No matter how humble we may each think ourself;
No matter though small be our share of earth's pelf;
Let us be but unselfish, whatever the test,
True honour is ours, boys; leave to Heaven the rest.

Unselfishness, boys, is the feature we scan,
Complete, in the life of the perfect God-Man;
And where was true courage like that which laid down
That beautiful Life, boys, to win us death's crown?

True courage, my lads, in unselfishness lies,
Its promptings through life do you never despise;
Strong effort you often will find you must make,
But make it, boys, make it, for true courage' sake!

How the Geese Saved the Baby.

(CONCLUDED.)

But the child had trotted by Robin Hood, down the long path, all the way to the river, and was so pleased at the feat that she laughed aloud. It was the first chance she had ever had to get alone to the river. Somebody had always been on hand to pull her away just in time to save her feet from touching the water. Now they touched it in comfort, and little cool ripples washed over the toes of her stockings—she had pulled her shoes off long ago in the house. She ran up and down the edge of the water a few times, and then began picking up sticks and stray leaves to throw into it. Higher and higher her spirits rose with the sport. If it had not been for Barbara's song, Robin would surely have heard Elsy shout. But Robin was lazy in his old age, and was actually snoring. Elsy spied a pretty goose-feather, and gave it a toss. The breeze carried it farther out on the water than the small maid intended. But she was fearless, and catching at some cat-tails growing on the bank, she waded in after her feather.

She stumbled over the uneven bottom, and the stones hurt her soft little feet. Down she went, head and all under water, just as the geese came, ready at last for their swim. When they saw Elsy splashing about, they thought she was trespassing. Or perhaps they understood perfectly well that the river, although safe for them, was a dangerous place for the innocent baby. Who knows? Certain it was that as Elsy went down under the water, the geese flapped their wings, and made a tremendous racket. They made such a noise as never had been heard in the place before. They wakened old Robin at last, and brought him quick as a flash to his post of duty. Oh, he could make noise enough then, to be sure! He could tear round the house like a hurricane, dash down the path and into the water, seize little Elsy's dress, and hold her head above the surface until her father came to the rescue, plunged into the river, and in another minute had borne his darling safely to land. Her bright eyes were closed, and her form lay quite senseless against her father's bosom, but she opened her eyes again before long.

John Evans and his good dame told their children and grandchildren hundreds of times how it was old Robin saved Elsy, when, as sure as anything, the whole credit was due to the geese.

The Revenges of Frenchwomen.

BALEFUL INFLUENCE OF THE PRIESTS ON THE FRENCH FAMILY.

"An English Flaneur" writes to the Pall Mall Gazette as follows: "The case of Mme. de Tilly and her diabolical revenge, detailed in the newspapers, will awaken some such questions as these in the people's minds: Why is it that, among a chivalrous, affectionate, and generous nation, such evidences are daily forthcoming of a low standard of domestic morality in the better ranks of society? Why is it that in one relation of life only our neighbors should be tried in the balance and found wanting? We know very well that the old orthodox notion concerning the frivolity of the French people (regarded as the offspring of Voltaire) is on the wane; yet thoughtful observers find themselves unable to account for any apparent contradiction. Let them, however, become acquainted intimately with French family life of the better classes and they will have no difficulty in accounting for Mme. de Tilly's wrongs or revenges. The fact is, a Frenchwoman is daily and hourly practising little revenges on her husband—and why? Because he does not adhere to the routine laid down by her confessor, and because, as she does adhere to it, she feels herself a superior being, bound to exercise, in so far as she can, an inquisitorial authority. She cannot prevent him from throwing aside superstitions, she cannot make him believe in 'Our Lady of Lourdes;' but she can use a little wholesome persecution. Being mistress of the house, she forbids meat on Fridays and saints' days. Sometimes three may happen in a week; and pleasant that for a hardworking business man—two eggs for one meal and a bit of fish by way of dinner—but, of course, for the sake of peace and quiet he usually submits. Then, again, if she cannot induce him to spend half his life inside a church, she can punish him by neglecting her household duties and perpetually being there herself. Reared in the convent under the influence of priests, when school is over and life begins, an ordinary Frenchwoman is in no sense of the word a companion to her husband if he is an educated man, the result being that he is driven elsewhere for sympathy, and also to shake off the shackles that fetter him at home. Why, there are family boards at which, if the head of the house so much as names the Republic, the mistress shrugs her shoulders with disgust and makes a remark calculated to inspire her children with the same feeling. There can be but one remedy for a house divided against itself, as so many of these French homes are, and that is, education for the women—education in the fullest sense of the word, so that the wife's sympathies and interests are those of her husband. When such a result has been obtained we shall, without doubt, hear less of Frenchwomen's wrongs and their revenges."

Copyright in the Bible.

(N. Y. Herald.)

The work of revising the Bible was begun ten years ago in England. The most learned biblical scholars in the world have taken part in it. The result of their labours is awaited with the keenest interest in all civilized countries. It is now announced that the revised New Testament has been printed and will soon be given to the public. The important and interesting question has been asked as to whether the work can be protected by copyright in the United States, or whether any publisher is free to reap a rich harvest by reprinting it without license. It appears that, while the revisers have worked without pay, all the expenses of the revision have been borne by Macmillan & Co., the authorized publishers, who have invested more than a hundred thousand dollars in the undertaking. They will have a monopoly of the publication in Great Britain, and of course are desirous of enjoying the privilege in this country, where the sales are likely to run into the millions of copies. It is said that the American Bible Society has agreed not to republish the revision without authority, and that the Baptist Society has warmly declared that it will not "pirate the Holy Scriptures." But there may be other American publishers with more zeal to spread the new gospel among the people and less scruple concerning the meum and tuum aspect of the matter. On one side it is argued that the Bible is common property, and that if it were otherwise the present revision would not be entitled to protection in this country because it is a foreign publication. It is maintained on the other hand that under certain circumstances literary property may exist in the Bible as well as in any other book, and that copyright in the new revision may be secured in the United States on the ground that a part of the work has been done by American scholars. What is the law?

Undoubtedly a revised New Testament or Bible may be a proper subject of copyright wherever it differs materially from the old text. Long ago the sovereign in England claimed the exclusive right of printing the English translation of the Bible, and lawyers defended this claim on principles of property—namely, that the translating had been done at the public expense. That the British copyright will vest in the present revision is clear. It is equally clear that American copyright could have been secured for it if the work had been done wholly by citizens of this country. It is not less true that no copyright will cover the revised edition in the United States. Since the formation of the Government, Congress has acted on the principle that foreign literature is not worthy of encouragement or protection. In the case of joint native and foreign authorship copyright may vest in the native part when this is material in amount, and can be separated as an integral part from the foreign. The revision of the Bible is the joint production of American and foreign scholars. But the work of the several revisers has been so interwoven that no distinct or separable part can be said to be the production of any one. Copyright in the revised Bible will be recognized in Canada, Australia, and other British possessions. It will be protected in the principal countries of Europe under existing international copyright treaties. In the United States alone of all countries the law will give it no protection. Here the work may be pirated at will. Unlicensed reprints, literal or garbled, may be issued without limit or legal restraint. The law allows this to be done simply because the work is the fruit of foreign instead of native scholarship and industry.

The Stars of Autumn.

The fall months bring with them a new set of constellations to take the place of the summer stars, and act as ushers to the greater glories of the winter heavens. Along in September, when the brilliant Vega is sinking in the west, Capella, the most beautiful, though not the greatest of the northern stars, is rising in the northeast. South of Capella, and rising a little later, are the storied Pleiades, or Seven Stars, which may claim precedence over all other stars for historic interest. These Virgins of the Spring, as they are sometimes called, because they rise with the sun in May, share with Orion and Arcturus the peculiar honour of having their name inscribed in the book of Job. It requires a very good eye to detect more than six stars in the Pleiades. The seventh is very dim, and the ancients accounted for the fact by saying that one of the sisters married a mortal and then hid her head for shame. The Pleiades now rises a little before ten o'clock in the evening.

Later in the fall the farmers' boys, who are by no means unmindful of the beauty of the autumn sky, when returning home at night from the husking bees, often point to a peculiar group of stars in the east, shaped exactly like the letter V. These are the Hyades, fabled to be the sisters of the Seven Stars. The brilliant red star in the upper left-hand corner of the letter is Aldebaran, or the Bull's Eye.

Still later, when Andromeda is shining overhead, and the huge outlines of the Whale, the largest of the constellations, cover the southern sky, the twins, Castor and Pollux, rise, and with them rises the giant Orion, with his lion's skin and club, chasing the bull. But Orion, of the "flaming wonders" of whose belt Edward Everett never wearied of talking, belongs rather to the winter evenings, when shining near the meridian with the Great Dog at his heels, he seems to reflect his glory over the whole heavens.

The evening sky will be made particularly attractive this fall by Jupiter and Saturn, which shine very close together, and attain their greatest brilliancy within a few weeks of one another. Jupiter is in perihelion near the end of September, and it will be twelve years before he is so bright again.

Lager for England.

If there was such an organization in England as a moderation society, they would rejoice at the prospective surrender of one of bitter beer's strongholds to Gambrinus, the god of lager, as a step in the right direction. It is understood that Younger, the celebrated Edinburgh ale brewer, is making extensive preparations for brewing lager. He does this in consequence of the largely increased demand for a lighter beer. In India and many other hot climates English ale is pronounced too strong and too much of a narcotic, and it is beginning to be said that its stupefying effects make it an undesirable day drink. They want a light dinner beer; one that can be used without dulling the intellect or producing lethargy.

After the Paris exhibition of 1878, an American firm of brewers who made a display there sent a part of their exhibit to London, from whence five barrels of bottled lager were sent to Bombay. An order for more was the immediate result. To this comparatively recent shipment can be traced the present export trade in lager beer which England is doing with her colonies. This week the London agent of a Boston soda water fountain manufacturer is shipping a costly and magnificent fountain to the Cape of Good Hope. I was disappointed, though not a little pleased, to find out by the recent discussions in Parliament upon Mr. Gladstone's new malt tax how "bittah beah" was really made. An Englishman seldom expresses a favourable opinion of American ale, and if you ask why our brew is not equal to the British, you receive the stereotyped reply: "you 'aven't the 'ops, me boy." Now, during the discussion aforesaid it was stated upon the best authority that one of the most important constituents of English ale is a product of Yankee maize, grape sugar.

Advertising Pays.

It is sometimes questioned by merchants, says an exchange, whether advertising pays. The question will hardly bear discussion in the light of the following facts, rates for transient advertisements being figured. The Chicago Tribune, gets for a column, one year $26,000. The New York Herald receives for its lowest priced column, $39,723, and for its highest $148,000. The New York Tribune receives for its lowest $29,784, and for its highest, $85,648, and these papers are never at a loss for advertisements to fill their columns. Their patronage comes not from any desire to assist the respective papers; but from business men who find it profitable to advertise.

AN eleven-year-old lad by the name of Ledford found lately, in the gravel of Sequab Creek, Georgia, a large, transparent, pure blue sapphire, wedge-shaped, and nearly an inch square, and worth, by the usual calculation, something over fifty thousand dollars.

GENERAL.

HALF Scotland is owned by 70 persons.

AN anonymous donation of $50,000 has just been given to the Melbourne Cathedral.

No woman, however nervous, has a right to wake up her husband from a sound sleep to tell him, on inquiring what's the matter, "Nothing, only I wanted to know if you were awake."

Two Iowa boys were amusing themselves by throwing a heavy ramrod as high as they could. One of them met his death by the missile descending with the velocity of a bullet and penetrating his head.

KING ALFONSO spends hours and hours talking with his bride by telephone. A year from this date he will probably hire a lightning-rod man to run his end of the machine while he loafs at the clubs.

HE appeared to be almost gone. Rolling his eyes to the partner of his bosom, he gasped: "Bury me 'neath the weeping willow, and plant a single white rose above my head." "Oh, it's no use," she snapped out; "your nose would scorch the roots." He got well.

AT Madrid, a prisoner recently sentenced by court martial to be shot for participation in the attack on a train by brigands, before his execution made revelations inculpating several families of high position. He accused them of not only protecting brigandage, but of sharing in the proceeds.

THE Rev. Dr. Wenger, one of the oldest missionaries in Calcutta, who had given special attention to Biblical translation in the Sanscrit and Bengali languages, is dead. He was an accomplished Sanscrit scholar, and his version of the Bible is used by all denominations of Christians in Bengal.

BONN was drunk when he undertook a ascension on a tight rope, at Clyde, Ohio, to the tower of the Town Hall. The multitude shouted to him to go back, but he kept straight ahead, staggering at every step. At length he dropped his balance pole, and fell backward, but like a flash he wrapped his right leg around the rope, and held on. He said afterward that the loss of the pole sobered him instantly.

A BALLOON ascent was made at Cherbourg on the occasion of the fete given to the municipality to Grevy. The general direction of the wind being from the land to the sea, a Government steamer was sent out to secure the safety of the aeronauts. After having travelled for more than an hour in the direction of Portsmouth, the aeronauts opened the valves and returned safely to shore. More than 100,000 spectators witnessed the experiment.

NOT ACCIDENTAL.—When a man in a Vermont grocery store was sitting upon the edge of the counter, and his feet slipped and he raked the whole length of his back on the counter's edge and sat square down in a bushel basket of eggs, which stood right where he couldn't miss it, the grocer was horrified, and exclaimed: "Was it an accident?" and the victim replied, "By crimus, sir, if you insinuate that I skun my back, and got myself into this mess on purpose, I'll jam your head into the remains of those eggs!"

GEN. ROBERTS has officially telegraphed the English government from the neighbourhood of Candahar, that he has defeated and dispersed the Afghan force under Ayoob Khan. The attack on the prince's camp appears to have been in the nature of a surprise. Several guns were captured, and the two pieces taken from the horse artillery at the time of Gen. Burrow's defeat were recovered. Lieut. McLean, taken prisoner on the same occasion, is reported to have been murdered after the battle began. The British loss was comparatively slight. Roberts gives only the casualties among the European regiments. He is silent as to the Sepoy death loss. Ayoob is supposed to have retreated to Herat.

An Italian Beauty Burned to Death.

All Italy is mourning the tragic end of Signora Adelina Paolini, who was the belle of the Peninsula. Surpassingly beautiful, always attired with taste, constantly changing her toilet she attracted all eyes wherever she appeared. Villa Borghese, the Pincio and the Corso—the Canal street and shell-road of Rome—had no more faithful frequenter. The 17th of July she was sitting with her mother and a gentleman in her parlour, which was lighted by a petroleum oil lamp hanging from the ceiling. The gentleman rose. As he did so, his head knocked the lamp, which oscillated and fell, falling so unfortunately as to pour all its contents on Adelina's dress, and to set fire to the oil. Instantly one sheet of flame, panic-stricken, she ran into the drawing-room and threw herself on the floor. Her mother and the gentleman strove to put out the fire; they succeeded only in burning their hands and legs. The fire spread to the curtains, and from them to the furniture—the whole room was in flames. The gentleman went to the window and cried: "Fire!" "Help!" The front door was locked. A hatter's journeyman got an axe and battered down the door. Firemen came and found three wounded persons to be cared for. While some of the firemen battled with the flames the others tended the wounded. A cab was sent for to carry Adelina to San Giacomo Hospital. The hospital surgeon instantly saw that the unhappy lady was doomed. She was in a swoon. He administered soothing medicine, and presently she recovered consciousness and lingered in inexpressible anguish until 4.30 a.m., when death released her. She was put in her coffin the next day. The coffin was filled with carded cotton. Her tortured mouth, all awry after death, revealed her beautiful teeth; her whole body, save her legs, was a cinder; her right breast had completely disappeared, burnt to ashes; she looked like a negro packed in cotton. She was only three-and-twenty.

English Ideas of Tanner.

It is wonderful how the attention of Europe has been focussed upon Dr. Tanner; in counting house and club, chop house and street, every person one met seemed to have Tanner on the brain. The medical men have searched their records to find parallel cases. A rather interesting one is related—Sarah Jacobs, a Welsh girl, whose parents in 1867 alleged that she had taken no food for two years. For the purpose of setting the question at rest a committee was formed on the recommendation of medical men; this committee procured the services of four skilled nurses from Guy's hospital, who scrupulously watched her for eight days, at the end of which time she died. Her death was a triumph for science, which gave no consideration to the disturbing influence of such a watch upon a frail, hysterical girl, whom a puff of air or stern look threw into convulsions. Her father and mother were found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. As to the alleged previous fasting, the Judge told the jury that she must have been fed; that no one could live without food, and that when she was watched it was natural that she should die. The Queen's counsel declared that if 40,000 doctors affirmed the possibility of living long without food, his own common sense would disbelieve them.

Had Dr. Tanner's fast occurred before that trial, perhaps it would have influenced the jury and saved the parents from a long penal servitude. The case is related of a fat pig which was buried in its sty for 160 days, beneath a chalk slide of Dover Cliff, and was dug out at the end alive, although much reduced in weight.

The Habit of Self-Control.

If there is one habit which, above all others, is deserving of cultivation, it is that of self-control. In fact it includes so much that is of value and importance in life, that it may almost be said that, in proportion to its power, does the man obtain his manhood and the woman her womanhood. The ability to identify itself with the higher parts of our nature, and to bring all the lowest parts into subjection, or rather to draw them all upwards into harmony with the best that we know, is the one central power which supplies vitality to all the rest. How to develop this in the child may well absorb the energy of every parent; how to cultivate it in himself may well employ the wisdom and enthusiasm of every youth. Yet it is no mysterious or complicated path that leads to this goal. The habit of self-control is but the accumulation of continued acts of self-denial for a worthy object; it is but the repeated authority of the reason over the impulses, of the judgment over the inclination, of the sense of duty over the desires. He who has acquired this habit, who can govern himself intelligently, without painful effort, and without any fear of revolt from his appetites and passions, has within him the source of all real power and of all true happiness. The force and energy which he has put forth day by day, and hour by hour, is not exhausted, or even diminished; on the contrary it has increased by use, and has become stronger and keener by exercise; and, although it has already completed its work in the past, it is still his well-tried, true, and powerful weapon for future conflicts in higher regions.

Objections to Republicanism.

It is somewhat difficult to understand why it should be the fact that there are [illegible] monarchies than republics in the [illegible]

[illegible] painted a [illegible] public,—and every one straightway fell in love with it. But they soon found they were admiring merely an idea, a [illegible] that would never in this world, short of the millennium, be found embodied in practical shape. Indeed this is the great and [illegible] objection to republics as against constitutional monarchies—they have [illegible]. They promise much and perform [illegible]. There is a grand display of [illegible], firing of cannon, rejoicing of mobs, [illegible] of speeches, and celebrating of Fourth of July, but little fruit, little political [illegible] of the kind that was anticipated. Yet, [illegible] candid, the defect is not in the principle of republicanism but in the men who carry it out. If we had perfect men to administer it and to be ruled by it—especially the former—it would altogether be a most satisfactory method of government, but in regard to that condition is fulfilled the vox populi will be as often the vox diaboli as the [illegible]. Witness the terrible effects of republicanism let loose in the times of the French Revolution and the later French commune, and [illegible] glaring corruption and mal-administration that are only too evident in the [illegible] administration of our neighbours in the United States. Wherefore we say [illegible] mankind is not yet, nor, we fear, likely to be for many centuries to come, [illegible] for a republican form of government, [illegible] there is no certainty, nor any security, [illegible] the best representative men shall be [illegible] or even that the majority of the electors [illegible] be the men best qualified to exercise the right of choice. This is why republics, [illegible] less indeed we except those which, [illegible] Switzerland, live a semi-comatose [illegible] existence, always tend to ultimately [illegible] monarchies, and, though it may [illegible] daring prophecy, yet we are not [illegible] warranted by historical precedent in [illegible] that our two greatest republics will, by and by, follow the example of their predecessors and choose for themselves a king. [illegible] will be the first from the nature of its [illegible] and the influence of the example of its former history, and the United States [illegible] follow so soon as a man arises who, [illegible] Washington, can secure to himself [illegible] miration and love of his countrymen, [illegible] who, unlike him, will not scruple to [illegible] the supreme power thus placed in his [illegible]

ALL SORTS.

TIMES have greatly changed. In [illegible] days it was the Christians who bore the stripes, but now it is the penitentiary [illegible]

"WHERE will you put me when I [illegible] to see you at your castle in the air?" [illegible] a gentleman of a witty girl. "In a [illegible] study," she replied.

"HE seems to have been shot in the [illegible] phragm," said the doctor. "Oh, no!" [illegible] claimed his weeping listener, "he was [illegible] in the lower end of the saloon."

THE Bridgtown (Me.) News calmly [illegible] "The types last week made us say that showers were not sufficient to meet [illegible] wants of milkmen,' &c., instead of [illegible] men.'"

DURING the first six months of the [illegible] sent year 390 ships were registered in [illegible] land as unseaworthy, and were in consequence detained from proceeding to [illegible] while 125 others were prevented from sailing because overladen.

A RELIGIOUS tract called "Put Not Your Trust in Princes" was thrown into the [illegible] of a simple old German. He read the [illegible] and soliloquized: "Vell, I don'd put [illegible] drust in princes. Dey must pay der [illegible] dis shop chust der same as a vite man."

AN old farmer's wife who had a [illegible] that was notorious for breaking dishes [illegible] one occasion fell asleep in church. In her slumbers her elbow unluckily over[turn]ed a bible, when, to the amusement of fellow-worshippers, she was heard to [illegible] in a very audible voice, "anither bowl, hissie."

NOT long ago a new railway was opened in the Highlands. A Highlander named Donald heard of it, and bought a ticket for the first excursion. The train was [illegible] half the distance to the next station when a collision took place, and poor Donald was thrown unceremoniously into a park. [On] recovering his sense he made the best [of his] way home, when the neighbours asked [him] how he liked his drive. "Oh," [said] Donald, "she liked it fine, but they ha[e] awfu' quick way in puttin me oot."

A POPULAR Macon minister recently [spent] the night thirty miles below Americus [with] a backwoodsman, whose house cons[isted of] only two rooms. In the morning [a] member of the family, in response [to an] application for a wash bowl, brought [an] old tin pan, and after the face toilet [was] completed, hunted up about seven [inches of] an old tucking comb for him to arrange his hair with. During the progress of the [im]portant ceremony, the following colloquy [took place] between the two took place: "[illegible] you wash every mornin'?" "I do." "[And] comb your hair, too?" "Yes." "[Well,] don't it look to you sometimes like [a] heap of trouble to yourself?"

ORDER.—There is scarcely any such [thing] as beauty without order; or, if there be, [it is] always sadly impaired by disorder. And [as] we know, is the very parent of use. [An] orderly person can do more work in less [time] and do it better, and with less fatigue, [than] one who is disorderly. He does not [need to] spend any time in looking for tools or mat[erials,] for he knows just where to find them; [nor] does he suffer the annoyance of having [to do] without things that are lost or broken, [for he] rarely loses or breaks; and the orderly [wo]man can find her things at the first [reach,] even with her eyes shut. Good order is [in it]self one kind of beauty; and it is as [useful as] it is beautiful. And all the other kin[ds of] beauty are in themselves orderly, and pr[omote] order.

A HUNGARIAN peasant named Janose [was] convicted of stealing, was sentenced [to] receive fifty blows. The Judge carefully explained to Janose that he might appeal [to] the Ober Tribunal, should the sentence [seem to] him as too severe. Janose took advantage of this right. Meanwhile, however, [his] Honour caused the prisoner to be strapped down to a bench in the court, and personally supervised the full execution of the sentence. A few weeks later the Ober-Tribunal [re]ceived the punishment from fifty to [illegible] twenty blows. Forthwith the Judge [sum]moned Janose to court, and ordered [him to] lie down again on the bench and [illegible] his mitigated punishment. In vain the wretched appellant protested; "[illegible]" served his Honour, "the decrees of [illegible] superiors must be fulfilled."

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails

Contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, $2 if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying up will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

[Let]ters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year		$50 00
Half do	do	30 00
Quarter do	do	18 00
Eight do	do	10 00
Cards	do	4 60
Six lines and under, first insertion		50
Each subsequent insertion		15
From six to ten lines, first insertion		75
Each subsequent insertion		25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line		8
Each subsequent insertion		2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Editors.

EXTRACTS FROM A SPEECH DELIVERED BY CHARLES S. FREEMAN TO THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW YORK PRESS ASSOCIATION AT TROY.

Editors are born, not made. You cannot grind them up in heaps as you can do doctors, or lawyers, or clergymen. There is no college where they are taught. There is no curriculum for them to study. There are no professors of newspapers. There are no diplomas and there are no degrees for an editor. Perhaps I should say that none of the ordinary schools in which other professions are taught, answer for the newspaper. The best school is the printing office. The best teacher is the click of the type, and the atmosphere of the composing-room. The tact of an editor cannot be taught in an academy. There are no books or masters to follow. Like the artist the editor must have genius, and genius is not borrowed or taught. But though you cannot teach editors in schools or academies, you can teach boys. And after you have taught the boy at school, you can teach the editor in a printing-office. But be careful not to insert him at the wrong end of the shop. Start him down among the rollers and the lye brushes and he will work his way to the sanctum. When he gets there he will know how to stay there. But if you start him at the sanctum, the probabilities are that he will soon find himself in the cellar. It is one of the evils of our times that, not only in regard to this, but equally with regard to all trades and professions, the young men are unwilling to begin at the bottom. The grades of a printing-office should be as inexorable as the grades of an army. There should be no removal except for cause, and no promotion except for merit. The history of the newspaper press proves the position I have taken. The best, the ablest, the most successful editors this land has produced came up from the rule and composing stick. I have known scores of tramping journeymen printers who had every qualification for brilliant success in journalism except the one of steady habits; men of wide learning, sparkling genius, and commanding intellect. And I never yet saw a strictly educated man who was fit for an editor. They are two starchy and stiff. They are too nice and precise. They are too learned and profound. A profound newspaper would die in a week. Two things are certainly and equally fatal to a newspaper, ignorance and profundity. But I think of the two it can stand ignorance the better, for there are a great many people who are ignorant, and very few who are profound. Daniel Webster undertook to write an editorial for a newspaper. It was seven columns long and solid with statesmanship and wisdom. But the editor advised him to deliver it in Congress and let the newspaper [illegible]. It sometimes happens that a school [mas]ter out of a job, or ambitious of fame, [see]ks laurels and cash in the editorial sanctum. These are the worst failures in the whole lot. They invariably run on their tongues when they write, use ruled paper, dot all their i's, cross all their t's, and [revi]se every sentence before it goes to press. [Th]ey are designed to succeed better on monthly or quarterly publications, or those which come out once a year, than on the daily press. If anything is calculated to [wo]rry the patience of an editor, it is to see a schoolma'm or laboring over a paragraph. The erasures and interlineations, the stopping and staring, the tearings up and beginnings again, the consultations of the dictionary, the wise look at the wall, the doubt about grammar, and the great doubt about ideas, are frightful to behold. I state the exact truth when I say that I have seen one of these gentlemen spend two precious hours in trying to put a simple statement in a paragraph of ten lines, and fail. A surplus of grammar kills them. And yet the editor must not fail in grammar. His sentences must be clear cut, precise, and perfect. But he must do it without exertion, and with the same ease and freedom that he would engage in conversation. This faculty he gets when he goes through the grades. He cannot bring it with him from any other profession. There are possible exceptions, but they are rare, exceedingly rare, and only prove the rule. The shoemaker had better stick to his last, the schoolmaster to his school, and the editor to his sanctum. No man can be an editor who does not understand all the details of his business. He must be competent to fill any gap, in any place, at any moment. He must know how to do all that is needed to be done on a newspaper. He must be able to write a leader or a paragraph at a moment's notice, or without any notice at all. He must be a man of quick perceptions, of prompt decision and force of character. He must be a leader. He must command the ship.

BISHOP RILEY, of the Valley of Mexico, [has] been making a somewhat protracted [stay] in Ireland, with the object of organizing systematic and permanent aid for the Mexican Episcopal Church. The Bishops of Meath, Down, Cork, and Cashel have warmly encouraged his efforts, and successful meetings have been held in behalf of his mission.

[Mr. D]ENNYS, District Superintendent of Police in the Damoh District in the central provinces of India, recently captured a cobra and held it in his right hand while he pointed out to some friends the poison fangs. By a sudden effort the reptile darted its head forward just far enough to reach the point of the index finger of Dennys' left hand. Despite every effort to save his life, he died in three hours.

[AN AMERIC]AN Episcopal church recently built at [Tac]oma, the western terminus of the North Pacific Railroad, is said to have the oldest tower on this continent. The building is of rude logs, and was put up in less than three weeks. The tower is an immense fir tree, which was seventy feet high, but which has been cut off forty feet above the ground, and surmounted with a bell and cross. The rings of the tree show that it is at least 275 years old. The church looks out on Puget Sound. In the rear Mount Baker rises to a height of 11,000 feet. A little rectory has been built close by the church.

[T]HE Bishop of Manchester, in a recent [occas]ion, referred to the act of the patron of St. Peter's, Bournemouth, in appointing, contrary to the wishes of the whole parish, a Churchman to the living. He spoke plainly of Ritualistic belongings. "It is," he said, "a question of the administration of the Holy Communion with lighted candles, mixing water with the wine, and singing of the 'Agnus Dei' in connection with the Communion office. All those things were perfectly harmless in themselves, but they had been declared to be illegal in the Church of England; that was to say, the Church had not ordered them, and no minister had a right to order them in the exercise of his own free mind. To set a congregation and agitate the Church from one end of it to the other about matters of that kind seemed to him to be an incredible folly, in face of those great evils with which they had to deal. Was he better in soul for it? He might regard it as a matter of taste; but who would say that his soul was one bit lifted up to God because a pair of lighted wax candles were on the holy table during the administration of the Sacrament?"

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 3. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1880. WHOLE NO. 3

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

Contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

All letters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year	$50 00
Half do do	30 00
Quarter do do	18 00
Eighth do do	10 00
Cards do	4 60
Six lines and under, first insertion	50
Each subsequent insertion	15
From six to ten lines, first insertion	75
Each subsequent insertion	25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion	2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Editors.

EXTRACTS FROM A SPEECH DELIVERED BY CHARLES S. FREEMAN TO THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW YORK PRESS ASSOCIATION AT TROY.

Editors are born, not made. You cannot grind them up in heaps as you can do doctors, or lawyers, or clergymen. There is no college where they are taught. There is no curriculum for them to study. There are no professors of newspapers. There are no diplomas and there are no degrees for an editor. Perhaps I should say that none of the ordinary schools in which other professions are taught, answer for the newspaper. The best school is the printing office. The best teacher is the click of the type, and the atmosphere of the composing-room. The tact of an editor cannot be taught in an academy. There are no books or masters to follow. Like the artist the editor must have genius, and genius is not borrowed or taught. But though you cannot teach editors in schools or academies, you can teach the boy in school, you can teach the editor in a printing-office. But be careful not to insert him at the wrong end of the shop. Start him down among the rollers and the lye-brushes and he will work his way to the sanctum. When he gets there he will know how to stay there. But if you start him at the sanctum, the probabilities are that he will soon find himself in the cellar. It is one of the evils of our times that, not only in regard to this, but equally with regard to trades and professions, the young men are unwilling to begin at the bottom. The grades of a printing-office should be as inexorable as the grades of an army. There should be no removal except for cause, and no promotion except for merit. The history of the newspaper press proves the position I take. The best, the ablest, the most successful editors this land has produced came up from the rule and composing stick. I have known scores of tramping journeymen printers who had every qualification for brilliant success in journalism except the one of steady habits; men of wide learning, sparkling genius, and commanding intellect. And I never yet saw a strictly educated man who was fit for an editor. They are two starchy and stiff. They are too nice and precise. They are too learned and too profound. A profound newspaper would die in a week. Two things are certainly and equally fatal to a newspaper, ignorance and profundity. But I think of the two it can stand ignorance the better, for there are a great many people who are ignorant, and very few who are profound. Daniel Webster undertook to write an editorial for a newspaper. It was seven columns long and solid with statesmanship and wisdom. But the editor advised him to deliver it in Congress and let the newspaper alone. It sometimes happens that a schoolmaster out of a job, or ambitious of fame, seeks laurels and cash in the editorial sanctum. These are the worst failures in the whole lot. They invariably run on their noses when they write, use ruled paper, dot all their i's, cross all their t's, and read every sentence before it goes to press. They are designed to succeed better on monthly or quarterly publications, or those which come out once a year, than on the daily press. If anything is calculated to try the patience of an editor, it is to see a schoolma'am laboring over a paragraph. The erasures and interlineations, the stoppings and starting, the tearings up and beginnings again, the consultations of the dictionary, the wise look at the wall, the doubt about grammar, and the great doubt about ideas, are frightful to behold. I state the exact truth when I say that I have seen one of these gentlemen spend two precious hours in trying to put a simple statement in a paragraph of ten lines, and fail. A surplus of grammar kills them. And yet the editor must not fail in grammar. His sentences must be clear cut, precise, and perfect. But he must do it without exertion, with the same ease and freedom that he would engage in conversation. This facility he gets when he goes through the shop. He cannot bring it with him from any other profession. There are possible exceptions, but they are rare, exceedingly rare, and only prove the rule. The shoemaker had better stick to his last, the schoolmaster to his school, and the editor to his sanctum. No man can be an editor who does not understand all the details of his business. He must be competent to fill any gap, in any place, at any moment. He must know how to do all that is needed to be done on a newspaper. He must be able to write a leader or a paragraph at a moment's notice, or without any notice at all. He must be a man of quick perception, of prompt decision and force of character. He must be a leader. He must command the ship.

BISHOP RILEY, of the Valley of Mexico, has been making a somewhat protracted stay in Ireland, with the object of organizing systematic and permanent aid for the Mexican Episcopal Church. The Bishops of Meath, Down, Cork, and Cashel have warmly encouraged his efforts, and successful meetings have been held in behalf of his mission.

MR. DENNYS, District Superintendent of Police in the Damoh District in the central Provinces of India, recently captured a cobra and held it in his right hand while he held out to some friends the poison fangs. By a sudden effort the reptile darted its head forward just far enough to strike the point of the index finger of Dennys' left hand. Despite every effort to save his life, he died in three hours.

AN Episcopal church recently built at Tacoma, the western terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, is said to have the oldest tower on this continent. The building is made of logs, and was put up in less than six weeks. The tower is an immense fir tree which was seventy feet high, but which has been cut off forty feet above the ground, and surmounted with a bell and cross. The rings of the tree snow that it is at least 275 years old. The church looks out on Puget Sound. In the rear Mount Baker rises to the height of 11,000 feet. A little rectory has been built close by the church.

THE Bishop of Manchester, in a recent charge, referred to the act of the patron of St. Peter's, Bournemouth, in appointing, contrary to the wishes of the whole parish, a High Churchman to the living. He spoke very plainly of Ritualistic belongings. "It is," he said, "a question of the administration of the Holy Communion with lighted candles, mixing water with the wine, and the singing of the 'Agnus Dei' in connection with the Communion office. All those things were perfectly harmless in themselves, but they had been declared to be illegal in the Church of England; that was to say, the Church had not ordered them, and no minister had a right to order them in the exercise of his own free mind. To disturb a congregation and agitate the Church from one end of it to the other about matters of that kind seemed to him to be an incomprehensible folly, in face of those great questions with which they had to deal. Was a man better in soul for it? He might like it as a matter of taste; but who would say that his soul was one bit lifted nearer to God because a pair of lighted wax candles were on the holy table during the administration of the Sacrament?"

Mrs. Fitzpatrick's Diamond Ring.

Twelve months ago last November, I ran down into Warwickshire to spend a few days with my cousin Horace Mason. It was an odd time of year to choose for a country visit; but as a matter of fact I did not choose it—it was chosen for me. Until that year, I had always managed to get away for an eagerly snatched and greedily enjoyed holiday in August, and had generally been lucky enough to secure some good grouse-shooting or pleasant yachting. But all at once the Fates turned perverse, and that particular August had brought with it a throng of professional engagements which could neither be dismissed nor delayed. Of course they were welcome in a way; for I was near the bottom of the ladder, and was glad of any chance that would enable me to mount one or two rungs higher; but I certainly thought that the fickle goddess Fortune, having apparently forgotten me so long, might have postponed her visit for another month without any marked impropriety. The worst of it was that when September came I was as busy as ever, and when October found me still in the whirl of that Maelstrom of work.

Not until the morning of the first day of November did I waken with the blessed consciousness that the load was gone from my shoulders, and that I was once again comparatively free. I lay awake in bed, feeling serenely happy, wondering whether I ought to celebrate my emancipation by having my breakfast brought up to me, and vaguely speculating as to how and where I should give myself the holiday I had so fairly earned. I decided against the sybaritic breakfast in bed; rang my bell, and informed my landlady that I should be down-stairs in twenty minutes; and on entering my snug little sitting-room, found on the table a solitary letter. I digested the kidney and it together, and they were both eminently satisfactory. The former was perfect—Mrs. Higgins had been a cook—and the latter was equally to my taste. It was from Horace Mason, who said he was completely bored—Horace is always complaining of being bored, though no one enjoys life more than he—and that he would be eternally grateful to me if I would sacrifice myself by coming to share his bedroom for two or three weeks. This was the very thing. Winthorpe, though only a bachelor establishment, was a most delightful house to stay at; and as it was surrounded by other houses almost equally delightful, the inhabitants of which understood well the great art of enjoying themselves, I need hardly say that I accepted the invitation by return of post.

Three days later, shortly after six in the afternoon, I was met at the door of Winthorpe by Horace himself, who, as usual, assured me, in tones which seemed symptomatic of perfect health and spirits, that he was more bored than ever, and that he would never, never forget the good turn I had done him by coming so soon. Of course, as Pinafore was then in the ascendant, I was bound to raise my eyebrows and inquire: "What, never?" and he, to show that his boredom was tempered by news of the great world, was ready with the orthodox reply: "Well—hardly ever." These highly intellectual greetings being exchanged, I was escorted up to my room, and then down to the drawing-room, where I found Mrs. Patton, Horace's lady house-keeper—his duenna, as he was wont to call her,—and Mr. Fitzpatrick, the rector of the parish. Mrs. Patton, I knew well. She was a most amusing compound of dignity and jollity, and we were the best friends in the world, though she always declared that I did nothing but make fun of her. Mr. Fitzpatrick I had never seen before; for, during my previous visits, he had always happened to be from home. He was a tall, portly, elderly gentleman, with a rather florid complexion, and a magnificent head of perfectly white hair, the effect of which was increased by a pair of bushy and perfectly black eyebrows. He greeted me very cordially; and as soon as we were seated at the dinner-table, I discovered that his forte was conversation and his foible monologue. I have heard some good steady talkers in my time; but I am prepared to back Mr. Fitzpatrick against any of them. Reminiscence succeeded reminiscence, and anecdote jostled anecdote; and though he was undoubtedly very amusing, I began to think that if one lived in his parish, one might possibly have for him some of the feeling that Sinbad the Sailor had for the Old Man of the Sea. I have forgotten most of his stories; but one of them had a certain ghastliness, which impressed me a good deal at the time, and makes me think it worth telling again.

I had noticed, during dinner, that, as is the habit of some widowers, he wore a wedding-ring, which had presumably been his wife's; and over this another ring, of the kind usually worn by ladies, in which were set three very handsome brilliants. After dinner, when Mrs. Patton had retired, the conversation somehow or other took a turn in the direction of precious stones, and Horace, who at last managed to get in a word or two, said something about the difficulty of distinguishing, in the absence of tests, a true stone from a really well executed imitation, and took from his waistcoat pocket a manufactured diamond which I certainly should have pronounced genuine. For purposes of comparison, Mr. Fitzpatrick slipped from his finger the ring of which I have just spoken; and after it had been examined and replaced, he said: "There is a curious story connected with that ring, Mr. Mason. I daresay you have heard it?"

"I've heard something about it," said Horace; "but I don't know all the particulars; and I don't think my cousin has heard anything of it."

"Well, then," said Mr. Fitzpatrick, "I may as well tell it to you, if you care to hear it. The story begins and ends a long time ago. It is forty years this very month since I became engaged to be married. I was then a curate, and had not much money to spare; but I had just received a legacy of rather less than a hundred pounds; and in a fit of extravagance, hardly excusable even in a lover of five-and-twenty, I spent the whole of it and a few pounds more in purchasing a ring for my future wife. We expected the engagement to be a long one; but the rector of this parish died suddenly, and my great-uncle, in whose gift the living was, presented it to me. The rector's death took place in February. I read myself in on Easter Sunday; and on the first of June we were married. I suppose that every newly married husband and wife think themselves the happiest people in the world; but I honestly believe that we really were so. We had not only each other, but we had everything else that we could possibly desire—a larger income than we needed, work that was thoroughly congenial to both of us, a few real friends, any number of pleasant acquaintances, and an utter freedom from all anxiety.

"This unalloyed happiness lasted for six months, when my wife's health failed in a mysterious manner. She began to be subject to strange fits of languor, physical depression, and drowsiness, which gradually became longer and more frequent. I had advice at once; but the doctors seemed completely at sea. The organs, they said, were perfectly sound; and though the action of the heart was not quite so strong as it ought to be, there was absolutely nothing to account for the symptoms. At all events, they could only recommend tonics, gentle open-air exercise, and an occasional stimulant. In spite of them all, however, my wife grew worse and worse. At last she took to her bed; and she had not been in bed a week, when one evening I left her, apparently much the same as usual, and went into my study to spend a couple of hours over my next Sunday morning's sermon. I had been down-stairs only about three-quarters of an hour, when my wife's sister, who had been sitting with her during my absence, burst into the room and threw herself upon me, exclaiming; "O James! she's dead! Our darling Kate's dead!"

"You can imagine the shock she gave me; but it never occurred to me to imagine that what she said was really true. I thought nothing but that the strain of anxiety had been too much for the poor girl, and that she had temporarily lost her reason. I did my best to calm her; and soon succeeded, for she began to talk so lucidly, that I was compelled not only to listen but to heed. She said that she and one of the servants had been watching bymy wife, who was apparently sleeping peacefully, when they had both been startled by a peculiar change in her countenance. They listened for the sound of her breathing; but heard nothing. They had then held a hand mirror to her mouth; but it remained unclouded. They had felt for the pulsation of her heart; but it had ceased to beat, and her body was deathly cold. The servant had gone to tell one of the men to saddle a horse and ride hard for the nearest doctor; while she had come to me to tell the terrible news, and bid me be calm. Calm was out of the question. I tore myself away and rushed up-stairs. They were idiots—they were demented; but still there was a haunting fear which I must dispel for myself. And yet I was so sure that my wife could not be dead, that I summoned sufficient presence of mind to open the door gently and walk softly to the bed. I leaned over it, and said, not loudly, but distinctly: "Kate, darling, are you asleep?"

"But before I had spoken the last word, I was convinced. I had seen death often, and was sure that I knew it too well not to recognize it at a glance. I now shrieked instead of whispering; but there was no answer, and I flung myself full length upon the bed in voiceless agony. I must have become almost or entirely unconscious; for I never knew of the doctor's presence in the room until I felt his hand upon my arm. He said: "My dear Mr. Fitzpatrick, you must try and bear it like a man and a Christian; for your wife is dead: she has been dead more than an hour."

"How I felt, I cannot tell you. I was prostrate with grief; and prostrate I remained for three days. The necessary preparations for the funeral were made by my wife's brother, and I really was unaware of what had been done. On the evening of the third day I heard stealthy footsteps ascending the stairs, and I felt rather than knew that they were the footsteps of the men who had come to close up the coffin. I heard the door open; then for a few minutes there was silence: and then I heard other and lighter footsteps descending, followed by a tap at the study door. I said: "Come in;" and when the door opened, I saw that it was an old nurse of my wife's, who had come to see her living, and had found her dead. "If you please, sir," she said, giving my wife the old familiar name, "they cannot get the rings off Miss Kate's finger; and they want to know what they must do."

"I had been apathetic; but in a moment I was enraged, and I shouted: "Leave them on!" in sones which made the poor woman beat a terrified retreat. I was completely unnerved by what seemed an outrage upon the remains that were so dear and so sacred to me; but I could not move to make a more effectual protest, and I soon sank into the lethargy from which I had been aroused. The night passed, as the preceding nights had passed, sleeplessly and wearily. I rose at dawn, and sat in the study until noon, when they came to tell me that the time for the funeral had come, and that I must follow my wife to her last home.

"You won't know the rectory well, Mr. Browne," said Mr. Fitzpatrick, addressing himself directly to me; "but you must have passed it. The front-door, as you will remember, opens to the turnpike road; but there is also another door with two glass panels which opens directly into the churchyard. My wife was in the habit of using this door very frequently; for there ran from it a path which crossed the churchyard and ended at a stile, which was just opposite the gates of the Grange, then rented by the Hardings, who were her oldest friends. When she had returned and found the door fastened, which sometimes happened, she had been used to let me know she was there by a peculiar tap, and I had always gone to let her in. It was out of this door—which somehow seemed to belong to her, and cut of which she had often tripped so gaily—that I followed her corpse; and as it was closed gently behind me, I think I fully realized for the first time what a changed thing my life must henceforth be. The service was gone through; I heard the clods fall upon the coffin; and I returned to the house that was now so awfully solitary. The vicar of the next parish, who had performed the last sad offices for my wife, returned with me, and tried his best to bring me to myself; but I refused to be comforted. At last he left me; and I was glad to be alone, for in solitude I could feel that my wife was somewhere near me.

"They brought me food; but I could eat nothing. The hours passed slowly; but I took no note of them. I did not even know that it was dark until one of the maids came and asked if she should light the lamp. I let her do it; and then mechanically took a book down from the shelves and tried to read. It was only a mockery of reading; but it acted as a sort of narcotic; and I had dropped into a doze, when I was aroused by a knocking at my door, sharp and decisive, as if the person knocking were not asking but demanding entrance. Just as the knock came, the clock struck twelve, and I knew that I must have been sleeping for nearly three hours. I got up from my chair, opened the door, and inquired what was wanted of me. Standing in the lighted hall were the three indoor servants and the old nurse; and the faces of all were absolutely blanched with terror. One of the girls, in an agony of fright, caught hold of my sleeve and panted out: "O sir, do come!"

"I shook her off somewhat roughly and, addressing the nurse, said: "What's the meaning of this?"

"She was clearly as frightened as the others, but more self-possessed, and she replied: "If you please, sir, Jane and Mary say that their mistress is standing at the side-door, tapping on the glass; and that they will leave the house if you do not come and see."

"I called them fools, and bade them go to bed; but they crowded behind me as I hastily crossed the hall, and strode down the short corridor to the side door. I approached the door; and I must confess that my blood ran cold as I distinctly heard the well-known tap, and thought I saw something white behind the glass panels. I turned my eyes to the bolt, which I drew back, and flung the door wide open. If I were to live for a millennium, I could never forget the sight I saw then. There stood my wife, with bright open eyes, a flushed face, dishevelled hair, and her night-dress stained with large patches of blood!

"James," she said; "don't be frightened; it is I." She may have said more; but this was all I heard. They told me that I gasped, "Kate, my Kate!" and fell down senseless.

"When I recovered consciousness, I found myself in bed. My wife, dressed as she was used to be dressed, was sitting by my side; and I looked around and wondered whether I had been awakened from some horrible nightmare. At last the reality of the events of the past few days came back to me—my wife's illness, her death, her strange return from the world of spirits. When I summoned strength for the task, I asked what it all meant; and though she could tell but little, that little was enough to solve the mystery. She said she had felt as if she were being rather roughly awakened from sleep; and that when she became thoroughly aroused, she found she was sitting up in an open coffin at the bottom of a grave, with the blood running quickly from a deep cut in her ring-finger. The grave was shallow, and she had managed to climb out, when she discovered that she was not twenty yards from the door by which she was accustomed to enter the house. She made her way to it; and we knew the rest.

It had been a curious case of trance, catalepsy, or whatever name men of science may give to these inexplicable simulations of death in which all the functions seem to be arrested while the vital principle remains intact. She had been restored to conscious animation by the cut given to her finger by the ruffian whose cupidity had tempted him to a deed from which many a hardy scoundrel would have shrunk. The perpetrator was of course one of the undertaker's men, who had been struck by the glitter of the gems in the diamond ring; and who, to obtain it, did not hesitate to violate the sanctity of the grave, and even to mutilate a corpse."

"Good heavens!" I exclaimed, "what an overpowering story. Was the rascal ever caught?"

"No; he disappeared, and nothing was heard of him."

"And your wife? What effect had it on her?"

"Curiously enough, her general health became better from that dreadful day; but I think her nervous system must have received a permanent strain, for she entirely lost the physical courage which she had possessed in an extraordinary degree for a woman; and about two years afterwards she became subject to attacks of asthma, which is, I believe, a complaint that often has its origin in some nervous shock. She lived, however, to be over fifty, and was bright and cheerful to the last, though she had been a confirmed invalid for five years before her death."

Mr. Fitzpatrick ceased speaking for a while; and we were allowed to interject a few sentences of comment upon the remarkable story we had heard; but silence with him was never much more than a flash, and in ten minutes he was in the middle of another narration. We did not separate until after midnight; and I saw him again several times during my stay at Winthorpe, which was more than usually pleasant. He had certainly an inexhaustible fund of stories; but I did not hear one that was, in the current literary slang of the day, so thoroughly "sensational" as the story of Mrs. Fitzpatrick's Diamond Ring.

[The foregoing narrative, which is founded on an actual occurrence, is another illustration of the danger of interring a human being apparently dead, but in whom life may nevertheless still linger. To be buried alive is a contingency the very thought of which fills the mind with horror; and yet it is notorious that instances have occurred, and may yet occur, through neglect on the part of those in charge to use even the most ordinary precautions.

The subject is of such importance, that though it has been dealt with in these pages on previous occasions, we gladly take this opportunity of again offering to our readers a few of the signs which usually distinguish actual from supposed death:—

The arrest of the pulse and the stoppage of breathing. No movement of the chest—no moist breath to dim a looking-glass placed before the mouth. These stoppages of pulse and breath may however, under certain conditions be reduced to so low an ebb, that it is by no means easy to decide whether or not they are completely annihilated. Cases too, have been known in which the patient had the power of voluntarily suspending these functions for a considerable time. The loss of irritability in the muscles (a fact which may be readily ascertained by a galvanic current) is a sign of still greater importance than even the apparent stoppage of the heart or of the breath.

The contractile power of the skin is also lost after death. When a cut is made through the skin of a dead body, the edges of the wound close, while a similar cut made during life presents an open or gaping appearance.

An important change termed the rigor mortis takes place after death, at varying periods. The pliability of the body ceases, and a general stiffness ensues. This change may appear within half-an-hour, or it may be delayed for twenty or thirty hours, according to the nature of the disease. It must however, be borne in mind that rigor mortis is not a continuous condition; it lasts for twenty-four to thirty-six hours, and then passes away. Commencing in the head, it proceeds gradually downwards, the lower extremities being the last to stiffen; and disappears in the same order.

One of the most important of the various changes that indicate death is the altered colour of the surface of the body. Livid spots of various sizes occur, from local congestions during life; but the appearance of a green tint on the skin of the abdomen, accompanied by a separation of the cuticle or skin, is a certain sign that life is extinct. To these symptoms may be added the half-closed eyelids and dilated pupils; and the half-closed fingers, with the thumb turned in. It is important to note that the slightest motion of the heart may be detected by the stethoscope even though breathing and the pulse have ceased. If the heart, therefore, be silent to this delicate instrument, the vital spark has fled.—ED.]

The House of Lords.

During the session of the Imperial Parliament that has just closed a question arose that is likely to cause a good deal of trouble before it is finally settled. It has come to be openly doubted whether the House of Peers has any raison d'etre, and whether the government of the country could not be quite as well, if not better, conducted without the intervention of the Lords spiritual and temporal in the work of legislation. The question is somewhat the same as that which has been for some time discussed in Canada with reference to the Senate, and has therefore a good deal of interest for us, the principles involved in the discussion applying equally to both institutions. "What" it is asked "is the use of the upper House? Is not the House of Commons capable of making the laws for the country? Nay, as a matter of fact, is it not the Lower House that originates, shapes and finally decides on the enactments of every law? Why then should there be the empty formality of carrying a bill to the Upper House at all? Should it not rather receive the assent of the sovereign at once and become the law of the land?"

It cannot be denied that there is a great deal of force in these questions and there is little doubt but that the asking of such queries is the beginning of the end for the Peers. This is an age above all utilitarian, and nothing superfluous can long continue to exist in the machinery of an enlightened country. Even what is, in itself, ornamental is scarcely tolerated for the sake of the element of usefulness that is included, while the absolutely useless is not permitted to survive the discovery of its uselessness. The House of Lords, therefore, like the Chinaman in California, must go. This is the fiat of the Radical party, a party that is daily gathering strength in England and is destined to rule the country in a very short time. The old Whigs are falling into the sere and yellow leaf, and young England of the middle and lower classes, at least, is essentially free thinking and radical to the core. This party, headed in the present parliament by Bright, Chamberlain, and Dilke, have resolved on the extinction of the Upper House on the broad ground of its being neither useful nor ornamental. Doubtless the recent absurd behaviour of the Peers on the Disturbance Bill has precipitated this action on the part of the Radicals, but it has for a long time been apparent that the country was becoming impatient over the crotchets of "a lot of old women," as a prominent politician irreverently called the medley of Bishops and Barons that occupy the benches of the House of Lords. Whatever good purpose the Upper House has served in the past, in the way of serving as a check on the action of the Commons, it can no longer serve. Its assent to a bill is a mere formality, and its attempt to burke a measure little more than a farce. The Commons carry the purse and hold in their hands the real leverage of rule. Hence the Peers can do little more than signify assent, or smother their dissent, while the Commons run the country. At no distant date, we believe, the volume of the history of the Peers as a legislative body will be closed finally and for ever.

M. BENAZET, whose revenues came from the gamblers at Baden, left some six million pounds to his widow. She was forty years old, and presently became insane. Being treated successfully by a young physician named Thuilie, she settled eight thousand pounds a year on him, married him, and made him so comfortable that he was able to enter the political field with success.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Cowes, where the English always have a gay yachting season after the London season is over, says that when the crowd is thickest and the club garden fullest a little clatter is heard, an outrider on a white horse comes up the hill, a wagonette with four ladies, and a gentleman riding beside it, passes; all who recognise the simple cortege rise, the ladies bow, and all the men lift their hats, and the Queen pursues her way.

A SOCIETY belle was sitting with a party of friends on the balcony of a watering-place hotel a few days ago. The conversa-

A Rover's Romance.

A few months ago, says a Reading, Pa., correspondent of The Philadelphia Times, William Grossman was a tramp in eastern Pennsylvania; now he is liberally spending $45,000, that sum being the first instalment of his inheritance from his father's estate in Germany. Grossman has settled in Longswamp township, Berks county, and already owns a stable of nine fast horses. His first cash receipt from Germany was $16,000 in gold; then he received $4,000 in currency, and then a draft for $23,000, which he deposited in bank for safe keeping. In a few months more he expects another large instalment of solid cash from over the sea, the result of the sale of his dead father's vine-clad hills along the Rhine. Grossman is now known as the "Prince of Middletown," for in that obscure village he has located for the present. His marriage is one of the most romantic on record, and the fact that he spent $800 a day for knick-knocks for his bride has exercised the gossip of all the country round. Eight or ten years ago Grossman landed at Castle Garden. He had shipped at Bremen. He was a wild, harum-scarum young German, and his desire was to escape a siege of years of university life. He wanted to come "to free America," and partake of some of the joys of the new world.

Said he the other day: "I came to this country for experience and to see strange sights. I had few cares. My remittances from home came right along. When I had money I spent it like a lord with my friends of the road, and when I had none I put up with the ups and dows of tramp life as well as the rest of them. I didn't care either, because I was happy and the life agreed with me. I had a soft bed at home, a good table, plenty of wine and fruit, and good society. I soon got tired of that. I preferred the free open country of Pennsylvania, with its fat barns and hospitable people. I never wronged anyone but myself. But I got along first-rate. I loved the woods and springs and mountain scenery. A tramp has no cares. He is absolutely free so long as he can keep out of goal. A smart tramp need not get into trouble. All he has to do is to keep out of bad company and do nothing wrong himself. That was my plan."

When dressed and shaved, Grossman is an intelligent-looking German, with regular features and dark hair, medium in height, compactly built, and he is quite talkative. He purchased a house and lot in Longswamp township, for which he paid $2,200. His first horse cost him $200; then he bought a trotter and a light buggy for $400; from a gentleman at Alburtis he bought a double team for $600. His passion for horses soon became known and in a few days about a dozen stock-dealers, from Allentown, Reading, Kutztown, and other places visited Middletown with strings of fine animals, and suddenly that heretofore quiet backwoods village became an active, busy horse market. Grossman bought until at least twelve horses were in his stable, and he had to quit for want of stable room. He was a jolly purchaser, paid cash for all he got, and didn't pretend to know much about horseflesh, anyhow, nor did he seem to care.

The maiden name of his wife was Miss Susan Hilbert. She is the daughter of a Lancaster county woodman. In the days of Grossman's poverty he first met her at her father's home, where Grossman came one pleasant afternoon in autumn. He rested by a well and very soon he saw a dark-eyed maiden at the gate. He engaged her in conversation, and finally she asked him whether he wanted a drink of water. "No," said he, with a roguish twinkle: "if you have cider or something stronger it will suit me better; water is too common." The young woman was charmed with his impudence and she soon produced a pitcher of hard cider from the cellar. A plate of apples was then set before the eyes of the good-looking young German. This acquaintance soon ripened into love. Grossman obtained work on a near by farm and courted the pretty Susan so often as he could. Finally they were engaged, but Grossman never told his affianced that he was the son of a wealthy German landholder across the sea. They were married by the village parson, and lived with the bride's parents. Grossman however, soon learned that married life of that kind was not as he had expected and hoped, so he determined to lerve that section of the country. He was wild and impetuous, and he thought the unien was beneath his station. Still keeping his secret, he suddenly disappeared and became a tramp again. He collected a number of the jolliest tramps on the road that he could find. Some of them had been students in the old country like himself. They knew him by his assumed name only. When his remittances came, they had the jolliest of reunions. He had no desire to return to Germany. His mode of life had a charm about it that he could not resist. Finally word came from Germany that his old father had died. Grossman went into sincere mourning. His father had been a kind parent to him, and had written him many letters begging him to give up his wandering life and come back to Germany again. With every dollar sent to the wayward son was a father's blessing.

Grossman's bride in the meantime had secured a legal separation. When Grossman's father died the tramp-son determined at once to give up the life on the road. His first thought was of his darkeyed Susan. Without her he could do nothing. He wandered back to his old home. To his great astonishment he learned that she had married a wealthy gypsy horse-trader. He resolved to find her, and succeeded. To his great joy he learned that she could be far happier with him, her first love. He then told her that he had fallen heir to a fortune, arrangements were at once made with the gypsy husband. Grossman bargained for his wife, and the gypsy listened to the proposition. The gypsy accepted a $50 bill, said good-bye to Susan and Grossman, and his first love happily departed for her fathers home. Another divorce was quickly obtained, and Grossman and Susan were again united in happy marriage. They are now living contented in their new home, and Grossman is living like a prince with his bride. He is lavishly spending money, but the bride, with an eye to business, has hinted at the necessity of curtailing expenses and remembering the motto of the "rainy day."

The Family Purse.

The money question between husband and wife is one of the most serious drawbacks to married happiness, and it is time it was adjusted on a more just and equal basis. The life of utter dependence which some women lead is crushing and degraded. Men do not realize the utter helplessness and vacuity to which the system condemns woman. Now, does anybody believe that it is necessary for the welfare of the family that she should go to him for twenty-five cents every time she needs it for car-fare or a spool of thread? Is it right or just to take her imbecility in money matters for granted before she has been tested? Is it not just that such women, who are left by the failure of some speculative craze to their own resources with the burden of a family upon their inexperienced shoulders, who often display wonderful powers in energy and calculation, in addition to thrift and persevering industry, which ought to put all such men to shame?

Women, as a general rule, can make one dollar go as far as two in the hands of men; and many conceited individuals, who now consider that the social system, bounded by four walls of their dwelling, would cease to revolve if they were taken out of it, would find great happiness and great pecuniary advantage in putting the control of all the interior details of their homes in the hands of their wives, with a division of the income equal to the requirement.

BISHOP WARREN tells in Zions Herald, of a professional tour in Colorado, where the hill-sides are so steep that every man is said to sit on his doorstep and use his neighbor's chimney for a spittoon. While he was dashing down one of these hills in a stage, the driver became interested in a dog fight, turned the wagon completely over, and spilled six men with their luggage.

COLOGNE CATHEDRAL, as it now stands, represents an expenditure of ten million of dollars.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

On the Eve of the Wedding.

O love before we part to-night,
Before the last 'I will' is spoken—
Before the ring has touched my hand,
Of pure, true, endless love the token—
Before the Church with holy rite,
Her blessing on our love has given,
Look straight into my eyes with yours,
And answer me in sight of Heaven.

Is there within your heart of hearts
One lingering shadow of regret—
One thought that you have spoken ill?
Oh! speak—'tis not too late even yet.
Is there in all this world of ours,
One you have ever known or seen,
Whom, if you had earlier seen or known
You would have crowned your chosen queen?

Is there?—I pray you, tell me now,
And I will hold you bound no more.
I will not flinch to hear the truth.
It could not be so sad, so sore,
To know it now, as it would be
If by-and-by a shadow fell
Upon the sunshine of our home;
So, if you ever loved me—tell.

I'd hold you pure from blame, dear love;
And I would leave you free as air,
To woo and win that happier one.
All this for your dear sake, I'd bear.
I will not say how I would pray
That God might have you in His care;
That would be easy—when I think
Of you, my heart is all one prayer.

But could I join her name with yours,
And call down blessings from above
On her, who robbed me of my all—
My life—my light—my only love?
Yes! even that I'd try to do;
Although my lonely heart should break,
I'd try to say 'God bless her!' too,
Through blinding tears, for your sweet sake.

I'm looking up into your eyes;
But though my own with tears are dim,
I read that in their true, clear depths,
Which tells me, 'You may trust in him.'
I will—I will! It needs no words,
Though tears are flowing warm and fast,
And eloquent with truth and love.
Forgive my doubts—they are the last!

Fashion Notes.

THE new red is vividly brilliant in hue.

BLACK and gold is the coming combination in colour.

POLKA DOTTED stockings are among the new styles.

WIDE Directoire collars are worn with nearly every costume.

SHORT dresses are to be the rule for at least another six months.

JERSEYS will be much worn in New York with street suits for early fall.

SUNFLOWERS and crysanthemums continue to be in favour with fashionable women.

RED Surah silk is still the favourite material for illuminating dark or sober-tinted costumes.

OSTRICH feathers, long, medium and tips, will be used on winter millinery, to the exclusion of flowers.

A SILK waistband, with buckle of silver, mother-of pearl, or burnished steel, or with a strap, is the fashion.

FLANNELS are now made with two kinds of materials; for instance, half the plaits are plain, half in figured goods.

FOULARD handkerchiefs are trimmed with point de Raguse and Languedoc laces, and made into bows, jabots, and fichus.

POLONAISES, pointed basques, skirted basques, round waists, and coat basques, with very long tails, will all be fashionable this winter.

THE plain skirt, with full, unlooped back drapery, which is American in origin, is reported as gaining in favour on the other side of the Atlantic.

ELABORATE coiffures are still very fashionable, though the close, classic style of hair-dressing, which admits of but little decoration, is growing in favour.

HANDKERCHIEF costumes are to be continued in thicker material, such as momie plaids of extraordinary size, camel's hair, raw silk and crepe cloth.

VELVET will be generously employed in the make up of early fall costumes. As a rule, the skirts will be made plain, with the edges adorned in silk and satin plaitings.

HANDKERCHIFFS will be embroidered and trimmed on as part of the dress, this fall, or a round collar will take their places. The latter will extend down upon the front.

TRANSPARENT French mull is generally used for the newest styles in handkerchiefs, and these are trimmed with fine lace. The monogram continues to be very small, and worked in floss silk.

PRINCESS sacque dresses for little people are made with those fronts covered with tucks and insertion, while the backs are half-fitted to the figure and finished with a Spanish flounce also trimmed on the edge.

HOOKS and eyes are to be largely used this fall for the outsides of dresses, in place of buttons. The hooks are about an inch in length, and are made either of cut steel, enameled metal, steel and jet, or steel inlaid with mother of pearl.

ENGLISH ladies of fashion all follow the fashion set by the princess of Wales. They encircle their throats with lace, which they fasten at the side with a slender brooch (sometimes a lizard in diamonds) and a flower. Black blonde is always worn by them with white dresses.

SOME of the new colours are: Ophelia, dark heliotrope; tete de faisan, pheasant red; lapis, false blue; rouge de Venice, tawny red, and a great number of metallic shades of green, blue and olive; while for evening wear are shades of glaucus, a bright marsh-grass green and heliotrope shades.

Waifs.

THE most charming bridal veils are of illusion.

A YOUNG lady resembles ammunition because the powder is needed before the ball.

MISS FLIRTINGTON—"Yes, I like the place very much, major; you have such a jolly set of men down here." The Major—"Yes, awfully jolly. You'd better steel your heart, Miss Flirtington, in case of accidents." Miss F.—"Well, while I'm about it, major, I'd rather steal somebody else's, don't you know?"

DR. L.—called upon a lady acquaintance, the other day, and was met at the door by the lady's little girl. He asked her to tell her mamma that Dr. L—had called. The child went up-stairs, and presently returned. "Did you tell your mamma?" asked the doctor. "Yes." "And what did she say?" "She said: 'Oh, pshaw.'"

"DOCTOR," said a lisping, fashionable belle, who had graduated at half a dozen boarding-schools, to a friend of ours, who had just been introduced to her at an evening party—'doctor' which do you prefer, tholidity of intellect or brillianthy? Thum admire tholidity; but ath for me, as Thakthpeare thayth in hith 'Bride of Abydoth,' 'prefer tholidity and brillianthy combined.'" The doctor sank into the nearest chair exhausted.

"OH, pshaw!" petulantly exclaimed Miss Lydia Languish, looking up from the last new novel, in response to a summons from her mother to come and assist in preparing dinner, "Oh, pshaw! I am just where Edward de Courcey Montalbert is about to propose to the Lady Ethelinda Adele St. Claire, and I wish dinners had never been invented!" And the look of supreme disgust that flashed from her eyes showed that she meant it.

THE editor laid his half-smoked cigar on the table, and the candidate, dropping in to talk matters over, perched himself on the table and sat down on the real Connecticut Havana. By and by he sadly slipped off his high seat. "You are not lukewarm in my cause, anyhow," he said plaintively. "Ah, no," replied the editor, encouragingly, "the old fires are still burning." And then a great hush fell upon the busy sanctum, such profound silence that, for a minute, you might have heard a gum drop.

tion turned on the guests of the house, and one attractive young lady, a recent arrival, was criticised. "I don't know as you can call her handsome," said Miss S., in response to the opinion expressed by Mr. R., a gentleman of the party; "she is so insipid; then she wants to be thought clever, and does nothing all day but read those horrid French novels and other trash." The group soon afterward broke up. "I beg your pardon, Miss S., but you left your book on the chair," said Mr. R., presenting the forgotten volume. It was a bound copy of "Nana."

Jenny Lind at Home.

A letter from London describes a call on Jenny Lind. The unforgotten Swedish prima donna lives in a spacious and charming mansion in a retired nook in South Kensington, embowered by trees and flowers. In the elegant drawing-room, hung with pictures and tastefully decorated with old china, artistic draperies, etc., I found a lady whose blue eyes and kindly smile bore me back at once over the waste of some thirty years. Again I sat an eager excited schoolboy glowing with anticipation on the verge of my first great art delight. I saw once more before me the tall, slender figure in its white satin draperies, with green leaves and diamonds adorning the abundant fair hair, and the olden thrill creeps over me that heralded the first notes of that marvellous, that incomparable voice, whose tones were to those of the velvet-throated Patti or the silver-voiced Nilsson as the regent compared to the diamonds of a duchess. Shall I forget how old men, who knew just as much about music as they knew of Sanscrit, used to sit with the tears rolling down their cheeks while Jenny Lind was singing, "I know that my Redeemer liveth?" There she stood before me, the unforgotten idol of my girlish idolatry, changed, indeed, by the lapse of years, yet unmistakeably the Jenny Lind of old. The abundant brown hair, with a few lines of silver amid its locks, was turned under in the peculiar fashion in which she always wore it, and the eyes are lovely as ever in their expression and in their soft depths of lustrous blue. As she talked, her gloved hands lay clasped upon her knee in the easy, graceful pose that was familiar to us in the Swedish songstress years ago. I called her attention to the fact, and she smiled at my remembering the attitude, and the pretty German monosyllable "So!" which used to be another of the little peculiarities that we noticed, and loved because they were hers, escaped from her lips. A grand pianoforte in one corner of the room, and a large three-quarter length portrait of herself, painted at the height of her renown, recalled her past queenship in the realms of song. She was handsomely yet plainly dressed in rich black silk, closed to the throat with coral buttons, a shawl of old Cluny lace was draped around her shoulders, and she wore a very simple cap of fine old Venetian guipure. She spoke in warm terms of affection of the United States, not in reference to the welcome and the worship it had accorded her in by-gone years, but because, as she said in her quaint English, that had such a charm about it, "Your country takes the rabble of other countries, and gives them all a chance." I spoke of the fact that when she sang in America there were no opera houses there. "And of that I was glad," she remarked, "for I had quitted the stage, and it was for that reason that I was anxious to go to the United States, since there I would have no temptation to return to it." I also spoke of the intense sympathetic quality of her talent, and the marvellous power that she possessed of swaying her audience at will, particularly in devotional music. Something of the old, beautiful, rapt expression came into her eyes as she answered, "It was because my voice came from God, and I sang to God!"

Modern Music.

Perhaps no better illustration of what modern music is can be found than in the following description by Lli Perkins of the rendering of a song by a fashionably trained young lady:

"Miss Julia was induced to give a taste of her musical powers, and this was how she did it. She flirted up her panniers, coquettishly wiggle-waggled to the piano, and sang:

"When the moo-hoon is mi-hild-ly be-heaming
O'er the ca-halm and si-hi-lent se-e-e-e,
Its rady-unce so-hoftly stre-heam-ing,
Oh! ther-hen, oh, ther-hen,
I thee-hink
Hof thee-hee,
I thee-hink,
I thee-hink,
I thee-hink,
I thee-he-he-hehehehe-hink hof thee-e-e-e.

"'Beautiful, Miss Julia! beautiful!'" and we all clapped our hands. 'Do please sing another verse, it's perfectly divine, Miss Julia,' said Eugene Augustus. Then Julia raised her golden (dyed) head, touched the white ivories with her jewelled fingers, and warbled it again.

"The only comment is that the patriarch Job had one thousand she-asses, and that some of their posterity are still living."

Protection from Lightning.

A knight of the olden time in full armor was probably as safe from the effects of a thunder-storm as if he had a lightning-rod continually beside him; and one of the Roman Emperors devised a perfectly secure retreat in a thunder-storm in the form of a subterraneous vault of iron. He was probably led to this by thinking of a mode of keeping out missiles, having no notion that a thin shell of soft copper would have been quite as effective as massive iron. But those Emperors who, as Suetonius tells us, wore laurel crowns or seal-skin robes, or descended into underground caves or cellars on the appearance of a thunder-storm, were not protected at all. Even in France, where special attention is paid to the protection of the buildings from lightning, dangerous accidents have occurred where all proper precautions seemed to have been taken. But on more careful examination it was usually found that some one essential element was wanting. The most common danger seems to lie in fancying that a lightning-rod is necessarily properly connected with the earth if it dips into a mass of water. Far from it. A well-constructed reservoir full of water is not a good "earth" for a lightning-rod. The better the stone-work and cement the less are they fitted for this special purpose, and great mischief has been done by forgetting this.

In just the cosiest little nook under the shadow of a great tree, irght where the shelving rocks made a nice settee with a back to it, they were sitting. Down, down at their feet was the sounding sea, caressing with its mighty hugs, the shore. "Is not the sea inspiring?" said he. "See yonder snowy sails. They are like—they are like—" "Are they?" said she, as she dug her parasol into the bank. "No they are not," replied he sharply, and the coolness of the breeze was caloric in comparison with the frigidity of the rest of that day. She had interrupted him just on the brink of a very important declaration, which she will ever wait for now.

A RADICAL newspaper of Paris prints a letter from one of the Russian Nihilists who were expelled from France on the eve of the national fete. He says that he and his companions in misfortune were arrested early in the morning, imprisoned, photographs of them taken as though they had been common criminals, then handcuffed, and marched to the railroad station. He asks what redress there is, as matters now stand in France, for the victims of such police outrages as this; and he reminds all Frenchmen concerned that in free countries no man is treated as a criminal until he has been lawfully tried, convicted, and sentenced.

A WOMAN who has four sons, all sailors, compares herself with a year, because she has four sea-sons.

PERSONAL.

A PARTICULAR protegee and friend of the Princess Louise is Miss Hilda Montalba, who lately visited her Royal Highness at Ottawa and who has just sold a painting of a scene in Venice for eight hundred dollars.

THE wonderful boy-violinist D'Albert, who is becomming so popular in England, is said to be, in spite of his genius, a "thorough boy, laughing, joking, to any fun." But the moment he comes to the piano he is like an Arab horse, with thrilling nerves and eyes dilated.

IN a British peerage list appears 498 names, of which five date from the thirteenth century, 5 from the fourteenth century, 11 from the fifteenth century, 20 from the sixteenth century, 67 from the seventeenth century, 119 from the eighteenth century, and 271 from the nineteenth century.

THE Sultan is quite inconsolable on account of the death of Tahir Effendi, his chief astrologer. Among other privileges, this worthy had a monopoly in almanacs, and among the predictions last year was that a certain day would be propitious for the purchase of a beautiful white slave, which caused a run on the market, and a rise in the article.

WHEN Adelina Patti was a little girl of ten years she had a filial attachment for Ole Bull, whom she always called "Oley." He is quoted in the Washington Post as once saying that he relied more on her criticism of his playing than upon that of any other judge, for the development of her musical powers even at that early age was truly marvellous.

THE Princess Constantine Radzivil, sister of Mlle. Blanc, the other heiress of the Monaco gaming tables, has a superb head of hair, and pride in it is her peculiar weakness. She is attended at Dieppe by a Parisian hair-dresser, and she is said to enjoy nothing more than watching the coiffeur in the mirror before her as he goes through his operations several times a day.

THE marriage of the Baroness Burdett Coutts is postponed, it is said, until after a thorough investigation is made into the question of succession to the property. Mr. Ashmead Bartlett, the rumored bridegroom, is tall, wears a moustache and imperial, speaks well, but with an American accent, is a favourite with women, if not with men, and said to a friend, some weeks since, that he was presently going to do something that would astonish London.

THE Duke of Buckingham, now Governor of Madras, is renowned in India as a skilful whip. He drives his pair of beautiful Arab ponies over bypaths and along precipices on the hills where men with very strong nerves and the quietest of brutes would hesitate to follow. His latest feat in this respect has been to drive the ponies to the top of Dodabetta, the highest point in the Madras Presidency, and where no vehicle of any description has ever been before.

ADELINA PATTI bought not long since a Welsh estate called Craig-y-Nos, and had alterations and enlargements made at a cost of fifteen thousand pounds. She has since been sued by the builder for twenty-five hundred pounds, it being a question of disputed accounts. When she reached the place, after her fatigueing London season, fireworks of all descriptions were set off in welcome — burning balloons, rockets, and candles, and her own portrait, with the names, in letters of fire, of her operas.

ONE of Ole Bull's tricks was, when he had diminished his tone to a nearly inaudible pianissimo, to continue the attitude, as if he were playing, but actually having drawn off the bow entirely from the violin, holding it in the air, and producing no tone whatever; while the audience, in raptures at the softness of his really inaudible sighs, made ear-trumpets of their hands, and bent forward, eager to catch the sound which did not exist. Then the violinist, as if suddenly awakening out of a trance, bowed to the enraptured audience.

THE Duke of Leinster, the Marquises of Waterford and Headfort, the Earls of Kenmare, Longford, and Meath, Lords O'Neill, Annaly, and De Vesci are almost the only noblemen of first-class fortune who make Ireland their residence for the greater portion of the year; but the owners of the largest estates, with the exception of the Earl of Pembroke, whose property is almost entirely in the city and suburbs of Dublin, generally reside in that country two or three months annually. Sir Richard Wallace, who, next to Lord Downshire and Pembroke has the largest rent roll in Ireland, lost no time in hiring a residence contiguous to his estate, on which, though they drew from it $300,000 a year, his predecessors the Marquises of Hertford, never had a home.

THE Marquis of Londonderry, owner of the Seaham Harbor and collieries, where the recent disaster occurred, is one of the half a dozen largest coal owners in England. He inherited this property from his mother. His father was half brother of the historic Lord Castlereagh, afterward Marquis of Londonderry, whose mother was the sister of the Marquis of Hereford, the Lord Steyne of "Vanity Fair" and Lord Monmouth of "Coningsby." The rise of the Londonderry family (Stewart is their name) has been rapid. A hundred years ago they were mere Ulster 'Squires; to-day they stand in the first rank of nobles. Their entertainments in London this year, at Londonderry House (formerly Holderness), in Park lane have been splendid.

GENERAL.

ROSA BONHEUR has given to the Jardin des Plantes the lion and lioness which have so long served her as models.

THE life of the Prince of Wales is insured for forty thousand pounds, for which he pays an annual premium of eight hundred pounds, in order that his family may not be left destitute.

GEN. HALKELL of the Salvation Army is journeying in the West. At St. Louis he rushed out of his tent and kicked one of the coloured boys who were disturbing the meeting. Repenting of his conduct, he kissed the boy and gave him twenty cents, but the twenty cents did not appease the youngster's wrath nor the kiss heal the kick, and he had the General arrested. A fine of $50 was imposed.

M. SAGNIER writes in the Economiste Francais, that each international exposition since that in London in 1862 has proved the great advance in the methods of vine culture in Spain. The consumption of wine per inhabitant in Spain is scarcely one half that of the individual Frenchman, and the exports have of late years increased enormously. In 1869 they reached 1,857,842 hectolitres; in 1874, 2,117,298; in 1878, 2,672,168. While Spain sends immense quantities of wine to France, France sends scarcely any in comparison to Spain. Of the wine sent by Spain to France, France has herself consumed about half. Of the remainder, the United States and South Ameaica took the bulk. Much of the so-called French claret drunk here is really Spanish, and is sent to France with the view of getting the Bordeaux Custom House brand.

SOME of the features of Taxation in England are peculiarly just and desirable. If anybody leaves you $500 you have to pay $10, and if he dies without a will, you will then pay $15 to get this $500. The Government fee on a $50,000 legacy is $1,000, and $1,500 if there be no will, and if the legacy be $1,000,000, then the Queen's fee is $77,500, or, without a will, more than $100,000. If you study and become a barrister, the admission costs you $250, or as much as you are likely to earn the first year. When you graduate in medicine you pay $50. If you become a mere notary public to administer oaths it costs you $150. When you execute a lease to rent your house for anything above $150 a year, you pay about seventy cents. If you want arms and crest on your carriage, you pay $11, and if you get these arms "granted" to you, and in a measure fully recognized, you have to pay $50 license. One carriage is taxed $11 and your dog costs $1.25 a year. For a license to carry a gun you pay $2.50. The tax to every male servant is $4.

WORKINGMEN'S societies in England grow to enormous proportions, possibly because, in addition to their trades union features, they take the place of the mutual aid and beneficial associations so common in this country. Four of the great English societies—the Engineers, Iron Founders, Boiler Makers, and Steam Engine makers—have nearly eighty thousand members, with incomes amounting to over one million dollars a year. They paid out in 1879 more than twice as much, chiefly for the benefit of members who were sick or out of work. A million dollars was spent on the unemployed, mostly in form of donations, but a large amount for travelling expenses. A quarter of a million was awarded to men on strike, but this was only one-eighth of the whole amount distributed, the societies not encouraging struggles with employers, except in rare cases. The administration of the affairs of these and of cooperative societies in England is remarkable for economy and honesty, vast corporations being managed for workingmen for years with quite as much success as attends the business ventures of merchants and bankers supposed to be specially qualified for such undertakings.

Toronto, Grey & Bruce R'y.

Change of Time.

On and after MONDAY, 3rd NOV. trains will run as follows:—

GOING NORTH.

Toronto,—Union Station, Dep.	7:30 a. m.	12:20 p. m.	5:00 p. m.
Carlton	7.52 a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
Weston	8.05 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
Humber Sum't	8.30 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
Woodbridge	8.45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
Bolton	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
Mono Road	9 50 a.m.	3.05 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Charleston	10.35 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE— Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4.45 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Priceville	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2 50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
Williamsford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Flesh'n & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.15 a.m.	3.10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10.15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a.m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE— Arr.	11:15 a.m.	5:20 p. m.
Dep.	7.15 a.m.	11.35 a. m.	5.40 p. m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Smt	9.40 a.m.	2.05 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2.27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
TORONTO,—Union Station, Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Oct. 1st, 1880.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The STANDARD will be given to the first of January, 1882, for $1.25. Now is the time to subscribe. Those of our subscribers who call at the office for their paper, will please bear in mind that the place of publication is in Hill's new brick block, on Toronto-street, opposite the Markdale House. We would again draw the attention of intending subscribers to the fact that we offer special inducements to those who may now choose to order the STANDARD. The charge will be $1.25 from now till 1st January, 1882—one year and over three months' for a year's subscription. This, we think, is very liberal on our part, and we have no doubt of the result.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We will be pleased to receive communications from those who may desire to write us on subjects of news or of general importance, as it is our desire to make the SSANDARD a medium through which all matters of interest may be laid before the public. No anonymous communication will appear in this journal, we must have the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but that we may know with whom we are dealing. Communications only of public interest will be received. Matters of a private or personal character, and in which the community are in no way interested, will not receive publicity through our columns.

THE BAZAAR AND CONCERT

Held in Dufferin Hall on the 27th ult., under the auspices of the Ladies' Association of the Presbyterian Church of this village, was in all respects a complete success. The Society disposed of nearly the whole of the various articles provided—many of which sold rapidly. The tables were well supplied with a rich and suptuous spread during the afternoon, and were occupied continually by persons coming in who found means of appeasing their hunger.

During the afternoon a concert was announced to take place at half-past seven; and although we might say "sprung" upon the people, was crowned with success, the Hall being filled to its utmost, and many who were anxious to contribute to the good cause were compelled to return to their homes. There was no regular programme, but the entertainment consisted of songs, solos, readings, recitations and addresses, all of which were ably rendered. Our space will not permit of going into detail, and we can only give the names of those who took prominence in the good cause.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson was called upon to take the Chair—which he did, not reluctantly—but feeling, as he must have felt, that his departure from those he so dearly loved, and labored amongst, would cause a separation for a time; one could imagine the dificulties under which he labored. He however announced the names of those who were to contribute to the entertainment—1st Miss Noble, 2nd Misses Wilson and Hollingshead; 3rd song, by Mr. Anderson; 4th reading, by Mr. Irwin; 5th song, Miss Jessie Burns; 6th recitation, by Mr. McDongall; 7th song, by Mr. McIntyre; 8th Misses Mary Cornwall and Ella Wilson; 9th song, by Anderson; 10th speech' by Rev. Mr. Garnett; 11th song, by Mr. Patterson; 12th address, by Rev. Mr. McDiermid; 13th song, by Mr. Anderson; 14th song, by Mr. Patterson; 15th God Save the Queen, by the party. Thus ended the proceedings, and we are pleased to state that after defraying expenses the nice little sum of $80 was realized.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Township Council of the Township of Euphrasia, was held pursuant to adjournment in the Town Hall, on September 25th. 1880. Members all present. Minutes of last session of Council read and approved. By-Law No. 2991, appointing a Collector for the Easterly five concessions of the Township, was carried through the different stages and passed. By-Law No. 292, levying School Trustees' Rates, was carried through the different stages and passed. Mr. Ellis was authorized to let a job of covering crossway on side-line 12 and 13, con. 8. John Anderson was permitted to close a culvert on side-road 27 and 28, in concession 7, by opening the ditch on the South side of the road to the West as far as the culvert, opening into a drain on his premises. Money orders on the Treasurer were issued as follows:—To pay Thomas Lewis $15, Kerwin Kerr $87, John Heeney $16.63, James Rice $70, all for road work. Samuel Wiley $4.75, for plank for bridge on 4th line. Council adjourned until the last Saturday in October next.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Tp. Clerk.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From a Correspondent.

The harvest of another year is over. It has been one of the best that we have had for years as far as favorable wheather is concerned, with the exception of spring wheat, the yield and quality will compare favorably with years of the past.

BEARS.—As Messrs. J. Webster and J. Graham some time since were going to their work, they came rather unexpectedly on a large bear. Not having any shooting irons with them at the time, Bruin made good his escape. Several parties have come on bears' track along the Beaver River. Some of the younger citizens of the Valley are very timid about being found out of doors after night.

KIMBERLY.

From a Correspondent.

The Village of Kimberly has been the scene of a great conflagration. About 4 o'clock on Wednesday morning flames were seen issuing out of Mr. Hurlburt's blacksmith shop, which soon extended until Allcock & Fawcett's waggon shop, Thomas' store, and Howell's blacksmith shop were one mass of flames. We understand that very little property was saved. There was no insurance. It is rumored that it was the work of an incendiary. If so, we trust he will be found out and punished.

Putting in fall wheat is all the rage. Every available piece of ground is being seeded with it. The Dentist's office at Epping is doing a flourishing business. We were shown some potatoes grown by Mr. Jordan, of Epping, which are hard to beat, 12 of them weighing 12½ lbs., and exactly filled a patent pail. He has also some fine specimens of the new varieties of potatoes, viz.: Success, Beauty of Hebron, Alpha, and Excelsior. We would advise any lover of these useful bulbs to procure some seed from him. More anon.

DEPARTED.—Mr. F. J. Pridham, who for the past few months has been carrying on the Tailoring business in this village, having inducements held out to him in Brooklyn, was the recipient of a farewell entertainment given, on the eve of his departure, on Wednesday last. The supper was well got up under the experienced eye of Mrs. Rutledge, of the Markdale House, and a most pleasant time was spent, Mr. Pridham leaves, carrying with him the well-wishes of those with whom he came in contact during his short stay in our village.

COUNTY ITEMS.

MEAFORD debentures sell at 100¼, one of their own citizens, Mr. H. Chisholm, buying the last issue at that figure. Speaks well for Meaford, —O. S. Times.

THE rails have been laid to Palmerston, on the Stratford and Lake Huron Railway. It is expected that the work will be continued on the Georgian Bay and Wellington Railway from Palmerston to Durham, and probably we shall be able to announce in our next issue that the "Rubicon" has been crossed—that is the rails have been laid on the railway across the Wellington, Grey and Bruce at Palmerston, and that the work will then be continued without let or hinderance,—Grey Review.

THE newly appointed Station Agent of this town, came on Tuesday evening last, to see how he would like his new berth. He was well pleased with the appearance of the place. He thinks he will have to commence his duties here in about six weeks. The appointment was make by Mr. Hickson, General Manager of the G. T. Railway. The station house has been plastered, and the windows and doors, wainscoating and painting is all that is necessary to finish it and make it ready for occupation.—Grey Review.

SAD.—Mr. Thomas Napier, a respected farmer in the township of Nichol, between 50 and 60 years of age, is about making application for admission to Toronto Hospital for the purpose of having a surgical operation performed for the removal of a cancer. The cancer is located beneath his tongue, and has been growing since last spring. In order to get at it the chin will have to be severed at the centre and laid open; and Mr. Napier, while willing to undergo the painful operation, has but little hope of its success. Of all diseases, cancer is one about which the medical profession appears to know literally nothing, either as regards cause or cure. And in this section of Canada at any rate, it has become alarmingly common of late years. Mr. Napier's many friends will earnestly pray that the treatment he is about to undergo may satisfactorily accomplish the desired end.—News-Record.

WHILE in Acton recently we were shown through the Canada Glove Works carried on there by W. H. Storey & Son. Though started but a few years ago on a small scale, the business has grown to such an extent that employment is given to nearly one hundred hands, who turn out about eighty dozen pairs a day, a greater number than that of any other factory in America. The buck, kid, antelope and other gloves and mitts manufactured are of the very best quality, and are meeting with a very extensive sale in Great Britain and the United States. Those made for winter wear are fasted at the rist with a neat patent spring fastener, the invention of Mr. W. H. Storey, who refused $5,000 for its use in the United States. Those of our readers who attended the Industrial Exhibition at Toronto this year may have noticed the exhibit made by this firm, which consisted of 100 different styles mitts and gloves, and which was awarded the first prize.—Meaford Monitor.

THE DUFFERIN EXHIBITION.—The annual exhibition of the Dufferin Agricultural Society, which is to be held the 7th, 8th and 9th of this month, promises to be the most successful of any yet held. Everything that could possibly promote it has been done, both in the way of obtaining exhibits and in preparing the grounds, buildings, &c. The directors have at a considerable sacrifice of tme secured a very large number of special prizes, amounting altogether to about $1,100, which added to the prize list offered by the society swells the total to a very respectable amount. It is therefore earnestly to be hoped that the present bright prospects for the coming exhibition will be realized, both in the number of articles exhibited and in the number of visitors. That all, both far and near, may have an opportunity of visiting the exhibition, arrangements have been made with the railways to issue tickets at reduced rates, and this will no doubt be duly appeciated. There is nothing more sure than that a farmer who does not attend exhibitions drops behind the age. It is just as necessary to be abreast of the times when money is scarce as it is when it is plentiful. Prices may be low this year; but they cannot be altered by sitting at home when every sensible man is investing twenty-five cents in acquiring the experience which other folks have been earning for him all the year before. So do not fail to attend the exhibition and get all the information you can. —Orangeville Advertiser.

CHURCH DIRECTORY.

CHRIST CHURCH.

Services—Sept. 26, 10:30 a. m.; Oct. 3rd, 6:30 p. m.; 10th, 10:30 a. m.; 17th, 10:30 a. m.; 24th, 6:30 p. m.; 31st, 6:30 p. m.; Nov. 7th 10:30 a. m.; 14th, 10:30 a. m.; 21st, 10:30 a. m.; 28th, 6.30 p. m.; Dec. 5th, 6:30 p. m.; 12th, 10:30 a. m.; 19th, 10:30 a. m.; 27th, 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School, 2:30 p. m. Rev. James Ward, Incumbent.

CANADA METHODIST CHURCH.

Services every Sabbath at 10:30 a.m., and 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. G. S. Bowes, Superintendent. Prayer Meeting, Thursday Evenings at 7:30. Rev. N.A. McDiarmid, Pastor.

PRIMATIVE METHODIST.

Services every 1st and 3rd Sabbath at 3 o'clock p. m. Every 2nd & 4th Sabbath at 10:30 a. m. C. C. Garnett, Pastor.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Services in Dufferin Hall every alternate Sabbath at 11 a. m., and intervening Sabbaths at 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. Bible Class and Prayer Meeting on Fridays at 7:30 p. m.

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Oct. 1st, 1880.

Flour	5,00	to	5.00
Spring Wheat per bush., new	0.90	to	0.95
Fall do. do. do.	0.85	to	0.88
Barley	0.40	"	0.55
Oats	0.25	"	0.25
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes.	0.30	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.10
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese per lb.	0.05	"	0.05
Ducks, per pair	0.30	"	0.40
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.25
Turkeys, per lb	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1 00
Hides	6.00	"	6.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	3.00	"	3.40
Wool	0.25	"	0.25
Green Apples, per. bushel	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Sep. 30th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.	0.85	to	0.90
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.88
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.27	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.20	"	0.22
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5 00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	5.00	"	6.00
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.35
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

APPRENTICE WANTED.

A BOY about 16 years of age, to learn Shoemaking.

THOS. HANBURY.

Dundalk, Oct. 1st, 1880. 3-3in.

AUCTION SALE OF Valuable Farm Property IN THE Township of Glenelg, In the County of Grey.

There will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of October 1880, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at RUTLEDGE'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

by virtue of a power of sale contained in certain mortgages, which will be produced at the sale, the following properties:

PARCEL I.

Under mortgage from Neil Campbell, lot number one, in the twelfth concession of the Township of Glenelg, County of Grey, containing one hundred acres.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 50 acres cleared, having erected thereon a cedar log barn; situated about 8 miles from the village of Markdale.

PARCEL II.

Lot 27, in the 8th concession of the Township of Glenelg, in the County of Grey, containing one hundred acres, more or less.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 60 acres cleared, with log buildings erected thereon.

TERMS.—One-tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance, terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE, Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto. Or to JOHN LYONS, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Sept. 24th, 1880. 3-5in.

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERALL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions,

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received.

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

☞ EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT. ☜

Markdale, October 1, 1880. 2-y

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals!

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books!

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS! TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions, AND VETERINARY PREPERATIONS, CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880. 1-tf

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Foster,

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

Wholesale and Retail dealer in all kinds of

Pine and Hardwood Lumber,

LATH, SHINGLES, CEDAR POSTS, AND CORDWOOD.

☞ Office and yard opposite SHELDON'S HOTEL,

OWEN SOUND, ONT.

N.B.—Lumber, etc.. shipped to all parts, by rail or water.

September, 1880. 2-4

Wm. Lucas & Co., BANKERS,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 2-y

VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

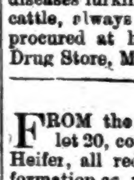
HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

STRAYED

FROM the premises of William Lyons, lot 20, con. 12, Holland, one year old Heifer, all red. Any party giving such information as will lead to her recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 20, 1880. 2-3in



STRAYED from the premises of the subscriber, lots 91 & 92, 3rd Range, W T. & S. Road, one white heifer with white nose, a red and white heifer with lined back, and a red steer with white spots through it, and white hind feet—all yearlings. Any person giving information that will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

ROBERT TORRY.

Glenelg, Sept. 2, 1880. 1-4in

STRAY STEERS.

STRAYED into the premises of Mrs. David Bradley, lot 62, 2nd East of T. & S. Road, Holland, one steer rising three years old, and one rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take them away.

MRS. BRADLEY.

Holland, Sept. 10, 1880. 1-3*

STRAYED

FROM the premises of JOHN MOORE, lot 10, concession 12, Holland, about the 15th of June. Three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white, one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 14th, 1880. 1-3t

STRAYED

INTO the premises of James Farding, lot 16, con. 9, Euphrasia, two RED YEARLING STEERS and one brindled yearling. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-3in

STRAY STEER.

CAME into the premises of the subscriber lot 5, con. 12, Euphrasia, on or about the 15th July last, a red and white STEER about one year old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take it away.

1-3* JAS. BLANEY.

E. D. WILCOX,

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, &c. &c.

This space to be occupied by E. D. Wilcox's Advertisement as soon as his new Brick Store, now being fitted for him is completed.

MARKDALE.

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!

GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,
Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

ictures and icture Framing! in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing! promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

MARRIED

In Chatsworth, on the 15th Sept., 1880, by the Rev. Geo. Keys, Mr. Robert Ireton, of Glenelg, to Mary Ann, daughter of Mr. Thos. Troughton, of Holland.

At the Tremont House, Port Elgin, on the 15th Sept., by the Rev. James Gourlay, M. A., J. Dickson Carveth, Merchant, Tara, to Jennie, second daughter of Mrs. Eliza McCullough, and niece of John Lumsden, Esq., Galt, ex M. P. P. for South Ontario.

DIED.

In Glenelg, on 27th Sept., Maria, eldest daughter of Mr. John Keyland.

In this Village, on the 24th ult., Helen, daughter of Mr. Charles Adams, aged 7 years, 9 months, and 2 days.

In Artemesia, on the 28th Sept., Alexander, youngest son of Bartholomew Wright, aged 4 years.

HILL BROS.

When their new building is completed.

Advertisement will appear in this space

Space to be occupied by HILL BROS. when they remove.

MARKDALE.

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS!

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments I would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted, with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS, J. A. CRAWFORD, LOCK BOX 75, Uxbridge, Ont.

General Advertisements.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND, ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork! made to order on the shartest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to. You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

STOVES.

STOVES. STOVES.

Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES.

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $1[illegible]
Same, with Low Oven, $[illegible]
5 BOX STOVE, $[illegible]
All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.,

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All AT W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill sreett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continnance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

James Sullivan,

FLESHERTON.

Manufacturer and Dealer in

Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and Japanned Wares,

Eave Troughing, &c.

A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware.

Wooden Wares, Washboards, Brooms, Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.

Stove Ovens Lined.

Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.

☞ Prices most reasonable,

JAMES SULLIVAN.

Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

THE North Riding Show takes place at Owen Sound on Tuesday, the 5th inst.

THE Sullivan show, at Desboro, Thursday, 7th inst.

THE Derby Show, at Kilsyth, the 4th inst.

THE Keppel Show, at Oxenden, 4th.

THE Euphrasia Show, at Rocklyn, on the 12th.

THE Arran Show, at Tara, on the 4th and 5th.

THE Proton Show, at Dundalk, on Wednesday, October 6th.

A MONEY Order Office is to be established at Bruce Mines Post Office.

FARMERS would do well to sell their butter now; prices are high.

REV. A. WILSON preached his farewell sermon sunday evening last, to a large congregation.

EUPHRASIA Ploughing Match takes place on the 21st inst. The place will be given in due time.

BREAD down to 10 cents to-morrow. Advertisement next week.

MR. WM. LUCAS, the Banker, is at present residing at the Markdale House.

SEE McIntyre's advertisement. He does not say much, but he evidently means business.

SUBSCRIBERS who get their mail matter at Markdale Post Office, will please call at the Printing Office for their papers.

FIRST SNOW.—On Wednesday morning last we were visitted for the first time this fall with a heavy shower of snow. It disappeared almost as soon as it fell.

PERSONAL,—Dr. Eva, specialist, does not leave town to-morrow as is his usual practice every fortnight; he being compelled to remain on a case requiring his personal attention.

WE notice that the total assessment of the Township of Artemesia, for the current year, amounts to six mills on the dollar.

RETURNED from Toronto, Miss Peron, the popular Milliner of W. J. McFarland, where she has been for a few weeks copying the London and New York Fashions.

BEARS are quite numerous in Amabel, and sheep are suffering. Charles Foster, 13th con., saw five in one of his fields a few days ago at one time.

IF you want to get a first-class Piano or Organ, the place to get it, is from J. A. Crawford, Uxbridge, See advertisement.

AUCTIONEER.—Mr. Samuel Morrow, as will be seen by advertisement, has taken out license, and offers inducements to those requiring his services.

WINDOW DRESSING.—The Irishman, as he is styled by his brother clerks, at McFarlands, has given an exhibition of his skill in window dressing. It is very creditable, and bespeaks taste.

FARM FOR SALE.—We direct attention to the sale of two valuable farms in the Township of Glenelg, which is to take place on the 30th inst.

WHOSE duty is it to order loose plank and holes in the sidewalk to be repaired? A broken leg might cost the village a nice sum.

REMEDY FOR COBWEBS.—A good broom and a little elbow grease, if properly applied, would much improve some shop windows,

Now is the time to purchase your Boots and Shoes, and save Doctors' bills. Would advise you try McFarlands, as he keeps the largest stock, and warrants them not to rip.

DEPARTED ON A VISIT.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster, of Artemesia, old and respected residents, left on a visit to their friends in Perth. We wish them a pleasant trip and a safe return.

TAILORING.—People must not suppose that because Mr. Rae's advertisement does not appear in our columns, that he has left town, on the contrary he may be found at his old stand.

A CALL.—The Rev. James F. McLaren has been called unanimously to be pastor of Euphrasia and Holland, where he has been laboring as missionary the past six months. The congregations are to be congratulated should Mr. McLaren see his way to accept the call.

THE Mayor of Berlin has been served with a writ, issued by a Toronto loan firm, calling upon the town of Berlin to show cause why the said corporation should not pay the Rev. John George Euler the sum of $3,000 damages for injuries sustained by slipping or falling off a sidewalk which was in a dangerous state and condition. Our town fathers should make note of it.

TOBACCO JUICE A NUISANCE.—A Montreal exchange says a most forlorn looking old man was brought into the Recorder's Court the other day, charged with loitering in the porch of the Custom House and committing a nuisance by spitting tobacco on the steps. What a field of operations the Montreal police would find in Markdale in arresting tobacco chewers.

CONSTANT ADVERTISING.—Advertise by the year says an old experienced business man. It is cheaper and yields a better return in proportion to the money invested. An advertisement should always be before the public in some shape. If it disapear it is soon forgottent, and those that remain have the superiority and advantage of the absence. The only good excuse for the discontinuance of an advertisement is that of retiring from business.

AN exchange gives us the following rules for the improvement of a town, which we think wouldn't do the people of Markdale any harm to study: 1. Sell your building lots at reasonable prices. 2. If you can afford to do so, donate a building lot to some large enterprise, and thereby enhance the value of town property. Induce business men to locate in your town. 4. Patronise the business of your own town. Speak well of worthy public enterprises. 6. If anything should be undertaken that may be of any benefit to the town, do not speak ill of it to others, because you happen to be prejudiced against it. 7. Speak well to strangers of your own town and people.

Advertisements.

...ves! Stoves!

...w Tinshop
...RKDALE.
...RTMENT to select from ... most approved ...

...KING AND BOX
...y castings, with silver-... trimmings,
...OVE IN MARKET,
...comfort the rest of your ... your lifetime, ... from W. R. Walker, ...
...TTOM PRICES. ...real "Simon Pure."

...WARE!
ALWAYS ON HAND, ...KINDS OF
...opperwork!
...the shortest notice.
...NG A SPECIALITY.
...Iand-Irons Silver-Plated, ... Stove Polish; Dome ... the Rising Sun, Coal ... particularly attended to. ... giving me a call ... Old metal, ... taken in ... the place, next ...

R. WALKER.
...17, 1880. 1-tf

...OVES. STOVES.

...ett Bros.

...PRICE FOUND ...LAST.
...duction to Cash ...
...OUR PRICES.
...Oven Cook ... $18.
...Low Oven, $17.
...STOVE, $4
...Low

...DWARE.
...ock of axes, cross ... Shelf ... Paints, ... &c.

...WARE.
...l, Lamps &c.; ... prices as ... the trade.
...Bros.
1

...t for All
...Sarjent's:
...the in-...
...RKDALE.
...their liberal patronage dur-... remind ... supply their ...
...EAP
...north of Toronto.
...d Corned Meats
...ptly on receipt of orders.
...GE & POULTRY
...inducements to ...
...opposite
...paid for Fat Cat-... Sheep
...favors he ...wants to ...
...W. R. SARJEANT.
1

...es Sullivan,
...ESHERTON.
...facturer and Dealer in
...er, Sheet-Iron and ...
...Troughing, &c.
...Stock of Crockery
...Brooms, ... &c.
...Wood taken in ...
...JAMES SULLIVAN.
1

Farm of 150 Acres
...FOR SALE,
...the Village of Markdale ...
...C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor ...
...Farm, Markdale P.O.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

The North Riding Show takes place ...Owen Sound on Tuesday, the 5th ...t.

The Sullivan show, at Desboro, ...ursday, 7th inst.

The Derby Show, at Kilsyth, the ... inst.

The Keppel Show, at Oxenden, ...6th.

The Euphrasia Show, at Rock... on the 12th.

The Arran Show, at Tara, on the ...h and 5th.

The Proton Show, at Dundalk, on Wednesday, October 6th.

A Money Order Office is to be established at Bruce Mines Post Office.

Farmers would do well to sell their butter now; prices are high.

Rev. A. Wilson preached his farewell sermon sunday evening last, to a large congregation.

Euphrasia Ploughing Match takes place on the 21st inst. The place will be given in due time.

Bread down to 10 cents to-morrow. Advertisement next week.

Mr. Wm. Lucas, the Banker, is at present residing at the Markdale House.

See McIntyre's advertisement. He does not say much, but he evidently means business.

Subscribers who get their mail matter at Markdale Post Office, will please call at the Printing Office for their papers.

First Snow.—On Wednesday morning last we were visitted for the first time this fall with a heavy shower of snow. It disappeared almost as soon as it fell.

Personal.—Dr. Eva, specialist, does not leave town to-morrow as is his usual practice every fortnight; he being compelled to remain on a case requiring his personal attention.

We notice that the total assessment of the Township of Artemesia, for the current year, amounts to six mills on the dollar.

Returned from Toronto, Miss Pe...on, the popular Milliner of W. J. McFarland, where she has been for a few weeks copying the London and New York Fashions.

Bears are quite numerous in Amabel, and sheep are suffering. Charles Foster, 13th con., saw five in one of his fields a few days ago at one time.

If you want to get a first-class Piano or Organ, the place to get it, is from J. A. Crawford, Uxbridge, See advertisement.

Auctioneer.—Mr. Samuel Morrow, as will be seen by advertisement, has taken out license, and offers inducements to those requiring his services.

Window Dressing.—The Irishman, as he is styled by his brother clerks, at McFarlands, has given an exhibition of his skill in window dressing. It is very creditable, and bespeaks taste.

Farm for Sale.—We direct attention to the sale of two valuable farms in the Township of Glenelg, which is to take place on the 30th inst.

Whose duty is it to order loose plank and holes in the sidewalk to be repaired? A broken leg might cost the village a nice sum.

Remedy for Cobwebs.—A good broom and a little elbow grease, if properly applied, would much improve some shop windows.

Now is the time to purchase your Boots and Shoes, and save Doctors' bills. Would advise you try McFarlands, as he keeps the largest stock, and warrants them not to rip.

Departed on a Visit.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster, of Artemesia, old and respected residents, left on a visit to their friends in Perth. We wish them a pleasant trip and a safe return.

Tailoring.—People must not suppose that because Mr. Rae's advertisement does not appear in our columns, that he has left town, on the contrary he may be found at his old stand.

A Call.—The Rev. James F. McLaren has been called unanimously to the pastor of Euphrasia and Holland, where he has been laboring as missionary the past six months. The congregations are to be congratulated should Mr. McLaren see his way to accept the call.

The Mayor of Berlin has been served with a writ, issued by a Toronto law firm, calling upon the town of Berlin to show cause why the said corporation should not pay the Rev. John George Euler the sum of $3,000 damages for injuries sustained by slipping or falling off a sidewalk which was in a dangerous state and condition. Our town fathers should make a note of it.

Tobacco Juice a Nuisance.—A Montreal exchange says a most forlorn looking old man was brought into the Recorder's Court the other day, charged with loitering in the porch of the Custom House and committing a nuisance by spitting tobacco on the steps. What a field of operations the Montreal police would find in Markdale in arresting tobacco chewers.

Constant Advertising.—Advertise the year says an old experienced business man. It is cheaper and yields a better return in proportion to the money invested. An advertisement should always be before the public in some shape. If it disapear it is soon forgottent, and those that remain have the superiority and advantage of the absence. The only valid excuse for the discontinuance of an advertisement is that of retiring from business.

An exchange gives us the following ...s for the improvement of a town, which we think wouldn't do the people of Markdale any harm to study: 1. Sell your building lots at reasonable prices. 2. If you can afford to do so, donate a building lot to some large enterprise, and thereby enhance the value of town property. Induce business men to locate in your town. 4. Patronise the business of your own town. Speak well of worthy public enterprises. 6. If anything should be undertaken that may be of any benefit to the town, do not speak ill of it to others, because you happen to be prejudiced against it. 7. Speak well to strangers of your own town and people.

Our School.—We understand that all the Teachers have been re-engaged for the ensuing year; the Head Teacher at an increase of salary of $50 on the present year. The 2nd and third Teachers same as present year. This reflects credit on the Head Master, Mr. Irwin, as it also does on those of his co-teachers. No removal: the board fully satisfied.

Mr. Rutledge has changed the name of the Markdale paper to the Standard, and increased its size to eight columns on the page. More attention ... paid to local matters than formerly, and the editor promises that the Standard shall be perfectly independent in politics.—Monitor.

Crops on th 2nd line seemed to have been remarkably good this year. On Tuesday T. & W. Ferguson threshed out for Mr. R. Latournail 700 bushels of wheat which in our opinion is a pretty good yield off a 100 acre farm. —Meaford Monitor.

Toronto Exhibition.—The great Exhibition closed on Saturday last, and was the most successful ever held in Canada. The Oddfellows' gathering on Friday was something immense, and over 40,000 people visited the grounds that day. There were 49 bands in the processions, and every State in the Union was represented.

The Right Kind.—A man strolled into a newspaper office the other day, and on asking for his account, found that he was three years in arrears. On ascertaining the fact he said: Well, sir, as you have waited three years for your pay you may credit me three years in advance. What a pitty every newspaper subscriber has not a conscience like that man.—O. S. Advertiser. We wish some of our own subscribers would imitate so worty an example. That man's name deserves to be engraven in stone.—Durham Review. We have only commenced business, and as yet have not been asked for credit.

We, on the wing, were pleased to see some very substantial improvements in the Village of Priceville since we last made that place a visit. Alexander Brown, Esq., has built (this summer) a very fine brick building, which is a credit to the place. A. Turner & Co., Chemists and Druggists, occupy one part of it; George Leitch, Tailor, a part; and the balance will, in a short time, be in the posession of Mr. George Tuck, as an hotel.

Three Racoons Captured in an Orchard.—One morning last week Mr. Richard A. Scott, lot 50, second range west of Toronto and Sydenham Road, Holland, was awakened by his dog barking. He (Mr. S.) got up and went to see what was wrong, but could see nothing, it being not yet daylight. However, when light dawned he made a further search, the dog still making an unusual noise in the orchard, and with the assistance of a friend, who was stopping over night with him, found the brave dog had treed three racoons in the apple trees. They succeeded in shooting one, they clubbed No. 2, and No. 3 they caught alive.

To Whom it may Concern.—County constables will be interested in the following letter which has been issued from the Provincial Secretary's office: "Sir,—with regard to services rendered in connection with the administration of criminal justice by police officers or constables who are paid for their services out of the municipal or other fund, I am directed by the Hon, the Provincial Secretary to advise you that in in future no claims rendered by such officers or constables for such services shall be admitted against the Government or paid out of the consolidated revenue, unless the officers or constables have been specially employed to perform the services by directions from the department of the Hon. the Attorney General. I have &c., Henery Totten for the Secretary.

Sell Your Grain.—It appears to be the general opinion among grain dealers that the price of wheat is more likely to decline than to rise, as the crops throughout Europe are considerably over the average, and the American supply exceeds that of any former year. We are told that farmers in this county feel gloomy over the prospects, and are inclined to hold their grain. Such a course is not likely to pay, as the loss in interest, ratage, shrinkage, &c., on wheat that is held over almost invariably exceeds any rise in price that may take place. The safest way is to sell as soon as possible after threshing, above all when the market shows a declining tendency. It pays better to sell the full crop this year at 90 cents, and have cash to deal with, than to sell what is left after wastage from various causes, next year, at $1.00, from which the interest must be deducted.

Newspaper Reporting.—Only those who know nothing about a reporter's business think he reports just what is said. They don't know that he finishes sentences which the orator in his hurry and excitement left unfinished; that he disentangles metaphors, suppresses repetitions, corrects bad grammar, remedies slips of the tongue, rectifies errors in names and dates, patches up remembered quotations, and the orator, reading his effort in the next day's paper, thinks he did pretty well, and so he did. Where reporters make one mistake, speakers make a hundred, which the reporter instinctively, or as mere matter of business, corrects and says nothing about. And to wind up the matter, if a newspaper man says something, though true, of an ignorant upstart to fame, he is denounced. Oh! dear. Oh! dear; is not the path of the transgressor a hard one to travel?

Prosperity.—The farm known as the Rutledge homestead, situated partly in Glenelg and partly in Artemesia, consisting of 100 acres, was sold a few days ago for $3.000, to A. Nesbitt, Esq. This speaks well of our section of country. The land, of course, is of good quality, yet not better than the generality in this locality.

Glenelg Agricultural Show.—Though the morning was wet and everything looked discouraging for the Show, yet the Exhibitors turned out as if determined to make it a success. The prizes were comparatively small, from more than one cause. In the first place, the funds were too heavily drawn on last year—a greater number of prizes being given than the funds would admit of—leaving, in fact, nothing in hand as a balance from last year; and also, our Township having contributed nothing this year, as we think they should of. The Show however was a success. We are not able to give the prize list this week owing to the Secretary's absence from home.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs, &c.
OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

J. B. McMillan,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR in Chancery, Conveyancer, &c. &c.
Owen Sound, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

McFayden & Roberts,
BARRISTERS, Solicitors in Chancery, &c. Office, one door east of the Merchants' Bank, Union-st., Owen Sound.
C. McFayden. J. T. Robarts.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Soliciitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
Alfred Frost, J. W. Frost, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
Offices—at Owen Sound and Markdale.
N. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. McFarland's store, open on Thursday of every week. 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept, 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
Money loaned at lowest rates on personal and real estate. Lands bought and sold. Buyer and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

David Jackson, Jr.,
LOAN AND LAND AGENT, CONVEYANCER, &c. Money to lend at the lowest rate of Interest ever offered in this part of the country. Principal money will be taken in sums of $100 and upwards yearly with the interest if desired.
Durham, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

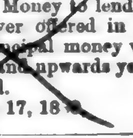
F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable half-yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end of the year 8½ per cent.—principal payable at the end of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal and interest yearly to suit Borrowers.
Lands for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1 y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments,
☞ A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, Meaford and Markdale. Having purchased Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's entire stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys done within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates for Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Orders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.



W. C. Jewell, L.D.S.,
WILL be at the MARKDALE HOUSE, Markdale, the First FRIDAY and following day in each month. Parties wanting Extracting, Filling or Teeth Inserted, from one to a full set, would do well to call and see prices. Satisfaction given in all cases. Head Office—opposite Post Office, Meaford.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1 y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation.
Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
J. & J. McGIRR, - - Proprietors.
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the choicest Wines and Liquors and the best brands of Cigars.
Free 'bus to and from all trains.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.
Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.
Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880. 2-3m

J. M. Webster,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
☞ LOAN ND LAND AGENT,
Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.
EUGENIA P. O.
Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880. 2

Subscribe for the Standard.
We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still keep to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.
ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.
HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.
BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.
CLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns
GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!
WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.
Douglas' Brich Bloch opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.
September 21st, 1880. 1

A Word to the Public.

The era of prosperity which now happily reigns throughout the length and breadth of our glorious dominion benefits every branch of industry, and has very materially benefited my business, which has increased in volume several thousands of dollars over any previous year, and is steadily increasing.

Appreciating the tastes and requirements of the Public I have studiously, and I trust successfully, labored for 18 years to meet the wishes of purchasers. The support and patronage I have had justifies me in increasing my stock, extending my facilities, and at the same time materially reducing my prices.

Ambitious as I have ever been to be first and foremost in my business, I am resolved that henceforth the reputation I have achieved in this particular, shall be promoted and enhanced. Egotistical mention is not essential, but I do feel warranted in calling attention to my present full and complete stock of Goods, a stock, the greater part of which has been purchased for cash, and direct from the manufacturers, and the equal, of which, for extent or variety, I do not think can be found north of Toronto. I solicit from strangers an inspection, and to my friends and customers say, that I have for them in goods and prices a succession of what I believe will be very agreeable surprises. I am in a position to fill all orders, and it will not be necessary to send to Toronto or elsewhere for goods. Give me a chance to supply your wants, and I guarantee the best Goods at the most economical rates.

A call and examination will be gratifying to me, for I feel sure that an experience in patronizing me will fully confirm all that I claim for my goods.

W. J. McFARLAND,
WHOLESASE AND RETAIL,
MARKDALE.
September 17, 1880. 1

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Water-proof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!
before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN
Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing, (Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!
—AT THE—
"TORONTO HOUSE,"
MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.
Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Flesherton Advertisements.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse.

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF
DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,
Groceries, Provisions, &c.,
For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,
Flesherton Station and Eugenia.
September 21st, 1880. 1

W. F. DOLL,

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

Special inducements in Waltham Watches

A SPECIAL LINE OF
LADIES GOLD WATCHES
Just to hand. Also Ladies Col. Gold Lockets, Chains, Necklets, &c.

A LARGE LINE OF
Wedding and Gem Rings, $1 to $10.

HALL, PARLOR, BRACKET AND BEDROOM CLOCKS AT ALL PRICES.

Silver and Electro-Plated Ware.

Owing to the increased demand for this line of goods I have been forced to purchase larger and better cases. Am now offering

Cake Baskets, Fruit Stands, Cruets, Butter Coolers, Sugar Bowls, Pickle Dishes, Napkin Rings, Fruit Knives, Spoons, Dinner and Desert Knives, &c., all of the latest and most improved designs.

A Call Respectfully Solicited.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Flesherton and Dundalk.
Flesherton, Sept. 13th, 1880. 1

THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND CAN. MORT. CO.
(LIMITED.)

R. DAVIS, Agent, - - - - FLESHERTON.

THE ABOVE COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO

☞ LEND MONEY! ☜

At 7½ per cent., half yearly, or 8 per cent., yearly. Note a few of the advantages derived from the North of Scotland. You are not obliged to pay any part of the principal until the end of the term. You can arrange to pay in instalments if you choose and interest immediately ceases on such amounts when paid. You can arrange to pay your interest or principal in any month to suit you. You can arrange to repay the loan in any time from 1 to 20 years. Simple interest only charged. No equalization of payments. No 12 per cent. interest nor fines charged. The following example will show one of the many ways in which a loan may be repaid.

EXAMPLE:

$1000 borrowed, repaid by ten equal annual instalments, simple interest, at 8 per cent. yearly, the payments will be as follows:

1st year, interest 8 per cent on $1000	$80 00
Instalment	100 00	180 00
2nd year, interest 8 per cent. on $900	$72 00
Instalment	100 00	172 00
3rd year, interest 8 per cent. on $800	$64 00
Instalment	100 00	164 00
4th year, interest 8 per cent. on $700	$56 00
Instalment	100 00	156 00
5th year, interest 8 per cent. on $600	$48 00
Instalment	100 00	148 00
6th year, interest 8 per cent. on $500	$40 00
Instalment	100 00	140 00
7th year, interest 8 per cent. on $400	$32 00
Instalment	100 00	132 00
8th year, interest 8 per cent. on $300	$24 00
Instalment	100 00	124 00
9th year, interest 8 per cent. on $200	$16 00
Instalment	100 00	116 00
10th year, interest 8 per cent. on $100	$8 00
Instalment	100 00	108 00
Making a total payment of		$1440 00

The borrower is not obliged however, to repay any part of the principal by instalments but may do so if convenient. Expenses low and a detailed statement of disbursements given to each borrower. Deeds, Leases, Wills, Agreements, &c., neatly and carefully prepared. Insurance affected in the old favorite Companies. Accounts, notes, and rents collected and returns promptly made. Farms for sale and to rent. Private funds invested. Auction Sales attended. Charges low. All business strictly confidential.

ROBT. DAVIS,
Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Auctioneer, Real Estate and Ins. Agt., &c.,
1 FLESHERTON.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!
—IN—
BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,
SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN
New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!
CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—
UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT
Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF
Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings
made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER.
1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mills

Sheep and Cattle.

FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.
C. W. & A. SPEERS.
Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

B|U|T|C|H|E|R

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.
☞ Meat delivered at any house in town.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY:
77 W. 3d St., New York City

(TRADE MARK.)

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
10,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870
9.000.000 Bottles.
This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.
It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System,
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.
It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.
There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.
Mrs. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed ... After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.
Mrs. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.
Burford, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.
ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.
Mrs. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—I have used your great Indian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.
MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
Dear Sir:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.
W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.
NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.
Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.
Dear Sir:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.
Mrs. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.
Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.
Dear Sir:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.
DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.
Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.
Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.
W. H. RORISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northrop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.
☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of a knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
Address
THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 Ann St., New York;
Post Office Box, 4586.

My Lost Love.

"'I ran and shouted Lost! Lost! Lost!"

When I awake from heavy lidded sleep,
And through the sternest labor of the day,
And when I watch the dying sun's last ray,
And while my soul in fancy's dreams I steep—
Forever ringing through my work or play,
Those words like a perpetual moan,
Make my life a constant undertone.

What have I lost,
That such a murmur ever haunteth me?
What sad enchantment hath my life to cross,
And taught me such a minor melody?
I will look back into the past and see
If I can find why I so haunted be.

This do I find:
That I have lost a love—a love that seemed
With such a passion to my own resigned,
That I had deemed
That love for ever mine; but love hath wings,
And soon departs, as do all happy things.

And yet I had not sought
This love; it came unasked, a shivering bird,
Half frighted lest in seeking me it erred;
But I received that love with sorrow fraught,
And my whole heart opened to give it room,
And all the wintry days were robbed of gloom.

It was a frail and weakly thing,
That little Love—and I did strive
Most anxiously to keep the thing alive;
And so it lived all through the early Spring.
I did not know that when its wings were strong,
My bird would fly and leave me.
O Love! my love! whom I have loved so long,
How couldest thou so grieve me?

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

We are all in "our boudoir"; mamma, Norah, Letty, Olive, and I. Letty is nursing her baby by the fire; I am in the window-seat; Olive is lying on the sofa. Poor child, she is always ill now. [illegible] Mamma and Norah are reading for, I should think, the fiftieth time a letter from our brother Will. I know the letter word for word; and I look out at the houses in the Close, [illegible] Mamma sighs softly, and glances at me. I jump from my favourite lounge and go to her.

"You must let me visit Will," I say coaxingly. "He asks for Norah or me; and you cannot spare Norah."

"No"—Norah's voice is decisive—"it would be folly for me to think of going. How would you and Olive get on in France without me? You would be starved or poisoned. It must be Deborah."

[illegible]

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

YOUNG FOLKS.

Wonder-Land.

BY CAROLINE A. MASON.

I wonder what makes the sky so blue;
I wonder what makes the moon so bright,
And whether the lovely stars are born,
Like brand-new babies, each summer night.

And why do they hide when daylight comes?
I wonder where in the world they go!
Perhaps, when the great, hot sun gets up,
They dry like dew, or they melt like snow.

I wonder what makes the flowers so sweet;
And where do they get their splendid dyes?
And why should some be as red as blood,
And others blue as the summer skies?

I wonder, too,—but so much there is
To puzzle my little head!—and oh,
I doubt if ever I'll find out half
The things that I want to know!

Chased by a Hoop-snake.

In the Yelgree forest, near our trading-post, there was a big snake that had adopted rapid transit. I saw him when he first learned it. He was chasing a small hoop-snake, when the little one put his tail in his mouth, after the manner of his kind, and rolled clean out of sight. Well, what did his big snakeship do but put his own tail into his mouth, and begin practicing! After a few turns he grew accustomed to the thing, and in half an hour could beat the best bicycle time on record.

A few days after this I shot a deer, and was carrying its horns home. As I was passing a few hundred yards from the Yelgree forest, I saw what [illegible] coming out of the wood. It was the biggest wheel I ever saw. I felt almost as if the [illegible] had got loose from its fixings.

"Hoop la!" I cried, and then I shut up, for I saw it was the big revolving python.

'Twas no use shooting at his head, for he was revolving at the rate of sixty miles an hour; and no use trying to escape, unless I could hire an express engine on the spot. So I just lay down to make it harder for the reptile to swallow me.

When the snake came up and noticed the horns, he shivered, just as a Christian would if he saw a horned man! As I lay, they must have seemed to be growing out of my head, and the python may have mistaken me for the Old Serpent himself. Whatever his idea may have been, he had not ceased shivering before he made tracks for the forest and let me go.

On my way home I reflected that horned animals are bad for the health of serpents, which swallow their prey whole, and that, time and again, imprudent pythons and boas have been found dead with deer all swallowed but the antlers.

"A snake," I said to myself, "that is smart enough to take a hint in the way of locomotion is smart enough to take a hint in the way of feeding."

Anyhow, his prudence or his fears lost him a good meal, for I was fat then. A little learning is a dangerous thing for snakes.

Bread Making in Spain

The bread in the south of Spain is delicious; it is white as snow, close as cake, and yet very light; the flour is most admirable, for the wheat is good, pure, and the bread well kneaded. The way they make this bread is as follows: From large, long panniers filled with wheat, they take out a handful at a time, sifting it most carefully and expeditiously, and throwing every defective grain into another basket. This done, the wheat is ground between two circular stones, as it was ground in Egypt two thousand years ago, the requisite rotary motion being given by a blindfolded mule, which paces round and round with untiring patience, a bell being attached to his neck, which, as long as he is in movement, tinkles on, and when it stops he is urged to his duty by the shout of "arre mula" from some one within hearing. [illegible]

[illegible]

Dr. Legge, Professor of Chinese at Oxford, [illegible] Chinese at [illegible] rate of [illegible] Christianity [illegible] there will be [illegible] 100,000,- [illegible] Chinese [illegible]

Young women often keep their lovers by [illegible] "love, like [illegible]

Love and Hate Under Palace Roofs

ROYAL MARRYING AND GIVING IN MARRIAGE —A PRINCELY HOUSEHOLD BROKEN UP— SOME NOTABLE LOVE MATCHES IN VERY HIGH LIFE.

Even the loftiest social regions are not free from matrimonial storms. Only the other week a princess's household went to pieces as suddenly as any broker's could have done. The affair has been kept very quiet, but nevertheless I am able to tell the story to the readers of the Sun. The husband, the son of the dethroned king of Hanover, who died in Paris, sent his wife, the daughter and sister of reigning kings, back to her family, and this, too, at a time when she had but recently presented him with a child. The illustrious couple were married less than two years ago. The wife, Marie Sophie, princess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, is according to Mme. de Metternich, "la princesse la mieux et la plus elevee de l' Europe." Indeed, her extraordinary height threatened to make an old maid of her, when one day a prince came along who was taller by several inches, and, moreover, had a very pretty fortune of his own, and was not disposed to be exacting in the matter of the dot. So these two Royal Highnesses was wedded.

For the first month all went well. The Princess is witty and charming. She paints with talent, and is a fine musican. If she does not enthral your eyes, she knows how to capture your ears. In short, she is a delightful companion. The Prince is a man who can appreciate these accomplishments. It was thought that the "Almanach de Gotha" had chronicled another happy royal marriage. Presently it was announced that the Princess was about to become a mother. Unhappily, the baby proved to be a girl. This was a bitter disappointment for the Prince, and the first link in the conjugal chain was broken. The Prince was not gentleman enough to conceal his chagrin. He went so far as to address bitter speeches to his wife, who, having a sharp tongue of her own, answered them as they deserved to be answered. In a little while this princely household resembled that whose interior is so comically displayed in the first act of "La Boule" at the Palais Royal. The tempest was in the air; it needed only an anonymous letter to precipitate it.

From this letter the Prince learned that, in fancying himself his wife's first love, he had been cherishing an illusion. While still a young girl, at the court of her father, she had cast favouring eyes on a brilliant gentleman, the Count de R——, and things had gone so far that, to cure her of this fancy, her mother took her to Switzerland, where they spent a whole season in travel. The writer of this mischievous letter invited the Prince to satisfy himself as to its truthfulness, and indicated the means of doing so.

What man or woman was cowardly enough to commit this scoundrelly action I don't know; what I do know is that the Prince did not disdain to act upon the anonymous letter. He made inquiries, and their result infuriated him. He went on in such a way that the Princess one fine night slipped out to the railroad station and took the first express train for her father's capital. The Prince set out soon after for Italy, with the intention of afterward spending some time in the Orient. The affair is so recent, that I suppress the names.

These early love affairs among our young princesses are a good deal more common than is generally supposed. The Grand Duchess Olga of Russia, now Queen of Wurtemberg, became so much interested in M. Bressant, the elegant amoureux of the Comedie Francaise, then playing in St. Petersburg, that the Emperor Nicholas, her papa, had to send the too fascinating actor across the frontier. It is no secret for any one in English society that Princess Louise, to-day Marchioness of Lorne, and Princess Mary of Cambridge, at present the Duchess of Teck, had idyllic flirtations when they were young girls with two gentlemen of distinction at the court of Queen Victoria. Every one remembers the romantic passion of Princess Frederica of Hanover for a simple soldier of fortune. Still more recently we have seen the Princess of Wurtemberg marry an obscure physician. Princess Marie of Hanover is about to follow the example of her elder sister by marrying a subaltern of the Hanoverian army. Thus we see that if sometimes it is hard to be a princess, there are rare cases in which love proves stronger than the prejudice of caste.

The old house of Bourbon at this moment has its case of true love, and it is this idyl the hero of which is a very popular gentleman on the outskirts of the literary world of Paris, that explains why the most blonde of all the blonde Princesses de Bourbon is in danger of becoming an old maid, or, as we say in Paris, of braiding St. Catharine's tresses, in spite of her charming face and her two millions of dot. She has in her own family a touching and romantic precedent. I refer to the love of Princess Louise Adelaide de Bourbon for the Marquis de la Gervaisals of the old house of Labourdonnaye-Monthue. It was at Bourbonne les Baine, where the Prince de Conde and his daughter were drinking the waters, that the Marquis made the acquaintance of the beautiful Louise Adelaide. The Princess was 15 years old; she was full, slender, and had a most lovable face. Bereaved of her mother, brought up in the seclusion of the convent of Beaumont, she came into the world as innocent as a nun, but predisposed to romance. The Marquis de la Gervaisals, true sub-lieutenant that he was, could not resist such charms; he fell head and heels in love. He was understood, and then began between him and Mlle. de Bourbon a liaison, spiritual, heavenly, paradisaical, of which we have the reflection in the Princess's letters, printed some years ago. The dream with golden wings lasted fifteen months. Then one day, yielding to the necessities of her rank, her eyes wet with tears, the royal Juliet bade her Romeo an eternal adieu: "We shall not see one another any more. Don't hate me; but don't love me any more."

The Marquis was faithful to his love; he proved it when Mlle. de Bourbon, who had taken the veil under the name of Marie Josephe de la Misericorde, died a Grand Prioress. Then he printed a little book, "Une Ame de Bourbon," which has all the tender perfume of the romantic passion of which it was the funeral dirge.

More happy than her cousin, Princess Marie Amelie de Deux Siciles, carried off from the court of her father, Ferdinand I., by the Duke de Chartres, than an exile and without fortune, sees her girlish dream crowned by the most beautiful and the happiest union which any royal house of our epoch has known. Forty years of unclouded happiness followed the romantic prologue necessitated by the extreme youth of the lovers.

Wholly of our own time is the romantic incident which brought about the marriage of the Archduchess of Austria, Marie Louise, with the Prince d'Isenbourg-Birstein. The Archduchess, daughter of Grand Duke Leopold of Tuscany, was out hunting. Her horse ran away. The Prince bravely sprang at the head of the animal, and was lucky enough to stop him. The hand of the royal horsewoman was his reward.

All love matches do not turn out happily, however, even for princes. One of the most famous marriages of this century is at this very moment having the saddest of epilogues. A constitution of distinguished alienists was held only a few days ago at Vienna to determine what should be done with Prince Guillaume de Montenuovo. The Prince, who went mad suddenly, is the son of the Empress Marie Louise and of the Comte de Neipperg. This gentleman became, under the title of chevalier d'honneur, the constant companion of the Empress after the fall of Napoleon I. He ended by becoming her husband, thus succeeding the great man who had been only the political husband of a woman fitted to be a happy wife in a happy home. This unfortunate Prince de Montenuovo owes his title to the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, who simply translated into Italian the German name of Neipperg.

The Prince had a sister, the Countess de San Vitale, who was one of the heroines of the Italian revolution. It is she who was the godmother of the Italian tricolor, and who led the funeral cortege of the patriots killed by the Austrian troops. Strange company for the daughter of an empress and the granddaughter of an emperor and of a king! Prince Montenuovo married the Countess Bathyani, who bore him three children. She died in 1874.

A tragic fate seems to pursue the posterity of this Comte de Neipperg, this illustrious man with one eye, whom Mme. de Stael called the German Boyard. He had four sons by his first marriage with the Countess Pola. The eldest, having lost a first wife, was fortunate enough to please the Princess Royal of Wurtemberg, Marie, daughter of William I., and married her. While out hunting he fell from his horse, struck on his head, and was a lunatic to the day of his death. The second son, Commander of Malta and distinguished in science, died of cholera. The third son, an officer in the Austrian hussars, one day forbade a soldier to go into a wine shop. The soldier seized a pistol and shot him dead. The fourth son, Ervin, is the only one living; he is a Knight of the Golden Fleece, an Austrian General, and has children. So the Neipperg line has escaped extinction.

The mischievous god has brought about many other unexpected marriages in the princely houses of Europe, and has blocked the combinations of the most eminent diplomats. It is he who made of the Princess Louise of Hesse, aunt of the Queen of Denmark, sister of the Duchess of Cambridge, a plain Countess von der Decken. Then, too, there is the Princess Henriette of Schleswig-Holstein Sonderburg, sister in-law of Princess Helena of England. For the past eight years she has been the wife of Prof. Esmarch, a distinguished doctor, who succeeded so well in interesting the Princess Helena and Princess Augustine of Wurtemberg with Baron du Bourget and Count de Thun-Hohenstein. I might cite many more, but these are enough to show how wisely Scribe wrote when he pencilled on the pedestal of a statute of Cupid these pretty verses:

Qui que tu sois voici ton maitre
Il l'est, le fut, ou le doit etre.

Circumstantial Evidence.

A REMARKABLE STORY FROM THE LIPS OF UNITED STATES SENATOR DAN VOOHEES.

I remember once defending, at Crawfordsville, Ind., a man named Owen, indicted for the murder of his wife by poison. It was twenty-odd years ago. Owen was a respectable farmer, in good circumstances, and a consistant church member. He had been twice married. He had several children by his first wife; his second was childless, a circumstance which peculiarly affected her mind and temper. She would not permit his children to reside with her, and compelled him to find a home for them elsewhere. She had a fancy, too, that he was criminally intimate with the wife of one of his tenants. She had frequently threatened suicide in consequence of these troubles.

One night Owen was awakened from sleep to find her dying. He called in assistance and sent for a physician, but she was dead before any one arrived. Her sudden demise excited suspicion, and three days after her burial this was communicated to him by a friend, who further informed him that arrangements had been made to disinter the body and investigate it.

Owen was greatly agitated at this intelligence, and, after a short pause, replied: "If this is done, and poison is found in Kezia's stomach (his deceased wife's Christian name), I will be accused of her murder, convicted and hanged. But I am as innocent of it as that tree," pointing to one near by.

That night he transferred all his property to a son, disguised himself, and fled the country. The body of his wife was exhumed and an autopsy had. Enough strychnine was found in her stomach to kill a mule. There was a universal expression of horror at the discovery, and a large reward was offered for the arrest of the fugitive. After some months he was found in Canada, where he was living under an assumed name. He was brought to Crawfordsville in irons, and it was with difficulty that his execution by a mob could be prevented.

Joe McDonald (now my colleague in the Senate), Jim Wilson, once a Representative in Congress and subsequently Minister to Venezuela, and myself defended him. There was a formidable prosecution, Lew Wallace, Judge Gregory, and others appearing against him.

It was proven that a short time before Mrs. Owen's death her husband had purchased strychnine at a drug store in the neighbourhood, telling the druggist that he wanted it for poisoning rats. But he asked that it should be charged to him, a fact upon which we laid great stress in the argument, insisting that had he entertained a criminal design in buying the drug he would not have put the damnable evidence of the fact upon record. A daughter who was visiting her father's house when the poison was brought home, testified that he handed it to her stepmother in her presence, cautioning her to be careful with it. A brother of his wife, who was greatly embittered against him, and was a witness for the State, admitted upon cross-examination that Owen's treatment of his sister was invariably considerate and kind. There was an entire failure to establish the fact of his having improper relations with other women.

This was all we had to base a defence on. The odds were fearful. There was the remark of the marked agitation of Owen when first informed of the suspicions existing against him, his admission that if a post-mortem examination showed that poison was the cause of his wife's death he would be accused of administering it and hanged; his purchase of the poison; his transfer of his property and flight, all combined, nearly irresistibly led to the conviction of his guilt. "Mr. Toorhees," he said to me, "however darkly things may appear against me, I am not guilty;" and I believe him. We fought the case like tigers upon the reasonable doubt which we deemed the evidence had not excluded, and won it.

Such an uproar as followed I never witnessed. Owen was taken to Wilson's private residence, pursued by a crowd crazed with disappointment and thirsting for his blood. Wilson, McDonald, and I stood at the front gate, with pistols in our hands, and checked the approach of the mob until Owen could escape from the rear of the house in a conveyance that had been provided for him. It is the only time in my life that I ever saw McDonald with a pistol. He showed an unmistakable purpose to use it if necessary.

Owen went to Texas and died there, I presume, as I have never seen nor heard of him since. His wife had committed suicide. He knew it, but preferred to keep the fact to himself to avoid scandal and exposing her. He was a weak, but an honest man. For his safe deliverance he was indebted to a capital jury, men who could be neither bought nor scared. The foreman had served the county in the State Senate, others had held office, and all were persons of consideration and influence.

Victoria's Good Heart.

There is an advantage, after all, in being a Queen as well as a woman, when a heroic act is to be recognized in an effective as well as tender way. And it must be acknowledged that Queen Victoria never fails to use this her prerogative with admirable and fine discretion. Two English soldiers, it will be remembered, Melville and Cogbill, were killed at the battle of Isandula, Zululand, while bravely attempting to rescue the colors of their regiment. Their widows were pensioned, of course, but the Queen's own womanly heart suggested a further and more gracious recompense. She sent out by the Empress Eugenie two wreaths, and the Empress, after she had made her pilgrimage to the spot where her son was killed, continued her journey to find the graves of those obscure English soldiers and to lay the wreaths upon them with her own hands. She wrote afterward a letter to the Queen describing the wild, grand spot where they are buried, the heroic circumstances of their death, as she had been able to learn them, adding a few words of earnest sympathy for them and congratulation for the sovereign who had men so brave to lose; all of which the Queen copies in her own hand and sends with a letter of earnest sympathy to the widows of the dead heroes. Certainly there is something in being a woman as well as a Queen. Even to a practical American, mourning for her dead, the knowledge that these two women, who had been seated upon thrones, had suffered precisely like herself, and held out their hands to her in sympathy, would bring a certain consolation. To loyal English women the few scribbled words would out value all pensions or rewards.

A Horrible Fight.

One of the most novel fights, with most horrible results, that has ever been brought to the notice of the police, occurred at a few minutes past 12 o'clock one night at the Union iron and steel foundry dock, near the corner of Thirty-second street and Ashland avenue. A gang of workmen were engaged in unloading iron ore, when two of them, William Doyle and Timothy Connell,—both burly men,—became engaged in a quarrel. Just how it began none of their fellow-workmen could tell, for they were at it before they were noticed. After talking loudly for a moment or two they clinched and fought for the mastery—something which neither of them could gain. Finally, apparently with a mutual understanding, they let go, separated, and began to look about for weapons. Suddenly each seized a kerosene bracket lamp, and with a curse, hurled them at each other. Each lamp struck its mark, and the dull "thud" was followed by two bright explosions, and the horrified workmen beheld their comrades wrapped in flames. It was some moments before they were able to put out the fires and when they had extinguished them, it was only to find the men unconscious, and most horribly roasted. Each was conveyed to his house—Doyle to the corner of Church place and Archer avenue, and Connell to the corner of Wood and Fourteenth street. The physicians who are attending the poor fellows say that Doyle will, in all probability die, and that Connell, although he is badly injured, may recover. The chances are against the recovery of both, however, and, should both die, it will create no surprise. Both men are past middle life and are married, with families.

Apples, Apple Juice, Cider, Vinegar.

This is most emphatically "the bearing year" with apples. Not only are well kept orchards in full bearing, but every superannuated and half-decayed tree, and every scrub and chance seedling by the roadside, is loaded in a manner seldom seen in a lifetime. With this abundance it is evident that with apples there will be a glut in the market. There will be no room except "higher up," and those who send poor fruit to market had better use their barrels for fire-wood, and save the freight charges. There is always a certain demand to be met, but this year only the select fruit will supply it. In years of plenty, careful selection and neat packages tell. The almost daily inquiries as to fruit dryers show that preparations are being made to dry a share of this abundance, and we hope by this article to anticipate the inquiries that will soon be made as to disposing of the fruit in the various liquid forms. Apple juice, as it comes from the press, or "sweet cider," is liked by many, and we have inquiries as to keeping it in the unfermented state. Preserving powders are advertised, and some of these from their effectiveness in preserving fruit will no doubt keep fruit juice equally well. The majority will wish to preserve their sweet cider without addition, and these can treat it by the same method used in canning fruit. Heat the cider to the boiling point, bottle and cork it while still hot. When apple juice is exposed to the air, the natural ferment it contains causes a change to take place. The sugar in the juice is converted into alcohol, and carbonic acid is given off. The process may be carried on until all the sugar is decomposed, when it is "hard" cider. The fermentation may be arrested at the desired point by bottling, and sparkling cider will be the result. This, which is also called "champange cider," can only be produced before the fermentation is quite finished. The best still cider is made from late ripening apples, when the weather is cool, fermented slowly at as low a temperature as possible, taking care to exclude the access of air; when fermentation has quite ceased, the cider should be racked off into a clean cask, and kept securely bunged or bottled. The great use of apples in this year will be to make vinegar. In the fermentation of cider, the sugar of the apple juice is converted into alcohol, and in making vinegar, that alcohol it changed into acetic acid. The conditions of this change are full exposure to the air and a high temperature. The richer the cider in alcohol, the stronger will be the vinegar, and the more slowly will the change take place. Ordinarily, the cider is put away in the cellar or some out-building, and in time, it may be two or three years or more, will be found to be changed into vinegar. Those who have heard of the "quick vinegar process," thinking it can be applied to cider; we are often asked to give a description of it. In this process, a liquid containing alcohol, usually formed of cheap whiskey, is converted into vinegar in a few hours. But this is not applicable to cider, for in the fermentation of cider or other fruit juices, the change into vinegar is accompanied by the growth of a very low form of plant, "the mother," as it is usually called, and this would so clog up the apparatus of the quick method as to very soon put a stop to it. Still, the change of cider may be greatly hastened. Those who make cider vinegar on a large scale have a house especially for the work, and this heated to about 70°. Vinegar can not be made rapidly at a much lower temperature. Exposure to the air is important, hence the casks are not filled, but only partly so, in order to expose a broad surface of the liquid to the action of the air. Exposure is increased by frequently transferring the cider from one cask to another, letting it run very slowly. Exposure can be promoted by allowing the partly formed vinegar to slowly run down a long trough, and also by allowing it to trickle over corn cobs placed in a cask, the cobs having been previously washed and soaked in good vinegar. Old vinegar acts as a ferment, and hasten the change, and the mixing of new and partly formed vinegar with a portion of old and strong vinegar helps the change. Another method to hasten vinegar making is to add yeast to cider, or what produces the same effect, the "mother" from vinegar barrels. The conditions for the most rapid conversion of cider into vinegar may be summed up: A temperature of at least 70°, all possible exposure to the air, the addition of old vinegar to the new or the use of "mother." It should be remembered that the weaker the cider in sugar the weaker will be the vinegar, and the more rapid the change.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

THE Rev. F. W. Peel proposes a testimonial to the Bishop of Lincoln for his active opposition against the Burials bill.

COPIES of the New Testament in Japanese have been placed in the schools of Yokohama by order of the authorities of that city.

IT is said that the value of the offerings at a recent heathen festival in India amounted to $1,100,000, most of which came from poor people.

PRINCESS EUGENIE, sister of the Queen of Sweden, is actively engaged in enlisting the Swedish women in behalf of the conversion of the Laplanders.

THE Rev. Dr. Marshal, a prominent minister of the United States Presbyterian Church of Scotland, died recently at Coupar-Angus. He received his degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of the City of New York in 1865.

A LETTER from Rome says the health of the Pope continues to be good. He takes his accustomed morning walk and afternoon drive, and continues daily to receive in private audience the Cardinals and prelates of his Court, as well as private individuals.

THE case of the Dean of Pictermaritzburg, Dr. Williams, who rebels against the authority of the Bishop of the Diocese of Grahamstown, has been heard at Cape Town, before the Supreme Court of the Colony, whose decision is not announced. Questions of property and even of succession to the Bishopric are involved.

AN English Low Churchman discovers in the recent deaths of several clergymen of his party an indication that "God has a controversy with the evangelical section of the Church of England." One of the special sins of the party, he thinks, is that it has entered upon the "downward path of compromise" with advanced High Churchmen.

A CHURCHMAN calls the attention of the Bishop of London to the fact that an ordained clergyman who preaches in that city recently took for his text "The Lord Said," and began his sermon thus: "Of course you know, my brethren, that the Lord never said anything of the kind." There are, he says, "two or three score" of preachers of this kind in and about London, who believe those parts of the Bible they like, and reject the rest.

ALL SORTS.

SOMETHING to lie about—A bed.

HEAD clerks—Barbers' assistants.

A PARTIALLY deaf man has the [illegible] fever.

How to make a slow horse fast—[illegible] feed him.

A GOOD whisky sling—Sling the [illegible] out of the window—after it is empty.

"ALCOHOL will clean silver." Yes, [illegible] hol well stuck to, will clean all the silver you have—out of your pocket.

WHY is "i" the happiest of vowels? [illegible] cause it is in the midst of bliss; "e" is in hell, and all the rest are in purgatory.

[illegible] recently found a [illegible] LARGE [illegible] was cutting up into steaks [illegible] of the [illegible] the animal had swallowed [illegible]

A DANBURY man with a hammer, went to New York, last week, to secure a piece of the obelisk. But the police nabbed him before Egypt it off.

"CIRCUMSTANCES alter cases," said an unsuccessful lawyer, "and I wish I could get hold of some cases that would alter my circumstances."

AN old salt, when asked how far north he had ever been, replied that he had been so far north "that the cows, when milked beside a red-hot stove, gave ice-cream."

AN old angler says that a fish does not suffer much from being hooked. Of course not. It is the thought of how his weight will be lied about that causes his anguish.

THE young physician returns from his vacation to find his patients as lively as crickets. He inwardly vows that he will stay at home and attend to business hereafter.

A YOUNGSTER joyfully assured his mother the other day, that he had found out where they made horses: he had seen a man finishing one—"he was just nailing on the last foot."

HER mother said the little creature lived on love; but one month after marriage, when the grocery bill came in, he saw that he had made the greatest oversight of his life in not ascertaining what that particular love was for.

"HOLE on dar," said a colored man, [illegible] ing an acquaintance. "Does yer cross de street ebbery time yer sees me ter keep from payin' dat bill?" "No, I don't, sah." "What fur, den?" "Ter keep from bein' axed fur it."

AMONG the Sisters of Mercy who accompany the Russian army are two Princesses and a beauty with a fabulous fortune. These women maintain out of their own means the well-appointed ambulances to which they are attached.

IT is said that St. Louis has the politest lawyer in the country. A long and loud roll of thunder having stopped him in the midst of an address to the jury, on resuming he bowed and courteously said: "Gentlemen, please excuse this interruption!"

WHEN Dr. Tanner returned to food a gentleman brought him one small ripe plum to begin with. "What on airth's that?" asked the doctor, who was very irritable. "Well," replied the amiable stranger, "I thought, as you'd just finished a fast, you might like to try a sloe."

A LAWYER and a preacher were discussing the direction of the wind. The former said: "We go by the court-house vane." "And we go by the church vane," replied the parson. "In the matter of wind that is the best authority," said the lawyer. And the preacher went home to cogitate.

COUNT OSMOND, who has just [illegible] Vienna in his drag and four from [illegible] went to a public concert with a gentleman friend and a particularly handsome [illegible] A young man regarded her in so grossly impertinent a manner that the Count said something sharp to him, whereupon [illegible] struck the Count a violent blow. He [illegible] the name of Baron Belville on being arrested.

THE papyrus manuscript recently discovered in the cave of a hermit near Jerusalem and said to be the work of St. Peter, has been submitted to a committee sent out by the Biblical Society of London, and they have come to the conclusion that the papyrus is in reality the work of the great apostle. They have offered $100,000 for the document [illegible] vain.

A SCENE in a picture gallery shows a "model model" in a man who serves as model for an artist, and in the artist's absence explains the picture to a lady visitor. "From whom did Mr. McGup paint that head?" "From yours obediently, madam. I sit for the 'eds of all 'is 'oly men." "You must find you a very useful person." "Yes, madam; I order his frames, stretch his canvas, wash his brushes, set his palette, and mix his colors. All he's got to do is to shove 'em on."

HAHNEMANN, the founder of the homeopathic school, was one day consulted by a wealthy English lord. The doctor listened patiently to the statement which the patient made to him. He took a small phial, opened it, and held it under his lordship's nose. "Smell! Well, you are cured." The lord asked in surprise, "How much do I owe you?" "A thousand francs," was the reply. The lord immediately pulled out a bank-note, and held it under the doctor's nose. "Smell! Well, you are paid."

A DECENTLY-DRESSED workman came to a photographer's to have the portrait of his wife taken. While the operator was arranging the camera, the husband thought fit to give some advice to the companion of his life concerning her pose. "Think of something serious," he said, "or else you will laugh and spoil it. Remember that your father is in prison, and that your brother has had to compound with his creditors; and try to imagine what would have become of you if I had not taken pity upon you."

THE new banking house of the Messrs. Childs in London was opened at the close of last month. It is a very handsome structure and thus presents a marked contrast to the dingy old building that formerly stood on the site. The chief partner in Childs' is the Earl of Jersey, whose grandmother inherited an interest in the bank. Many of the families who keep account there have banked with the firm for two centuries. [illegible] derives a large income from unclaimed balances. The other partners are nominated by Lord Jersey. The bank has a large connection among old Roman Catholic families.

IF you want to keep your boy at home, make it pleasanter for him than the street. Chalk a hop-scotch in the hall, put a hogshead of molasses on tap in the kitchen, have a dog-fight in the back yard, make a "belly slide" on the cellar door, have a hand-organ and a monkey in the reception-room and a German band on the stairs, hire a "Gentleman" to be chaffed, let the boy chalk callers' backs on the first of January, throw his base-ball through the windows, ring the bell, and run away, and "plug" the cook with snow-balls Sunday mornings; but even then you will have to engage a circus to go through the premises two or three times in the season to "make it pleasanter than the street."

A FORTUNE TELLER was arrested in Paris and carried before the tribunal of the correctional police. "You know how to tell fortunes?" said a man of great wit, but [illegible] the fond of a joke for a magistrate. "I [illegible] sir," said the sorcerer. "In that case," said the president, "You know the judgment I intend to pronounce?" "Certainly." "What will happen to you?" "Nothing." "You are sure of that?" "Yes; you will acquit me." "Acquit you?" "There is no doubt about it." "Why?" "Because, sir, if it had been your intention to condemn me, you would not have added insult to misfortune." The president, disconcerted, turned to his brother judges, and the sorcerer was discharged.

Coal In Manitoba.

Notice was taken some months ago of the discovery of coal in Manitoba by the Canadian geological surveyors. Recently [illegible] barge loads of coal arrived at Winnipeg from the Souris country, the first instalment from what is styled the future Pensylvania of the Dominion. The coal was forty-three days coming down the river, and is said to be of a serviceable quality. The barges are constructed at the coal fields, out of the timber made from trees felled on the spot. [illegible] difficulty was experienced on the journey, timber jams and other obstructions to navigation were met with, but all were overcome, and the feasibility of Souris navigation determined. It is anticipated that there will be sufficient water in the river until August in each year to float barges down. At present there is twenty feet of water in the [illegible] Mr. Hugh Sutherland, proprietor of the mines, has expended some $15,000 on the experiment, and now that he is satisfied of success, will go on with the work on a larger scale. He intends to make one trip a year, building sufficient barges to bring down all the coal needed for a year's supply.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

[illegible] contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, [illegible] if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying [illegible] will be held responsible for the subscriptions until they comply with the rules.

All letters addressed to the Editor must be pre-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

One column one year		[illegible]
Half do	do	[illegible]
Quarter do	do	[illegible]
Eighth do	do	10 [illegible]
[illegible]	do	4 60
[illegible] lines and under, first insertion		50
Each subsequent insertion		15
From six to ten lines, first insertion		75
Each subsequent insertion		25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line		8
Each subsequent insertion		2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid, and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

The Return of the Dead.

A year she had slept the sleep of the dead,
When the young wife rose from her narrow bed.

To her it seemed but a night of woe
That she had lain in the dark below.

No count had she of the passing hour,
Of winter frost or of spring-tide shower;

And over her shrouded head in the tomb
Had flourished and faded a summer's bloom.

She woke from her sleep with yearning love
For the husband and child she left above.

"My little son was but ten days old
When I came to lie in the churchyard mould.

My arms had held him but once to my breast
When they laid me here in my lonely rest.

And my husband dear, woe worth the day
He wept and wept when they bore me away;

When death took from him the light of his life;
When death took from him his dearest, his wife!

Oh, might I see him once more in our home,
Oh, might I but once in his presence come.

Might I rock our babe in his cradle-bed,
Then would I come back and rest with the dead!"

Her prayer was granted: through stone and through clay
By the might of her love she forced her way.

Swiftly through lane and through field has she sped,
And no man doth see or doth hear the dead.

With yearning love and with trembling fear
She has flitted across the threshold dear.

Unseen and unheard she wended her way
To the chamber aloft where her young son lay.

Like a cloud she brooded above his bed;
He shuddered and smiled at the touch of the dead.

"And now must I comfort my husband dear,
And dry the eyes that have wept for a year.

My lot has been but to slumber and sleep;
But he lives above ground to suffer and weep."

Unseen she stands with her hand on the door—
"He thinks not, he knows not, I hear him once more."

And the gentle tones of his low-tuned voice
Made her dead heart beat and her flesh rejoice.

Full well she knew ev'ry word that he spake—
'Twas a poem of love he had made for her sake;

And though she lay buried a year and a day,
She lived in his mem'ry for ever and aye.

He gave her the sweet name he called her in life;
She listened and heard how he murmured, "My wife!"

And vowed to be true to eternity.
"O faithful beloved, thou thinkest of me!"

Unseen she drifted through panels of oak,
And stood in his presence, nor breathed nor spoke.

O God, what a sight her dead eyes meet!
And closer she gathers her winding-sheet.

A fair young girl by her husband's side,
And her he is calling her dearest, his bride.

The dead is forgotten, thrust out of his life,
And now has he wedded another young wife.

The sorrowful ghost drew a deep sigh of woe—
"Away, away to the dead will I go;

And follow me soon or follow me late,
For thee will I patiently, silently wait;

Nor ever again will I rise to see
How faithless and merry the living can be!"

Cary's Trousseau.

Miss Anna Louise Cary, as every one who comes to this bedlam of fashion, says a Paris letter, is having quite a trousseau made. We happened to call on her dressmaker, and she was delighted to show us something she was making for "la grand cantatrice Americaine, Mlle. Kairie," as she pronounced the name. Her very fine day and evening dresses were not yet begun, but the very obliging lady showed us a very elaborate princess wrapper of light blue cashmere, cut all around in deep-pointed festoons, trimmed with five rows of fine silver braid; above that a quilling of Valenciennes about five inches wide; under the festoons was a knife-blade plaiting covered with the same lace. Buttons were light blue, with a silver star embroidered on them. A travelling dress of thick brown goods. The skirt of large box plaits from top to bottom, with a long postillion waist. A handsome, short dinner dress of two shades of blue, one very light, the other dark. The skirt of large kilts, with double ones of light blue plaited under and the dark blue above. The effect must be very graceful, for a fan-shaped mingling of pale and dark blue is seen with the movement of every step. The [illegible]—long postillion jacket of dark [illegible] velvet, with light [illegible] revers. Also a purple matinee; a plain, demi-trained skirt, simply trimmed with eight or nine rows of silver braid, with a kind of habit-fitting garment trimmed elaborately with the braid.

"I'D have you to know," exclaimed Mrs. Uppacruat, haughtily tossing her head, "that my family always moved in the upper circles." "Yes," whispered Mrs. Blunt to her friend Sarah Jones. "I heard tell that the scum always rises to the top."

"DOES the conversation and carriage of your new minister become the gospel?" asked a learned Bishop of a simple-minded farmer. "Well," was the reply, "his conversation is rather fluid, and he don't keep a carriage."

MISS MURNFORD has an elderly admirer, who the other day presented her with a handsome lace collar. "Now, do not," he said, with a sort of elephantine playfulness, "do not let any one else rumple it." "No, dear," answered Lavinia, "I will be careful to take it off."

LITTLE boy—Mamma, I want a stick of candy. Clever mamma—Which do you want—the stick or the candy? Little Boy—Which would you take, mamma? Clever Mamma—The stick, of course. Little Boy—Well, mamma, you can have the stick—I'll take the candy.

EMBROIDERED linen collars and cuffs of a soft cream colour are very fashionable and exceedingly becoming. They are often edged with lace.

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 4. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY. OCTOBER 8, 1880. WHOLE NO. 4

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

...tains the latest Foreign and Provincial ...s, Local Intelligence, County Business, ...mercial Matters and an Instructive ...cellany.

...25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, ...not paid till end of the year. No papers discontinued until all arrearages are ..., except at the option of the publisher, ...parties refusing papers without paying ...will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

All letters addressed to the Editor must ...-paid, otherwise they may not be ...from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

...olumn, one year	...00
do do	30 00
...er do do	15 00
do do	10 00
do	4 60
...lines and under, first insertion	50
Each subsequent insertion	15
...m six to ten lines, first insertion	75
Each subsequent insertion	25
...r ten lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion	2

...e number of lines to be reckoned by ...pace occupied measured by a scale of ...brevier. Advertisements without ...ic directions will be published till for... ...d charged accordingly. All transitory ...tisements must be in the office of pub... ...on by 11 o'clock on the Thursday ...ing preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

The Return of the Dead.

A year she had slept the sleep of the dead,
When the young wife rose from her narrow bed.

To her is seemed but a night of woe
That she had lain in the dark below.

No count had she of the passing hour,
Of winter frost or of spring-tide shower;

And over her shrouded head in the tomb
Had flourished and faded a summer's bloom.

She woke from her sleep with yearning love
For the husband and child she left above.

My little son was but ten days old
When I came to lie in the churchyard mould.

My arms had held him but once to my breast
When they laid me here in my lonely rest.

And my husband dear, woe worth the day!
He wept and wept when they bore me away;

When death took from him the light of his life;
When death took from him his dearest, his wife!

O, might I see him once more in our home,
O, might I but once in his presence come.

Might I rock our babe in his cradle-bed,
Then would I come back and rest with the dead!"

Her prayer was granted: through stone and through clay
By the might of her love she forced her way.

Swiftly through lane and through field has she sped,
And no man doth see or doth hear the dead.

With yearning love and with trembling fear
She has flitted across the threshold dear,

Unseen and unheard she wended her way
To the chamber aloft where her young son lay.

Like a cloud she brooded above his bed;
He shuddered and smiled at the touch of the dead.

"And now must I comfort my husband dear,
And dry the eyes that have wept for a year,

My lot has been but to slumber and sleep;
But he lives above ground to suffer and weep."

Unseen she stands with her hand on the door
"He thinks not, he knows not, I hear him once more."

And the gentle tones of his low-tuned voice
Make her dead heart beat and her flesh rejoice.

All well she knew ev'ry word that he spake—
'Twas a poem of love he had made for her sake;

And though she lay buried a year and a day,
She lived in his mem'ry for ever and aye.

He gave her the sweet name he called her in life;
She listened and heard how he murmured, "My wife!"

And vowed to be true to eternity.
"O faithful beloved, thou thinkest of me!"

Unseen she drifted through panels of oak,
And stood in his presence, nor breathed nor spoke.

O God, what a sight her dead eyes meet!
And closer she gathers her winding-sheet.

A fair young girl by her husband's side,
And her he is calling her dearest, his bride.

The dead is forgotten, thrust out of his life,
And now has he wedded another young wife.

The sorrowful ghost drew a deep sigh of woe—
"Away, away to the dead will I go;

And follow me soon or follow me late,
For thee will I patiently, silently wait;

For ever again will I rise to see
How faithless and merry the living can be!"

Cary's Trousseau.

Miss Anna Louise Cary, as every one who comes to this bedlam of fashion, says a Paris letter, is having quite a trousseau made. We happened to call on her dress-maker, and she was delighted to show us something she was making for "la grande cantatrice Americaine, Mlle. Kairie," as she pronounced the name. Her very fine day and evening dresses were not yet begun, but the very obliging lady showed us a very elaborate princess wrapper of light blue cashmere, cut all around in deep-pointed festoons, trimmed with five rows of fine silver braid; above that a quilling of Valenciennes about five inches wide; under the festoons was a knife-blade plaiting covered with the same lace. Buttons were light blue, with a silver star embroidered on them. A travelling dress of thick brown goods. The skirt of large box plaits from top to bottom, with a long postillion waist. A handsome, short dinner dress of two shades of blue, one very light, the other dark. The skirt of large kilts, with double ones of light blue plaited under and the dark blue above. The effect must be very graceful, for a fan-shaped mingling of pale and dark blue is seen with the movement of every step. The [illegible]—Vlong postillion jacket of dark [illegible] velvet, with light blue revers. Also a purple matinee; a plain, demi-trained skirt, simply trimmed with eight or nine rows of silver braid, with a kind of habit-fitting garment trimmed elaborately with the braid.

"I'D have you to know," exclaimed Mrs. Uppacrust, haughtily tossing her head, "that my family always moved in the upper circles." "Yes," whispered Mrs. Blunt to her friend Sarah Jones. "I heard tell that the scum always rises to the top."

"DOES the conversation and carriage of our new minister become the gospel?" asked a learned Bishop of a simple-minded farmer. "Well," was the reply, "his conversation is rather fluid, and he don't keep a carriage."

MISS MURNFORD has an elderly admirer, who the other day presented her with a handsome lace collar. "Now, do not," he said, with a sort of elephantine playfulness, "do not let any one else rumple it." "No, dear," answered Lavinia, "I will be careful to take it off."

LITTLE boy—Mamma, I want a stick of candy. Clever mamma—Which do you want—the stick or the candy? Little Boy—Which would you take, mamma? Clever Mamma—The stick, of course. Little Boy—Well, mamma, you can have the stick—I'll take the candy.

EMBROIDERED linen collars and cuffs of a soft cream colour are very fashionable and exceedingly becoming. They are often edged with lace.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Fashion Notes.

GATHERED flounces will be much worn this fall.

JERSEY webbing is shown among recent importations. It will be used for bodices.

HAND-PAINTED bracelets of white kid, mounted with narrow stripes of gold, are fashionable.

THE pilgrimage polonaise, with hood and with cord at the waist, is a novelty in early fall garments.

VERY elegant necklaces, bandeaus, armlets, ear-rings, and brooches of jet have just been imported.

PREraphaelite shoulder capes made entirely of black marabout feathers are considered extremely stylish in New York.

THE earliest importations of French dresses are made up of short dresses for day wear, with very long trained skirts for full dress.

THE little gold pig suspended from chains and bracelets as a charm is a trinket that abroad is worn only by members of the demi-monde.

THE Jersey, after a severe struggle to gain public favour, now bids fair to become as popular here as it has been with the court ladies in England.

AMBER-COLOURED roses are very fashionable on black Spanish lace bonnets. A fringe of amber beads forms a sort of coronet over the hair in front.

FIGURED goods in brocades, stripes, flowers, etc., will be combined with silk only, and plain woollen goods should not be combined with brocaded silk, but only with velvet or else with plaid wool in medium, small, or imperceptible designs, and very dark.

THE Louis XV. jacket, with rounded basques, lace jabot coming down the front, tight sleeves, reaching a little way below the elbow, trimmed with deep ruches, will be used as a model for basques of brocade to be worn with skirts of plain satin or velvet.

FOR the winter, light cloth or plain cashmere will be combined with plain velvet, more frequently, perhaps, than with striped velvet, which has been much abused. The latter will be reserved for corsages that are different from the skirt with which they are worn. Such corsages are rarely made of plain goods.

THE new colours are such as to delight the refined taste. There are, to be sure, the bright shades for all who desire them, but such tints as mulberry, deep claret, with a sort of smoky hue, all shades of heliotrope and olive, dulled by a gray cast, dusky, yellowish browns, and the dark rifle greens are most distinguished.

Rosy Cheeks.

The simple practice of washing with cold, soft water, and rubbing the cheeks briskly with a soft, rough towel as a daily habit, will do more to produce rosy cheeks than the best artificial inventions. Not only may a natural bloom be thus secured, but the fulness of the cheek is sustained by the healthy flow of blood which feeds its muscular structure. The muscles of the cheeks have very little action; they therefore become flabby and sunken at an early age in persons whose habits of life are such as to maintain little energy in the general system. The simple friction of the cheeks will do much to satisfy fair readers who may take the hint.

Their First Quarrel.

Angelina: (bursting into tears which fell upon his manly bosom like a refreshing shower) Leave me. Let me go into the world—the cruel, cruel world, and beg and be refused. Let me starve and die. My soul thirsts for music.

Charles: You think too much of these things, dear. The Joneses can afford it. Let them say what they may. You said you could give up your piano for me, a little while ago.

Angelina: That was the foolish thought of a silly girl. Give up my Chopin! my Gottschalk! my Sternberg! 'Tis too cruel! I'll return home. This monotony is unbearable. (Sobs violently.)

Charles: Well, then, dear, I promise you if you become immediately the sweet, good-tempered Angelina whom I used to know, I will not let another day pass before getting you one. What shall it be, dear?

Angelina: My good, dear Charles, let it be an Upright or a Baby Grand.

The Price of Wives.

The value of wives varies in different countries. In America they are often expensive companions, but in the higher regions of the river Amar, and on the Ussuri, in Siberia, according to information furnished to the British Scientific association by the Rev. Henry Lansdell, the price of a wife is eight or ten dogs, a sledge, or two cases of brandy. In another part of the world, according to evidence furnished to the same association by Wilfred Powell, in New Britain and the neighbouring islands on the east coast of Guinea, the wives are the absolute property of their husbands, and are bought, sold, and eaten by their better halves. There was one New Britain young woman who rebelled at her matrimonal relations, whereupon her husband said he could put her to better use, and straightway killed and ate her. Unfortunately, according to the same authority, the eating in New Britian is not confined to wives. The natives are fond of missionary meat, and think the English are unutterably stupid because they are unwilling to feast on such a delicacy as the human thigh, prepared with cocoanut milk and dressed with banana leaves. Mr. Powell does not advise women to emigrate to New Britain.

Winning a Wife.

"There is nothing," says Lord Shaftesbury, "which is so merely fortune of blind chance than marriage." A curious illustration of his meaning, says an exchange, comes from the staid town of Franklin, Mass. At an evening party there a gentleman challenged a charming young widow to try her fortune at Bassino. She accepted the challenge playfully, proposing that they should play for a wager, and he, agreeing, asked her to name the stakes. Seeing that she was at a loss to respond, the host laughingly said: "His hand against yours." The lady demurred, and was turning away from the table when the challenger interposed with: "My hand for yours if I win, or at your disposal for any young lady of respectability, her consent being attainable, if I lose." The wager was accepted, and the amused company gathered around the board. The lady led off and made 45, her adversary failing to score in return, but, improving in his play as the game progressed, reached 215 to the widow's 164. Growing nervous she played worse and worse, and finally left off the loser by 247 points. Then the hostess advanced, took the fair one's feebly-resisting hand, and placed it in that of the exultant winner, who begged permission to keep the mace with which he had won the match and a wife.

The Science of Kissing.

Science in the last few years, has gained a terrible foothold in this world. It has rattled the dry bones of old fogyism, made pi out of worn-out theories, upset ideas which have been established for centuries. The latest and most astonishing fact that has been developed is that there is a scientific mode of kissing. The day when a young man could grab a girl around the neck and gobble a kiss in a rough but comfortable manner, is past. The time when he could circle her waist with one arm, get his shirt bosom full of hair-oil, and pirouette his lips over every square inch of her countenance, is no more. Science has proclaimed against it, and man shudders, but remains silent. The old style of kissing, which sounds like some one tearing a clap-board off a smoke-house is now considered bad taste, and consequently is rapidly going out of fashion, although the majority of girls admit that science has cruelly destroyed all the comfort of a long-lingering, heart-thrilling kiss, and causes them to express no little regret at the change. The improved scientific method of of kissing is to throw the right arm languidly around the fair one's shoulder, tilt her chin up with the left hand until her nose is pointed at an angel of forty five degrees, or rather until it has an aspect resembling the bowsprit of a clipper-built sloop, then stoop slowly and gaze about her lips in a quiet, subdued sort of way, tickle her nose with your mustache until she cries "Ouch!" This is scientific kissing, but there is no consolation in it—nothing to make a man feel like a couple of galvanic batteries were galloping along his spinal column. It is flat, lukewarm; it lacks substance, and if not stale is at least unprofitable.

DOMESTIC RECIPES.

PIE CRUST.—Three and a half cupfuls sifted flour; one cupful sweet lard, one teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful baking-powder, one cupful very cold water; mix with knife, using hands as little as possible to mix with; roll.

GRAPE JELLY.—Put the grapes in a kettle after they are stemmed, steam them until soft; then train through a cloth while warm; one pound of sugar to a pint of juice; boil 15 minutes; two pounds of grapes generally give one pint juice.

STEWED PEARS.—Peel six middling sized pears; cut them in two and take out the cores; put them into a pan with quarter of a pound of powdered sugar, the juice of a lemon, the thin rind cut into strips, and very little water; set them on a slow fire and stew till tender; put them into a basin and serve when cold with whipped cream.

GRAHAM BREAD.—One pint of water, one quart Graham flour, one pint wheat flour, one yeast-cake dissolved in half-pint water, half a gill of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of soda; mix at night; in morning pour in deep bread pans and bake about one hour; it is too moist to knead with the hands, but requires to be thoroughly stirred with a strong spoon.

TO SOFTEN HARD WATER.—Take two pounds washing soda and one pound of common lime, and boil in five gallons of water for two or three hours; then stand away to settle, and dip off the clear water from the top and put into a jug. Can be used for washing dishes or cleaning, and one teacupful in a boiler of clothes, put in after the water is hot, will whiten the clothes and soften the water, without injury to the hands or clothes. Use an old iron pot to make it in.

TO DESTROY ANTS.—Drop some quicklime on the mouth of the nest, and wash it in with boiling water; or dissolve some camphor in spirits of wine, then mix with water and pour into their haunts; or tobacco water, (strong,) which has been found to be effectual. They are averse to strong scents. Camphor will prevent their infesting a cupboard, or a sponge saturated with creosote. To prevent their climbing up trees, place a ring of tar about the trunk, or a circle of rag moistened occasionally with creosote.

TO REMOVE VERMIN FROM A CANARY BIRD.—Put a piece of cotton around the end of each perch at night, remove the cotton in the morning, (with the vermin.) Put in new, clean perches; clean the cage every day. Give the bird a bath every morning in a good large dish; remove it as soon as the bird is finished, scald the end of the perches every day before putting them in the cage again; renew the cotton around the perches every night, and remove in the morning until the bird is free from the vermin.

A GEORGIA widow, while driving a load of hay, was insulted by a tramp concerning her bonnet. She jumped from the load and gave the fellow a sound thrashing, and in less than a week had three offers of marriage.

A two-story well is one of the curiosities of Erin, N.Y. The two parts are one above the other and separated by ten or twelve feet of hard-pan. Water can be pumped from either well, and the lower one pumped dry while the upper one retains an inexhaustible supply.

BLOCK ISLAND is remarkable in many ways. Of its 1,147 in population 1,032 were born on the island. The inhabitants use peat for fuel, and sea weed nets them over $20,000 a year. There never was a jail or a lawyer among them, and for 120 years no mails came to the island.

The Czar's Marriage.

PRINCE DOLGOROUKI — MELIKOFF — THE PRINCE OF WALES LOCKED UP.

The great event of which every one at St. Petersburg is talking, of course under his breath, for reasons that do not need explaining, is the marriage of the Emperor with the famous Princess Dolgorouki. An English journal has even printed a despatch announcing the celebration of the ceremony, but the news was premature, though it may come true any day. In a recent letter addressed to one of her friends, a grande dame, the ambitious Princess speaks of the event as certain and inevitable. The marriage will be morganatic, and will be celebrated as soon as the Czar lays aside his mourning. The children born to the Emperor by this Princess will receive the title of Altesse, and will occupy at the court of Russia precisely the same place that the legitimized children of Louis XIV. had at the court of the roi soleil. They will take rank after the Grand Dukes. The haughty Princess must perforce give up the dream of wearing the crown of the Czarinas. A morganatic wife, she will have to content herself with the title of Altesse, and will not preside at court or official ceremonies. That duty will devolve on the hereditary Grand Duchess. A suitable dowry will be settled on the Princess, who is already a very rich woman; her income is estimated at nearly a million a year. Little or nothing will be changed at the palace by the Emperor's marriage. It is a private and personal reparation, with which the Russian nation has nothing to do. The ceremony itself will be private, almost secret.

Now that I have spoken of the high society, the great Russian aristocracy, I cannot help saying that its corruption and its abject subserviency to the Czar afford one of the best excuses for the revolt of the Nihilists. Let it be understood that I speak of the aristocracy of the palace, the men and women who go to court and form the entourage of the sovereign. The prodigal extravagance of the courtiers is in cruel contrast with the poverty of the people. I am not mistaken in saying that the morals of our Russian grands seigneurs recall those of the French grands seigneurs of the time of Louis XV. These gentlemen do not feel any shame in living upon their sovereign. For the most part they are not fettered with self-respect. Their object and effort is to get from the Czar all the favours and all the money they can. Count Alexander Walaitinivowitch Adlerberg, Minister of the Imperial Court, and Governor of the Winter Palace, was brought up from boyhood with the Emperor, and is his bosom friend. He is called Adlerberg II., to distinguish him from his father. He is a fast liver, a true "dobrjak," as the St. Petersburgers say. His pet vice is gambling, and luck is often against him.

One morning the Czar, who had started for a walk with his favourite dog, was met by an old woman, who, not recognizing him, asked very humbly if he was employed in the Winter Palace.

"Yes," answered the Czar, "I even have some little influence in the palace. Perhaps I can give you some information."

Then the old lady told him that a long time before she had lent a large sum to Count Adleberg, and that she couldn't get him to pay her. She was in extreme poverty, she said, and did not know to what saint to address her vows.

"I will do my best," answered the Emperor, "and perhaps I may be able to induce the Count to pay you your money. Come at noon to the palace."

Returning to the palace the Czar sent for the Count. The latter frankly acknowledged his indebtedness, but said he had not the wherewithal to discharge it. The Emperor gave him the money out of his own pocket, telling him to hand it to the old woman when she should next come for it.

Next morning the Czar was surprised to find himself again stopped by the old woman.

"Ah," she says, "it is as I feared. I was almost sure that you would not succeed."

"What do you mean," asked the Czar, becoming curious.

"That has always been the way, don't you see, and it always will be. The nobles do what they please, and the poor people are helpless."

"I don't understand you; explain yourself."

"I mean to say that the people of the court, sure of the protection of the Czar, violate with impunity their most solemn engagements."

"Has not Count Adlerberg paid you what he owes you?"

"Paid! Paying is well enough for poor people. As to the rich and powerful, they dispense with that formality if it annoys them. Meanwhile, I am without bread."

The Czar frowned.

"Follow me to the palace, my good woman. You shall have satisfaction."

The Czar walked so fast that the old woman could hardly keep up with him. She still supposed that he was an employee in the palace. When she saw the servants and the people of the court bowing to the ground before him she was stupefied. The guards were for stopping her, but the Czar made a sign, and she followed him into the imperial apartments. Adlerberg was summoned.

"What does this mean?" said the Emperor. "You have not paid this woman, in spite of my orders. What have you done with the money that I gave you."

At these words Adlerberg made such a piteous face that the Czar's anger gave place to a strong desire to laugh.

"Come, sir, explain."

"Well, sire, this is the naked truth: When I got home with the money that your Majesty had deigned to give me, I was assailed by such a crowd of creditors that nothing was left for this old woman. I don't know how the jackals learned that I had this sum. Now I am as poor as I was before. I don't know how it happens, but money cannot stay in my hands longer than a few minutes. Between my fingers it is no longer metal, it is volatile alkali."

The Czar, disarmed, burst into a roar of laughter. When the old woman left the palace she carried away her money.

As I am telling stories, here is another in which this same Count Adlerberg figures. The hero is no less a personage than the Prince of Wales. The thing happened during one of the Prince's visits to the capital of the Czars. Adlerberg had given the Prince a supper which lasted till daybreak. About 4 o'clock in the morning the Prince took leave of the company, jumped into a carriage, and started for the Winter Palace. His Royal Highness had done such honour to the wines, and especially to the foaming champagne, that his ideas were a little mixed. As he was passing the Palace of the Holy Synod he thought he recognized the facade of the imperial palace, and he halted the carriage. The coachman said something to him, but the Prince did not understand Russian. He got up, dismissed the coachman, and then marched up to the door.

A monk, half asleep, opened the door and asked him what he wanted; but the Prince did not understand the monk's Russian any better than he had that of the coachman. Without answering his questions he advanced, not too steadily, into the interior of the edifice, thinking he would find his way to his apartment. The monk undertook to stop him. The Prince is one of the best boxers of the United Kingdom. His first blow laid out the monk, who, believing that he was face to face with the devil, shouted lustily for help. You can fancy the uproar. The police were soon on the ground. As the Prince couldn't make himself understood, and was not recognized, he was taken to the nearest police station.

Fancy the stupefaction at court in the morning when it was discovered that the Prince had not returned to the palace. The Emperor was very uneasy. He scolded the Governor of the palace roundly for having allowed the Prince to set out alone. Then the Grand Master of Police, Feder Feodorowitch-Trepoff, had a happy thought. He gave orders for a search among the police stations, and the heir of the crown of England was found fast asleep among the revellers of lower degree.

The Emperor laughed heartily, but not too loudly, over the adventure, and steps were promptly taken to hush it up.

An Actress' Romance.

The appearance of Miss Ada Cavendish, the English actress, at the Arch Street theatre, says The Philadelphia Times, will lead much interest to her romantic history, which has never been published in this country before. Some forty years ago one of the most celebrated law cases ever tried in England came before the lord chancellor for trial, after being fought from court to court. The issue in question was the legitimacy or illegitimicy of a certain member of the Cavendish family. If the lord chancellor, after examining into the case, should decide that this man was legally born, he would, by virtue of prior birth, be the head of the family and heir to the vast estate that fell with the title of duke of Devonshire. So great results hung on "my lord's" opinion. But the case was never decided, the claimant was so hampered by circumstantial evidence, rather than direct proof of his rights, and the defence saw so clearly that their opponent could make it unpleasant for them, that both parties agreed to a compromise, the details of which are worth reciting, as a curious illustration of the standard of morality in the English aristocracy of that day, which generally approved of the compact.

It was argued that the claimant should be acknowledged as legitimate and the head of the family, taking the title and possessions of the duke of Devonshire for life; but he was expressly forbidden to marry, and on his death the title and property passed to the opposing party. Under such circumstances the duke, being but humrn, naturally formed attachments which the law did not sanction. Most of these, however, were of short duration, but when he had been about nine years in possession of his title he met a Miss Cameron, of Edinburgh, Scotland, to whom he became strongly attached. This lady was of gentle blood, of great personal beauty, and one of the most brilliantly educated and accomplished women of the age. During several years' acquaintance she learned to return the affection of her titled lover, and he, to do him justice, used all the means in his power to protect her good name.

Being forbidden to marry by his legal settlement of the suit, he offered Miss Cameron what is known as a morganatic marriage in Europe. This marriage is conducted in the following manner: The contracted parties are united in wedlock by a regularly ordained clergyman, a marriage certificate being furnished as usual. The wife in this case was known as Mrs. Cavendish, not as the Duchess of Devonshire. Her children were legal, bearing the family name. At the death of the father and mother, intestate, the children inherit his personal estate, the widow having her dower right of one-third, but the Devonshire estates and titles pass to the nearest of kin of the ducal line. This style of marriage was long since invented to give the kings, princes, and nobility generally of Europe a chance to follow the dictates of their hearts without shame, where reasons of state policy forced them into loveless political marriages. Morganatic marriages are very happy, and are not regarded in Europe, especially on the continent, as fastening any shame on the parties participating therein; neither do they entail any loss of social position. Miss Cameron accepted the duke's offer, and was morganatically married to him. They lived together in perfect happiness for eleven years, being parted only by the death of Mrs. Cavendish. The duke survived her about eleven years, but he was a changed man from the day of her death. Formerly genial and hearty, a lover of society, the turf, etc., he became crabbed, nervous, and silent. He shut himself up at Brighton and very seldom saw anyone to his dying day, in 1870.

One child (a girl) was born of this marriage, and was called Ada Cavendish. On her the parents lavished their tenderest love and devotion. She was carefully reared, like any young scion of the British aristocracy, and her beauty, sweet, joyous disposition and brilliant talents combined to make her their idol and the centre of one of the happiest homes of old England. A few years after the mother died the daughter, following her natural bent, placed herself under the tuition of Mrs. Charles Pelby, of the New Royal theatre, London, at which Theatre she soon made her debut as an actress. From that time until the day of his death the appearance of his daughter in a new role was the only thing which could tempt the old duke from his seaside retirement. She was a faithful and devoted daughter, and at her father's death came into possession of his entire personal estate amounting to £10,000—$50,000—and some magnificent jewels. Miss Cavendish has steadily risen in the theatrical world, her success as Mercy Merrick, in "The New Magdalen," rendering her famous in England and America.

In Candahar.

The coppersmiths are just as busy, and rather more noisy; the open shops are crowded with men, some knocking the pots into shape, others engraving, some eating, others idling, while the front of the shop is choked with vessels for sale; and outside, on the ground, one or two men are occupied in cutting out different patterns from copper sheets. Huge open cooking-pots piled one upon the other, salvers of all sizes, portly seamovars or tea urns with carved spouts, brass handle, and charcoal-burner complete, Long-necked water bottles with spouts a foot long, washing basins with top-strainers, hookah stands, shaped like our Indian water-serais, and tall light-burners, arranged both for candle and oil. These candle sticks are curious, and at first you cannot quite make out what they are intended for; the pedestal stands on a dish and takes to pieces, one part being joined by a screw, which works the wrong way as a matter of course. The stem rises from the centre of the dish and carries a fair sized bowl; reversed on this bowl rests a large open vase, and the top of the stem is made to carry a candle; but if oil is to be burned, the stem is prolonged to carry a smaller bowl reversed from which the open oil-dish springs. Another was on quite the same principle, except that the vase was omitted and the bowls were fashioned like palm-leaves, bending over. The object of the bowls being reversed is to reflect the light. The whole of these utensils, with the exception of the cooking-pots, are engraved in different flower patterns, with texts from the Koran interspersed, and the whole is tinned over.

Lassoing a Puma.

(Prescott, Ark., Miner.)

For some time past an old and gigantic mountain lion has been playing havoc with the young colts and calves of different herds around Walnut creek, and so great had the destruction of young animals become of late that a party of experts with the lasso decided upon the capture of the monster. Accordingly, Ike Goodman, Dan O'Leary, and a Mr. Ambrose went out to where he was wont to roam, and laid in wait for him. Mr. Lion appeared every night; therefore, they were pretty sure of their game. They encamped near a band of horses, belonging to George Cornell, and awaited the coming of the "boss" lion in northern Arizona. Just at day-break he heard the cry of a young colt, and knew that his lordship, the lion, was at his work. Mr. Ambrose and Mr. Goodman saddled their horses and prepared their riatas with a view of lassoing the animal. They soon found their game drinking the warm blood from a $100 colt, when Ambrose threw the lasso over the beast, holding him fast and secure. The lion took in the situation and made fight. With one bound he lit on the rump of the horse, ready to perform on Ambrose the operation which he had just concluded on the colt, when Ike Goodman's lasso was thrown over the lion, and in an instant the gallant lion, which measured eight and a half feet, was stretched out longer than any rail that Abe Lincoln ever split when he followed rail-splitting for a livlihood in the early days of Illinois. A costly animal has been disposed of, much to the peace of the colts and calves and the owners thereof.

FOR forty-eight days a Lowhill, Pa., hen was in a grain stack, where she had been accidentally covered up. When released she toppled over in a fit, but soon recovered.

Buying a Bride.

THE MATRIMONIAL AGENT IN PARIS WHO ARRANGES MOST OF THE GREAT MARRIAGES IN FRANCE.

Under an assumed name my friend, says a Paris correspondent, went to the Paris residence of M. de F., the celebrated marriage broker, and having paid the preliminary fee of £40, explained that he came on behalf of a cousin who, although possessed of a handsome fortune and good title, was anxious to increase his worldly goods by contracting a wealthy marriage. My friend further asserted that he acted in his own name, and without the authority of his cousin, but that the consent of the latter, should anything acceptable be proposed, he could answer for. M. de F. at first demurred, and asserted that he was not in the habit of dealing with less than at least one person directly interested in a matrimonial project; but my friend's eloquence, not to speak of the thousand-franc note, at length prevailed, and the great matrimonial agent unbosomed himself.

His terms were 8 per cent. on the dot, and this to be paid within the first year after the celebration of the marriage. Of course my friend consented. Then M. de F. explained that, should nothing be definitely decided on, and the attempt fail, no further expenses would be incurred, the £40 covering all. This pleased my friend still more, for he confessed to me that he had feared he should not be allowed to leave the sanctum of the magician without parting with at least another fifty louis. These preliminaries having passed off to the satisfaction of both parties, M. de F. opened an immense desk and took out from it a bulky note-book, in which my friend solemnly alleges were inscribed the name, age, fortune, disposition, and social status of every heiress not only in France, but in Belgium, Austria, Holland, Italy, England, and every other country in Europe. M. de F. airily explained that he despised American heiresses, as their fortunes could never be relied upon. M. de F. read out his list, somewhat as follows: "Four millions, orphans, red hair, two-and-twenty, subject to epilepsy, clever, but strong-minded; property all in real estate; noble family, Belgian." "Five millions, widow, very susceptible, dark, may or may not have had lovers, but there is no scandal attached to her name; French, good bourgeois family; very fond of titles, but prefers men in the army; will not marry a man under forty; is herself five-and-thirty; property partly in railway shares and partly in French government stock;" and so on ad infinitum.

My friend was thunderstruck, and at first half believed that the list was purely an imaginary one and merely a bait thrown out to attract hungry fish. This doubt was, however, soon dispelled when he selected one out of the many heiresses offered to him, and when M. de F., looking upon the matter as settled, calmly stated the name of the young lady, my friend discovering to his astonishment that he knew the family intimately, and that M. de F.'s intelligence and details were absolutely correct in every particular.

He then explained his system. "Of course, Monsieur le Comte," he said, "It is needless to tell you that these ladies do not come to me themselves and seek for husbands. When a lady has a large fortune and is anxious to get married she has no need of a matrimonial agent. It is her friends, parents, or guardians who come to me—in nine cases out of ten without her knowledge—and, possessing influence over her, offer the heiress to me. in consideration of a fee arranged between us, of course provided I can, among my clients, find a suitable partner. The whole thing is perfectly simple, and the wife need never suspect anything. From the names I have just mentioned you can see for yourself that many of my clients, both male and female, belong to the best nobility ot Europe, and in fact I think I can say, without vanity, that I have had something directly or indirectly to do with most of the leading matrimonial alliances which have taken place in France in the last thirty years, although, since the fall of the second empire business has become rather slack."

What can be more terrible than this? Little does the Duchesse Foule de Persil dream as she dashes out to the Bois de Boulogne that her only and well-beloved daughter is being bought and sold in a dingy little room near the Boulevard Poissonniere by her dear and intimate, though unscrupulous and impecunious, friend, the Marquise Huppe de la Deche. The duchesse has unbounded confidence in the marquise, and has given her carte blanche to bring any of her friends to her house, and when the young Vicomte de la Poisse is introduced—a charming man, and one whose birth and title are above suspicion—he meets with a most cordial reception.

The rest is soon done; the vicomte is represented to the mother as being the very model of young men, madame la marquise uses her influence in every conceivable and inconceivable way, and in nine cases out of ten the marriage comes off, madame la marquise, Monsieur le vicomte, and the matrimonial agent all having a large plum out of the pie, the mother and daughter never suspecting anything. More than three-quarters of the marriages in France—and in the grande monde, mind you—are brought about in this way; for, apart from the professional matrimonial agents, most of the abbes and cures add to their income by mixing in matrimonial intrigues of this natue.

As a matter of fact, indeed, the priests are the most powerful of all matrimonial agents, for the family confessor exercises the greatest influence, and is supposed to be above all suspicion. Who can wonder, after this, that so many marriages in France end in misery and separation, and that M. Naquet meets with support when advocating divorce? There is no remedy for this evil, for one cannot discover it, and in some instances both the bride and the bridegroom are alike ignorant that the fact of their standing before the altar is a matter of so many thousand francs in pocket to two or more of their most intimate and cherished friends. Let it not, moreover, be supposed that we in England are free from this scourge; quite the contrary—there is as much money made in Belgravia as at Sainte Clothilde.

Matrimonial Advice.

Now girls, I want to say one word about getting married. The reason so many unhappy marriages are made, is just because young people do not stop to take a sober second thought upon the matter; but rush on without once considering what the poet calls, "the eternal fitness of things."

Getting married ought not to be the great object of a girl's existence. I often think, when I see young folks so anxious to get married, that if they could look into the future and see what trials, sorrows and troubles are ahead, they would shrink back and not have courage to take vows that are to last till death annuls them.

This getting married is a serious piece of business, any way it can be fixed. Because a young man drives a fast horse, dresses well, and is an agreeable escort, it is no sign that he will make a kind, considerate and loving husband. You want to study him, try him, test his temper, and take time to do it in.

Don't marry in a hurry—you will have time enough to repent, if you do. Never marry for beauty or show. Do not marry a man who is very fond of fast horses; they do not make very nice husbands. I never see such a man but I think, "I pity the girl who marries you." It is a great venture to trust such a man; so girls, look out!

Again, do not marry a man who has a taste for strong drink of any kind. As you value your life's happiness and comfort, let such a man alone; better die than be tied for life to such a person; yes, it is a living death, and you are putting your neck into a heavy yoke.

Never marry a man who cannot govern his temper. He is not safe, either at home or in public, and he will keep you in tormenting fear all your life; and lastly, girls, do not marry a man till you have known him a whole year, at the least; and made him a study for six months; and do not be afraid of being an old maid! Better keep single than be an unhappy wife.

Turkish Domestic Life in the Way of Reform.

Every Turk leads [illegible] in the society of Europeans during six hours of every day. He is then well dressed, vivacious, perhaps intelligent. But this part of his life is not the part which forms his motives. It is not then that the final causes are at work which govern his acts. His life, when he is in the busy whirl of the world, is superficial and unreal. How artificial it is can be seen in the alacrity with which, on his return to the harem, he lays off the broadcloth clothes of his public existence, and dons the white baggy trousers, the open-neck vest, and the long gown dear to his heart. He is only ready to be at ease when he releases his feet from patent leather and from stockings, and thrusts them into unheeled slippers. Then he is himself, for he is at home. The harem is to every Turk his haven of refuge. To it he may flee from every care. About the harem cling all the sweetest associations of his life. All his best feelings find exercise in that sacred place. His mother, perhaps, is there, or his sisters. There only he enjoys the prattle of his children. There alone in all the world can the tired man find the balm of sympathy. There he has his books, and can study in peace if he will. There he enjoys the riches of his splendid flower-garden. In the domain of the women, with hills and vales and moon-touched sea before his eyes, he dreams away his summer evenings under the subtle spell of nature. And here he meets the controlling influences of his life. The women of the harem, mother, sisters, and wives, wait upon the man coming wearily home from his struggle with life. They are to him humble servants or merry companions, as his mood is. They please him with his children, or leave him alone with his books, at his behest. Sooner or later, however, they assert their woman's right of talking on serious topics, and then they have him at their mercy. Now these women who make the home of the Turk are rarely his equals in mental acquirements. No question of blood rules the selection of wives among the Turks. A woman born in a mud hovel often rules a pasha's palace. At the very best, Turkish women rarely have any education beyond the primer. They believe in signs and wonders; in the active agency of evil spirits; in the existence of a great dragon who periodically attempts to swallow the moon; in charms and incantations. In short, they are as superstitious as they can be after centuries of hereditary ignorance. But they are positive in opinion, and intolerant of opposition. Moreover, they are, above all things else, ardent and bigoted Mohammedans. Such are the intellectual surroundings of the Turk during that part of his life which he loves. And when the women of his house turn the conversation upon public affairs, the poor man is helpless in their hands, because he knows the futility of logic in such discussions. Often a pasha meets at home a petition which he has refused in his office, and, yielding to sheer importunity on the part of his women, he rewards the shrewdness of the man who has found means to invoke such aids. Often it has happened that the pasha disapoints an ambassador, and violates his promise to support a new measure, because the women of his household object to the deviation from custom. He must yield to his home circle, or break with them entirely. These women are under no influences by which their opinions may be changed. They live in a world of their own, and are entirely unaware of an existence preferable to their own, and know nothing of that outside world to which they are simply curiosities of antique origin.

This glance at the home life of the Turk and its influences upon him, leaves little to hope from the Turks in the direction of voluntary abandonment of old systems and practices.

Lourdes.

Bernadette Soubirous, a peasant girl at Lourdes, France, was visited by the Virgin Mary in a grotto, so she said, and commanded to scratch on the ground. She did so, and the now famous fountain sprang up. That was in 1858. The Rev. Father Van Schic of Lourdes is now in St. Louis. He vehemently avers the genuineness of the miracles. He says: "Lourdes contains about 6,000 or 7,000 inhabitants, and its growth has not been very large since the miracles began. It is about twenty minutes' walk from the town to the grotto. The road was formerly simply a shepherds' path, but now it is a wide street, with hotels and stores on either side. At the end of the road, just underneath the grotto, there is a large plaza, paved with asphalt, which holds perhaps 8,000 people. The fountain is situated at the foot of the grotto, and beside it a large marble table twelve feet square has been set up, containing the words of the apparition. The church is on the top of the same hill, and is reached by a very steep incline, which is very trying on processions making the pilgrimage. It is very plain, and will hold probably 1,500. The most remarkable thing about it is the inside decorations. The walls are nearly covered with votive tablets, the records of cures. Every procession of pilgrims who come to the place march under a banner, which they leave behind as an offering. These banners, which are almost countless, and some very costly, have been arranged in a thousand different ways, so that the interior of the church is covered with them. Votive offerings of gold, silver, and bronze principally hearts and crosses, serve to complete the curious effect. During the last year several large pilgrimages arrived, and on one feast day there were 25,000 strangers at the shrine, many of them from distant parts of Europe. There were many cures."

The Terrors of Carving.

The misery of habitual carving can hardly be exaggerated. The man who comes home tired from his day's work and sits down to dinner needs a quiet and easy meal. Instead of having this, he is compelled to undergo the labor of carving and to postpone his personal dinner until his appetite has vanished. It is no small labor to carve for a family, say of six persons. The joints of the spring chicken are apparently made of a combination of steel and india rubber, and can neither be cut or dragged apart; while the roast beef, toughened by long years of service in its original shape of ox, requires more strength of wrist on the part of the of the carver than would suffice to saw a twelve inch log. When at last the work of carving is done the delicate and difficult duty of "helping" begins. There can be no peace of mind for the man who helps his family and his occassional guests to any food except soap or oysters, both of which can be accurately and fairly divided. In the case of chicken he can never give satisfaction. There is no rule in this matter beyond that of giving the chicken legs to the boys, which can be followed. To ask people what part of the chicken they prefer is simply madness. Either everybody will tell the truth and demand the best cut, in which case all but one will be exasperated by failing to have their wishes gratified, or everybody will reply, "Any part." "It makes no difference," or words to the same mendacious and aggravating effect. Of course, when the man who says "It makes no difference" is helped to anything but the breast, he becomes the enemy of the carver for life, and nothing can disabuse him of the impression that he has been wantonly insulted. It is far better to boldly help people without making any pretense of consulting their wishes. They will then regard the carver as a rude and careless host; but they will acquit him of any intention to press open insults on his guests.

HE was saying, as he struck a lucifer on the side of the house, "I like these houses with sanded paint; nice, when you want to strike a match, you know." "Is that so?" she asked, demurely. "I wish I lived in a house with sanded paint"—and then she looked things unutterable. If he had asked, "What for?" she would have hated him. But he didn't; he took the hint, and the match was struck then and there.

AFTER travelling one hundred miles through the woods and crossing several streams, a cat that had made the journey in a box escaped and found its way home in British Columbia.

PERSONAL.

THE Duke of Richmond and Gordon, during the recent hard times among them, returned to his Scotch tenants twenty per cent. of their rents.

JOE JEFFERSON owns a portrait of Mrs Siddons as a young girl, representing a wild, eager, and animated beauty, with blowing hair, oval face, and mouth as red as a rose.

THE American Manufacturer says that John B. Jervis, who ordered the first locomotive in America to be made, is living, aged over 80, at Rome, N.Y., and Horatio Allen, who saw the order carried out, and who ran the pioneer locomotive, is living at East Orange, N. J., aged over 70.

THE most extensive cotton planter in the world is Colonel Edward Richardson, of Jackson, Mississippi, whose lands lie on the banks of the river, and who last year raised 13,000 bales from 17,000 acres. At the price at which fair medium cotton sold last year, Colonel Richardson probably realized $650,000 for his crop.

ONE of the London reigning beauties is Mrs. Cropper, who was formerly Miss Thornburg, of San Francisco. She is tall and slight, but perfectly made, has masses of fair hair, and shining blue eyes. At the late Kensington Fair she wore white cashmere, and a straw bonnet trimmed with red, white, and yellow roses, and bracelets set with rubies, sapphires, and diamonds over her long wrinkled gloves.

THE Duke of Argyll and the Duke of Sutherland were once travelling together, when a commercial traveller entered the same railway carriage, and conversation became general. When at last one of the noblemen left the train, the commercial traveller inquired his name. "Dear me!" said he, on being told, "was that really a duke? Just think of his talking in that affable way to a couple of little cads like you and me!"

THERE is a great deal of artistic talent in the family of the late Prince Consort. Several of his children are accomplished musicians, and his brother Ernest, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, is also a composer, and one whose operas have met with favour. He frequently conducts concerts in which his servants are performers, and his favourite occupation is lying in bed in the morning, playing on the flute, while his valet accompanies him excellently on the violin.

WHEN Mr. Ross Winans had made his great fortune in Russia, he returned to Baltimore, built a noble residence there, and ornamented the superb grounds with statuary by the best European sculptors. This statuary so shocked the people that the city government notified Mr. Winans that he must either remove or conceal it, and he surrounded his property with a high brick wall, which the people of the place, better educated at a later day, have in vain asked him to remove.

THE Bradford (Yorkshire) Observer says that Adelaide Neilson, while nurserymaid at Mrs. Padgett's, Hawkhill, Guiseley, in that county, was most attentive to her duties, and very active, never requiring prompting in anything. In her spare time she learned accurately from Shakespeare. So determined was she to go on the stage—an intention she often announced to the family she served—that one evening after leaving her employment at the usual hour she started for London. She slept the first night under the trees in Hyde Park, and subsequently got work, in answer to an advertisement, as a seamstress.

No wonder that foreign warblers and actors come to America, where they obtain more than thrice the pay of ambassadors. Paolo Marie, who has just returned, under Mr. Grau's management, is to receive $100 for each of her performances, while Capoul, who is to sing in fifty concerts, under Ullmann, is to be paid $200 for each. But these are mere zephyrs compared with the breezy proposition of Wagner, who is willing, if America will raise $1,000,000 for him, to expatriate himself, dwell with us, produce all his operas here, and devote the remnant of his art life—he is now sixty-two—to the U. S. For that trifling pecuniary bagatelle the gifted Wagner is willing to immolate himself.

OLE BULL'S favourite violin was made by Gaspar da Salo, and its case, for which the Cardinal Aldobrandini once paid three thousand ducats, was sculptured by Benvenuto Cellini. On the head of the violin is an angel's face in relief, carved and coloured; a tiny mermaid leans against it, clothed in scales of green and gold; below the bridge is another mermaid; and the neck is ornamented with arabesques in red and gold and blue. Two intertwined fish ornament the bridge—the zodiacal sign of February, the violinist's birth month. Two ivory Tritons may be seen upon the bow, in which are set forty-five diamonds, the gift of the Queen of Sweden and Norway. Ole Bull is the only person that ever played on the instrument, as it never had any bar inside it till he himself put one there.

THE retiring president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science narrated, in the course of his remarks on the problem of life, the story of the plethysmograph, which is an instrument measuring the action of the brain by changes in a recording curve, showing also the action of the mind in dreaming, and the effect of the emotions. He said that when the instrument was first exhibited in Turin by Dr. Mosso, its inventor, a classical man who had boasted that he read Greek as easily as Latin, and both without effort, came in and expressed himself contemptuously concerning the affair. Dr. Mosso had him surrender his arm to the instrument and read a page of Latin, when a slight depression of the curve from the normal line took place, and on reading a page of Greek a much deeper depression was recorded, showing that the boasting gentleman could not read Greek as easily as Latin, and that both required an effort.

Mrs. Warren's Helper.

"I don't know that I ever should have gotten through my Fall sewing so well if it had not been for the help I had from poor Mrs. Duane across the way," said Mrs. Warren to her friend.

"I did not know that she ever went out sewing. I don't see how she can and keep those four children so tidy."

"Oh, she did not set a stitch for me, but she helped me greatly, all the same."

"Did other work for you while you sewed, I suppose."

"You would never guess the puzzle, so I will tell you. It was just looking at her as she sat by that morning-glory-shaded window, stitching away at her childrens' clothes with such a swift needle, every minute that she could catch from her housework. I knew her resources were very small; that she was obliged to piece up and make over and hand down to the very limit of possibilities, yet she did it with such cheerfulness, always singing at her work if she was not chatting with her children; it made me ashamed of my fretfulness.

I was dreading to commence these pretty plaids for the girls because I could not quite decide upon the patterns, and then it would be such a trouble this hot weather.

That thrifty, busy little housekeeper made me ashamed; every time I looked at her it was an inspiration.

I cut out the dresses and put the sewing machine at work on them; then if I felt my zeal fagging I would make an errand across the street to see Mrs. Duane work a few minutes.

One morning I happened in on a "stocking day," as she called it. She had a collection of old stockings of various sorts and sizes, which she was cutting down and piecing out with new heels and toes until they were about as good as new for the Fall campaign.

I asked leave to add to her collection and the offer was thankfully accepted. I took over an apron full, which she asserted would keep the children well supplied all Winter. I had no idea there was so much 'goodness' in old stockings. I always came home with energies brightened and wits sharpened, so that my work seemed very easy and pleasant. One day I told her how much good I was getting from her example of steady industry, and the little woman just dropped her work in her lap and covered her face with her hands, laughing and blushing. The idea of having an influence was very odd to her.

But that was just the help that carried me through the Fall sewing, and I believe in giving 'honour to whom honour is due.'"

THE Philadelphia enterprise of a thousand one-horse coaches, of light and novel construction, to carry eight persons each and run to all parts of the city, is to be speedily put in operation. The fare is to be five cents, or six tickets for a quarter of a dollar. The routes are so arranged that, for ten to fifteen cents, a trip can by transfers be made to almost any desired point; while a single fare will secure a ride on any one of the main lines, lengthwise or crosswise of the city. The movements of the vehicles will be arranged to suit the traffic. The street car companies anticipate a serious decrease in their business.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Oct. 8th, 1880.

THE UNION SHOW

Of the East Riding and Artemesia Societies was held in Flesherton on the 28th and 29th ult. The weather was very unfavorable both days, and had it not been for the rolling ground on which the exhibition took place, and being covered with grass, it would not have been possible to get along with any degree of comfort. However everything passed off with general satisfaction. Our columns are so crowded that we find it impossible to comment, and give only the prize list.

HORSES.

Agricultural, 3 entries. S. Stock, J. Boland, W. Fawcett. Carriage, 6 entries, A. S. Van Dusen, A. Munshaw, R. Smith. Buggy, 9 entries, H. J. Middaugh, D. S. Burke, A. Kennedy. Saddle, 8 entries, D. McDuffie, N. Clarke, R Davis. Brood mare, 13 entries, T. Campbell, Alex. Mercer, D. Stinson. Two years old Gelding, 9 entries, S. Stock, R. Black. Two years old Filly, 6 entries, A Mercer, W McMullen. One year old Colt, 6 entries, R Blair. One year old Filly, 8 entries, J Lawrence, S Stock. Spring foal, 14 entries, A Mercer, D Stinson. Draught—stallion, 3 years and over, 3 entries, A Kennedy. Two years and under, 2 entries, H King. Roadster—stallion, 3 years and over, 3 entries, W Elder. Two years and under, A Hannah.

CATTLE—DURHAM.

Cow, 1 entry, A & F Beattie. Bull, 2 yrs. and over, 1 entry, Geo Thompson. Bull, 1 yr or under, 2 entries, Geo Richardson, A & F Beattie. Two years old Heifer, 1 entry, R Lever. GRADE—Cow, 11 entries, J R Trimble, A White. Bull, 2 yrs and over, 3 entries, R Smith, D Stinson. One year and under, 1 entry, E Watt. Two yrs old Heifer, 12 entries, R Whittaker, W Clayton. One yr old Heifer, 10 entries, A Munshaw, A White. Heifer calf, 5 entries, J R Trimble, A & F Beattie. Working oxen, 3 entries, G Thompson, J Brodie. Three yrs old Steers, 1 entry, E Rutledge. Two years old, 4 entries, A & F Beattie, J Brodie. One yr old, 4 entries, J Weber, J R Anderson.

SHEEP—LEICESTER.

Aged Ram, 2 entries, E Shaw. Lamb, 3 entries, E Shaw, W Fawcett, W Fawcett. Aged Ewes, 4 entries, E Shaw, W Fawcett. Shearling ewes, 3 entries, W Fawcett, E Shaw. Ewe Lamqs, 7 entries, E Shaw, 2nd do. COTSWOLD.—Aged Ram, 4 entries, W Fawcett, R Whittaker, J Farris. Shearling Ram, 1 entry, J McMorris. Lamb ram, 3 entries, J McMorris, Geo Buskin. Aged Ewes, 2 entries, J McMorris, W Fawcett. Shearling ewes, 2 entries, J McMorris, W Fawcett. Ewe Lambs, 2 entries, G Buskin, J McMorris. OTHER BREEDS.—Aged ram, 3 entries, W Fawcett, D Stinson. Shearling ram, 1 entry, D Stinson. Ram lamb, 8 entries, E Shaw, W Fawcett, D Stinson. Aged ewes, E Shaw, D Stinson. Shearling ewes, 2 entries, E Shaw, D Stinson. Ewe lambs, 4 entries, W Fawcett.

SWINE—BERKSHIRE.

Sow, aged, 3 entries, R Brown, D Stinson. Sow pig, 1880, 3 entries, W Wilson, 2nd do. SUFFOLK, or other white breeds—Boar, aged, 3 entries, J R Todd, D. Stinson. Boar pig, 1880, 5 entries, J R Todd, J Green. Aged sow, 2 entries, J R Todd, R Lever. Sow pig, 1880, 7 entries, J R Todd, J Green.

POULTRY.

Brahmas, 6 entries, H Mathewson, 2nd do. Leghorn, 5 entries, W Barnhouse, 2nd do. Hamburgs, 4 entries, W Buchanan, sr, J Plewis. Cochin China, 3 entries, Haskett Bros, J Plewis. Spanish, 4 entries, W Trimble, C Bellamy. Aylsbury Ducks, 1 entry, D McKenzie. Other ducks, 5 entries, J Brodie, W Buchanan, sr. Turkeys, 3 entries, R Bentham, D McKenzie. Geese, 10 entries, D Stinson, W Trimble.

GRAIN AND SEEDS.

Fall Wheat, (Deihl,) 1 entry, R Ruthvan. Clawson, 21 entries, E Rutledge, T Kells, J Cameron. Treadwell, 6 entries, J Green, J Graham, J Marquis. Any other variety, 9 entries, T Kells, J Green, R Ruthvan. Spring Wheat, (Red Chaff,) 4 entries, N Clarke, J Brodie, W Burnett. Genesee, 4 entries, N Clarke, J McGirr, J Marquis. Glasgow, 4 entries, N Clarke, J Marquis, J Cameron. Russian, 14 entries, J McGirr, J Brodie, Alex Mercer. Any other variety, 7 entries, J Marquis, N Clarke, J McGirr. Barley, 16 entries, J Beecroft, T Kells, J Brodie. White Oats, 18 entries, N Clarke, J Cameron, J Farris. Black Oats, 9 entries, D Stinson, R McGruther, J Beecroft. Small Peas, 15 entries, J Cameron, J Abbott, J Brodie. Timothy Seed, 9 entries, N Clarke, J Brodie. White Corn, 8 entries, J R Todd, J Lawrence. Yellow Corn, 15 entries, N Clarke, J R Todd. Collection Beans, 7 entries, R Lever, C Bellamy, J Hopps.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.

Cup Potatoes, 4 entries, E Rutledge. Early Rose, 20 entries, W S Bowler, R Black, R Plant. Other variety, 7 entries, W Buchanan, sr, J Milinor, R Bentham. Collection, 6 varieties, 4 entries, R Black, J Cameron, R Lever. Mangold, (Globe,) 3 entries, J R Todd, D S Burke. Mangold, long, 11 entries, J R Todd, J Thompson. Turnips, Swede, 10 entries, N Clarke, J R Todd. Other field, 6 entries, J Farris, J Millinor. Table, 2 entries, J R Todd, J Farris. Beets, long blood, 23 entries, J Thompson, J Millinor. Other variety, 11 entries, S Damude, W Bulmer. Carrots, field, 20 entries, J Ford, A Munshaw. Early Horn, 23 entries, R H Stinson, D Burke. Parsnips, 18 entries, J R Todd, R H Stinson. Onions, from seed, 13 entries, J R Todd, R H Stinson. Onions, potato, 21 entries, J Thompson, H Mathewson. Winstadt Cabbage, 11 entries, J Thompson, A Mathewson. Drumhead, 7 entries, J Thompson, J R Todd. Any other variety, 7 entries, J Thompson, H Mathewson. Cauliflowers, 5 entries, J R Todd, J Hickling. Celery, white, 9 entries, H J Middaugh, A Munshaw. Red, 3 entries, J Wilnor. Pumpkins, 9 entries, J Farris, R Whittaker. Squashes, 9 entries, H Mathewson, J Thompson. Citrons, 11 entries, R Black, C Bellamy. Tomatoes, 15 entries, W Carson, J R Todd. Water Melon, 7 entries, J Thompson, C Bellamy.

FRUIT.

Crab Apples, 21 entries, J Thompson, Dr Purdy. Fall, 3 varieties, 12 entries, J Marquis, Alex Mercer. Winter, 3 varieties, 14 entries, J R Todd, J McGirr. Fall, 1 variety, 29 entries, J Marquis, T Kells. Winter, 1 variety, 26 entries, W McMullen, W Fawcett. Fall Pears, 9 entries, R H Stinson, J Marquis. Peaches, 3 entries, J M Webster, J Plewis. Plums, red or blue, 8 entries, J Lawrence, R Lever. Yellow or green, 4 entries, J Graham, R Whittaker. Grapes, J Graham, J McGirr.

DAIRY AND OTHER PRODUCE.

Honey, 1 entry, J H Heard. 5 lbs Butter, 31 entries, J Abbott, J R Anderson, H King, J Cameron. 50 lbs Tub butter, 12 entries, G Buskin, J Ford, J Farris, W McMullen. Cheese, 6 entries, G Buskin, J Cameron, R Black. Bread, 15 entries, J Abbott, Alex Mercer.

MANUFACTURES.

Lumber Waggon, 2 entries, R H Stinson. Democrat, 3 entries, R H Stinson, T Swan. Buggy, covered, 1 entry T Swan. Open, 2 entries, R H Stinson. Cutter, single, 2 entries, T Swan. Men's sewed Boots, 1 entry, W Barnhouse. Stoga boots, 1 entry, do. Ladies' boots, do. Bureau, 1 entry H & R Hooper. Centre Table, do. Hal, dozen Chairs, 1 entry, do; Bedstead, 1 entry, do.

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

Pair Blankets, 6 entries, J Gilbraith, N Clarke. Full Cloth, 4 entries, J Milinor, T Campbell. Flannel, union, 6 entries, D McCormack, D Stinson. Flannel, wool, 7 entries, R Askin, J McGirr. Stocking yarn, 9 entries, J Cameron, J Abott. Woollen Mitts, 4 entries, J Milinor, J Cameron. Woollen socks, 8 entries, Mrs Thos Campbell, Miss J Cameron. Woollen stockings, 8 entries, Mrs Cameron, Mrs Boland. Patchwork Quilt, 9 entries, Mrs Dr Purdy, Miss Gilray. Knit or crochet quilt, 3 entries, Mrs Geo Thompson, Miss Gilray. Any other kind, 10 entries, Miss M Burk, Miss Gilray. Berlin wool, raised, 8 entries, Mrs J Boland, Mrs Milnor. Col Berlin work, 5 entries, Mrs Milnor, Mrs A Munshaw. Braiding in silk, 1 entry, Mrs Milnor; in cotton, 7 entries, Miss Gilray, Miss Burke. Embroidery in silk, 1 entry, Mrs Milnor; in cotton, 2 entries, Miss Hickling, Miss Mathewson; worsted, 1 entry, Mrs Milnor. Crochet, in cotton, 13 entries, Miss Gilray, Mrs Damude; in wool, 6 entries, Miss Gilray, Miss Leitch. Point and Honiton Lace, 4 entries, Miss Burk, Mrs Milnor. Fancy knitting in wool, 3 entries, Miss Burk, Mrs Milnor. Woollen work on canvass, 9 entries, Mrs Middaugh, Mrs Milnor. Needlework, ornamental, 6 entries, Miss Ruthvan, Miss E J Lever. Man's shirt, 9 entries, Mrs Campbell, Mrs McGirr. Rag mat, 7 entries, Mrs W Trimble, Mrs King: Hair Flowers, 6 entries, Mrs Dr Christoe, Miss Gilray: Feather Flowers, 5 entries, Mrs Dr Christoe, Miss Burk: Leather Work, 4 entries, Miss Gilray, Mrs Dr Christoe: Pair worked slippers, 5 entries, Miss E Damude, Mrs Barnhouse: Tatting, 1 entry, Miss Ruthvan: Wax flowers, 1 entry, Mrs Wilnor: Collection Photographs, 1 entry, W Bulmer: Penmanship, 4 entries, Miss Blain, Fred Leitch: Pencil drawing, 1 entry, Miss Burke: Crayon drawing, 1 entry, Miss Burke: Water color painting, 2 entries, J Bulmer, Fred Leitch:

[illegible]

Table boquet, 2 entries, Mrs Dr Christoe, R H Stinson: Foliage Plant, 2 entries, Mrs W Trimble, Mrs Leitch: Geranium, 5 entries, Miss Sarjeant, Miss Burk: Fuschia, Mrs Dr Christoe: Hanging basket, 3 entries, Miss Burk, Miss Sarjeant. Calla Lily, 1 entry, Mrs Damude: Helistrope, Mrs Damude: Begonia, Mrs Bentham, C Bellamy:

ORGANS:

We would respectfully recommend the collection of Guelph and Uxbridge Organs exhibited by Mr J J W Simpson, of Owen Sound, as being, in our opinion, of superior quality:—JUDGES:

JUDGES.

Horses and Cattle, Messrs Struthers, Dennis, and Merical:

Sheep, swine and Poultry:—Messrs Tucker, Guy, and Burnett:

Grain and Dairy Produce:—Messrs Alex Webster, W J McFarland and J Ford:

Roots, Fruits, and Vegetables:—Messrs T S Sproul, M P, Geo Richardson and J Marshall:

General Manufactures, Messrs Geo Richardson, A Elliott, and Wm Douglass:

Ladies' Work, Fine Art, &c.—Mrs Struthers, Mrs Buchanan, and Mrs Ford:

T. G. & B. R. R.

MR. EDITOR,—Since my last, the details of the new scheme are at hand, and in commenting upon it I shall endeavor to be candid and brief.

To those whose choice is to support the scheme, whether right or wrong, I have nothing to say; but to those who are in doubt regarding their duty, I trust before rushing to give their votes they will thoughtfully consider so serious a subject.

It will be remembered by almost every one that, because upon careful examination, I discovered the last scheme to be hollow and worthless and accordingly opposed it, I was branded with every bad thing. I do not profess to possess prescience beyond my fellow ratepayers—neither do I dictate to any; but this I do, I try to understand the question and then fearlessly proclaim my deductions.

I now feel exceedingly pleased at the results, for if the new scheme should carry, we shall have saved ten thousand dollars—for I dare say it will come to that—besides the whole affair being put upon a better basis.

The dominant idea, in my mind, however, is not removed. I have contended, and do contend, that the proprietors of the road, whoever they may be, should fix it.

I showed in a previous article that the proportion advanced for construction by the stockholders was exceedingly small compared to the gifts received—$300,000 to $1,500,00, about, so that upon those figures no argument hangs in favor of additional grants from the municipalities. Every turn of the wheel reveals a base different to the previous one. The first scheme, $800,000, was the sum required to fix the road. At the Toronto meeting it was said, because of the Grand Trunk facilities, a less sum would do; but now, according to latest developments, it will require ONE MILLION OF DOLLARS. From the municipalities $300,000, from a part of stock debentures to be issued $500,000, and the proceeds of the old rails the balance.

The road is to be steel railed all over, and to be finished in 1882, and run for twenty years and a faction. The Grand Trunk is to arrange all tariffs and is to keep the road in repair. The etceteras of the agreement do not materially affect us.

The scheme looks feasible at first sight, and if carried out would be a grand success for the Company. For, be it remembered, the old Company still retain the road, but the directorate is now chiefly composed of the bondholders.

I take the position against any further bonus upon the ground that, in proportion to the cost, we have paid, and are paying, more than our share, viz: SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, ($60,000!) interest included, or for the County of Grey about $600,000.

I urge against it at present because, feasible as it may appear, the whole thing has to be ratified in England before it can possibly take a tangible shape. Notwithstanding this, people are found to hawk and sign petitions, to have a half-matured thing voted upon by the ratepayers.

I urge against it because the whole matter, after being sanctioned as above, must be legislated on by the Ontario House.

The Assembly may so derange the whole scheme that its present aspects may be knocked into a cocked hat. It is a marvel those things cannot be completed before presenting it to the municipalities. There must be an object unrevealed to us. On railroad questions, the one that lobbies the most generally succeeds, and the bird which appears white by the Legislative manipulation is soon made black.

The two chief points I apprehend to be asked of the House is, first, to change the present mortgage bonds of two millions of dollars into perpetual stock debentures. The second, and most important to us, is to be permitted to issue preferential five per cent. stock debentures and to exceed one million of dollars, thus to enable the Company to comply with the terms of the Grand Trunk Company—of couase in proportion to amount paid by the municipalities so it will give them this debenture stock in hand, and indeed, they are obliged by agreement to reserve at least $100,000 to meet any contingent improvement hereafter deemed necessary, but not now named in the Grand Trunk conditions.

Upon those grounds I urge no "bonus." If I am correct in the following ample means are to be provided within themselves, and surely it rests upon the proper shoulders. Why then $12,000? Any power now possessed to disriminate in your favour, regarding freight, is signed away, and the rebate promised to Priceville and Flesherton, in view of a bonus, becomes chaff, and those villages already badly situated, are still to be out in the cold.

The case of the tenant farmer too, affords a reason why those having power should not burden them further. They usually pay the taxes, and if they had votes would vote against it. All they can do now is to declaim against it.

In my opinion the Company will keep whatever bonuses they can get—many or few—be thankful for small favors, and push their work to completion. I must confess I should dislike very much for Artemesia to give a bonus, and other municipalities equally interested laughing at our expense.

The plea that the road is to stop is out of date. Just think, sir, a road that has earned $330,000 a year, for the past six years, going to stop! The idea is preposterous. With net earnings over cost of running the machinery—about $112,000 per year—and bond interest reduced to $60,000 per year, leaving a net surplus of say $50,000 annually—where is the road that pays so well?

I confess I can see no charity, no duty, no obligation to give a dollar to it. If the Township really wants to spend $10,000 then a multitude of local schemes can be had to permanently benefit it. Now, sir, I have no slaves, I wish to have none. If I have convinced any, all right: if not, I have discharged my duty.

The feeling in Artemesia is so strongly against a bonus. Other municipalities are to be tried before the vote is again taken here: the assent of the Company's gentlemanly solicitor prevented a collision by the council on this point who do not believe in being dogged into position at every whim of the Company.

On some future occasion I will tell the ratepayers why this apparent hurry; meantime make no promises for a bonus until you are fully convinced that it is your duty to give charity to a rich beggar.

W. S. CHRISTOE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

FLESHERTON STATION, Oct. 5th, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—I understand that I am blamed for a letter making a violent attack upon Dr. Christoe, Reeve of Artemesia, which appeared in the Markdale Repositor some time ago, and that the same was written by me, with the intention of opposing the Doctor at the coming election. I have simply to state that the letter is not mine, and that I have no intention whatever of offering myself a candidate for the Reeveship at this time; indeed, I have no wish to be Reeve, nor could I undertake the duties and keep my present position. Should I at any other time resolve to oppose Dr. Christoe, or any other person in his municipal capacity, I shall do so in a straightforward and honorable manner. Till then the Reeve shall have undisturbed possession so far as I am concerned. Hoping you will find room for this in your first issue,

I remain, dear sir,
yours truly,
HENRY MELDRUM,
Ag't T. G. & B. R.

FALL ASSIZES

Which terminated last week in Owen Sound, had no important cases from this section, except that of Hugh McLaughlan who was tried for manslaughter. Our readers will remember the circumstances, which happened here in June last. The parties were all more or less intoxicated and quarrelling, when the prisoner struck Alexander Fraser a blow with his fist, the latter dropping and dying almost immediately. The evidence went to show that the blow was not one which in ordinary circumstances would have produced death, and the medical testimony was to the effect that there was a possibility of the death being caused by appoplexy. The jury brought in a verdict of "Guilty," with a strong recommendation to mercy. He was sentenced to six months in the Central Prison.

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Oct. 8th, 1880.

Flour	5.00	to	5.00
Spring Wheat per bush., new	0.90	to	1.00
Fall do. do. do.	0.85	to	0.95
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.25	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.57
Potatoes,	0.30	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.13
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese, per lb.	0.05	"	0.05
Ducks, per pair	0.30	"	0.40
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.25
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1.00
Hides	6.00	"	7.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	3.00
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Green Apples, per bushel	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

☞ McIntyre says he can supply goods, both in the eating and drinking lines, much cheaper than the market quotations. Read his advertisement, give him a call and be convinced.

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Oct. 7th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.85	to	0.97
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.95
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.26	"	0.27
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5.00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	7.00	"	7.50
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments.

☞ Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880. 4-tf

AUCTION SALE OF Valuable Farm Property IN THE Township of Glenelg, In the County of Grey.

There will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of October 1880, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at RUTLEDGE'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

by virtue of a power of sale contained in certain mortgages, which will be produced at the sale, the following properties:

PARCEL I.

Under mortgage from Neil Campbell, lot number one, in the twelfth concession of the Township of Glenelg, County of Grey, containing one hundred acres.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 30 acres cleared, having erected thereon a cedar log barn; situated about 8 miles from the village of Markdale.

PARCEL II.

Lot 27, in the 8th concession of the Township of Glenelg, in the County of Grey, containing one hundred acres, more or less.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 60 acres cleared, with log buildings erected thereon.

TERMS.—One-tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance, terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE, Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto, Or to James Lucas, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Sept. 24th, 1880. 4-1l

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERAL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions,

AND

LIQUORS!

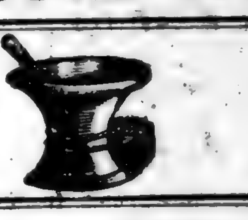
A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received.

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

☞ EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT. ☜

Markdale, October 1, 1880. 1-y

MEDICAL HALL.



Pure Drugs and Chemicals!

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books!

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS! TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions, AND VETERINARY PREPERATIONS, CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M.D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880. 1-tf

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Foster,

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

Wholesale and Retail dealer in all kinds of

Pine and Hardwood Lumber,

LATH, SHINGLES, CEDAR POSTS, AND CORDWOOD.

☞ Office and yard opposite SHELDON'S HOTEL,

OWEN SOUND, ONT.

N.B.—Lumber, etc.. shipped to all parts, by rail or water.

September, 1880. 2-4

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 2-y

STRAYED from the premises of the subscriber, lots 91 & 92, 3rd Range, W. T. & S. Road, one white heifer with white nose, a red and white heifer with lined back, and a red steer with white spots through it, and white hind feet—all yearlings. Any person giving information that will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

ROBERT TORRY.

Glenelg, Sept. 2, 1880. 1-4in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of William Lyons, lot 20, con. 12, Holland, one year old Heifer, all red. Any party giving such information as will lead to her recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Holland, Sept. 20, 1880. 2-3in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of John Bowers, near Ford's Mill, Glenelg, a red Heifer with small star on head, and a few white spots on body—is small for a three year old. Any person giving such information to the undersigned as will lead to her recovery will be rewarded.

MRS. S. CASWELL.

Markdale, Oct. 2, 1880. 4-3in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of R. J. Sproule, one medium sized Red Cow. Any person returning the same, or giving such information as will lead to her recovery, will be suitably rewarded.

R. J. SPROULE.

Flesherton, Oct. 6, 1880. 4-1in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of JOHN MOORE, lot 10, concession 12, Euphrasia, about the 15th of June, three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white; one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Euphrasia, Sept. 14, 1880. 4-3in

CAUTION.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating in anyway a note drawn by Thomas Townsend in favour of William Handberry, for the sum of twenty-three dollars ($23), for value has not been received therefor.

THOS. TOWNSEND.

Markdale, Oct. 4, 1880. 4-3in

DIED.

In this village, on Monday last, Octavia Maud, the beloved daughter of Mr. George Wilson, butcher, aged 3 years and 3 months.

JOB WORK done neat and prompt at the STANDARD Office.

E. D. WILCOX,

Watches, Clocks,

This space to be occupied by E. D. Wilcox's Advertisement as soon as his new Brick Store, now being fitted for him is completed.

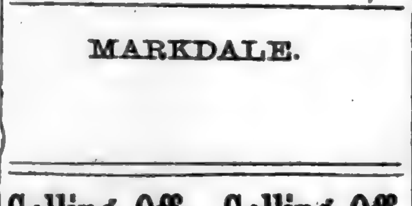
Jewellery, &c. &c.

MARKDALE.

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!



GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,
Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

APPRENTICE WANTED.

A BOY about 16 years of age, to learn Shoemaking.

THOS. HANBURY.

Dundalk, Oct. 1st, 1880. 3-3in

CHASE BROS. & BOWMAN,

Nurserymen and Seedsmen,

Nurseries at Rochester, N.Y.

ENOCH BALL, MEAFORD,

Agent to sell and collect for them.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

HILL BROS.,

When their new building is completed.

HILL BROS.

when they remove.

Ad

MARKD

Pianos and

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments I would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted, with a small payment down.

All instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,

LOCK BOX 17,

Uxbridge, Ont.

General Advertisements.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX STOVES, heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings, BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

...want to have comfort the rest of your ... buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

...ffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

...RGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND. ALL KINDS OF

...n & Copperwork!

...de to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, ... low prices; Stove Polish; Dome, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal. JOB WORK particularly attended to. ... can save money by giving me a call ... purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in ... ge. ☞ Remember the place, next ... Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

...kdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

STOVES.

STOVES.

...askett Bros.

...TTOM PRICE FOUND AT LAST.

...reat Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

...HINK OF OUR PRICES.

No. 9 elevated Oven Cook ...e, furnished complete, $18.

...c., with Low Oven, $17.

BOX STOVE, $4

...other sizes Equally Low

...se Stoves are from the best and largest ... in the Dominion—have ... latest improvements, with illuminated ... and silver-plated trimmings, and ... the best Stoves in the ...

HARDWARE.

...large stock of axes, cross saws, building and Shelf ...dware, Cutlery, Paints, ... Varnishes, Brushes, &c. ...w prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., ...tock large and prices as ... as any in the trade.

...SKETT Bros.,

...t. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All

AT

W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill sreett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continuance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

James Sullivan,

FLESHERTON.

Manufacturer and Dealer in

Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and Japanned Wares,

Eave Troughing, &c.

A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware, ... Wooden Wares, ... Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.

Stove Ovens Lined.

Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.

☞ Prices most reasonable.

JAMES SULLIVAN.

Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood. A Firstclass Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees. The farm is well fenced, is in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

G. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Parties writing this office on all matters of business will oblige by addressing their communications STANDARD Office.

...EVA, Specialist, leaves here tomorrow on his regular visit to Durham, he will return on Thursday.

WHAT'S that? ... Doll, of Flesherton, ... the best watch for the money, ... you forget it.

NOTICE is directed to several strayed ... advertisements, and also ... which appears in another ...

... OPENING.—The mill situated ... 21, on the 18th con. of Artemesia, owned by Mr. E. Davis, is expected to be in running order about first of next week.

GOODS AT A SACRIFICE.—Mr. H. ...am, of Dundalk, offers goods at exceedingly low prices. Parties should ... his advertisement, which is in ...bill form, and govern themselves accordingly.

THE new shop leased by Mr. E. D. Wilcox, jeweller, is being brought to completion. He expects to get in ... week. It is next to the STANDARD ..., and is, of course, respectably ...ed.

GIVING UP BUSINESS.—The Messrs. McDougall, harness makers of this place, have decided on relinquishing business. This is not on account of lack of work, but a desire to embark in other pursuits.

NEW UNDERTAKING.—It will be ... by circulars numerously distributed that Mr. J. F. Sproule, is now prepared to do business. Intending purchasers should read what he has for them in exchange for cash.

"SOME FUNNY THINGS."—We have received a copy of a pamphlet bearing the above title, published by the Toronto News Co." It is said to be funny, and has some of Mark Twain's sayings. Price, 15 cents.

RECOVERING.—It is with pleasure ... this week, announce a great improvement in the health of an esteemed citizen, Mr. A. W. Eaton. His ... was at one time dispaired of but ... change has taken place, and we expect to see him about in a few days.

ABOUT TO DEPART.—Mr. Mabee, ... has been amongst us for some ... past is, we learn, about to leave ... village. We have not heard ... he is going—but wish him success.

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement of Mr. R. Askin, to be found elsewhere. He has a nicely selected ... of general groceries, and makes tobaccos and sugars a specialty.

...R. C. REYNOLDS, formerly of the ... Mansion House," will, in the course ... few days, open a general store in ... premises now being vacated by Messrs. McDougall, the time of ..., due notice will appear in our columns.

STOVES.—We notice that Mr. W. Walker, tinsmith and dealer in ..., advertises his going out of the ... business, and offers his large ... of the latest designs, at cost to purchasers—this should not be ...tten.

ACCIDENT.—While thrashing at Mr. Christopher Irwin's last week, a man ... John Welsh had his two front ... of the right hand taken off ... the middle joint; they were ... by Dr. Sproule, and he is now ... well.

SPROULE'S NEW STORE.—The fine brick structure now being built ... Sproule for the firm of J. F. Sproule & Co., general merchants, is approaching completion—it will ... an imposing appearance.

...RIST wishes to be informed if ... a Police Village, and if so, who ... chairman of the Board. He is ... to know to whom he is to ... for redress in a case in which ... child had a foot sprained by being ... in one of those traps now so ... ous in the planking.

NIGHT SCHOOL.—Mr. T. Hall, has, ... organized a class. Young ... who require advancement, and ... business engagements during ... may debar them from attending ... public school, should take advantage of this opportunity of improve...

... DEVIL informs us that he was ... the other day on hearing a ... know everything say, how he ... conduct a newspaper. Just ... How times have changed! In ... good old days it was considered a ... for an ass to speak, and now ... short of a miracle will keep ... quiet.

McINTYRE'S.—Mr. McIntyre ... us to state that he is now prepared to furnish such goods ... usually to be found in a general ...; he also has some very nice ... and side bacon on hand, and ... up by saying that the quality ... "Oh, be joyful" cannot be ...ssed.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST.—The October number of this truly useful ...ical is now on our table. Its ... are so extensive that space ... not permit of our noticing it as ... would wish, but we may say that ... heartily recommend it to all engaged in agricultural pursuits. It is published by the Orange Judd Company, ... Broadway, New York.

ANOTHER ELEVATOR.—We learn that ... of these really useful buildings ... contemplated. Who dare ... at our enterprise. It was ... yesterday that a traveller stated ... he had seen more strides of progress in this village than in towns of ... our dimensions, and this ... man is continually on the road, ... knows the whole of Western Ontario.

... HEALTH JOURNAL.—We have ... the first number of the 5th ... this monthly periodical. It is ... to individual and public Hygiene and is a reporter of vital statistics. It is published in Toronto by ..., and appears to contain ... useful information, not only of ... but also professional char...

... !—McIntyre still a-head ... wins the race! He is ..., and is sure to carry ... all know what line he ... Groceries, Provisions, Liquor, ... He is not ashamed of his ... does it on a good principle, strictly for cash.

CALL and ... stock of trim... fancy goods, ... wools.

WE notice that ... this place, sold a ... years old, sired ... Happy Lizzie. He ... bone, and a promis... the purchasers, pa... $190 for the anim...

GLENELG AG... We are again c... for the non-app... list. The Sec... called from hom... cess to his book... ranch to furnis... we are sorr... to better pos... readers will ... fault does n...

SO...

At the reside... Wilson, on Frid... the members o... Class, and on S... 2nd, the membe... Society, were ... sumptuous rep... hours of real so...

On Friday ev... had enjoyed the... the various amu... land was app... which position ... filled. His ad... embraced all t... speech. The... dresses from th... class, intersper... readings. Duri... entertainment ... state the caus... which might ... breach of etiqu... such a manner ... the wit and ... then called up... read the foll... was very ably r...

To the Rev. A. ...

RESPECTED ... members of ... Markdale, have ... expectedly at y... ening and ... for a few hour... very pleasan... would sincer... well that we h... the enjoyment ... creatures, ... by so much ... ply one of hea... part for the ... which you, as ... charged the ... you. You ... with us for ... deavoring, as ... press upon th... great truths ... various passa... cannot but hav... thoughts from ... pounded. It ... you were slid... haps on accou... want of att... notwithstandin... were always ... when the clas... And now, dear ... pleasure to ... chair as a slig... in which you ... and we hope ... hard day's stu... fort to occupy ... sitting thereon ... evenings we ... Although it is ... do such a thi... to be expected ... moment have ... were impelled ... conclusion we ... to have you ... greater length ... not be the c... have our b... wherever you ...

Signed on be...

Mr. Wilson ... visible effect ... Shortly afterw... their respectiv... more than sat... of the evenin...

On Saturday ... of the Ladies' ... Mr. Wilson w... ed by the ... Miss Burch.

To Reverend A. ...

REV. AND DE... gret that we ... labours amo... During the ... toiled early ... our souls for C... the heavenly ... your own inte... ures, to our ... your work you ... culties and ... contend again... labor has not ... harvest, we d... been, and will ... seed which you ... cerely hope it m... have you perma... us; but, should... ed, you will n... we will ever fol... affection and gr... home has been ... ing us the privi... course with th... your family, w... been more rich... sister congrega... do we thank M... terest she has ... fairs, and espe... for the great ... dered us as ... Society. You... wishes for your ... perity. We ... purse as a sli... tion and ... you and yours ... commending y... keeping, we bid ... farewell.

Signed, on ... Aid Association...

Mr. Wilson, i... unable to conve... tude to those pr... close of the ente... gave an excellen... also made a few... marks. Mr. W... attention of his ... tangible marks ...

[TH]E STANDARD.

[LOCA]L & OTHER NOTICES.

[C]ORRESPONDENTS.—Parties writ[ing to thi]s office on all matters of busi[ness w]ill oblige by addressing their [commu]nications STANDARD Office.

[...] EVA, Specialist, leaves here to[-...] on his regular visit to Dur[ham ...] he will return on Thursday.

[Wha]t's that? [...] Doll, of Flesherton, [has th]e best watch for the money, [don't] you forget it.

[Attention i]s directed to several stra[...] [a]dvertisements, and also [...] [...]n" which appears in ano[ther column].

[RE-]OPENING.—The mill situated [...]1, on the 13th con. of Arte[mesia, ...]owned by Mr. E. Davis, is ex[pected t]o be in running order about [the end] of next week.

[GOODS] AT A SACRIFICE.—Mr. H. [...] of Dundalk, offers goods at [exceedin]gly low prices. Parties should [read his] advertisement, which is in [another] form, and govern themselves [accordin]gly.

[The n]ew shop leased by Mr. E. D. [...] jeweller, is being brought to [completio]n. He expects to get in [next] week. It is next to the STANDARD [office, an]d is, of course, respectably [situated].

[GIVING] UP BUSINESS.—The Messrs. [...]ll, harness makers of this [place, ha]ve decided on relinquishing [business]. This is not on account of [lack] of work, but a desire to em[bark in] other pursuits.

[...] UNDERTAKING.—It will be [seen by c]irculars numerously distrib[uted tha]t Mr. J. F. Sproule, is now [prepare]d to do business. Intending [purchas]ers should read what he has [to offer] them in exchange for cash.

[...] FUNNY THINGS."—We have [receive]d a copy of a pamphlet bearing [the ab]ove title, published by the [Toro]nto News Co.". It is said to be [very fu]nny, and has some of Mark [Twain's] sayings. Price, 15 cents.

[IMPROV]ING.—It is with pleasure [that we, this] week, announce a great im[proveme]nt in the health of an esteem[ed cit]izen, Mr. A. W. Eaton. His [life w]as at one time dispaired of but [a chang]e has taken place, and we ex[pect to] see him about in a few days.

[ABOUT] TO DEPART.—Mr. Mabee, [who ha]s been amongst us for some [time pa]st is, we learn, about to leave [the vil]lage. We have not heard to [where h]e is going—but wish him suc[cess].

[ATTEN]TION is directed to the adver[tisemen]t of Mr. R. Askin, to be found [elsewhe]re. He has a nicely selected [stock of] general groceries, and makes [tob]accos and sugars a specialty.

[Mr.] C. REYNOLDS, formerly of the [...]on House," will, in the course [of a few] days, open a general store in [the pre]mises now being vacated by [Me]ssrs. McDonald, the time of [which] due notice will appear in our [columns].

[...]s.—We notice that Mr. W. [Wa]lker, tinsmith and dealer in [stoves], advertises his going out of the [b]usiness, and offers his large [stock o]f the latest designs, at cost to [pu]rchasers—this should not be [...]en.

[ACCI]DENT.—While thrashing at Mr. [...]ker Irwin's last week, a man [named] John Welsh had his two front [fingers] of the right hand taken off [at th]e middle joint; they were [dressed] by Dr. Sproule, and he is now [doing w]ell.

[SPRO]ULE'S NEW STORE.—The fine [bri]ck structure now being built [by] Sproule for the firm of J. F. [Sproule] & Co., general merchants, is [app]roaching completion—it will [prese]nt an imposing appearance.

[...]T wishes to be informed if [...] Police Village, and if so, who [are the] ma.. of the Board. He is [anxious] to know to whom he is to [apply for] redress in a case in which [he] had a foot sprained by being [caug]ht in one of those traps now so [commo]n in the planking.

[NIGHT] SCHOOL.—Mr. T. Hall, has, [...] organized a class. Young [men wh]o require advancement, and [whose b]usiness engagements during [the day] debar them from attending [the publ]ic school, should take advan[tage of t]his opportunity of improve[ment].

[THE] DEVIL informs us that he was [...] the other day on hearing a [...] know everything say, how he [would] conduct a newspaper. Just [ho]w times have changed! In [the] old days it was considered a [miracle f]or an ass to speak, and now [nothing s]hort of a miracle will keep [...].

[M]cINTYRE'S.—Mr. McIntyre [wishe]s to state that he is now [pre]pared to furnish such goods [as are us]ually to be found in a general [store]. He also has some very nice [...] side bacon on hand, and [...] by saying that the quality [is such that] "Oh, be joyful" cannot be [...]d.

[AMERI]CAN AGRICULTURIST.—The Oc[tober nu]mber of this truly useful [journa]l is now on our table. Its [content]s are so extensive that space [will not p]ermit of our noticing it as [we cou]ld wish, but we may say that [we heart]ily recommend it to all en[gaged in] agricultural pursuits. It is [publishe]d by the Orange Judd Com[pany, B]roadway, New York.

[...]ER ELEVATOR.—We learn that [one] of these really useful build[ings is] contemplated. Who dare [sneer] at our enterprise. It was [only yes]terday that a traveller stated [that he] had seen more strides of pro[gress in] this village than in towns of [twice] our dimensions, and this [gentlem]an is continually on the road, [and kno]ws the whole of Western On[tario].

[THE] HEALTH JOURNAL.—We have [received] the first number of the 5th [volume of th]is monthly periodical. It is [devoted t]o individual and public Hy[giene, an]d is a reporter of vital sta[tistics]. It is published in Toronto by [...]ter, and appears to contain [much use]ful information, not only of [a popular] but also professional char[acter].

[HE'S] HERE!—McIntyre still a-head [...] he wins the race! He is [...]ird, and is sure to carry [...] [yo]u all know what line he [...] [Grocer]ies, Provisions, Liquor, [...] He is not ashamed of his [...] he does it on a good prin[ciple, st]rictly for cash.

CALL and inspect Miss Burch's stock of trimmed millinery, ladies' fancy goods, slipper patterns, and wools.

WE notice that Mr. Thomas Campbell, of this place, sold a very fine young horse, 4 years old, sired by Hambletonian, dam, Happy Lizzie. He is a good size, plenty of bone, and a promising trotter. Speers Bros., the purchasers, paid the handsome price of $180 for the animal. Blood tells.

GLENELG AGRICULTURAL SHOW.—We are again compelled to apologize for the non-appearance of the prize list. The Secretary having been called from home, and not having access to his books, it became out of our reach to furnish a report last week, and we are sorry to say that we are no better position now. We trust readers will accept this apology—fault does not rest with us.

SOCIALS.

At the residence of the Rev. A. Wilson, on Friday evening, Oct. 1st, the members of Mr. Wilson's Bible Class, and on Saturday evening, Oct. 2nd, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society, were the recipients of a sumptuous repast, followed by a few hours of real social enjoyment.

On Friday evening after the class had enjoyed themselves for a time at the various amusements, Mr. McFarland was appointed to the chair, which position he most efficiently filled. His address was one which embraced all the points of a good speech. Then followed several addresses from the elder members of the class, interspersed with music and readings. During the warmth of the entertainment Mr. McFarland rose to state the cause of their intrusion which might appear a very gross breach of etiquette. This he did in such a manner as to represent fully the wit and humor of Erin's Isle. He then called upon Miss Anderson to read the following address, which was very ably rendered indeed.

ADDRESS.

To the Rev. A. Wilson.

RESPECTED TEACHER,—We, the members of your Bible Class in Markdale, have assembled very unexpectedly at your mansion this evening and taken possession thereof for a few hours we hope to have a very pleasant time. It is not, we would sincerely hope, to bid you farewell that we have come, nor yet for the enjoyment which we, as social creatures, might be the recipients of by so meeting. Our mission is simply one of heartfelt gratitude on our part for the vere efficient manner in which you, as our teacher, have discharged the duties devolving upon you. You have zealously worked with us for the past two summers endeavoring, as far as in you lay, to impress upon the mind of each, the great truths contained in each of the various passages studied, and we cannot but have gleaned many good thoughts from the same, so ably expounded. It may be that at times you were slightly disheartened, perhaps on account of ill attendance, a want of attention, or other causes; notwithstanding all these things you were always on hand, and willing, when the class night came round. And now, dear sir, it gives us great pleasure to present you with this chair as a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by the class, and we hope that when tired after a hard day's study, it may prove a comfort to occupy, do not forget when sitting therein, of the many happy evenings we have spent together. Although it is a prevailing custom to do such a thing as this, and thought to be expected, we would not for a moment have you surmise that we were impelled by such a motive. In conclusion we would express a desire to have you for our teacher for a still greater length of time; if such should not be the case, you and your family have our best wishes to go with you, wherever you may be called.

Signed on behalf of the class by

MARTHA ANDERSON.

Mr. Wilson rose to reply under a visible effect of surprise and gratitude. Shortly afterwards they all retired to their respective homes, apparently more than satisfied with the pleasure of the evening.

On Saturday evening the members of the Ladies' Aid Society presentes Mr. Wilson with a purse, accompanied by the following address, read by Miss Burch.

ADDRESS.

To Reverend A. Wilson.

REV. AND DEAR SIR,—It is with regret that we see the period of your labours among us drawing to a close. During the past summer you have toiled early and late striving to win our souls for Christ, and to lead us in the heavenly way, ever sacrificing your own interests, your own pleasures, to our spiritual welfare. In your work you have had many difficulties and many discouragements to contend against, but rest assured your labor has not been in vain. A rich harvest, we doubt not, has already been, and will yet be, reaped from the seed which you have sown. We sincerely hope it may be our privilege to have you permanently settled among us; but, should it be otherwise ordered, you will not be forgotten by us; we will ever follow you in thoughts of affection and gratitude. In that your home has been with us, thereby giving us the privilege of constant intercourse with the several members of your family, we feel that we have been more richly blessed than our sister congregations. Most heartily do we thank Mrs. Wilson for the interest she has always taken in our affairs, and especially do we thank her for the great assistance she has rendered us as an active member of our Society. You have both our best wishes for your happiness and prosperity. We beg you to accept this purse as a slight token of our affection and esteem. Again assuring you and yours of our best wishes, and commending you to God's care and keeping, we bid you an affectionate farewell.

Signed, on behalf of the Ladies' Aid Association,

M. A. BURCH.

Mr. Wilson, in his reply, felt quite unable to convey by words his gratitude to those present. Towards the close of the entertainment Mr. Brown gave an excellent address. Mr. Irying also made a few very appropriate remarks. Mr. Wilson expresses the attention of his Markdale friends as tangible marks of gratitude.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accouchours &c.
OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

J. B. McMillan,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR in Chancery, Conveyancer, &c., &c.
Owen Sound, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Miller's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
OFFICES—at Owen Sound and Markdale.
N. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. McFarland's store, open on Thursday of every week. 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept, 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
Money loaned at lowest rates on personal and real estate. Lands bought and sold. Buyer and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable half-yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end of the year 8½ per cent.—principal payable at the end of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal and interest yearly to suit Borrowers.
Lands for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments.
☞ A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, Meaford and Markdale. Having purchased Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's entire stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys done within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates for Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Orders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1-y

W. C. Jewell, L.D.S.,
WILL be at the MARKDALE HOUSE, Markdale, the First FRIDAY and following day in each month. Parties wanting Extracting, Filling or Teeth Inserted, from one to a full set, would do well to call and see prices. Satisfaction given in all cases. Head Office—opposite Post Office, Meaford.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation.
Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
J. & J. McGIRR, - - PROPRIETORS.
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the choicest Wines and Liquors and the best brands of Cigars.
Free 'bus to and from all trains.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

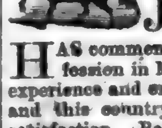
Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.
Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.
Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880. 2-3m

J. M. Webster,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.
☞ LOAN ND LAND AGENT,
Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.
EUGENIA P. O.
Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880, 1



VETERINARY.
J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,
HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

Subscribe for the Standard.
We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted, and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.
ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.
HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.
BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.
GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns
GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Bloch opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

A Word to the Public.

The era of prosperity which now happily reigns throughout the length and breadth of our glorious dominion benefits every branch of industry, and has very materially benefited my business, which has increased in volume several thousands of dollars over any previous year, and is steadily increasing.

Appreciating the tastes and requirements of the Public I have studiously, and I trust successfully, labored for 18 years to meet the wishes of purchasers. The support and patronage I have had justifies me in increasing my stock, extending my facilities, and at the same time materially reducing my prices.

Ambitious as I have ever been to be first and foremost in my business, I am resolved that henceforth the reputation I have achieved in this particular, shall be promoted and enhanced. Egotistical mention is not essential, but I do feel warranted in calling attention to my present full and complete stock of Goods, a stock, the greater part of which has been purchased for cash, and direct from the manufacturers, and the equal of which, for extent or variety, I do not think can be found north of Toronto. I solicit from strangers an inspection, and to my friends and customers say, that I have for them in goods and prices a succession of what I believe will be very agreeable surprises. I am in a position to fill all orders, and it will not be necessary to send to Toronto or elsewhere for goods. Give me a chance to supply your wants, and I guarantee the best Goods at the most economical rates.

A call and examination will be gratifying to me, for I feel sure that an experience in patronizing me will fully confirm all that I claim for my goods.

W. J. McFARLAND,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

MARKDALE.

September 17, 1880. 1

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!
before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Flesherton Advertisements.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse.

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,
Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880. 2

W. F. DOLL,

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

FLESHERTON —AND— DUNDALK.

Special inducements in Waltham Watches

A SPECIAL LINE OF
LADIES GOLD WATCHES
Just to hand. Also Ladies Col. Gold Lockets, Chains, Necklets, &c.

A LARGE LINE OF
Wedding and Gem Rings, $1 to $10.

HALL, PARLOR, BRACKET AND BEDROOM CLOCKS AT ALL PRICES.

Silver and Electro-Plated Ware.

Owing to the increased demand for this line of goods I have been forced to purchase larger and better cases. Am now offering

Cake Baskets, Fruit Stands, Cruets, Butter Coolers, Sugar Bowls, Pickle Dishes, Napkin Rings, Fruit Knives, Spoons, Dinner and Desert Knives, &c., all of the latest and most improved designs.

A Call Respectfully Solicited.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Flesherton and Dundalk.

Flesherton, Sept. 13th, 1880. 1

THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND CAN. MORT. CO.

(LIMITED.)

R. DAVIS, Agent, - - - - - FLESHERTON.

THE ABOVE COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO

☞ LEND MONEY! ☜

At 7½ per cent., half yearly, or 8 per cent., yearly. Note a few of the advantages derived from the North of Scotland. You are not obliged to pay any part of the principal until the end of the term. You can arrange to pay in instalments if you choose and interest immediately ceases on such amounts when paid. You can arrange to pay your interest or principal in any month to suit you. You can arrange to repay the loan in any time from 1 to 20 years. Simple interest only charged. No equalization of payments. No 12 per cent. interest nor fines charged. The following example will show one of the many ways in which a loan may be repaid.

EXAMPLE:

$1000 borrowed, repaid by ten equal annual instalments, simple interest, at 8 per cent. yearly, the payments will be as follows:

1st year, interest 8 per cent on $1000	$80 00
Instalment	100 00	180 00
2nd year, interest 8 per cent. on $900	$72 00
Instalment	100 00	172 00
3rd year, interest 8 per cent. on $800	$64 00
Instalment	100 00	164 00
4th year, interest 8 per cent. on $700	$56 00
Instalment	100 00	156 00
5th year, interest 8 per cent. on $600	$48 00
Instalment	100 00	148 00
6th year, interest 8 per cent. on $500	$40 00
Instalment	100 00	140 00
7th year, interest 8 per cent. on $400	$32 00
Instalment	100 00	132 00
8th year, interest 8 per cent. on $300	$24 00
Instalment	100 00	124 00
9th year, interest 8 per cent. on $200	$16 00
Instalment	100 00	116 00
10th year, interest 8 per cent. on $100	$8 00
Instalment	100 00	108 00
Making a total payment of		$1440 00

The borrower is not obliged however, to repay any part of the principal by instalments but may do so if convenient. Expenses low and a detailed statement of disbursements given to each borrower. Deeds, Leases, Wills, Agreements, &c., neatly and carefully prepared. Insurance affected in the old favorite Companies. Accounts, notes, and rents collected and returns promptly made. Farms for sale and to rent. Private funds invested. Auction Sales attended. Charges low. All business strictly confidential.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Auctioneer, Real Estate and Ins. Agt., &c.,

1 FLESHERTON.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

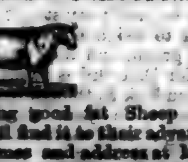
made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mills

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave there names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & A. SPEERS.

Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.

☞ Meat delivered at any house in town.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W.3d St., New York City
LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Billiousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

10,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870

9.000.000 Bottles.

This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.
MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed a physician. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.
MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.
Burford, Brant Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.
ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.
MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.
MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.
W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.
NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.
Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.
MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.
Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.
DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.
Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.
W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of a knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Address
THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 Ann St., New York; Post Office Box, 4586.

The Sea.

To-day the great sea lies at rest—
No troubled dreams stir his broad breast—
A giant stretched from east to west.

O wild, tumultuous, restless sea,
What mighty spirit moveth thee?
Thou heaving, surging mystery!

The tides are out, the white sands lie
Along the beach; serene on high,
The moon rides through a cloudless sky.

A great peace broods o'er sea and land;
It may be peace lies near at hand,
Through all the storms that vex life's strand.

A cool wind blows from out the west;
In the new dawn we lie at rest,
No more with bitter fears opprest.

FRANCIS L. GARDNER.

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

Judith is sitting on the stump of an old tree, while I am lying on the grass fanning myself and watching her. She is very beautiful, but looks delicate. Sometimes I think she is not strong. But, since she never complains of ailment or pain, I decide that her delicacy is more apparent than real. We have been silent for sometime; but I am longing to talk, my former life not having fitted me for meditation.

"Judith," I commence, "how much more shadowy will you be able to get and still be flesh and blood?"

She smiles.

"Deborah"—abruptly—"what do you think of Mr. Thornton?"

I start and mumble stupidly—

"I do not know."

She looks at me reproachfully.

"You must know, Deb; you have seen him several times."

It is true. Mr. Thornton and I are tolerably familiar; but familiarity in my case has not brought liking. I do not however quite see how I can explain to his wife that is to be that I dislike and distrust him. I tell her that I have formed no opinion of him. She shakes her head, expresses by a pretty gesture her doubt of my candour, and then says slowly—

"Do you know I am to marry him?"

"Yes."

The monosyllable is safe: I cannot trust myself to speak fully. It is monstrous that this sensitive gentle girl should be mated to Silas Thornton. Will not his actions, his habits, jar on her perpetually? She comes to my side and gazes at me steadily.

"My grandmother loved me," she said musingly—"loved me passionately. She was very anxious about my future. I fancy Deborah"—whispering—"she was afraid that no man would ally himself with me because of my tarnished name."

"Judith!"

"It would only be natural, dear. Everybody believes my father is guilty of murder."

"Don't you?" I cry, suprised.

She clasps her hands behind her—a favourite habit of hers.

"No; I am sure he was innocent—my darling father! Deborah, grannie and I used to talk of him a great deal. She told me all about his childhood, his youth. He was noble, chivalrous, lion-hearted, not one who could act meanly, not a man assuredly who could slay his father. It may be his memory will never be cleared; but I can wait patiently."

"He is dead?"

"Yes, oh, yes! I had dreams once of his returning to Napine, of his being proclaimed stainless, of my making up to him a little for my mother; but he was killed. Grannie had a letter from a gentleman from Australia, telling her that he had been killed by a fall from his horse."

"He escaped abroad? Did he retain his own name?"

"No, it was in this way. He was known as Mr. Martin; but, after he was dead, his desk was examined, and only a bundle of letters from grannie was found. They were forwarded to her. She was told one John Martin had died, and that, as hers was the only address found to which to write, they could write but to her. Grannie guessed John Martin, was her son Martin. How else should letters she had written to her boy when he was at school be in his possession."

I stroke the silky hair fondly. How musical her voice is! Is she right or wrong? Is hers a heritage of shame or not?

"Poor grannie, she had hoped until then! When hope was taken from her she prepared for death. Mr. Carey comforted her by telling her she would find him in Heaven."

I glance at Judith. She utters Will's name very demurely and gravely, as if it was sacred to her. Does she ever compare Silas Thornton with Will? Surely not; a bad day will it be if she ever does.

I rise hastily as I hear the gate click; it is my brother—yes, Will and a stranger. They advance deliberately towards us. I am conscious that my dress is disordered, and my curls are adorned with grass, weeds, and flowers. Judith is as trim as a snowdrop, as sweet as a white rose; my cheeks glow, and her lip trembles a little.

"My sister Deborah. Deborah — Mr. Ord."

"Robin's cousin!" I exclaim gladly.

We shake hands heartily. Dale Ord cannot be other than a friend to me; Robin has gossiped so much about him, that his name has been verily a household word with us. Laughingly I inform him of this. He pretends to be horrified, but then chats readily of Letty and Robin. We stroll along leisurely, Will and Judith behind. I turn occasionally. How well they look together, he is tall, she is fairylike! Her violet eyes are raised to his; it is evident she has implicit faith in all he tells her. He hides his love for her well; none beholding him now would guess its existence; his face is so serene and unmoved. We pause at the narrow footpath that leads to the front of the house. Mr. Ord cannot stay, and Judith says she must go. I suggest that Will and I shall walk with them as far as Ellerslie. Will agreeing, we all start for the high road, going forward in a body. At the corner of Ivy Lane Judith remarks—

"The tenant of Ivy Cottage has arrived."

"Has he? What is he like? Who is he?"

She smiles at my eagerness—a smile too tinged with sadness to please me.

"I have not seen him; my maid told me the servants had been there a week. Mr. Thorold came yesterday."

"Is he married—old or young?"

"He is not married, and he is elderly. Grandpapa says that if he is not a recluse he will be a goodly addition to our society, for he has been a great traveller."

"He has taken Ivy Cottage for a long term," Will asserts. "We may presume therefore he intends to be one of us."

"Yes."

We cease talking and are all quiet as we pass the cottage. It is a pretty modern building, standing in its own grounds, its windows opening on to the lawn. Its walls are gay with roses; it would be decidedly more appropriate to call it Rose Cottage than Ivy Cottage. Roses of every kind bud, blossom, and flourish about it. A man-servant near the hedge is conversing with a gentleman, evidently his master. I steal a glance at the latter, and hastily conclude that I have seen him elsewhere. I announce this to my companions as soon as we get out of the sight and hearing of the strangers. Will is not astonished.

"It is some one you have met at home," he says carelessly.

I do not think so. I rack my memory in vain. Where have I seen him? At last I give up the attempt to discover, with a sigh.

"I would not trouble," Mr. Ord advises. "Though you cannot recollect where you have seen Mr. Thorold, I am sure Mr. Thorold will recollect minutely all circumstances connected with his meeting with you."

I blush foolishly, and am angry with myself for doing so, but Judith banishes my disturbance. We are at Ellerslie now, and we wish her adieu. The sun is at its highest. Will thinks it unadvisable for me to go farther. Mr. Ord proceeds, but Will and I go slowly homewards. We are neither inclined to talk. My thoughts are a medley. Mr. Ord is quite as delightful as Robin. I must let Letty know that I do not consider she flattered him in describing him to me. I wonder whether Ord Court is as fine a homestead as he imagines it—wonder idly about Mr. and Mrs. Ord. I never once glance at Will, and am utterly indifferent to the cloud on his brow and the sombre light in his eyes. In my own happiness I am heedless of his misery. Heigho, am I selfish?

* * * * * * *

I am winding cotton industriously, while Dale Ord is talking to me. He has called to see Will, and Will being out, has been graciously pleased to stay and entertain me. He is trying to pursuade me to visit Ord Court, for his mother cannot visit me, as she is an invalid. I have seen Mr. Ord, who is an old-fashioned country gentleman, and I like him. If he is blunt, he is sincere; if he is hasty, he is forgiving. I think Dale Ord will be just such a man as his father when he has passed middle age. I glance at him. He is straight and strong, with keen kindly gray eyes, humorous mouth, broad brow, and a good colour. What makes me contrast him with Silas Thornton? I do so, and shiver. Will and Mr. Thorold come in. I am quite used to my rôle, quite used to playing Vicar's lady, and enjoy the duty immensely. A fortnight since I was introduced to Mr. Thorold; and, sad and grave though he is, he has won an involuntary esteem from me. He perplexes me still. I am not unconscious that he observes Will warily. Why should the tenant of Ivy Cottage study him intently? Has he a better living than this to dispose of, and does he think Will would suit him? No, no; had he livings to bestow, he would not be residing among us.

How does it happen that we speak of Judith? Our conversation is somewhat zigzag in its course. One word leads to another. We branch off into many by-roads. Who can follow a beaten track, and avoid tempting by-paths? Mr. Thorold seems to possess a sensitive, timorous spirit, dangerous to trust in. Dale Ord instances Judith as such a one. He has known her from her childhood. She feels pain, acutely, he avers, and, because she shrinks from it naturally, forces herself to endure it without blenching.

"Those who told her of her father's sin did not understand her," Dale Ord says.

"Her father's sin?" Mr. Thorold echoes interrogatively. "Oh, yes, I have heard some story! He was a frightful scamp, was he not?"

"No," Mr. Ord dissents. "If he was what he was said to be, he was worse. Report has it that he murdered his father."

"Murdered his father? was he hanged?"

"He escaped. Have you not heard the tale heedlessly?" And Dale relates it in brief. Will, in the arm-chair, lifts his hand, delicate as a woman's, to his forehead, and utters not a word. Mr. Thorold's disgust is not veiled. I interpose, and say—

"He may not have been guilty."

"I think he was, Deborah," Dale returns gently; "but I have always imagined the deed was unpremeditated. Sir Percival may have provoked him. There is little doubt that he had lived a blameless life with his wife."

"Are you not regarding him leniently?" Mr. Thorold cries. "I do not fancy your view of his crime is correct." Had he killed his father in the heat of passion, would he have run away? And then too the money disappearing gives the affair an ugly look. Depend upon it, you are wrong, and public opinion is right. He was a villain!"

"Whether he was or was not does not affect Miss Napine," Will mutters, trying to clear his throat.

"It should not; but the custom of visiting the sins of the fathers on the children is not obsolete, Mr. Carey."

Will does not reply. Mr. Thorold continues—

"I hear the young lady is to be married shortly. Are you to be a bridesmaid?"—smiling at me.

"The date is not fixed," I say, a trifle vexed. I am sorry for Will, as this gossip must annoy him. I try to divert the talk into a new channel. "Mr. Thorold you said your mignonnette was the finest about. Come and see mine."

We step out of the window. I show my flowers proudly, and we loiter in the balmy air. Mr. Thorold's thoughts are absent. Just as I resolve to re-enter the house, he says—

"Is Miss Napine attached to Mr. Thornton?"

I am indignant — thoroughly, stormily angry. Surely this stranger is nothing better than a busybody! What concern is it of his whom Judith cares for? An uneasy anxiety seizes me. Can we have discovered Will's secret? If he has I will delude him. I answer with equanimity, though my cheeks are aflame—

"Yes."

"And he is worthy of her?"

It is abominable! who has made this man inquisitor-general?

"Yes," I repeat stubbornly.

He sighs.

"Perhaps it is as well," he murmurs. His tone causes me a pang. Have I done wrong in misleading him? Ah, have I misled him? Is Silas Thornton worthy or unworthy? To myself I say "Unworthy!" Mr. Thorold's reverie is outspoken.

"She bears a stained name. It is not every man that would wed a woman thus sullied! He knows her whole history?"

"Of course," I declare, marvelling much.

He stares at me as though he saw me not. He is evidently far away in imagination. I am very quiet, afraid to disturb him—afraid I fail to comprehend why.

Suddenly he grasps my hand.

"Be good to her," he whispers; "be good to her always!"

Ere I can regain my calmness—for his words startle me—he is gone. When I get back to the parlour he is deep in a discussion entirely beyond me. I look at him wonderingly. Did those words still ring in my ears, really issue from his lips?

* * * * * * *

The daintiest of dainty rooms; walls and furniture a pale spring green; filmy lace curtains; quaint jars; rare flowers; gems of pictures. I wander about as though in fairyland, and Judith watches me with pleasure. I am staying at Ellerslie for two days. Will has spared me willingly. I needed little coaxing to leave him. I am getting wise and observant. Would he not prefer me to forsake him for a while rather than neglect Judith?

Ay, he would!

She is looking wan and worn. My raptures rouse her from her weariness, and she laughs at my openly-avowed admiration. She does not perceive what this luxurious life is to me—does not perceive the difference in our position. I am one of several, and mamma's income has limits, while Judith is the petted heiress of a man of vast wealth. True, there are two sides to the picture. I have some joys that she has not. When I tell her what a lucky girl she is, she closes my mouth with a loving caress; but I would not exchange with Judith.

After a long ramble in the gardens it is time for dinner. We are not to dine in state, Judith says; Squire Ellerslie is confined to his own apartments, and, as there will be only four of us, Mrs. Santon, Mr. Thornton Judith, and I, we shall have dinner in the bay-parlour. I am agreeable, and when I sit down I am sure it is a capital arrangement. Mrs. Santon, Judith's old governess, and now her chaperon, is a little woman, who must once have had considerable claims to beauty; she talks without any pretension, but with great address. Mr. Thornton is evidently glad to see me. I have a good appetite, and enjoy the meal. Judith eats very little, but Mr. Thornton pays no heed to her. I cannot avoid noticing that he treats me with far more attention than he does his fiancee. We leave him to his wine. Judith tells me that her grandfather would like to give me a welcome. We go to his sanctum. Very withered and shrunken is the hand into which I put mine. The Squir looks at me attentively.

"Not much like your brother," he says; "but a nice face—a nice face, eh, Mr. Brenton?"

The room is so dark that I have not perceived any one in it but the Squire. At the question a man of some fifty years comes forward.

"Yes," he answers. "Miss Carey?"

Judith makes us known to one another. He leans against the wall, and I sit down. Judith hovers about her grandfather, and the tears well up to my eyes as I note how loving and affectionate she is. She bends over him, and he presses her hand fondly? I hear him say—

"My pretty dove—my bonnie girl!"

She is bonnie; her loveliness is ever dressed in fresh garb. The tenderest soupçon of pink is now colouring her cheeks; her eyes, like violets wet with morning dew, are smiling; her mouth is curved in soft lines. Protected and protecting, she is happy. I cannot look at her long with undimmed sight. My gaze strays around, finally resting on Mr. Brenton. He too, is studying Judith, but with feelings very different from mine if I read his face aright.

Looking at him, I conceive a violent prejudice to him. His thin hatchet-face, lean and yellow, is not prepossessing; his eyes are uneasy and dull; his ungainly hands have a hawk-like greediness about them; and an almost malevolent expression—certainly an expression of hatred and dislike—plays on his features as he scans her furtively. Who is he? Is Judith obnoxious to him? I will find out as speedily as I can. Squire Elderslie asks after my friends, chats a little, and then lies back fatigued; he appreciates our presence, but he is not well enough to sustain conversation. Mr. Brenton says in an oily tone—

"Your grandfather is very tired, Miss Napine."

It is a hint for us to depart, and we take it. Judith kisses her grandfather fondly, promises to come in by-and-by, and we find ourselves in the passage.

"Who is Mr. Brenton?" I inquire, as I put my arm round Judith's waist, and we saunter in the fir-grove, having donned hats and cloaks.

"He was grandpapa Napine's secretary; he lived at Napine until lately. He knows more about Napine than any one, and it was for this reason the Squire asked him to come here to put matters ship-shape."

"I do not like him."

"He is a good man of business. Listen to that bird."

I listen for a moment, and then recommence.

"Mrs. Austey told me something of him, though she did not mention his name. She said your grandpapa's secretary and steward—he was both, was he not?—treated the poor scandalously, oppressing them in every way."

"Yes, Deborah"—with a sharp gasp—"there are times when I wish grandmamma had left Napine to me."

"She ought to have done so."

She pays no attention to me, but goes on nervously—

"I would have tried to remedy some of the neglect. Your brother says little, but I am sure there is much that wants doing. Grandmamma was ill so many months; she was old with trouble. She did not recognize what lay outside her gates. Oh, Deborah"—twisting her fingers in great emotion—"my father's and mother's one false step has been very fruitful of evil! It has made my grandfather Ellerslie as indifferent to the welfare of his people as my grandmother was to the welfare of hers"—with a tearless sob.

I cannot comfort her. I have learned what responsibility means since I have been at Napine. I understand why Will works so hard and so profitlessly. Who can teach Christianity to men and women housed like animals? Judith catches hold of me, her words coming quickly.

"Will Mr. Thornton do any better—be a considerate master? Deborah, must I marry him?"

"You are pledged," I say slowly. She trembles like a wind-flower.

"Yes, I cannot refuse; and he will keep me to my promise, because I shall one day own this inheritance. Oh, if I could rid myself of my wealth!" she cries. "If I could love whom I will without let or hindance!"

"I wish a thousand impossibilities. I wish —— Who is this advancing? "Will!" Without thought I utter his name. Judith, Judith, henceforth I cannot pretend to hope that you be content as Silas Thorton's wife. You love Will.

"I did not expect to find you out-of-doors!" he says. "Miss Napine, I have come to ask a favour of you."

She bows her head; she could not reply, were it ever so needful she should; there is a piteous, frightened look in her eyes that scares me, and her lips are white and drawn.

"I am obliged to go to London; will you keep Deborah until my return?"

"Yes."

He is a little surprised at the solitary word. He betrays this.

"Not if it is in any way inconvenient to you," he stammers. She interrupts.

"How can you misunderstand me? Deborah knows how glad I shall be to keep her—nay," as he is about to apologise, "it was my fault, but I am not quite well."

Her face is drawn, the blue veins in her forehead are clearly visible. I speak to hinder him from questioning her.

"When do you go?"

"To-morrow, early. I shall have company. Mr. Thorold goes also. I shall be home on Saturday, when he will quit the big city I am unaware."

"You will come in and see grandpapa?" Judith says.

"Ay."

She takes him direct to Squire Ellerslie. I slip into the drawing-room. Mrs. Santon begs for a song, and I comply readily. Time flies. Will appears to say farewell.

"Where is Judith?" I cry.

"She left me," he answers, avoiding my glance. "She complained of headache. I have said good-bye to her."

"Said good-bye to her!" Ah, little did he dream that it was his last good-bye to Judith Napine!

* * * * * * *

It is Sunday, a hot, sultry Sunday. We have been to church once. It has seemed strange hearing an unfamiliar voice. Will is not home or likely to be for several days; a brother minister consequently conducts the services for him. I miss Will more than I anticipated; and, though I am made heartily welcome at Elderslie, I wish myself back at the vicarage. Deep down, concealed in my heart, is an acknowledged longing to see a face which has, without my consent, grown dear to me. I tell myself I only desire to see Dale in order to deliver some messages sent for him in a letter of Letty's; but, messages or no messages, it would be good to clasp his strong hand. Squire Ellerslie is not well. Doctor Austey wants him to call in a physician, but he refuses. He is not very wishful to live; life has had more bitters than sweets for him; to depart will be better than to stay.

I am in the summer-house, and Judith is with her grandfather. I stretch my hands high above my head and ponder. Surely it is curious that my life is so full of new interests! It seems ages since I was dwelling in the Close. Oh, how warm it is! There is not the faintest stir in the flower-garden, not the sleepiest chirp in the trees; birds and flowers are drowsy. The sky is a vast stretch of blue, not the tiniest feather cloud to be descried. I lean back, dispose my limbs in the most comfortable of attitudes—nobody will glance at me approvingly or otherwise—and fall asleep.

How long I sleep I cannot tell; when I awake my watch has stopped. The sun is still bright, and the air is very oppressive. I open my mouth to yawn, and close it hastily. Some one outside is speaking stealthily. It is Silas Thornton. I do not reveal myself, and yet I wish I was not so completely hidden. To get as much shade as I could I had crept behind the crimson curtains which serve here as inner doors. I cannot be seen, but I can hear distinctly.

"I must have some money," Silas Thornton says. "I owe a tidy bit, and I lost heavily when in town."

"Yes? How much do you want?"

"Seven or eight hundred. Ellerslie is very miserly. My allowance is a mere pittance."

"He is not obliged to give you that."

"Is he not? I think he is. He choose to make me his heir when he was incenced with his daughter, and he is bound to do well by me now; besides am I not to marry the girl?"

I feel indignant. So this is how he talks of Judith; but that prudence warns me to be silent, I could abuse him soundly.

"Be careful"—ah, I am not wrong! Silas Thorunton's campanion is Mr. Brenton—"Judith Napine is not a wife to be scorned; she will be very rich!"

"Of course; if she was poor, your humble servant would not trouble her. A proud white-faced girl, the daughter of a——"

"Hush. Judith Napine is fit to mate with your superiors."

A pause ensues. I am gratified. I must have been mistaken in thinking Mr. Brenton did not like Judith; Mr. Silas, sitting down also rejoices me.

"Well, am I to have the money?"

"On the same terms as before?"

"It is an awful rate of interest"—grumblingly; "but I suppose you will not take less, Brenton, if the old man knew how you assisted me he would favour you with some unflattering truths."

"And did he guess how frequently you require my assistance, with what would he favour you? I doubt if he would care to marry his granddaughter to a gambler."

"Perhaps not; but he will not know. Since we both row in one boat we are not likely to split on one another."

A few more words, and they move on. I sit up dazed and confused, yet resolved to give Judith a warning. Verily I should feel blood-guilty, if I permitted her to go to the altar with Silas Thornton without my whispering what I deem he is. Cautiously I reconnoitre, and then steal out. No one is about, and slowly I betake myself up the sycamore avenue. The rising breeze is pleasant, the turf is springy, and the sun is behind the trees. I espy some blue-bells and gather them. If only I could tell Will what I have overheard; but I cannot, and I have no other adviser. For a moment I wonder if I could inform the Squire. The idea is impracticable, and I dismiss it. How could I get an audience with him, and, if I could, would he credit my story? He is not well enough to weigh and sift evidence impartially. I groan, and then smile and forget my care, for Dale Ord is at my elbow.

"You look as though you had a nation's greivances on your shoulders," he says, laughing; "and I assure him a nation's grievances would bring me to the dust. I am neither diplomatic or subtle enough to carry other folk's burdens without breaking down."

He looks at me for a moment, and adds mirthfully—

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

DIVISION OF LABOUR.—Aunt Mary: "Well, Tommy, shall I carry your bat and stumps for you?" Tommy—"No, aunty, tanks! Me tarry bat and 'tumps. 'Oo tarry me!"

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

(From the American Agriculturist.)

WEEDS in grass lands may be very easily seen and destroyed this month by the use of the "spud," a broad chisel-blade attached to a handle like that of a spade or long-handled shovel, having a spur upon it for the foot to aid in thrusting it into the ground. A boy with an instrument of this kind can rapidly clear grass land of buttercups, daisies, and a multitude of other biennial and perrennial weeds.

TOP-DRESSING.—Bone dust or "tankings," or some fertiliser in which the nitrogen is not in the form of ammonia, and not soluble, is the best for late autumn application to grass or grain. Such a manure has some immediate effect, yet is not washed away in solution by heavy rains, but shows its potency in the spring.

POTATOES.—The sooner they are dug now the better. It is best to keep them a while either in protected heaps in the field, or on some unused floor. They throw off much moisture within a few days, and will heat if in large heaps or too deep in the bins. When thoroughly dry, they may be placed in secure pits or in the cellar. Potatoes are injured at once by frost, and gradually by sunlight, or even by diffused light. They should, therefore, be kept from the light as much as possible, and decayed ones carefully culled out before they are put away.

ROOTS are now making their best growth. Moderately warm days and cold nights seem to have a great effect upon them. As the time for heavy frosts approaches, secure the mangels and sugar-beets. Top by rubbing the leaves off, not by cutting, as the wound often starts decay, which spoils the beet. Carrots secure attention next after the beets, and turnips next, leaving the Swedish turnips longest. Always protect piles of roots against frost by some covering. Turnips will survive severe freezing, but they are never so good for feeding.

CORN FODDER, by which we mean the stalks after husking (not the leaves of the corn merely stripped off), should be bound in bundles, probably best done with willow withes, and stooked up so as to shed rain. Large stooks, well set and firmly bound may be left in the field until needed for feeding, without injury to the fodder. In fact, it is often brighter and better when treated in this way than in any other. In stacks, or in sheds, it is likely to heat and mould, unless it can be more thoroughly dried than we can be sure of having it.

FODDER CORN, which, of course, was cut before the first frost, or much of its value was lost, should be handled much in the same way. As soon as the stalks are sufficiently dry, and the weather so cool that danger from moulding is past, put it up in small bundles, and set these together in large stooks in the field, bound securely at the top.

PLOWING FOR SPRING CROPS.—This may be done at any time now, where the soil is not too light, and not likely to wash during the winter. The ground should be left rough to be subjected to the fullest action of the weather, freezing, thawing, wetting, drying, etc. Should a crop of weeds come up, it will very likely pay to harrow and plough again.

A LEADING CDOP.—In view of the diversified character of farming and the many kinds of animals, grains, fruit etc., that can be grown, the question naturally presents itself to the farmer: How many kinds of produce can I grow, and with the greatest profit? There are so many things to be taken into consideration, as the kind of soil, distance from market, climate, and not the least, the individual taste of the farmer, that it is often a hard matter to decide upon the crop to be grown. As a general rule, however, it is best to make some one thing a specialty—the one best adapted to the taste of the man and the circumstances with which he is surrounded, and let the other products of the farm cluster around it and play a secondary part. All cannot grow grain, neither can all be sheep raisers, or breeders of swine or cattle. We are not speaking against a mixed husbandry, but against a loose farming without system.

RIDGE PLOWING of stiff clays is often of great benefit. It is done by turning the furrows two and two together, so as to leave the land uniformly ridged. The ridges must run up and down the slopes; otherwise, in heavy rains, water will be held by the ridges until it breaks through somewhere, when there will be danger of a "wash-out." This system of winter fallowing involves plowing again in the spring, but shows its good effects in the crops.

WATER.—If pure water does not flow at the barn, look into means for securing it. Barn-yard wells are convenient, but often dangerous to the health, if not of animals, certainly of men, who may drink at them. If the water from some spring can be led to the house and barn, by all means bring it down—use plain iron pipes or enamelled ones—not "galvanized" pipes. Zinc is a slow poison, but not quite so bad as lead. A well on higher ground will often furnish flowing water, conducted by a siphon, at the level of the buildings. No well should be dug at a less distance than 300 feet from a barn-yard, cesspool, or privy vault.

BUILDINGS.—This month offers the most favourable time usually for the painting and repair of farm buildings, and putting them in order for the winter. A great part of this work may be done during this month by the farmer and his boys.

IMPLEMENTS, put away for the winter, should be painted or protected in some way from the action of the air and moisture. Paint or varnish the wood-work, and a varnish of two-thirds rosin and one-third mutton tallow is excellent for protecting iron and steel.

LIVE STOCK.—A little extra feed brings cattle and horses to the beginning of winter in good order. The tops of carrots, beets, turnips may be fed to good advantage, and there is a great deal of sweetness in the October pasturage.

A Great Bridge Reconstructed.

The great work of reconstructing the famous railway suspension bridge across the Niagara river has just been completed without interruption of traffic. The task was undertaken some months ago by Engineer E. A. Buck, and, though many prominent engineers have doubted the feasibility of the plan, he has carried it out, making an iron and steel bridge out of a wooden bridge by a process of substitution which has not occasioned the slightest interruption of trains. The casual observer would never have suspected that anything more than a little repairing was going on.

"WHAT is the worst thing about riches?" asked the Sunday school superintendent. And the new boy said, "Their scarcity."

Wonderful Marksmanship.

ASTONISHING RIFLE SHOOTING BY THE FIFTEEN-YEAR-OLD SON OF A NEZ PERCES CHIEF.

[From the San Francisco Golden Era.]

It has more than probably remained for this side of the continent to have produced for the world the greatest shot of the age in the person of Otto, the son of the Nez Perces chief, Joseph, aged 15 years. This youth has already by his marvellous skill in the handling of arms forestalled fortune by securing an enviable fame before commencing his professional career.

His wonderful prowess is already known to hundreds of the leading people of this city, which the world at large will soon be able to take cognizance of, as he will soon make his formal professional debut. He was recently, under the auspices of his teacher and protector, Capt. C. H. S. McDonald, given a special interview, at the hands of Secretary Carl Schurz. This was a distinguished compliment.

The secretary was very much impressed with his young guest's comeliness, his intelligence and superb physique, and manifested marked interest in him during the reception. Among the various feats at arms at his command, and which have been witnessed by many of our leading citizens, as well as veterans of the army and navy, and which have excited wonder and amazement, we can call to mind the following:

The first shot—A five-cent piece is placed at the top of the head of the figure of a man, the head being covered. Otto takes his position twenty paces from the object with a rifle without a sight—then blind-folded—gives a somerset, fires and hits the five-cent piece, from his power of location.

The second shot—He cuts the string which sustains the figure.

The third shot—Three swinging glass balls suspended from a frame, counterpassing and repassing themselves; he fires, and with one ball from a rifle breaks the three balls and the same ball upon its course strikes still another, a steel ball, which is attached to the frame, caroms at an angle of thirty-three degrees and strikes a small target in a contrary direction ringing a bell which is contained within.

The fourth shot—His instructor stands before him at a distance of twenty paces, where there are several glass balls hanging suspended behind the instructor's head, shoulders, and back. His firing is now done past either side of the instructor into the frame, or at option between the instructor's legs or over his head and breaks any of the balls behind that any of the spectators may select.

The fifth shot—A small target is placed six feet behind the instructor's back. Otto takes twenty paces to the front of the instructor—directly opposite him, and fires, caroming on the steel balls attached to the framework at the desire of the spectators in any direction, striking the target with unerring certainty each time.

The sixth shot—Lays his rifle upon the ground six feet in front of where he stands; at the word ready, a glass ball is thrown into the air. He gives a somerset, snatches his weapon, fires and breaks the ball before it reaches the ground.

The seventh shot—Takes his rifle in his right hand, throws the balls in the air with his left, and with the greatest rapidity breaks them.

The eighth shot—Seated upon his horse, and while at full gallop glass balls are thrown from every direction toward him. These he demolishes with unerring aim and lightning-like promptitude with his trusty weapon.

Use and Abuse of the Theatre.

There is in every man a natural liking for theatical exhibitions, and every man is more or less inclined to be an actor. The imitative faculty, or as it might be more accurately called, the power of mimicry early and universally shows itself. The child soon begins to imitate the actions and words of its elders, and, by and by, assume their airs and manners and affects to personate them. It will be readily noticed by any one who is familiar with children and their habits how largely this element enters into the amusements of young people; and, since men are but children of a larger growth, we might naturally expect the same inclination to be shown in them also. This, as a fact, is the case; and however far opposed a man may be, whether from principle or prejudice to theatrical exhibitions, he never is so from instinctive objection. The natural inclination of a man being towards such exhibitions, it becomes a proper question to ask how far and in what direction may a man indulge this inclination with safety and advantage? In other words wherein consist respectively the use and the abuse of the theatre?

At the outset it may be well to say that no man is likely to be profited by giving himself up altogether to the indulgence of his desire for theatrical displays. Not only will the natural desire be satiated, but, as in every other pleasure, the appreciative faculty will be dulled and a source of much enjoyment destroyed. But the place of the theatre is decidedly that of relaxation and the enjoyment that gives the weary brain and body rest. And this it is eminently fitted to secure. Its mimic wars and loves, its representation of the battle of life, both in its central scenes and side-issues, does much also to instruct as well as amuse. There is unquestionably a mighty advantage educationally, in teaching through the eye, and even in the case of ear-teaching, there is an access of educating power where the means employed are such as call up before the imagination, or "the mind's eye," a pictorial arrangement of scenes and figures that is to all intents and purpose a scenic, a theatrical, exhibition. The parables of our Lord are an example of the best possible description of this method of instruction. Theatrical representations, then, have in themselves nothing wrong, but, on the contrary, are a mighty lever for raising men intellectually, socially, and educationally. Their abuse can only come when, as is too often the case, they are prostituted to gratify a degraded taste, and exhibit vice in an alluring form. This, unfortunately, has been a characteristic of the stage in much of its past history, but in this it has been only the reflection of the manners and tastes of contemporary times. In liability to this abuse, it is just like every other good institution. Printing, painting, sculpture, and the works of all kinds of genius have been thus diverted from the service of the true and the beautiful, but we do not therefore throw them aside, and refuse to have aught to do with them. So we ought to treat the theatre. "But," it is said, "the legitimate drama would not be a success, and the taste of the age calls for and enjoys much that is objectionable, and in itself wrong." This may be, but, we say, so much the worse sign of the taste of the age. It needs reforming, if this be the case, and we are convinced that a great power for this reformation exists in the stage. We have only to point to the exhibition of the recent miracle play in the valley of the Oberammergau, and the intense religious feeling excited by its representation, to find a conclusive argument for the stage's power for good, and we trust the time is coming when, under proper and wise restrictions and regulations, it will become, allied with the pulpit, the platform, and the press, a recognized and most effective instrument in the civilization of our race.

The Crisis in France.

Republicanism in France is still on its trial, and the world is waiting with interest to see what the result will be. The failure of the experiment, it must be conceded, would give a terrible blow to the theory of free government; while, on the other hand, its success would strengthen the hands of the friends of liberty in all the nations of the earth. To us, on this continent, the fate of the French Republic cannot be a matter of indifference, committed as we are to essentially the same principles which are embodied in it. In this country, we have republicanism in fact, though not in form; while our neighbours have it both in fact and in form. Are these free institutions which we are fostering with so much care, and which we are prepared to defend at the sacrifice of our treasure, or if need be, of our lives, destined to be permanent; or will history repeat itself, and the popular governments of this continent share the fate of the republics of the past? If the French Republic gathers strength with the lapse of time, so as to prove strong enough to cope with the despotic governments of Europe, it will certainly strengthen the confidence of those who are disposed to look most hopefully to the future. It has often been said that, while a republican government may do well enough in a sparsely populated country, where the people are comparatively poor and their habits simple, it must inevitably fail in a densely populated country, with a more artificial state of society. France has proved itself, in the past, to be as hard a country to govern, perhaps, as any in the world. For the last hundred years, to go no farther back, it has been in almost chronic state of revolution. Surely, never had republicanism a more difficult task set before it, than it has to-day in the government of France; and never had it a better opportunity to stop the mouths of its detractors for ever; for if it can succeed in that country in the face of the formidable difficulties with which it is beset, it may succeed in any civilized community on the earth.

It is this which gives so much interest to the current crisis in France. Of course, a ministerial crisis is something which must be looked for, ever and anon, in any country having a constitutional government. There have been such things in this country, and there will be again; and nobody with us looks for a collapse of the form of government existing among us, because one set of ministers happens to go out and another to come into power. And the promptness with which the new French ministry has been formed, would seem to be an augury of good. Besides, this change is not the result of any reaction against republicanism. Whatever may be its ultimate outcome, it cannot thus far be construed as in reactionary triumph. If the representations which have reached us be correct, the rock upon which M. de Freycinet has been wrecked, is his excessive moderation in enforcing the decrees against those religio-political organizations, which are supposed to be, so long as they exist, a perpetual menace to the republic. This impatience of the dominant party may be the result of fear, and betoken the existence of danger, the nature and extent of which are unknown to the outside world,—or it may result from a directly opposite cause, from the fact that the radical party finds itself so strong, that it feels itself to be in a position to act with decision and energy in making a clean sweep of every thing that can be understood to be an impediment in the way of the speedy and complete triumph of republican principles and republican government. The expulsion of the religious orders, appears, to us, to be a strange, and hardly justifiable proceeding; but if, as is alleged, these orders, or some of them, while religious in name, are political in fact, composed of persons who are the implacable enemies of the government, constantly plotting for its overthrow, it is not easy to see why their religion should shield them from the same treatment that any other seditious organizations should have meted out to them. We are not, however, in a position to pronounce a judgment on the case. We only hope that the republic may act wisely at this critical junction in its history.

What is a Gentleman?

HOW CARDINAL NEWMAN ANSWERS THE QUESTION.

It is almost a definition of a gentleman to say he is one who never inflicts pain. This description is both refined, and, as far as it goes, accurate. He is mainly occupied in merely removing the obstacles which hinder the free and unembarrassed action of those about him; and he concurs with their movements rather than takes the initiative himself. His benefits may be considered as paralleled to what are called comforts or conveniences in arrangements of a personal nature; like an easy chair or a good fire, which do their part in dispelling cold and fatigue, though nature provides means of rest and animal heat without them. The true gentleman, in like manner, carefully avoids whatever may cause a jar or a jolt in the minds of those with whom he is cast; all clashing of opinion, or confusion of feeling, all restraint, or suspicion, or gloom, or resentment; his great concern being to make every one at their ease and at home. He has his eyes on all his company; he is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant, and merciful to the absurd; he guards against the unreasonable allusions or topics which may irritate; he is seldom prominent in conversation, and never wearisome. He makes light of favours while he does them, and seems to be receiving when he is conferring. He never speaks of himself except when compelled, never defends himself by a mere retort; he has no ears for slander or gossip, is scrupulous in imputing motives to those who interfere with them, and interprets everything for the best. He is never mean or little in his disputes, never takes unfair advantage, never mistakes personalties or sharp sayings, or arguments, or insinuates evil which he dare not say out. From a long sighted prudence he observes the maxim of the ancient sage, that we should conduct ourselves toward our enemy as if he were one day to be our friend. He has too much good sense to be affronted by insults, and is too well employed to remember injuries. He is patient, forbearing and resigned on philosophical principles. He submits to pain because it is inevitable; to bereavement, because it is irreparable; to death, because it is his destiny. If he engages in controversy of any kind, his disciplined intellect preserves him from the blundering discourtesy of better, perhaps, but less educated minds, who, like blunt weapons, tear and hack instead of cutting clean, who mistake the point in argument, waste their strength on trifles, misconceive their adversary, and leave the question more involved than they find it. He may be right or wrong in his opinion; but he is too clear-headed to be unjust; he is as simple as he is forcible, and as brief as he is decisive. Nowhere shall we find greater candor, consideration, indulgence. He throws himself into the mind of his opponents, he accounts for their mistakes, he knows the weakness of human reason as well as its strength, its province and its limits. If he be an unbeliever, he will be too profound and large-minded to ridicule religion or to act against it; he is too wise to be a dogmatist or fanatic in his infidelity. He respects piety and devotion; he even supports institutions as venerable, beautiful and useful, to which he does not assent; he honors the ministers of religion, and it contents him to decline its mysteries without assailing or denouncing them. He is a friend of religious toleration, and that, not only because his philosophy has taught him to look on all forms of faith with an impartial eye, but also from the gentleness of feeling which is the attendant on civilization.

The Hat and its Owner.

A good illustration of the detective quality was shown in the trial of a housebreaker a few years ago. The burglary was effected—as most burglaries are—by the aid of a neighbouring uninhabited house. The thieves crossed along the roof, and made their descent through a skylight. They robbed the premises at their leisure, and decamped successfully with the stolen property. There was one clue left—only one. A hat was found on the roof. The hat was sent to Scotland yard, and the force were invited to inspect it. One policeman immediately said that he knew who was the owner. In the event it was found he was as good as his word. The owner was discovered, and, being unable to give a satisfactory account of how he spent the evening of the burglary, and, moreover, being, awkwardly for him, in the possession of the stolen property, the jury came to the conclusion that he was guilty, and found their verdict accordingly. A more interesting question remained. How did the policeman know the exact head on which to fit that very unlucky hat? The constable told the story himself. He had been on duty in the gallery of the Old Bailey during the trial of a well-known burglar. He sat on a back bench, and wore plain clothes, and he noticed in front of him a young man with a highly criminal type of face, who seemed to take the greatest interest in the trial. The constable accordingly took the greatest interest in him and in all his belongings, and, as the unconscious spectator held his hat in his hand, looked into it, and, as Inspector Bucket would say, "totted it up." The result of this little sum in addition was the registering in his memory of a peculiarly-shaped grease mark on the lining which crossed the maker's name. The constable never forgot that hat, and the professional career of its owner soon rendered him more and more interesting. Thus he was able in a moment to restore to the burglar the property he had been so unfortunate as to leave behind him on the roof.

Lots Like Him.

A young lady who says she is young and handsome writes: "The man for me to love is vastly my superior, * * * a man who will compel my spirit to bend its knee to his; who will command my soul to stand still and shine on him, as Joshua commanded the sun; who can trample my will to the dust," etc. She should have no difficulty in finding such a man—one who will not only command her soul to stand still, but who will also command its owner to get up first in the morning to build the fires, split kindlings and carry in the coal, and whose language will make her hair stand on end when he comes home and finds dinner fifteen minutes late. There are lots of men who will bend her spirit for her, and also make her back bend over the washtub; while they go down to the saloon and discuss the best method of saving the country from the hands of its political enemies.

HOME TOPICS.

A DROP of pure glycerine dropped into the eye has taken out railway cinders. A mixture of glycerine and toilet vinegar rubbed upon the person has in many cases proved a safeguard against mosquitoes.

A POT of English ivy makes one of the most agreeable and cheap ornaments for the sitting-room in the winter. A common four, or five inch pot with a strong plant can be bought of the florist for fifty cents or less. It is easy to make a basket of interlacing coarse wires to hold the plant.

MOTHS.—I have for many years tried camphor as a preventive against moths, and it has never failed either in furs, woollens, or feathers; if the camphor gum is rolled in soft white paper there will be no discolouration from it, neither does it appear to fade the fur, as some seem to think. I put a good sized piece in the package, and put the articles in newspapers.

A TIDY ROOM.—Do you ever observe that a tidy room is invariably a cheerful one? It is cheering to come into one's breakfast room and find it spotlessly tidy; but still more certainly will cheerfulness come if tidiness is the result of our own exertion; and so we counsel you, friend, if you are ever disheartened, vexed or worried about something that has gone wrong with you in the world, to have resort to the great refuge of tidiness. Don't sit brooding and bothering. Go to work and make everything tidy about you and you cannot fail to recover your cheerfulness.

Entertaining Company.

The whole philosophy of hospitality is summed up by Emerson in the following:—"I pray you, O excellent wife, not to cumber yourself and me to get a rich dinner for this man or this woman, who has alighted at our gate nor a bedchamber made ready at too great a cost. These things, if they are curious in, they can get for a dollar at the village. But let this stranger see, if he will, in your looks, in your accent and behaviour, your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, what he cannot buy at any price, at any village or city, and which he may well travel fifty miles and dine sparingly and sleep hard, in order to behold. Certainly let the board be spread and the bed be dressed for the traveller but let not the emphasis of hospitality be in these things. Honor to the house when they are simple to the verge of hardship, so that the intellect is awake and sees the laws of the universe, the soul worships truth and love, honour and courtesy flow into all deeds." One of the greatest comforts of having a home should be that in it we have a place for friends and even strangers—rooms, more than supply the needs of the family and extra "leaves" to the extension table. The secret of true hospitality, as Emerson has stated, is in its coming from the heart.

Are Your Closets Ventilated?

There is nothing so handy in a house as an abundance of large, roomy closets; but because they are handy and extremely useful they are apt to be abused. There are many things, which, as a matter of course, are always put into a closet, of which the articles of outward wearing apparel make a large part. There are also things which ought not to go into a closet, i. e., a closet adjoining, or closely connected with, a living or sleeping room. Of such are all soiled under-garments, the wash clothes, which should be put into a large bag for the purpose, or a roomy basket, and then placed in the wash-room or some other well aired room at some distance from the family. Having thus excluded one of the fertile sources of bad odours in closets, the next point is to see that the closets are properly ventilated. It matters not how clean the clothing in the closet may be, if there is no ventilation that clothing will not be what it should be. Any garments after being worn for a while will absorb more or less of the exhalations which arise from the body, and thus contain an amount of foreign—it may be hurtful matter—which free circulation of pure air can soon remove; but if this is excluded, as in many close closets, the effluvia increases, and the clothes, closets, and adjoining rooms in time possess an odour that any acute sense of smell will readily detect. Every closet in daily use in which the night-clothes are hung by day and the day clothing by night, should have an airing as well as the bed. If the closet can be large enough to admit of a window—and it is in some cases—an ample provision for sunlight and a circulation of pure air is provided in the window, which should be left open for a short time each day. In the case of small closets a ventilator could be put over the door or even in it. In many cases such precautions for pure clothing are not practicable, and the next best thing is, to see that the door of the closet is left open for a half hour or so each day, at that time when the windows are thrown up and the large room is purified with fresh air from out of doors. In this way: first, by keeping out clothes intended for the wash; and second, daily changing the air, the closets may be comparatively pure.

Baby's Bow Legs.

These need not cause anxiety in all cases. If the child is healthy, and has good, nourishing food and pure air—the two great essentials for making good blood—it will probably outgrow its bow legs naturally enough as its strength increases. Rubbing the legs with your hand at night and in the morning may help to strengthen and to straighten them, holding them straight as you rub them. If the case is pretty bad, the two legs may be bound together with comfortable bandages during sleep, rubbing them well before and after binding them. If the child is still quite young, it may be kept from standing on its feet for a few months, giving Nature time to straighten the crookedness while the limbs are growing stronger. A carriage and a high chair are helps toward carrying out this plan.

All the things that I have mentioned as curative agencies may well be used as preventives. A healthy child, with wholesome food, and pure air to breathe, if kept from standing and walking while too young and weak, will not have bow legs. Scrofulous children are more likely to suffer in this way, and those that are very fleshy. Don't take pride in your fat baby. Excess of fat is really a disease, instead of a sign of health. Fatten your pigs as much as you fancy, but do not deliberately fatten your children. Give them plenty of good growing food, and they will be plump enough for symmetry and not too heavy for comfortable activity. It is no wonder that the little legs bend under the heavy weight of some fat little toddlers. Such children should not be encouraged to stand or walk until they have grown strong enough to do so of their own accord, and then should not be allowed to walk too much.

I hear of many cases where quite badly bowed legs have gradually straightened themselves without artificial help. Others think their children would never have outgrown the defect if they had not resorted to bandages or splints. Some have splints fitted to the ankles and bound around them, but I think it can be necessary to resort to this measure only in very confirmed cases. I have heard of one little girl who was very badly bow legged when three years old, but had entirely lost the defect a few years later. Her mother began to rub and bandage her legs together every night, and kept this up a few months until a cure was wrought. It will not do to put a baby into a jumper too young, nor to let it stay in too long a time. Probably eight or ten months is an early enough age for this exercise. If the child remains too long in the jumper its legs become weary, and if not strong they bend under its weight.

They grow strong under the exercise, but they are liable to grow crooked also. A safer exercise, though not as neat and pretty, is creeping. This is Nature's way of strengthening the limbs preparatory to walking, and I should be sorry to have it omitted from the list of baby's accomplishments.

CATS have fared very differently in differ- countries. In Egypt, in ancient times, they were worshipped, and in Turkey the people, mindful of Mohammed's pronounced partiality for the animal, have ever since treated cats with distinguished consideration. On the other hand, they were, in the middle ages, regarded in France as fiends incarnate, a view of them not seldom taken here; and in Paris, on St. John's day, there was a feline holocaust, when sacks and baskets full of cats were brought to the centre of the Place de la Greve, where the sovereign put a torch to the piles of wood amid which they were burnt alive. The last sovereign who took part in this ceremony was the Grand Monarque himself. Cardinal Richelieu was much addicted to cats, and had an Angora, his constant companion, on which he lavished the tenderest caresses, while Colbert had half a dozen around him; but the affection entertained by these eminent men for cats in particular, does not seem to have prompted them to interfere to save the Parisian pussies in general from a hideous death.

ALL SORTS.

SEPTEMBER weddings are by some regarded the luckiest." That all depends on who you marry.

THERE was a man in Aurora so thin he had a row of buttons put on his umbrella cover and wears it for an ulster.

THE New York Graphic has a picture of Vennor, and he parts his hair in the middle. That's all we want to know of Vennor.

"DEFINE a gentleman," you say? yes, I think I can!

He's as gentle as a woman, and as manly as a man.

A FARMER'S wife at Huntingdon gathered berries all one afternoon, gave birth to a son the same night, and attended market the following morning.

THE Rev. Mr. Spurgeon is made happy by the recent receipt of a legacy of $[illegible],000 for the benefit of his Pastors' College, and $125,000 for his Orphanage.

TURKISH officers, long unable to get a cent of pay from the Sultan, are offering their services to Greece. Whole regiments are ready to desert on the smallest encouragement.

THE wife of a wealthy Boston [illegible] finer was caught stealing a lace shawl in a store, though her wallet was crammed full of money, and her husband permitted her to spend all she wanted to.

A BRIDE at Portland, Me., was incensed at her husband's conduct in playing [illegible] with other young ladies, and emptied [illegible] chambers of a revolver at his fleeing [illegible]. He has not since been seen.

"IN what condition was the Patriarch [illegible] at the end of his life?" asked a [illegible] Sunday school teacher of a quiet-looking [illegible] at the foot of the class. "Dead," [illegible] replied the quiet-looking boy.

"TAKE the elevator," is inscribed on a fence of an Iowa meadow. A curious [illegible]eler who climbed the fence discovered about ten seconds that the elevator [illegible] dark brindle colour, with a curl in the [illegible]dle of his forehead.

SENTIMENTAL young lady to the [illegible] lected for her by mamma: "Ah, ma, how perfumed this summer air; how [illegible] cal these heaven-soaring songsters [illegible] wood! Do you like birds, [illegible]" "Yes, if not underdone, and with dressing."

WHEN a young man in Ohio went [illegible] neighbours' dairy to see his sweetheart, [illegible] had charge of the institution, [illegible] timidly of the old man: "How [illegible] milkmaid?" the old man angrily slammed the door in his face, and muttered "[illegible] milk isn't made—it's got from cows."

"MADAME, your boy can't pass [illegible] fare, he's too large," said the ticket [illegible] of a Highland train which had been [illegible] tained on the road by the snow. "[illegible] be too large now," replied the [illegible] "but he was small enough when we [illegible]." The collector gave in.

LAWYERS are very critical. Once a lawyer, upon being informed of an [illegible]ment between a young lady and gentleman, enquired whether the gentleman was [illegible] lover or the lovee? So an attorney to a gentleman to meet him "in the [illegible] acres, be the same more or less."

"GOOD gracious!" she ejaculated, [illegible] hurriedly disrobed and tumbled into [illegible] "What have you been drinking or [illegible] What is the matter with your [illegible]" "Liquorish," he responded; and [illegible] winked at himself in the dark and [illegible] thin till she got to sleep.

AT the morgue "My mother-in-law," [illegible] a visitor to the official in charge, "[illegible] peared three days ago and has not been heard of since. I had hoped she [illegible] here." "Describe her, if you please, that if necessary she can be identified." "She stutters awfully—you'll recognise her easily by that."

OF the two eminent dogs of [illegible] Prince Bismarck's Tiger and Victor [illegible] Senat, the latter has just died, full of [illegible] and honours, and received interment [illegible] grounds of Hauteville House. With [illegible] buried the silver collar presented him [illegible] master, whose faithful companion he [illegible] been through long years of exile.

CHARLEY and Emma were sitting [illegible] piazza the other night, gazing at the [illegible] and wondering, with Bulwer, what would be their home when love became mortal, when she said: "Charley, what star is that over there that twinkles so brightly?" "Don't know love," [illegible] mured, "I never studied astrology."

ANDREW ZITTEL, a St. Louis saloon-keeper, announced that he would do his [illegible] bring about a really temperate use of [illegible] by refusing to sell any to intoxicated [illegible]sons. John McLoughlin was the first to whom the new rule was applied, when informed that he had drank as [illegible] as was good for him, he resentfully [illegible] reformer through the head.

A SERIOUS interruption of diplomatic [illegible]lations has occurred between France [illegible] Vatican. The estrangement has arisen [illegible] of the clerical policy of the French [illegible]ment, especially towards the Jesuits [illegible]ters are said to have gone so far [illegible] French representative of the Vatican [illegible] been practically recalled, while the [illegible] at Paris has demanded his papers.

SCENE in the park (dramatis personæ, courting couple)—Is oo happy, "itte wootsy? She—Oh, so happy. [illegible] nopsy happy too? He—Oh, so happy. [illegible]—What would topsy nopsy do if there [illegible] no ottsy wootsy in the world?" Gr[illegible] of a man in the bushes: "Snopsy would be hugging some other girl, what?" Tableau.

FATHER—"Here you have only been [illegible]ried four weeks, and almost every day come to me with complaints about your [illegible]band. You ought to be ashamed of [illegible]self." Daughter—"But he fights [illegible] time." "Foolish child! Haven't [illegible] mother and me been fighting every [illegible] thirty years, and don't we get along [illegible]ably and quietly with each other."

WHILE John Eiler of Alden, Iowa, [illegible] riding horseback he saw descending [illegible] sky a ball of fire apparently about the [illegible] a flour barrel. He was paralyzed [illegible] fright, and saw the globe strike the [illegible] the animal he rode, when he became [illegible]scious. Upon coming to his senses [illegible] that the horse was dead, the head [illegible] animal being scarred as if by a red-hot [illegible].

REV. Mr. Genuflux fell down stairs [illegible] Sunday morning with a flower vase [illegible] hand, a pitcher of water in the [illegible] lamp globe under his arm, and a chin[illegible] tucked in his coat pocket. He was [illegible] to carry all these things down stairs [illegible] succeeded. But when he got to the bottom and his anxious wife screamed [illegible] the head of the stairs to know if [illegible] broken anything, he took an account of stock and calmly reported that "[illegible] broken everything but the Sabbath." [illegible] only thing," petulantly commented his [illegible]ful and economical wife, "that we [illegible] ford to break."

AUTHORS, publishers, and literary [illegible] artistic men generally in London [illegible] gratified at the bequest of $5,000 [illegible] the late Miss Neilson to Mr. Joseph [illegible] one of the ablest critics connected [illegible] London press, and a gentleman who [illegible] in a remarkable degree the regard [illegible] literary folk in London, where he [illegible]antly known and spoken of as [illegible] Night." He was one of the first to [illegible] and encourage the histrionic talent [illegible] Neilson, and contributed largely in [illegible] her merits promptly and properly be[illegible] public.

The Princess of Wales.

Although the princess of Wales, [illegible] of her admirers, is never extrav[illegible] dressed, she is more perfectly costumed [illegible] any other lady, English or foreign. [illegible] even a rose gains in beauty when it [illegible] with dewdrops, so our future queen [illegible] power of looking more radiant to[illegible] than to-day; and it seemed to all [illegible] at Felham the other afternoon that [illegible] cess had reached the dressmaker's [illegible] thule—the point beyond which not [illegible] nor Elise, nor any other maker of [illegible] raiment can go. The marvelous robe [illegible] peacock green, studded with golden [illegible] and all the sunlight seemed to fall [illegible] and make it more splendid. In the [illegible] were silver beads, and as the royal [illegible] stood in front of the enormous stone [illegible] gleaming trowel in her hand, she [illegible] embodiment of a lovely girl not yet [illegible] her teens. Upon that slight figure [illegible] were at once fixed, never to be [illegible] yet she is so unconscious that the [illegible] gaze of hundreds never perturbs, [illegible] disturbs her equanimity. While [illegible] that the monarchy was never so firm [illegible] the hearts of the English as it is [illegible] take leave to contend that the [illegible] distinctly indebted to the princess only [illegible] for a large share of its respect [illegible] larity.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails. [illegible] Letters: Foreign and Provincial [illegible] Intelligence, County Business, [illegible]mercial Matters and an Instructive [illegible]lany.

[illegible] in advance, $1 50 in three months, [illegible] if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are [illegible], except at the option of the publisher. Parties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules. All letters addressed to the Editor must be post-paid, otherwise they may not be taken from the post office.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

[illegible] column [illegible] year		$50 00
do		30 00
do		18 00
do		10 00
do		4 00
[illegible] and under, first insertion		50
Each subsequent insertion		15
[illegible] six to ten lines, first insertion		75
Each subsequent insertion		25
[illegible] ten lines, first insertion per line		8
Each subsequent insertion		2

The number of lines to be reckoned by space occupied measured by a scale of brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Greek Symbolism.

[illegible] decay of pagan belief was not, as Hemagnes, due to the fact that Hellenic [illegible] was anthropomorphic. The gods ceased [illegible] gods not merely because they became [illegible] like men, but because they became too [illegible] anything definite. If the ibis on the [illegible]et or the owl on the terra cotta repre[illegible] a more vivid belief in the gods than the Venus of Milo or the Giustiniani [illegible]rva, it is not because the idea of divinity [illegible] more compatible with an ugly bird than a beautiful woman, but because where[illegible] beautiful woman, exquisitely wrought [illegible] consummate sculptor, occupied the mind [illegible] the artist and of the beholder with the [illegible] of her beauty, to the exclusion of all [illegible] the rudely-engraven ibis or the badly-[illegible]eled owlet, on the other hand, served [illegible]ely as a symbol, as the recaller of an [illegible]; the mind did not pause in contemplation of the bird, but wandered off in search [illegible] the god; the goggle eyes of the owl and [illegible] beak of the ibis were soon forgotten in [illegible] contemplation of the vague, ever-trans[illegible] visions of phenomena of sky and [illegible], of semi-human and semi-bestial shapes, [illegible] confused, half-embodied forces; in short, [illegible] the supernatural. But the human shape [illegible] most mischief to the supernatural mere[illegible] because the human shape was the most [illegible]lute, the most distinct of all shapes; a [illegible] might be symbolized as a beast, but [illegible] only be portrayed as a man; and if [illegible] portrait was correct, then the god was a [illegible], and nothing more. Even the most fan[illegible] among pagan supernatural creatures, [illegible] strange monsters who longest kept [illegible] original dual nature—the centaurs, sat[illegible] and tritons—became beneath the chisel [illegible] artist mere abberations from the nor[illegible] rare and curious types like certain fair[illegible] phenomena, but perfectly intelligible [illegible]rational; the very Chimæra, she who [illegible] give her name to every sort of unin[illegible]gible fancy, became, in the bas-relief [illegible] story of Bellerophon, a mere singular [illegible] cure between a lion and a dog, and a [illegible] cross-breed which happens not to be [illegible]sible, but which an ancient might well [illegible] conceived as adorning some distant [illegible]gical collection. How much more [illegible]nalized were not the divinities in whom [illegible] a peculiar shape of the eye, a certain [illegible]ture of the leg, or a definite fashion of [illegible]ing the hair, reminded of their former [illegible] Learned men, indeed, tell us that [illegible] need only to glance at Hera to see that [illegible] at bottom a cow; at Apollo, to recog[illegible] that he is but a stag in human shape; [illegible] Zeus, to recognize that he is, in point of [illegible] a lion. Yet it remains true that [illegible] only walk down the nearest street to [illegible] 10 ordinary men and women who look [illegible] like various animals than do any anti[illegible] divinities, and who can yet never be [illegible] to be in really cows, stags, or lions. [illegible] same applies to the violent efforts which [illegible] being made to show in the [illegible] and Latin poets a distinct recollection [illegible] cosmic nature of the gods, cons[illegible] very human movements, looks [illegible] of the divinities into meteorological [illegible]mena, as has been done even by [illegible] in his "Queen of the Air," [illegible] tist's sense, which should have [illegible] that no artistic figure, like Homer's [illegible], can possibly be at the same time [illegible] and a whirlwind.

The Sisters.

[illegible] there is no possession in life [illegible] of a sister—a sort of second [illegible] one may say one's say, confident [illegible] be as secure as if unsaid; from [illegible] may hear homely truths, with the [illegible] that they are not dictated by [illegible] jealousy; from whom one may [illegible] compliments, assured that they are [illegible] expressions of opinion, and not [illegible] subtle adulation of those who expect [illegible] paid in the same coin with interest. [illegible] destitute of sisters is almost as [illegible] in the world as the Wandering Jew. [illegible] father and mother may be most [illegible] kind, but they are not her [illegible], so to speak—not of her generation; [illegible] has not played doll with them. She [illegible] a cousin or a friend to fill the [illegible] but no friendship or cousinly [illegible] the enough. Our friends and cousins [illegible] to talk us over with each other, [illegible] always charitable to our little faults; [illegible] short-comings are not pieced out by [illegible] of theirs; we are at the mercy of [illegible] and tenses, and our idiosyncrasies [illegible] mercy of their sense of humor; [illegible] is a bulwark between us and [illegible] of outrageous fortune." She [illegible] troubles her own; whatever hurts [illegible] hurts her; she abets and encourages [illegible] extenuates our faults, publishes our virtues. [illegible] every family of sisters there is [illegible] fairer than the rest, who gilds the [illegible] and lack of brilliancy of the others, [illegible] prettier than the rest, for whose [illegible] others receive attention; one strong [illegible] the rest, upon whom they lean; [illegible] they bolster and shield each other; [illegible] sisterless girl never tastes the flavor [illegible] talks "after the ball," or over [illegible] table. In affairs of the toilette [illegible] to aid her, and often preserve [illegible] chance of dowdiness for lack of a [illegible] advice. A sister desires nothing [illegible] that one should look one's best, [illegible] is sometimes better pleased [illegible] one appears at one's worst. [illegible] sisters are rarely jealous; praise of [illegible] upon the other; blame of one is [illegible] handed insult to the other, since [illegible] everything in common, and Rue [illegible] are to be flattered at the expense [illegible] The beauty would like to share [illegible] ness with the plainest; does not envy [illegible], unless her sister strikes sparks; [illegible] it is no pleasure to rival in [illegible] To be sure, there is the exception [illegible] who is more like a changeling [illegible], who betrays confidence, [illegible] demands the lion's share [illegible] work, and shirks care; [illegible] thank Heaven, than all [illegible] however, and we are more likely [illegible] in novels than in real life.

A Musical Cat.

[illegible] is time of the year when stories about [illegible] cats, mice, etc., are started. [illegible] is the latest: "A cat in Buckfield [illegible] developed an extraordinary [illegible] in Music. The playing upon [illegible] of all pieces, except 'Sweet [illegible] listened to by her with indifference [illegible] satisfaction, but the sentimental air [illegible] above mentioned falls little short [illegible] her to tears. Whenever the cat [illegible] this tune is begun, she at once [illegible] the household, her face expressive [illegible] of painful emotions, and [illegible] rubbing against the persons of [illegible] of the household, accompanied [illegible] of distress, she mutely [illegible] that the tune may be changed [illegible] song, or even whistling it, equally [illegible] upon her sensitive nerves, [illegible] equal pain. The only theory [illegible] all accounts for this singular [illegible] particular tune is that which [illegible] the soul of the 'Mary' who [illegible] in the ballad has, in the course [illegible] transmigrations, entered into [illegible] the memories awakened by [illegible] much for it." Next!

[illegible] can never make a man honest [illegible] make him very uncomfortable [illegible] dishonest.

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 5. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1880. WHOLE NO. 5

... SORTS.

[illegible]

The Princess of Wales.

[illegible]

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

[EVE]RY FRIDAY MORNING

[I]n time to meet the early mails.

[Conta]ining the latest Foreign and Provincial [News], Local Intelligence, County Business, [Comm]ercial Matters and an Instructive [Story].

[$1 2]5 in advance, $1.50 in three months, [if n]ot paid till end of the year. No pa[per dis]continued until all arrearages are [paid, e]xcept at the option of the publisher. [Pa]rties refusing papers without paying [wil]l be held responsible for the subscrip[tion u]ntil they comply with the rules.

[All] letters addressed to the Editor must [be pos]t-paid, otherwise they may not be [taken fr]om the post office.

[R]ATES OF ADVERTISING:

[One colu]mn, one year	$50 00
[Half] do do	30 00
[Quarter] do do	18 00
[Eighth] do do	10 00
do	4 60
[Six lin]e and under, first insertion	50
[Ea]ch subsequent insertion	15
[S]ix to ten lines, first insertion	75
[Ea]ch subsequent insertion	25
[Over te]n lines, first insertion per line	8
[Eac]h subsequent insertion	2

[The] number of lines to be reckoned by [the space] occupied measured by a scale of [solid Bre]vier. Advertisements without [specific d]irections will be published till for[bid and c]harged accordingly. All transitory [advertise]ments must be in the office of pub[lication] by 11 o'clock on the Thursday [morning] preceding their publication.

[W.] C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Greek Symbolism.

[The g]ra[ce] of pagan belief was not, as He[ine] [illegible], due to the fact that Hellenic [illegible] anthropomorphic. The gods ceased [illegible] not merely because they became [illegible] men, but because they became too [illegible] thing definite. If the ibis on the [illegible] or the owl on the terra cotta repre[sented a m]ore vital belief in the gods than [the] Venus of Milo or the Giustiniani [illegible], it is not because the idea of divinity [is more c]ompatible with an ugly bird than [with a be]autiful woman, but because where[as the be]autiful woman, exquisitely wrought [by the co]nsummate sculptor, occupied the mind [of the] artist and of the beholder with the [study of] her beauty, to the exclusion of all [else, the] rudely-engraven ibis or the badly-[drawn] owlet, on the other hand, served [merely] as a symbol, as the recaller of an [idea. Th]e mind did not pause in contempla[tion of] the bird, but wandered off in search [of the] god; the goggle eyes of the owl and [the bea]k of the ibis were soon forgotten in [the con]templation of the vague, ever-trans[forming] visions of phenomena of sky and [illegible] semi-human and semi-bestial shapes, [illegible], half embodied forces; in short, [the] supernatural. But the human shape [did] [illegible] mischief to the supernatural mere[ly becau]se the human shape was the mos[t definite], the most distinct of all shapes; a [god] [illegible] be symbolized as a beast, but he [could on]ly be portrayed as a man; and if [the port]rait was correct, then the god was a [man] and nothing more. Even the most fan[tastic a]mong pagan supernatural creatures, [the s]trange monsters who longest kept [their or]iginal dual nature—the centaurs, sat[yrs] and tritons—became beneath the chisel [of the] artist mere abberations from the nor[mal, ra]re and curious types like certain fair[-ground p]henomena, but perfectly intelligible [and ratio]nal; the very Chimæra, she who [has g]ive her name to every sort of unin[telligibl]e fancy, became, in the bas-reliefs [and s]tory of Bellerophon, a mere singular [cross] between a lion and a dog, and a [illegible] cross-breed which happens not to be [illegible], but which an ancient might well [have c]onceived as adorning some distant [illegible] collection. How much more [real]ized were not the divinities in whom [the p]eculiar shape of the eye, a certain [turn o]f the leg or a definite fashion of [doing] the hair, reminded of their former [illegible]. Learned men, indeed, tell us that [we have] only to glance at Hera to see that [she is] a bottom a cow; at Apollo, to recog[nize that] he is but a stag in human shape; [at Zeu]s, to recognize that he is, in point of [fact, a l]ion. Yet it remains true that we [may on]ly walk down the nearest street to [meet] ordinary men and women who look [more lik]e various animals than do any anti[que div]inities, and who can yet never be [suspected o]f being really cows, stags, or lions. [This a]pplies to the violent efforts which [are const]antly being made to show in the [Greek] and Latin poets a distinct recollection [of the c]osmic nature of the gods, construct[ing out of e]very human movements, looks, and [illegible] the divinities into meteorological [phenom]ena, as has been done even by Mr. [Ruskin i]n his "Queen of the Air," despite [the artis]t's sense, which should have warned [him that] no artistic figure like Homer's di[vinities ca]n possibly be at the same time a [cloud an]d a whirlwind.

The Sis[ter].

[illegible] there is no possession in life like [a] sister—a sort of second self, to [whom one] may say one's say, confident that [illegible] as secure as it [is] usa[l]; to whom [we can t]ear homely truths, with the cer[tainty th]at they are not dictated by petty [jealo]usy; from whom one may re[ceive com]pliments, assured that they are the [true ex]pressions of opinion, and not the [flattering] adulation of those who expect to [be paid] in the same coin with interest. A [sub]stitute of sisters is almost as much [sought in] the world as the Wandering Jew; [a father] and mother may be models of [kindness], but they are not her contem[poraries], so to speak—not of her generation; [they have n]ot played doll with them. She may [have a c]ousin or a friend to fill the vacant [place, b]ut no friendship or cousinly feeling [is quite] enough. Our friends and cousins [do not] talk us over with each other; they [are not a]lways charitable to our little faults; [our shortc]omings are not pieced out by any [illegible]; we are at the mercy of their [illegible] tenses, and our idiosyncrasies are [at the m]ercy of their sense of humor; but a [sister is] a bulwark between us and "the [slings and arrows] of outrageous fortune." She makes [our trou]bles her own; whatever hurts us [hurts] her; she abets and encourages us; [she exc]uses our faults, publishes our virtues. [If in a] family of sisters there is one [brighter] than the rest, who gilds the ignor[ance and] lack of brilliancy of the others; [or one pl]ainer than the rest, for whose sake [the others] receive attention; one stronger [than the] rest, upon whom they lean, and [they] bolster and shield each other. [The sister]less girl never tastes the flavour of [the t]alks "after the ball," or over the [illegible]. In affairs of the toilette she [is ready] to aid her, and often presents an [appearan]ce of dowdiness for lack of a little [sisterly] advice. A sister desires nothing so [much as] that one should look one's best; a [rival,] alas! is sometimes better pleased [when one] appears at one's worst. More[over, sist]ers are rarely jealous; praise of one [reflects u]pon the other; blame of one is only [an unfou]nded insult to the other, since they [have ever]ything in common, and true does [not care] to be flattered at the expense of [her sister]. [T]he beauty would like to share her [illegible] with the plainest; does not enjoy [illegible] unless her sister strikes sparks, [and takes] no pleasure to rival in any [illegible]. To be sure, there is the exceptional [sister who] is more like a changeling than [a sister], who betrays confidences, [illegible] demands the lion's share of [illegible] work, and shirks care; but [such are], thank Heaven, than a four[-leaved] clover, and we are more likely to [meet them i]n novels than in real life.

A Musical Cat.

[This is the] time of the year when stories about [illegible] cats, mice, etc., are started. The [following] is the latest: "A cat in Buckfield, [illegible] developed an extraordinary dis[crimina]tion in Music. The playing upon the [piano] of all pieces, except 'Sweet Af[ton,' is lis]tened to by her with indifference, [or sa]tisfaction, but the sentimental mel[ody abo]ve mentioned falls little short of [moving her] to tears. Wherever the cat may [be when] this tune is begun, she at once ap[proaches] the household, her face expressing [an int]ention of painful emotions, and by [illegible] rubbing against the persons of the [members] of the household, accompanied by [every ind]ication of distress, she mutely be[seeches] that the tune may be changed. [Singing th]e song, or even whistling it, equal[ly acts] upon her sensitive nerves, and [causes h]er equal pain. The only theory [that at] all accounts for this singular dis[like of th]e particular tune is that which sup[poses tha]t the soul of the 'Mary' who is [mentioned] in the ballad has, in the course of [its] transmigrations, entered into the [cat, and] that the memories awakened by the [song are t]oo much for it." Next!

[illegible] can never make a man honest; it [can] make him very uncomfortable [when he] is dishonest.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Why?

She wouldn't wear a "jersey"—
"Oh, no," she said, "not she,"
An' reddened up with a red that looked Like the blush of modesty.
When she left the room, and the door was closed,
Her callers all begin:
"No 'jersey' for her—oh, no, of course,
For she's nothing else but bones and skin!"

After Tennyson.

As through the land at eve we went,
And plucked the ripened ears,
We fell out—my wife and I—
We fell out, oh, I know why,
And kissed again with tears.
And the end of that there falling out,
Which made us "sass" and sob,
Was, that my wife got all the corn,
And I got all the cob.

Jilted but Still Adoring.

Let who will blame you, sweet! For me
I would lay down my life this night
To keep or shield or comfort you.
Love makes no common cause with spite;
Our dream was brief; the sounding sea,
The listening heaven, the sun and dew,
Keep faith with us. God knows, we two Lived only from glad breath to breath,
From pulse to pulse. A look, a word,
The utmost depths of being stirred;
We walked a bright enchanted way,
Afar from pain, and loss, and death.
I grudge not, though my soul must pay
Her life-long tithe for that delight!
And you? The summer rose is fair
Who flouts her, that she flung abroad
Her sweetness on the common air!
It circles back again to God!
I would not judge you, though you trod
My beating heart beneath your feet,
Much less for this slight woman's sin
Of holding me your captive there,
A willing prisoner, fettered in
The shining meshes of your hair!
More happy so, in sure defeat,
Than in the glory victors wear.
What blame, that you have wounded me,
Since beauty cannot choose but be?

MAYNE DEVERE.

The Bang.

Oh, the bang, the horrible bang!
Worse, even worse, than the modern girl's slang,
Covering, hiding her forehead so fair,
Warning young men of that girl to beware.

See it disfigure the head of a child,
Spoiling her features, so fresh and so mild;
Cut with the kitchen clip down to her eyes,
Leaving her brows an affair of surmise.

Plenty of charms has the sweet little girl,
Eyes of clear azure and teeth of pure pearl,
Yet we must ask, of her head and its shape,
"Is it a human or is it an ape?"

See her grown sister, her bang all in curls,
Deeming herself the most lovely of girls,
Making that bang, with exquisite care,
Look like a plaster or poultice of hair.

Young fellows stare at such girls as they stop,
Not to admire, but to quiz their make up,
Saying, with utterance quiet but deep,
"Mucilage ought to be plenty and cheap!"

Grandmother, too, must come out with a bang,
Nearly as bad as the rest of the gang,
Hiding the forehead that grandpa admires
Under a frizz that she borrows or hires.

Why should our women, the loved of our hearts,
Make themselves frightful by hideous arts?
Why should they cover their foreheads so fair,
Worse than the male fool who plasters his hair?

Surely the serpent bequeathed us a fang
Left in the garden, and known as a bang.
Let it depart, and, by no more insidious
Ways, may the beautiful make themselves hideous.

Fashion Notes

PLAIDS will be the rage.

POLONAISES are very short.

POLKA-DOTTED hose are fashionable.

BUSTLES are worn with all street costumes.

DOTTED fabrics of all kinds are to be worn.

STRINGS of pearls are braided or coiled in the hair.

GOLD and silver tinsel will be exceedingly fashionable.

THE Jersey and Pilgrim suits are both English in origin.

TWILLED all wool delaine is a very popular fabric this autumn.

THE Derby hat will be very much worn again this autumn.

QUILTED petticoats of satin or farmer's satin will be worn.

OLD FASHIONED neckerchiefs are very popular with the ladies.

POWDERED hair will probably be one of the revivals this winter.

LONG plumes and broad ribbons are the soul of millinery this season.

MANY of the most elegant evening dresses will be made short this winter.

FELT skirts are very handsome this year, and come in all the new shades.

ORIENTAL coloured plaids of mammoth size distinguish many of the new goods.

JOCKEY costumes, consisting of long coat-basque and plain skirt, are stylish.

BEAD-EMBROIDERED belts are worn with the round waist, so fashionable this year.

HANDKERCHIEF dresses, of woolen fabric, will be exceedingly popular for fall and winter wear.

PLACQUE buttons, in the centre of which is a bunch of grapes or other fruit, are handsome.

JERSEY webbing or stockinet, in all the new colours, is sold by the yard for corsages and sleeves.

CROWN braids and puffs are entirely out of date, the fashionable coiffure being very flat and smooth.

CASHMERE-COLOURED buttons and belt buckles are seen on the Oriental costumes so fashionable at present.

CORDS, both beaded and plain, will be largely used in trimming polonaises and outside wraps this fall.

RICH, stiff, white satin, brocaded in silver or gold, is the appropriate fabric for an elegant wedding dress.

WIDE Josephine belts are worn with almost all costumes. These are sometimes laced in front and at the back.

Wafts.

"THE sun shines for all," while the moon looks placidly down on a few spooney couples.

WHAT is the difference between a fixed star and a meteor? One is a sun, the other a darter.

WEDDING cards are to be smaller than ever and made as plain, quiet, and genteel as possible.

MARRIED life reaches its acme of happiness when a woman can eat crackers in bed without any complaint from her husband.

IT is the dastardly young brother who remarks: "Sister Sal's all the fashion now. She wears a horse-belt round her waist, and I expect she'll soon have a saddle and bridle."

FROM the satisfied expression that often illuminates a lady's face while she is gazing in the mirror, the superstition has grown that mirrors are in the habit of giving women "taffy."

THE astonishment of the lightning when Aja defied it was nothing as compared to the feeling of the young man who makes his best bow to a bevy of young ladies, and bursts a suspender button in the act.

AT a recent marriage the bride was a young damsel who had been a great flirt. When the clergyman asked the usual question, "Who gives this woman away?" a young fellow present exclaimed, "I could, but I won't."

"O, MR. LINGERIE, you've got on your freckled stockings!" exclaimed a sweet child, on the Ocean house piazza, where that gentleman was the centre of an admiring feminine group; "and Cousin Julia says they just match your complexion!"

TODDLEKINS is a very small man indeed, but he said he never minded it all until his three boys grew up to be tall, strapping young fellows, and his wife began to cut down their old clothes and cut them over to fit him. And then, he said, he did get mad.

"WHAT do you suppose I'll look like when I get out of this?" indignantly inquired a fashionably-dressed young lady of a conductor of a fearfully overcrowded car the other day. "A good deal like crushed sugar, miss," said the conductor. And the lady stood up and rode four streets further, with the smile of an angel.

About Corsets.

Although some women are foolish enough to dangerously compress their vitals for the sake of unnatural slenderness, a fashion writer in the Cincinnati Enquirer says that no such proceeding is required by the prevailing styles. "Corsets, as now generally worn," she continues, "are more a comfort than otherwise. The present evil practice in this direction is that of forcibly flattening the bosom. About no article of dress is a fashionable woman more finicky. But women who can afford it have their corsets made to order, often paying as high as $25 for a carefully fitted one. Those who demand of their dressmakers that their bodices shall fit like a glove, without a wrinkle or a strain, must consent to wear corsets always of the same size and shape. Otherwise a perfect fit at one time will not be so at another. Many women are so soft and pliant that they can be shaped by a corset to almost any desired figure; but, having chosen a model, they must stick to it, or alter their dresses with every change of stays. Formerly, when skirts were voluminous, it did not matter what the corset was like below the waist line; but now, with skirts lying flat, all the outlines are of importance. This has led to the extension of corsets downward, until women who are at all round are commonly encased from shoulder to leg. The corsets displayed in the stores, with their ribs of bone and metal, look like rows of ancient armor. The lengthening is a good thing, because it equalizes the pressure and prevents girting in of the waist alone."

Love's Young Dream.

One of the most romantic affairs ever before heard of in this section of the country, says a correspondent at Marion, Ind., first took place here about two weeks ago, and which terminated last night. The substance of the case is as follows: About three miles in the country lives a well-to-do farmer named Faustey, who has in his family a daughter named Sarah D., aged just 14, who is small in stature for her age, and is merely a child. Another old farmer named Pritchett is a close neighbour, who has a son just 13 years of age, who is dubbed as Morton. About two weeks ago these small children planned an elopement, and succeeded in leaving their paternal roof safely. After leaving their homes they walked to Wabash, a distance of twenty miles, where they took the train for White Pigeon, Mich. After arriving there they were united in marriage by the proper persons. The pair then roamed over several towns in the state on their wedding trip, until their finances became short, when they returned home last week and told their respective parents of their adventure. The father of the girl became indignant and brought the girl to the town last Saturday, before 'Squire Timothy, where a warrant was issued charging Morton Pritchett's father with abduction. The case was tried yesterday, when he was acquitted, the girl acknowledging she persuaded the youth to elope with her, and furnished part of the money, the cost of the whole trip being $10.25. While on the trip and after they were married neither occupied the same bed, and no change of clothing was taken along for the occasion. After the trial each returned to their respective homes, where they still remain. The father of the girl will immediately institute proceedings to have the marriage set aside, the plea to be that she was not old enough. The affair has caused considerable interest, and every one who is acquainted with the particulars has taken an interest in the case. During the trial several funny incidents were told by each, which the jammed court-room relished with pleasure. The end is not yet, as bad blood is brewing between the two parents.

Jupiter in Perihelion.

Jupiter reached its perihelion, or nearest point to the sun on Saturday. This is an astronomical event of considerable importance, as it occurs only once in about twelve years. As the planet is some millions of miles nearer the earth than usual, an excellent opportunity is given for the study of its features. Even the smallest telescopes will now show some of the wonders of this great planet and it system of satellites, and, with large telescopes, astronomers hope, within a month or two, to add much to our knowledge of the chief member of the sun's family. Jupiter will remain the leading brilliant in the sky throughout October, shining so brightly that even Sirius must temporarily yield the palm.

There is another reason for the interest that Jupiter's arrival at perihelion excites. More than a year ago some professed scientific person on the Pacific slope wrote a pamphlet on the terrors of the perihelia of the four great planets Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, which, it was represented, would occur nearly simultaneously, and with these planets in conjunction, fearful results to the earth were predicted. The false alarm was spread by other pretended savants, and, no doubt, awoke the fears, not merely of the ignorant, but of persons who knew enough of astronomy to be aware of the gigantic attractions that the planets exert upon one another. Stories of plagues, pestilence, famine, and death were based upon the supposed influence of the perihelia. Mr. Proctor and other astronomers sought to counteract the effect of this by showing, in the first place, that it was not true that the planets named would all be in perihelion together. In fact, Saturn does not reach its perihelion until 1885. Uranus will be in perihelion next spring, but Neptune, will not reach its nearest point to the sun until six or seven years hence. It was also denied by scientific men of high authority that there was any reason to fear evil results to the earth, even though the predicted perihelia should occur very near together. Still, alarm was felt, and no doubt, many persons will be pleased to know that Jupiter, the most powerful of all the planets, has reached the dreaded perihelion point, and is already turning to retrace his steps, without having in any way injured his sister planet, the earth.

That the sun has felt the approach of the great planet, was shown in the prevalence of vast sun spots and outbursts of gaseous matter, is not improbable, and through the reflex action of the sun upon the earth our our planet may, even now, feel the same influence in violent atmospheric phenomena. It is difficult to realise the enormous power of the bright speck, Jupiter, shining so quietly in the sky. A recent writer has shown that the power which the sun has to put forth to hold Jupiter in his orbit is equal to the combined strength of 170,000,000 bars of steel, each one a mile in diameter. Jupiter's pull upon the earth, according to the same authority, is equal to the strength of 23,000,000,000 bars of steel, each of them one foot in diameter. So, if the mere power of gravity were all that was required to make Jupiter's approach dangerous to the earth, evidently he is not lacking in the power. But no one need fear that the sisterhood of worlds which acknowledge the dominion of the sun will prove mutually destructive.

IT has been estimated that of the horses in the world Austria has 1,367,000; Hungary, 2,179,000; France, about 3,000,000; Russia, 21,470,000; Germany, 3,352,000; Great Britain and Ireland, 2,255,000; Turkey, about 1,000,000; the United States, 9,504,000; the Argentine Republic, 4,000,000; Canada, 2,624,000; Uruguay, 1,000,000.

The Autumn Woods.

AND THE HOUSEHOLD ADORNMENTS WHICH THEY PROVIDE—PREPARING FERNS AND MOSSES.

(Philadelphia Times.)

Ferns become every year more popular for purposes of household decoration. Growing or cut, freshly gathered or pressed, the uses to which they are applied are numberless. It is a safe plan to gather them whenever you can get them, but those who can choose their time to do so usually prefer August or early September, since at this time the ferns are in full maturity and have not yet begun to fade.

In going fern hunting it is wise to take a large book, such as an atlas or a music portfolio, along in which to lay the more delicate specimens as soon as they are gathered; the commoner varieties—such as the ordinary bracken bush, the evergreen fern—may be easily taken home to be pressed, by wrapping them in newspaper with a wet fold around the stems to keep them from wilting. Those which are to be dug up, root and all, for transplanting should be placed as carefully as possible in a basket.

At the close of every excursion the ferns which are to be pressed should without loss of time be transferred to the drying paper. Seated at a convenient table the collector begins her work, her pile of ferns at one side of her and her paper at another. Plenty of paper and two flat, smooth boards are the materials required. Books on the subject advise stout blotting paper, but strong, soft newspapers, such as the Times for instance, make an excellent substitute at far less cost. Number one board is laid down; on this several sheets of paper—the more the better if paper is plentiful—and on them the fern is laid out as nearly as possible in the natural position, any twisting into shapes which the fronds would not have assumed in life being avoided. Over it a single sheet of paper is laid, and while with the right hand the plant is being spread out, with the left the paper is being simultaneously smoothed over it, immediately a few more sheets are laid over it and the process repeated with additional specimens until the pile is sufficiently high; then it is topped with the second board and the bundle deposited with a forty or fifty pound weight on the top of all. Bricks make good weights, and they can be so distributed as to make the pressure bear equally on all parts at once; but any weight—a large stone, for instance—will do very well; or you may put the boards under your trunk. If a great many ferns are to be dried, another set of boards and papers may be used, but one is sufficient for quite a number. Next day the collector must "change her papers." The pile is reversed, and the top board laid down on the table, with a sheet or two of dry paper on the top of it. Then the half-limp, flattened fern is carefully transferred to it, and the process repeated until the whole of yesterday's gatherings are once more in dry sheets, and the weights on top of them again. The damp paper is then laid out in the sun or suspended on a cord in the kitchen or other warm place to dry, and in a short time is ready for use. How often the changing of papers must be repeated, depends upon the number of sheets which are interposed between each plant, the state of the weather, the dryness of the room, or the thickness of the fern leaves themselves; but, as a rule, half a dozen times are sufficient, and, if need be, the last two or three times may have an interval of two or even three days between them. If the plants make the paper bulge out, a sheet or two of stout pasteboard interposed here and there will smooth down their asperities and secure better bried specimens. In any case, a little patience and neat-handedness are necessary to secure choice specimens, and the ferns should not be taken out of press until sure that they are well dried. The best test of their being thoroughly dry is to gently bend back a little bit of the frond. If it is inflexible, then it is better to give it another turn of the drying press. If, on the contrary, it breaks, all the sap has been extracted from it by the combined pressure of the stones and the absorbing power of the paper on either side or the specimen. Then transfer them to a large book and keep them there until ready to use them. Small ferns may be pressed between the leaves of a book by tying a string around the volume to keep it tightly shut, but it is important in such case that the ferns should be dry, and the book must be opened and examined from day to day to avoid injury both to the volume and to the ferns.

As already intimated, any one with a large supply of pressed ferns has an almost limitless fund upon which to draw for household decoration. Window transparencies and fire screens are made by framing the ferns, artistically grouped, between two sheets of plate-glass. The side-lights to a hall door may be prettily ornamented in the same way, only for this purpose, in order to obstruct the view, it is well to fasten the fern on fine white net. Bright hued flowers, such as pansies, morning glories, scarlet sage, etc., add much to the beauty of such transparencies and may be successfully dried between sheets of cotton wadding placed between wooden boards.

A cluster of ferns pinned on a lace curtain where it falls apart has a very happy effect, and we have seen pretty window cornices made of a garland of ferns and autumn leaves. The maiden-hair fern looks extremely well arranged in a small basket, with a few dried bits of crimson cock's comb or bachelor's buttons. Indeed, the uses to which they may be applied are limited only by the taste and skill of the decorator.

When a fernery is contemplated the ferns should be carefully dug up and transplanted in soil as nearly as possible like that in which they originally grew.

As a rule, ferns require abundant moisture and cool shade, and the exercise of a little ingenuity will soon provide these requirements for even a varied collection. With the help of a few pieces of furnace slag or other fantastic material, a rockery can be erected in the dreariest city back yard. Sand—not sea, but river sand—should be first strewn over this, and then woods earth should be packed into every crevice where the ferns are to grow.

The newest fern cases have ventilators in the top of the glass, but it is an open question whether these are an advantage in a furnace-heated room.

A very pretty fernery may be made of an old tin tray. Paint it first with waterproof paint, then make a foundation of gravel, charcoal and cinders and some sand, not too much, however. Over this put your woods earth and plant the ferns with sheets of moss, carefully transplanted from the place where the ferns grew, covering the roots. Keep well watered, and you will have a thing of beauty all winter, constantly developing new beauties as tiny ferns and wood plants spring up from the moss.

For decorative purposes moss is scarcely second to ferns, or even flowers. In England it is much used for table decoration, and is gathered in summer and dried for winter use. It is a mistake to think that because moss is green it is of one colour, you will find it of every hue—bronze and emerald, shining, golden and dark purple green. The best way to collect it for decoration is to pull it in large tufts, which should be well shaken after reaching home and spread lightly on newspapers for a day or two, and then again thoroughly shaken, to free them from loose bits and from insects. To keep it for the winter the sprays should be dipped in water, dabbed dry on a cloth, laid flat between two sheets of brown paper and immediately ironed until quite dry. The irons should be of the heat required to smooth linen, but do not prolong the process too much or the moss will become brittle. This process answers for the coarser mosses; more delicate ones should not be ironed, and the "maiden-hair" moss should not be placed in water, or the golden extinguishers may wash off. Small, naturally mossy twigs—ivy, oak leaves, acorns, lichens—by occasionally being put out to be refreshed by rain, can be made to last for some time. The last need an occasional rain soaking, as they become brittle and powdery when too dry. The little gypsy kettles that were so fashionable some years ago may be made into pretty centre-pieces by covering sticks and kettle alike with moss, as follows: Hold one of the sticks in the left hand, take a tuft of moss sufficiently large to wrap around it in the right hand and fold the moss around and over the end of the stick; pass a long piece of fine gardening wire round it, securing the end firmly and pulling it in tight, so that the moss conceals it; wind it round once more and then take a second tuft; let the end neatly overlap the first, and secure it in the same way; continue till the stick is covered, keeping the moss as evenly and tightly rolled as possible. If too shaggy trim it with the scissors. Secure the end of the wire when finished, and if tightly done all will remain firm. The handle of the kettle should be done in the same way before doing the kettle. In covering the latter the upper edge of the tufts should be turned inside, under the tin for holding the flowers, and the first wire tied around close under the top. A very few flowers, arranged in wet sand, will answer for filling the tin. Flower pots may be covered in the same way; and flat strawberry baskets, thus concealed, and lined with white paper, make very pretty fruit dishes. A plateau of moss for holding dessert dishes is also pretty. A board of the desired size and shape is requisite; the edges may be cut out for the dishes to fit into, or they may stand on it. The moss should be made as smooth and even as possible, and may be of only one of various kinds. The common feather moss is perhaps the best. If liked, a border of gray lichen can surround it, and outside this a second of small leaves, trailing or ground ivy. Borders of leaves and ferns can be made for dishes, and wreaths of periwinkle runners, ivy, holly bright autumn leaves. Ferns can be ironed like the moss and will preserve their colour, but the safest plan is to dry them as directed. Circles or stripes of thin cardboard can be covered with leaves and ferns for surrounding dishes, and single ferns arranged in a pattern of the cloth. Infinite variety can be made by giving time and thought to the matter.

The Use and Abuse of Fiction.

What was said in a former article on the use and the abuse of the theatre, is equally true of the use and abuse of fiction. Indeed these are but different forms of the same thing. What dramatic representation is to the eye, works of fiction are to the imagination. Both are ideal representations of truth, and all that can be said either for or against the one may be said with equal truthfulness for or against the other. From a very early age, mankind have been in the habit of clothing their thoughts, and embodying the truths which they would impart to each other, in the form of fables, allegories, parables, and other forms of ideal representations. Indeed, in the early ages of the world, when books were few, or did not exist at all, the bulk of the wit and wisdom that had been preserved from the past, as well as that which was the product of contemporary genius, was wrapped up in such forms as these. The stories which were told at the fire-side; the songs that were sung, and the ballads and "Sagas" which were recited on their festive occasions, were of this sort. Even philosophy and religion were taught in this way. And not a little of the most precious truth that we possess to-day has found its way to us in fictitious forms. Every one knows that the relics of the Hebrew prophets, which came down to our time, abound in these poetic creations. Even the Divine Teacher himself did not shrink from using the parable as an instrument of instruction, and as a means of preserving the truth in the memory of his hearers.

In view of these facts it is worse than useless to assail fiction as such.—Like every other sort of literature, beyond question much of it is bad, and of this we may take occasion to say something at another time. But in saying this, we are only affirming of fiction what may be affirmed, with equal truthfulness, of every other sort of writing. Even into the very best histories the fictitious element enters largely. And this is true of not a few of the biographies which are most widely circulated, and that have the largest number of readers. It is this element, supplied by the imagination of the author, which makes the events, and personages which a writer describes live in the mind of the reader; it is this which gives vividness and reality to a narrative which unenlivened by it would would be so hopelessly dull and stupid, that it would not only be drudgery to read it, but it would make no distinct or lasting impression on the mind of the reader. Take all that is imaginary, dramatic, and practical, from the writing of Macaulay and what would the residuum be worth? Why even the Sabbath-school libraries, furnished by the churches of Christendom, and read by children, are very largely stories which are purely the creations of the imagination. The reason of this is, as the caterers for these libraries tell us, that experience has convinced them, that this is the only sort of books that they can get the bulk of the children and young people to read.

We cannot say that we are altogether pleased with this. One of the abuses of fiction we judge to be the putting it in exciting forms, and in large quantities, into the hands of children or very young persons. There are other faculties which ought to be developed before the imagination. And where the habit is formed early of reading fiction to the exclusion of works which appeal more directly to the understanding and judgment, and call for the exercise of the memory, they induce a careless and hurried mode of reading, which permanently unfits the mind for the sober pursuit of knowledge. Besides, to many young persons, especially to girls of a nervous and excitable temperament, such reading begun early and pursued intemperately, as it is almost sure to be—unless prevented by outside restraint—by keeping the brain in an abnormal and unhealthy state of excitement at a time when quietness is a most essential condition of healthy development—leads to the most disastrous consequences, both physical and mental. Every intelligent physician of large practice, especially such as have made nervous and mental disease a special study, would bear testimony to the truth of this observation. Fiction is to the mind what sweetmeats, relishes and stimulants are to the palate,—taken in limited quantities, along with plainer and less exciting food, it may do good; adopted as a diet to live on, it can only work mischief. A literary friend, a hard student, being asked what he had been reading lately, replied, in our hearing, "I have spent the last few days reading novels. I like occasionally to spend a few days in this way; I find it has an effect upon the mind very much like that which a little good whiskey has upon the body." We have never forgotten the comparison, or the impression which it conveyed, that whatever advantage might be derived from this sort of reading, especially by nervous and excitable young people, was secured at the risk of some evil; and that it ought not to be indulged in therefore without careful limitation and self-restraint.

Aeronautics.

The proposed attempt to reach the North Pole by balloon has given an impetus to the science of aeronautics in England. A balloon society has been formed, and, under its auspices, several air ships have been sent up in the vicinity of London. One of them contained Mr. Wright, the aeronaut; Commander Cheyne of the royal navy, who proposes to make an experiment with a balloon in his next Arctic journey; Mr. L. C. Alford of Denver, Colorado, and a newspaper correspondent. In a minute and a quarter from the start they attained the altitude of 1,000 feet, in three minutes 2,000 feet, and in eight minutes 2,350 feet. The object of the travellers was not to go high, but to get over the ground as quickly as possible, and with a gentle breeze they glided along at the rate of thirty miles an hour. In the descent they dropped 1,200 feet in a minute and a quarter. They managed to check their rapid fall before reaching terra firma, and landed safely after much bumping on the ground. Of the other balloons, one rose 12,000 feet. The scientific observations of the various aeronauts will be carefully compared, and a report made embodying the results obtained as to the air currents at different heights.

As a physiological fact, it may be mentioned that negroes are not light-fingered.

No Bitterness.

THE QUIET WAY IN WHICH TWO OLD GENTLEMEN DISCUSSED POLITICS.

[Petroleum World.]

Grandfather Lickshingle and Deacon Redspinner, two patriarchs in this community, were walking down the street together yesterday. It was remarked that two such venerable men were not often seen together, and people raised their hats to them as they passed along and spoke to them reverently.

"There's entirely too much bitterness in this campaign, deacon," said Mr. Lickshingle, "and I regret it exceedingly. Now, when we was young men, and took an interest in politics, we had none of this 'ere everlastin' cat-haulin'."

"Indeed we hadn't," acquiesced Deacon Redspinner. "Take Jackson's campaign for instance. There was a lively interest taken by both parties, but there was none of yer bullyraggin' like we see now-a-days."

"That's a fact, deacon," said old Lickshingle, "but, between me and you, I never thought much of Jackson."

"He was a mighty good man, Lickshingle."

"He was small potatoes compared to some men we have now, deacon."

"Who d'ye mean," demanded the deacon.

"Well, there's Garfield," said Lickshingle.

"Garfield be danged. You know mighty well, Lickshingle, he couldn't have been 'lected hog-rieve in a hill town in Jackson's day."

"He's a darn sight better man than Hancock."

"Go slow, Lickshingle, go slow!" said the deacon, somewhat agitated.

"Oh, I know what I'm talkin' about," retorted Lickshingle, as he stabbed the pavement spitefully with his hickory cane. "Hancock's a stoughton bottle, that's what he is."

"An' what's Garfield? Great guns, what's Garfield? Didn't he lay a Cheap-John sort of a pavement around the capitol and charge the government $1,000,000 for it?" and the deacon's eyes blazed with indignation.

"See here, deacon! Look at your man Hancock's letter to Sherman. Didn't he try to blow up Washington with glycerine? Say, didn't he? Oh, I read the papers old man, an' know what's going on."

"Hancock's a good an' pure man. Didn't he fight like a bull-dog in the war of the rebellion? Where was Garfield skulkin' in the time of disaster? In Canady, by thunder, in Canady!"

"What wur Hancock doin' with a stiletto in his boot the night Lincoln was murdered? Answer me that. If Wilkes Booth had failed this Hancock was ready to finish the job. Don't talk to me! Don't talk to me!"

"It's a lie!" howled the deacon, as he whirled around and faced Lickshingle on the street.

"It's as true as holy writ, an' any man's a liar that says so," retorted Lickshingle, too much wrought up to be particular as to his phraseology.

"You're a bald-headed old scoundrel," yelled the deacon.

"You're an old leper, an' I can wipe the ground with you," howled Lickshingle, gripping his cane and advancing.

Friends jumped in and the two furious old men were dragged away in opposite directions. The deacon squirmed around in the arms of his captors, shook his cane at Lickshingle, and hissed:

"Your man Garfield would never have gone into the army if he he hadn't been drafted, and he wouldn't then, only he thought he would be able to desert—the onery son of a gun!"

Powerful Ocean Steamships.

[London Times.]

Twenty years ago, the largest steamers known (in this, as in all such comparisons, neglecting the Great Eastern, which was a prodigy of engineering skill), did not reach 350 feet in length, 45 feet in breadth, 3,500 tons in tonnage, or 4,000-horse power indicated. We have, at this moment, before us a list of 50 merchant steamers sailing, in the year 1860, from Southampton and other southern ports, which the largest vessels then frequented, and the list includes but 10 ships of more than 300 feet in length, none of which reached the limits of size and power just given, and the whole of which belonged to two companies, viz., the Royal Mail and the Peninsular and Oriental. At the present moment we have, afloat and at work, the White Star liners, some of them of 445 feet in length, 35 feet in breadth, and nearly 5,000 indicated horse-power; the Inman liners, comprising such ships as the City of Berlin, 488 feet by 44½ feet broad, and of about the same steam power; the Orient, of 445 feet by 45½ feet, with engines developing 5,600 horse-power; the Arizona, of about the same size, with still greater steam power and speed; and many other splendid vessels but little inferior to any of the foregoing. And these grand steamers—many of which reach the quays of New York with greater punctuality than railway trains reach the London suburbs from Victoria and Charing-cross, and would reach our quays with equal punctuality if they could avoid the abominable sands that bar the Mersey—are the forerunners of still larger and more powerful vessels now taking shape on the banks of the Clyde and elsewhere. The Cunard steel ship, the Servia, now building, by Messrs. Thompson, of Glasgow, is 500 feet by 60 feet, with over 10,000 indicated horse-power, and will, therefore, doubtless possess a speed considerably in advance of that of the very fastest ship at present afloat in the mercantile marine. The Inman steamship City of Rome, building of iron at Barrow, will be still larger, having a length of 546 feet, a breadth of 52 feet, a gross registered tonnage of 8,000, and a steam power nearly equal to that of the Servia. The Guion line is to be increased by ships of almost equal size and power, and the Allan line is building others equal to the finest of the White Star boats. Notwithstanding the number and magnitude of the passenger steamers now running between America and this country the traffic is so great that it has only been possible to secure accommodation by arranging for passage many weeks, and even months, in advance, while the rapidly increasing population and wealth of the United States and of Canada make it certain that the interchange of agricultural produce and manufactured goods between them and ourselves will go on increasing.

Cradles.

The following wise suggestion is from the Herald of Health.

Fortunately for children, cradles are seen more and more rarely in all families, and we are decidedly of the opinion that these soothing machines, once so popular, will soon have only a historic interest, like the spinning wheel. Still there are here and there mothers who advocate the cradle, and for such we have a word of advice. In the first place the rocking motion to which the child is subjected causes an unnatural circulation of the blood in the brain, which tends in the end to produce a state of unnatural excitability. Now if this takes place several times a day, and these motions of the cradle are carried to excess with restless and wakeful children, it is clear to our mind that the effects can only be injurious, especially when we remember the fact that children once accustomed to it are often treated with it for years. Cases are not rare of serious injury to the circulation of the brain, from violent rocking given to the infants when intrusted to nurses or ignorant children. It is not difficult with a little patience to treat an infant so that as soon as the time for sleeping approaches, he will go to sleep in his little bed without any artificial aid. If the beginning has been made, and if the mother has not been softened by the disagreeable crying of the child to rock it to sleep in the cradle or in her arms, it will be found after a few days, how quickly the child likes to go to sleep alone without the affliction of popular remedies of mothers. Many mothers will not believe this true until they have tried it and learned from experience. Although the child may cry at first, it soon learns to go to sleep quietly, and the mother has the additional advantage of gaining valuable time for rest from her domestic duties. Why does a healthy baby need rocking, more than a bird a colt, or a calf?

Porpoise-Shooting.

Porpoise-shooting affords to the Indians of the Passamaquoddy tribe their principal means of support. It is practiced at all seasons of the year, but the fish killed in the Winter are the fattest, and give the largest quantities of oil. The largest-sized porpoises measure about seven feet in length, about the girth five feet, weight 300 pounds and upward, and yield from six to seven gallons of oil. The blubber is about one and one-half inches thick in Summer, and two inches thick in Winter, at which time the creature is in its best condition. The blubber from a large porpoise weighs about 100 pounds. The Indians try out the oil in a very primative manner, and with very rude but picturesque appliances. The blubber is stripped off, then cut into small pieces, which are placed in a huge iron pot, and melted over a fire. All along the beach were placed, at intervals, curious structures, consisting of two upright pieces of wood surmounted by a cross-piece, from which the pots were hung by chains. Under this cross-piece large stones were piled in a semi-circle, inside of which a fire was made that was allowed to burn fiercely until the stones were at a white heat. The fire was then scattered, and the pots containing the blubber were placed under the stones, and just enough fire under them to insure the melting of the blubber. When melted, the oil was skimmed off into other receptacles, then poured into tin cans of about five gallons, capacity, and the process was complete. If the oil is pure it readily brings 90 cents per gallon, but if adulterated with seal, or any other interior oil, its value is reduced to 65 cents per gallon. A very superior oil is obtained from the jaw of the porpoise. The jaws are hung up in the sun, and the oil as it drips is caught in cans placed for that purpose. The quantity of oil thus produced is small, being only half a pint from each jaw, but a large price is paid for it by watch-makers and others requiring a very fine lubricator. The oil from the blubber gives a very good light, and was for a long time used in all light-houses on the coast. It is also a capital oil for lubricating machinery, never gets sticky, and is unaffected by cold weather. When pure there is no offensive smell, and I know of no oil equal to it for those who are compelled to use their eyes at night. The light is very soft, and when used in a German student's lamp one can work almost as comfortably as by daylight, and the dreaded glare of gas and other artificial lights is completely avoided. If industrious and favoured with ordinary success, an Indian can kill 150 or 200 porpoises a year, and they will average three gallons of oil each. But, unfortunately, the poor Indians are not so industrious, or only so by fits and starts, or as necessity compels them. Their way is usually to accumulate some 15 or 20 gallons of oil, then go off to Eastport, Me., with it for market. Thus much time is lost in loitering about the towns, and in going and returning from the hunting-grounds. Moreover, there are always two Indians to each canoe, and the proceeds of the hunt have to be divided. There is quite a demand for the oil, and, if systematically followed, porpoise-shooting would afford the Indians a comfortable support. The flesh of the porpoise when cooked is not unlike fresh pork, and at one time was much used. The Indians still use it, and it is also in request by the fishermen on the coast, who readily exchange fresh fish for "porpus" meat with the Indians.

Some Turkish Intrigues.

Perhaps the most striking fact to a stranger is the little interest Turkish women seem to inspire among the gallant population of Constantinople. But such strangers are, perhaps, unaware of the danger of a word, or even a look; a prolonged gaze into the carriage of grande dame Turque may provoke the ire of an attendant eunuch, and cause him to lay about right and left the heavy whip with which he is often provided; but the greatest danger lies in the treacherous encouragement of the grande dame herself. Some years ago a M. B——, a young Frenchman of this town, became enamored of one of these veiled Junos, whose soft glance seemed to reveal a reciprocal passion. Day after day he awaited her carriage at a corner of the principal thoroughfare, and, day after day the bewiching eyes drew him carressingly to his doom. Still, no words were exchanged. M. B—— became more and more infatuated, and in spite of the warnings of his friends he determined to carry on the intrigue to the end, whatever that might be. Patiently he bided his time and his opportunity, nor were they long in presenting themselves. He was rewarded one day by seeing a tiny jeweled hand drop a billet from the carriage window, which fluttered all unnoticed to his feet. Seizing the paper, the enraptured Frenchman hurriedly deciphered the few words therein inscribed. The lady proposed a meeting for that same evening in the obscure corner of a large cemetery. B——, who had patiently borne the quizzing of his friends, now informed them of the progress of his adventure. He was again warned against pursuing it further; but he laughed at the idea of danger, and, accompanied by a friend, repaired to the rendezvous at the appointed hour. He was presently accosted by a sable servant, exceedingly well dressed, who politely invited him to follow. The two friends turned into a deserted street and arrived at a small door which led through a covered yard to a second entrance. This their guide unlocked, and made a sign for M. B——'s friend to retire. All was silence and darkness around; the servant's black eyes seemed to gleam with malice; and, moved by an undefined fear, the friend again implored M. B—— to return. "Bah!" returned this gentleman,, "it's too late; besides, what is there to fear when things are managed so easily?" The door closed upon the audacious Frenchman, but the fears of his friends were prophetic—he was never seen by them again. Many attempts were made to learn his fate, and large bribes were freely given for this object. A hint was received that he had been conveyed beyond the frontier, but all traces of him were lost, and no further clue was ever obtained as to his disappearance. One or two such adventures are enough to damp the ardor of the boldest Lovelace, and, unfortunately, other examples have not been wanting.—Temple Bar.

A Terrible Punishment.

Pontre Moli, Italy, can boast of a lady Abbess and reverend coadjutors whose Spartan discipline goes even beyond that of CANNING'S renowned Mother Brownrigg, "who whipped two female 'prentices to death and hid them in a coal-hole." A lay servant having been detected in stealing some bread, my Lady Abbess and two senior nuns held an impromptu tribunal and condemned her "to undergo the torments of purgatory." Most of us probably have entertained but vague notions as the nature of those torments, and will therefore learn with the more interest what are an Abbess's ideas on the point. The reverend Mother and Sisters having conveyed the delinquent to a cell where there was a stove, tied her hands securely, and then held her face to the hot metal until her eyes had lost their sight and her face was one huge blister. Some of the nuns, however, thought this discipline somewhat too stringent, and, possibly on the principle that "a fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind," and with the reflection that there was no saying but that the Lady Abbess might "go for" them next, communicated with the authorities, who have placed these severe disciplinarians in jail pending a trial.

DR. DE VRY, of the Hague, has been made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire by the Queen for his services in the introduction of the cinchona-tree into India, and in the manufacture of quinine there; and Dr. James Prescott Joule has received the Albert Medal from the Society of Arts for establishing, after "most laborious research, the true relation between heat, electricity, and mechanical work, thus affording the engineer a sure guide in the application to science and industrial pursuits."

A BOY was carrying two pounds of powder and a fuse in a cigar box, at Gibraltar, Pa. The end of the fuse protruded, and a practical joker was at hand to light it. The explosion killed the boy.

PERSONAL.

IT is a touching piece of self-forgetfulness on the part of Queen Christina to name her baby Mercedes, for her husband's first love.

CHRISTINE NILSSON lately refused to sing for a "charity" at Aix-les-Bains, where she has been staying, declaring that charity began at home, and she was there to get rest.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES can claim the new South African medal and clasp, as he conveyed the news of the victory at Ulundi to Sir Garnet Wolseley and Sir Bartle Frere.

AT a recent English wedding the bride's nephew, dressed in a ruby velvet Cavalier suit, acted as page, holding the train; and the thirteen bridesmaids wore mob caps, puffed sleeves, long mittens, and paste buckles.

MADAME BARBAULT, who was lately married to Mr. Andrew Johnson, a relative of the late ex-President of that name, has a right to wear the title of Duchess of Bourbon. She has been for some years a teacher of French in Erie.

MISS FLORA SHARON, who is thought to be a pretty and charming girl, the daughter of the Silver Senator, is to marry Sir Thos. Hesketh, who, making a yachting tour round the world, paused at San Francisco just long enough to take the prize.

THE picture of Madame Gerster-Gardini's baby is described by a bachelor as being very pretty and winsome, which inclines one to believe it remarkably attractive. The child is taken asleep in a wicker carriage, over which is leaning the slender Italian nurse.

THE King of Denmark has given the Bernhardt a gold medal surmounted by a crown in Diamonds, and attached to the red-bordered white ribbon of the Order of the Danebrog—a distinction very rarely granted, and but to two other women—Nilsson and Trebelli.

DR. TANNER crops up in the pages of nearly every English periodical, and will be referred to in every new encyclopædia and thousands of medical works. If he has not got money, he has got, in six weeks, as world-wide a reputation as Wellington or Byron in as many years.

WHEN Wagner heard that the people of the United States would not guarantee him $1,000,000 and expenses, he enjoyed a "Lone Grin" all to himself, and remarked, "Dat was shmart peoples; dey want me to take off $2.50 from dem prices. Well, I thinks about it some dimes."

THE Baroness de Hatzfeld, whose divorce, for no other cause than that an ancestress was at one time connected with the stage, is disgraceful alike to her husband and the German court, is not a daughter, as was recently stated, or any blood-relation whatever, of Madame de Hegermann Lindencrone, the wife of the Danish Minister, but the sister of her first husband, Mr. Charles Moulton, and the daughter of Mrs. Charles Moulton, nee Metz, of Paris.

SIR F. ROBERTS, the conquering hero of Candahar and so-styled "Saviour of Afghanistan," is son of a clergyman of the Established Church in Waterford, Ireland. His brother, Samuel U. Roberts, is one of the Commissioners of the Board of Public Works in Ireland. Sir F. Roberts is a member of the order of Good Templars and a staunch teetotaler. He has a Good Templar lodge attached to every regiment under his command. Sir Garnet Wolseley is also a total abstainer.

THE daughter of an official in high life in Vienna recently wore several times a superb dress of dark green material, trimmed with wreaths of leaves in another and lighter shade of green. During the season the beautiful complexion of the young lady underwent a sudden change, and was ruined by a painful and offensive eruption. After a time her physician, baffled by the symptoms, thought of the dress and had it subjected to a chemical examination, and found enough arsenic in the colouring to produce all the mischief, and a great deal more.

DORA YOUNG, a favourite daughter of the Prophet, and one of the heirs of a large portion of his property, was lately to be seen at a Chicago hotel, and is described as a fine looking person, dressed in good taste in black satin and brocade, with costly rings on her shapely hands. Her manners are pleasing, and her conversation interesting. She is attached to the memory of her father, although she is no longer a Mormon, calls the system a dreadful one, and says that the Mormon wives, under their outward semblance of good-will, hate each other with a deadly hatred.

IT is understood that Lady Burdett-Coutts will be given away, on the occasion of her marriage, by the First Lord of the Admiralty. The grandmother of this lady was a servant in the house of a brother of the old banker, Susan Starkie by name. He had her carefully educated, and then married her. Her daughters became Countess of Guilford, Marchioness of Bute, and Lady Burdett. Mr. Coutts' second wife figures in Vivian Grey as Mrs. Million. A brother of the Baroness died lately, without a will or any record of his property, and in his room were found two hundred and fifty thousand pounds in Bank-of-England notes.

THE Princess Beatrice is so marked in her attentions to the ex-Empress as to strengthen the popular belief that she was intended for her daughter-in-law. The Princess was the first to meet the imperial lady on her return from Africa, going aboard the ship. Lately the ex-Empress spent a couple of days at Osborne, the Princess crossing over to Portsmouth to escort her. They walked about the grounds in the mornings, and rode with the Queen in the afternoons. It is understood that the ex-Empress makes her future home at Arenenberg, her villa on Lake Constance—a place already full of romantic and unfortunate associations.

AN English earl who, ever since the wedding of the Duchess of Edinburgh, has desired to have in his family a necklace like the one worn by the Empress of Russia on that occasion, but who had been deterred by the simple fact that the Czarina paid nearly a million dollars for hers, happened to mention his wish to Mrs. Mackay, of Bonanza fame, in Paris, and was advised by her to look at diamonds in America. He has obeyed her instruction, and, for the sum of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars, is about to become the possessor of a necklace of fifteen magnificent white stones, ranging in size from that of a filbert to one three times as large, and matchless in brilliancy, together with a pair of solitaire ear-rings and a brooch, in which seven large diamonds and sixteen smaller ones imitate one of the earl's heraldic emblems.

How Diamond Mines are Worked.

The system of working the diamond mines is described by an operator as follows:—

The ground being picked loose by natives and broken up, is hauled out of the mines in tubs running on inclined wires; from these tubs it is transferred to a sifting cylinder, which removes the coarser stones, the remaining soil being mixed with water and slowly stirred in a flat pan of circular form, by means of arms fitted with teeth, this pan varying from 6 to 15 feet in diameter, according to the amount of work to be done. The effect of this is to leave the diamonds, which are heaviest, at the bottom; the lighter soil escaping over the edge of the pan, to be taken up by a dredger and trucked away. At the end of a day's work the contents of the circular pan are cleaned out and washed up in hand-sieves, when, in turning over the sieve on the table, the diamonds can be at once seen from their brilliance, some being of most perfect octahedron shape and as clear as crystal.

The rough diamonds are almost invariably below 10 carats in weight, the average being about the size of a pea; indeed, in the Bultfontein mine, a 10 carat stone is looked upon as a curiosity, though specimens exceeding 100 carats in weight have on rare occasions been secured. The value of a stone depends entirely on its colour, shape, and freedom from spots or flaws; those of faultless shape and perfect whiteness taking the precedence of all others. The diamonds exceeding 20 carats in weight are mostly of various shades of yellow, a large white diamond being a comparative rarity.

THE natives of the Orkney Islands are said to enjoy good health and to live long. For these blessings they are indebted entirely to the bracing climate and to their own healthy outdoor occupations. A young woman from one of these islands was asked lately whether her people were generally long livers. With unconscious naiveté she replied, "Yes, they live to a great age; there's no doctor on the island."

AN English journal bewails that the world is threatened with a dearth of lions, that the "king of the forest" is gradually disappearing in his native wilds. But this grave misfortune has encouraged a Frenchman to establish a regular breeding stud of lions at Bona, where lions will be bred and brained for the market. Perhaps the royal cast will, in the course of time, become so domesticated that the lion and the lamb may lie down together.

Toronto, Grey & Bruce R'y.

Change of Time.

On and after MONDAY, 3rd NOV. trains will run as follows:—

GOING NORTH.

Station
Toronto,—Union Station, Dep.	7:30 a. m.	12:20 p. m.	5:00 p. m.
Carlton	7.52 a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
Weston	8.05 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
Humber Sum't	8.30 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
Woodbridge	8.45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
Belton	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
Mono Road	9 50 a.m.	3.05 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Charleston	10.35 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4.45 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p.m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Pricev'e	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2.50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Station
Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
Williamsford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Fleshert'n & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.15 a.m.	3.10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10 15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a.m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—Arr.	11:15 a. m.	5:20 p. m.
Dep. 7.15 a.m.	11.35 a. m.	5.40 p. m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Smt	9.40 a.m.	2.05 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2.27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
Toronto,—Union Station, Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Oct. 15th, 1880.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

WITHIN a few weeks several cases of prosecution for the use of false or unstamped weights and measures have been before the proper courts. It is satisfactory to note that punishment has been duly inflicted. It is amongst measures that the greater number of cases of discrepancy will arise, as it is easier to provide false measures than false weights; but in regard to both there is no doubt at all that official intelligence needs to be active. We have reasons for believeing that the public have in the past suffered much from the absence of legal inspection of weights and measures. The number of false utensils found in the large cities has been very great, and a more active prosecution of the work of inspection would reveal many more. The public need an occasional reminder of the provisions of the law. Every person who uses or has in his possession for use in trade any false weight or measure is liable to a fine for a first offence of not exceeding $20; for a second offence of $50; and the false utensil shall be forfeited. Again, any person who makes or sells any false weight or measure is liable to a fine of $50 for a first offence, and $100 for a second offence. Every weight and measure should be officially stamped; and persons using unstamped weights and measures are liable to a fine of not less than $5 or more than $50. Inspectors and assistant inspectors have the power of entering without notice any place of sale for the purpose of examining weights and measures. All weights and measures must be inspected every two years. Persons refusing to permit inspection are liable to a fine of $20 for a first and $40 for a second offence. These simple, yet efficient, provisions are not perhaps as rigidly enforced as they might be, as the expense of thoroughness would be very great; but they are, we believe, enforced with reasonable activity and with great benefit to the public. It is necessary that all weights and measures officials should exercise all reasonable activity and industry in putting the law into force; it is a law which especially protects the interests of the classes who purchase in the retail stores, and these are the great bulk of the population.

A CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

One of those questions which are continually occurring respecting the jurisdiction of officers appointed by the Dominion and Provincial authorities has just taken place at Belleville. It is as follows:—

"In a case which was before the police court a few days ago, in which a liquor dealer was charged with violating the provisions of the licence law by selling liquor on Sunday, the defendant was fined $20 and costs by the magistrate. An objection was raised by counsel for the defence, Mr. M. A. Dixon, that Mr. Thomas Holden, the police magistrate, had no jurisdiction, as he was an appointee of the Provincial Government. The defendant's counsel claimed that to the Dominion Government belonged the power of appointing police magistrates and justices of the peace, their authority for so doing resting under the provisions of the British North America Act. The case will be appealed by a writ of certiorari to the Court of Queen's Bench.

This power of appointing Magistrates has since Confederation by mutual consent of both Dominion and Provincial authorities been conceded to the latter, but as the point has never before been raised, that furnishes no proof that the practcie has been correct. As the question is now before the court, and will doubtless be decided ere long, it is needless to argue it here but we may point out that if this contention is held good it will make endless confusion by not only turning out of office all magistrates appointed since confederation, but rendering all their acts illegal; and if we understand the point aright, it would not stop here but include a number of other officials connected with criminal justice. It would necessitate special legislation confirming all their actions since Confederation.

PACIFIC RAILWAY.

It will be remembered that Sir John Macdonald went to England a short time since, for the purpose of entering into arrangements with capatalists for the building of this railway. It appears that he has been successful, and in response to an address presented to him at Montreal last week, he is reported to have spoken as follows:—

"Sir John Macdonold said he begged to tender his grateful thanks to the young men of Canada for their address of welcome. He had not had an opportunity abroad of following the reports in the Canadian press regarding his mission as they had, but he said it was a pleasure to hear that there were patriots who had the interest of the country at heart in preference to party. There were questions which, in his opinion, should be lifted far above party strife, and that of the Pacific railway was one. He could not go so fully into the results of his mission as he could wish. They must first be submitted to the representative of our Sovereign and the Government for their acceptance. He might say, however, that he had provisionally formed a syndicate of eminent capitalists in Paris, France; Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany; England, the United States and Canada. They were a combination such as had never been formed before, and that would be able beyond all question to carry out the undertaking successfully. The German element was of great importance, as it would undoubtedly turn the stream of emigration from the United States into Canada. The syndicate had given security in money for the completion of the railway inside of ten years, and further security for operating it for ten years, thereafter. This was equivalent to security for twenty years. They have also contracted not to build the easiest and most profitable portions of the road first, but to take the most difficult parts as well. Arrangements had also been made for putting the land into the market at once for sale. There would be a systematic immigration introduced at once. The road would not cost Canada as much as Sir Hugh Allan offered to do it for in 1873. Mr. Mackenzie had said in the house that Sir Hugh Allan could not have built the road for the thirty million dollars and the land grant which he was to get. What will he think when he learns it will be built for less cost now to Canada? Arrangements had been made by which the railway will proceed whether it is sanctioned by the approaching session or the next one. He could assure them that the building of the railway would not cost the old provinces of Canada one cent, as the land would pay for it. There is a fever in England among all classes for Canada. Why, one gentleman there made him an offer for sixty-four thousand acres of land at the very base of the Rocky Mountains, which he accepted. That man is Mr. Thos. Brassey, M, P., a member of the British Government. Throughout England one of the greatest obstacles he had met with was Mr. Blake's speech. It had been printed and circulated, and wherever he went it was put under his nose. Thanks however, to the strong sense of the people of England and to his (Sir John's) persuasion, all the combinations—he might say conspiracies—were ineffectual in preventing his success. The contract will now go on whether Parliment ratifies it in November or February. The synditate is composed of men of millions of capital, who will carry the railway through triumphantly.

GLENELG AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

This exhibition which took place on the 27th ult., the result of which we were unable to give for reasons before mentioned, was as follows:

PRIZE LIST.

Horses—Carriages, 4 entries, Donald Campbell, A. Shiel. General Purpose, 4 entries, Thomas Davis, James Lauder. Brood Mare, 4 enentries, Alex. Mercer, 2nd do. Hack, 8 entries, Wm. Douglass, John Lyons. Saddle, 4 entries, D. McDuffie, (special prize.) Three years old Horse, 8 entries, Alex. Mercer, (special prize.) Two years old Colt, 9 entries, Alex. Mercer, E. Rutledge. One year old Colt, 4 entries, Robert Blair, John Ritchie. Spring Foal, 6 entries, A. Mercer, S. Douglas.

Cattle.—Durham Cow, (pedigree), 3 entries, A. & F. Beatty, M. Armstrong. Grade Cow, 10 entries, R. Walker, John Gillespie. Two years old Heifer, 8 entries, John Thompson, 2nd do. Three years old Heifer, 4 entries, Isaac Miller, (special prize.) One year old Heifer, 8 entries, Robt. Walker, 2nd do. Spring Calf, 5 entries, A. & F. Beatty, Robt. Walker. Yoke Oxen, 2 entries, C. W. Speers. Yoke three years old Steers, 6 entries, C. W. Speers, 2nd do. Yoke two years old Steers, 5 entries, Samuel Douglas, Thomas Nelson. Fattest pair of cattle over two years old, (special) C. W. Speers.

Sheep.—Shearling Ram, 2 entries, John Thompson. Ram Lamb, 3 entries, Edward Shaw, 2nd do. Two Ewes, aged, 4 entries, Edward Shaw, John Thompson. Two Shearling Ewes, 3 entries, Edward Shaw, John Thompson. Two Ewe Lambs, 4 entries, Edward Shaw, John Thompson.

Swine.—Aged Sow, Berkshire, 6 entries, J. Mercer, Shepherd Boyce. Aged Sow, Suffolk, 1 entry, Thomas Campbell.

Poultry.—Pair Geese, 6 entries, T. Campbell, W. McLoughrey. Pair Turkeys, 3 entries, Robert Walker, Geo. J. Blyth. Ducks, small, 8 entries, Shepherd Boyce, Wm. McLoughrey. Ducks, large, George Pilkey. Brahmas, 4 entries, Haskett Bros., Henry Mathewson. Spanish, 2 entries, Haskett Bros., 2nd do. Hamburgs, 2 entries, Geo. J. Blyth, Wm. Douglas.

Grain and Roots.—Fall Wheat, (2 bushels,) 9 entries, E. Rutledge, B. Wright. Spring Wheat, 8 entries, Alex. Mercer, John Ford. Barley, 5 entries, Wm. Burnett, E. Rutledge. White Oats, 5 entries, John Gillespie, James Lauder. Black Oats, 4 entries, Wm. McLoughrey, John Gillespie. Peas, 4 entries, Hugh McKee, John Gillespie. Early Rose Potatoes, 5 entries, James Thompson, B. Wright. Swede Turnips, 9 entries, A. Mercer, James Lauder. Any other kind turnips, 9 entries, John Gillespie, James Thompson. Timothy Seed, James Lauder. Mangold Wurtzel, 3 entries, James Thompson, Henry Mathewson. Tomatoes, 11 entries, Edward Davis, George Pilkey. Blood Beets, 9 entries, Adam Shiel, Donald McDuffie. Cabbage, James Thompson, Wm. McLoughrey. Onions, top, George Richardson, Shepherd Boyce. Onions, potato, 5 entries, James Thompson, George Pilkey. Field Carrots, 8 entries, John Ford, James Thompson. Horn Carrots, 9 entries, R. H. Stinson, George Pilkey. Pumpkins, entries, James Thompson, Edward Rutledge. Squash, 2 entries, Edward Rutledge, Jas. Thompson. Celery, 3 entries, H. & F. Beatty, Jas. Thompson. Parsnips, 6 entries, James Thompson, Edward Rutledge. Winter Apples, 7 entries, John Whitby, James Lauder. Fall Apples, 7 entries, Alex. Mercer, S. Boyce. Pears, 2 entries, J. H. Stinson, Robert Gilray. Grapes, 3 entries, G. S. Bowes, 2nd do. Blue Plums, 6 entries, G. S. Bowes, John Whitby. Green Guages, 2 entries, G. S. Bowes, E. Davis. Four varieties, 1 entry, G. S. Bowes, (special) Best collection, G. S. Bowes, (special—Markdale STANDARD.) Crab Apples, 15 entries, B. Wright, James Thompson. Collection of Apples, 6 of each kind, 8 entries, Shepherd Boyce, J. Whitby.

Manufactures.—Grain Sower, 2 entries, Henry Mathewson, John Hamilton. Farmer's Waggon, 1 entry, R. H. Stinson. Democrat Waggon, 1 entry, R. H. Stinson. Plough, 2 entries, J. H. Hull, Henry Mathewson. Harrow, 1 entry, Henry Mathewson. Cabinet Work, 2 entries, Thomas McNea, 2nd do. Stoves, 2 entries, Haskett Bros., 2nd do. Horse Shoes, 2 entries, Wm. Mason, M. Richardson. Fulled Cloth, 4 enrries, John Gillespie, Thomas Campbell. Satinet, 1 entry, Robt. Walker. Fancy Flannel, 4 entries, Richard Askin, Shepherd Boyce. Plain Flannel, 3 entries, R. Walker, Shepherd Boyce. Blankets, 5 entries, R. Walker, 2nd do. Specimen Tinware, 2 entries, Haskett Bros, 2nd do. Churn, 2 entries, J. H. Hull, T. Mullarky. Wash Tub, 2 entries, T. Mullargy, J. H. Hull. Butter Tub, 4 entries, J. H. Hull, 2nd do.

Dairy.—Butter, 50 lbs. tub., 9 entries, Shepherd Boyce, Robt. Walker. Butter, roll, 5 lbs., 11 entries, Ed. Rutledge, Shepherd Boyce. Cheese, 3 entries, Geo. Richardson, 2nd do. Bread, 7 entries, Hugh McKee, Alex. Mercer. 100 lbs. Spring Wheat Flour, 2 entries, W. J. Rowe.

Ladies' Work.—Woollen Mits, 9 entries, R. Walker, 2nd do. Woollen Socks, 8 entries, Thos. Campbell, 2nd do. Fancy Quilt, 4 entries, R. Askin, John Lyons. Patch Quilt, 6 entries, Robert Gilray, J. McKechnie. Log Cabin Quilt, 4 entries, R. Gilray, Isaac Miller. Embroidery in Cotton, 3 entries, Henry Mathewson, Fine Shirt, 5 entries, Thos. Campbell, R. Gilray. Rag Mat, 4 entries, Solomon Hill, 2nd do. Any variety Mat, 2 entries, J. R. Anderson, Henry Foster. Berlin Wool, raised, 4 entries, Robt. Gilray, Solomon Hill. Berlin Wool, flat, 5 entries, W. J. Rowe, William Burnett. Tidy, in cotton, 6 entries, John Lyons, Thomas Davis. Tidy, in woollen, 1 entry, John Lyons. Hair Flowers, 1 entry, R. Gilray, (special.) Lace, needle, 2 entries, R. Ruthven. Best collection of Flowers, in garden, G. S. Bowes, Solomon Hill. Extra collection of Flowers, S. Hill. Hand worked Slippers, 2 entries, W. J. Rowe, (gold ring by Mr. Wilcox.) R. Gilray's exhibit of Cotton Batting Wreath and Leather Work Brackets, highly recommended by the Judges.

PROTON FALL SHOW.

The fall show of the township of Proton took place in Dundalk, on Wednesday the 6th inst. The show was a success, especially that part of it which was held inside the hall. The grain was of good quality and a very fair variety of the different kinds. Roots were indeed something extra. Fruits, we were indeed astonished at the quality of fruit, and the variety compared favorably with other township shows. Dairy Produce, as well as Home Manufactures, were well represented and well up in quality, if not ahead of some of our larger exhibitions. One of the most attractive exhibits in the hall was a magnificent show case, (a gem of beauty,) and was well filled with silver-plated and gold jewellery and watches. The jewellery sets, which we are informed by the exhibitor, (Mr. Doll,) were solid gold, and were indeed sparkling gems, being fitted tastefully in Morocco cases lined with satin. His stock of watches were very large for a country town, comprising all grades, and prices from $4 to $100.

The following is the Prize List which A. G. Hunter, Esq., Secretary of Proton Agricultural Society, has very kindly furnished us with.

PRIZE LIST.

HORSES.—Draught, Samuel Stockes, Wm Nickle. General Purpose, Wm. Acheson, Wm Graham. Carriage, A Vandusen. Brood Mare, with foal by her side. Geo Glazier, D Stinson. Buggy. Thos Hanbury, Henry Graham. Saddle, Christopher Johnston, S Fleming. Colt or Filly. 2 years old, Wm Kirby, Samuel Stockes. Colt or Filly, 1 yr old, Geo Glazier, George Campbell. Spring Colt, George Glazier, D Stenson.

CATTLE.—Durham Bull, John Rundle, Jas Robinson. Grade Bull, Duncan McMillan. Grade Cow, Wm Nickle, Thos Lakings. Grade Heifer, under 2 years old, W Graham, Duncan McMillan. Grade spring Calf, D McMillan, Henry Johnston. Yoke of Oxen, James Mitchell.

SHEEP.—Aged ram, James Ferris, David Stinson. Ram lamb, D Stinson, J Rundle. Pair ewes, aged, Walter Nickle, D Stinson. Pair ewe lambs, W Nickle, D Stinson. Shearling Ram, John Rundle, D Stinson. Shearling Ewes, W Nickle, D Stinson.

SWINE.—Berkshire Sow, aged, James Rosborough. Pair Berkshire spring pigs, James Rosborough, John Norval.

POULTRY.—Pair Geese, J W Morrow, D Stinson. Turkeys, S Stokes, Rich Clare. Barnyard Fowls, Rich Clare, Geo Glazier. Ducks, S. Stockes, Edward Noble.

GRAIN AND SEEDS.—Two bushels Seneca or Clawton Fall Wheat, J Rindle, D Stinson. Any other kind of spring wheat, D Stinson, G Glazier. Two bushels Peas, John Abbott, S Fleming. Two bushels White Oats, Jas Ferris, Jas Mitchell. Two bushels Black Oats, D Stinson, J Winters. Two bushels Barley, D Stinson, Jas Winters. Two bushels Beans, Jas Ferris. Bushel Early Rose Potatoes, Henry Redmon, Wm Acheson. Bushel any other kind Potatoes,—Johnston, —Milliner. 6 Swede Turnips, W Nickle. 6 of any other kind of Turnips, Johnston Milliner, Jas Ferris. Six Cabbage Heads, D McMillan, P McGregor. 6 Beets, Henry Redmon, J Milliner. 6 Garden Carrots, C McConnell, J Ferris. 6 Field Carrots, Chas McConnell, J Ferris. Pink Potato Onions, Wm Kirby, Jas Mitchell. Peck any other kind Onions, Henry Johnston, Wm Kirby. Two Pumpkins, James Ferris, C McConnell. Corn, C McConnell, T Lakings. Twelve Tomatoes, R Clare, J Lakings. 6 Cucumbers H Johnston, J Ferris. 6 Citrons, R Black, C McConnell. Twelve Winter Apples, Jas Ferris, Geo Glazier. Twelve Fall Apples, D Stinson, Jas Winters. Twelve Plums, S Fleming. Twelve Crab Apples, T Hodgens, Jas Rosborough.

DAIRY.—Tub Butter, not less than 50 lbs., S Stockes, H Redmon, J Ferris. Five lbs Butter, put up in any shape, John Rundle, S Stockes. Ten lbs home-made Cheese, Robt Black, D McMillan. Loaf Bread, J Lakings, S Stockes, John Abbott. Five lbs Honey, T Hodgens, T Lakings.

LADIES' WORK.—Blanket, home-made, H Graham, W H Petterson. Full Cloth, home-made, 5 yds, J Milliner, S Fleming. Satinet, home-made, 5 yds, W H Petterson. Flannel, home-made, 5 yds, all wool, W H Petterson, Ed Noble. Patch Quilt, J Lakings, H Graham. Fancy Quilt, W Marshall, E Noble. Fine shirt, hand-made, J Lakings, S Stockes. Embroidery, E Noble, J Milliner. Knitted Lace, Wm Marshall, H Graham. Antimacassar, W Marshall, Thos Lakings. Braid Work, W Marshall, Henry Graham. Crochet Work, W Marshall J Milliner. Hair Work, W Marshall, J Milliner. Wax Flowers, W Marshall, J Milliner. Berlin Wool Work, raised, E Noble, J Milliner. Hooked Mat, H Graham, P McGregor. Pair Men's Mits, J Milliner, D McMillan. Pair Men's Socks, John Abbott, S Stockes. Rag Carpet, 5 yds, G B Middleton, Peter McGregor. Any other kind of Carpet, D McMillan. Collection of House Plants, T Lakie, A G Hunter.

MANUFACTURES.—Spring Waggon, Thos Swan. Buggy, do. Plough, Wilson Bros, Thos Swan. Pair Men's Fine Boots, Thos Hanbury. Coarse Boots, do. Pump, John W Stone, Geo Rutherford. 100 lbs Flour, Thos Hodgins.

SPECIAL PRIZES.—For best specimen of Plain Penmanship executed by any male scholar attending the public schools of Proton or Melancthon, William Graham, (Dundalk School.) By A G Hunter, Estate and Loan Agent—best sheaf of Fall Wheat,—a chromo, value $2—Chas McConnell. By G B Middleton, merchant, for best variety of Potatoes—fine shirt, value, $1.50—James Ferris. By Thomas Hanbury, boot and shoe dealer, for best collection Fruit—a pair lady's boots, value, $2, Jas Winters.

EXTRA PRIZES.—Wm Chittick, for Dress Coat. Wm Chittick 2nd for Fancy Slippers. Wm Marshall 1st for Lamp Mat. William Marshall 2nd for Wreath Flowers. Henry Graham 2nd for Mottoes. John Lakings 1st for Window Curtains. G B Middleton 1st for Toilet Set and Coverlid. Thos Lakings 2nd for Window Curtains. Thos Hanbury, recommended for Men's, Boys' and Women's Boots. Thos Lakings, 1st for Mottoes. Thos Fennell 2nd for Wreath Flowers. Thomas Fennell 1st for Fancy Slippers. Samuel Fleming 1st for Squash. Robt Wragget 1st for Berlin Wool Work Motto.

FLESHERTON.

From a Correspondent.

Cold weather and wet rains continue around this town this fall.—An accident happened the other day in the suburbs. A dog and a cat had a fall out and Mr. Dog bit Mr. Tom's eye out. Medical aid was immediately sought, but no assistance could be given Thomas, and he had to be disposed of by drowning and burying in a respectable manner. The dog is still alive.—Fall trade is beginning to liven up now. Grain is coming in and prices good; hope to see more grain bought in this place than has been bought here any season before. —Mr. J. W. Henderson, a former resident of this place, has been paying us a visit. He looks about as usual. —The fall show was quite a success considering the day. Could not the Society spare a small sum to the levelling of the ground and putting up some sheds for stock.—Mr. W. K. Flesher is about to return to England where he has been called on very important business. Hope he may have a good voyage.—Every house rentable in this village is taken up, and some families are doubling. This is a good sign that people like to live in Flesherton at least.—Mr. J. W. Armstrong's mansion is about finished. It will be a grand addition to the place. Hope some one else will put up a mansion.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From our Correspondent.

ACCIDENT.—As Mr. James Sparling was employed in the woods drawing saw logs on a pair of trucks he met with a sad accident, which will in all probability leave him a long time off work. He was coming out of the woods with a large saw long, and when passing a tree one of the wheels struck a snag, throwing the other wheel into a rut, and jamming him between the load and tree. Dr. Sproule was sent for and dressed his wounds. The Doctor thinks it will be quite a while before he is able to be at work again.

Correspondence.

FLESHERTON, Oct. 9th, 1880.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—I noticed in the STANDARD a short letter from friend Meldrum denying the authorship of a certain letter which recently appeared in the Expositor. I regret that some expressions therein found, uttered previously to more than one, should have led persons to believe him to be another. And since a denial was deemed necessary, it would have been as well if Mr. M. had denied any complicity with it. As to the Reeveship question I must feel a thousand times obliged for his generosity, but I think a wholesome lesson may be learned by my friend from a study of the fable of the "fox and grapes." Maintaining no question concerning Mr. M's veracity.

I am yours,

DR. CHRISTOE.

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL.

Council met in the town hall, Flesherton, on Monday, October 4th, 1880. Present, Messrs. Christoe, Elliot, Wright and Pedlar. Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. Communications from the following parties presented and read. R. McL. Purdy re Mrs. Sanders and Mrs. Lamberson, asking aid from Council for above parties, they being in indigent circumstances. John Hurlburt asking Council to pay John Feeny $16.68, being equivalent to an amount expended by Euphrasia on town line. Accounts presented, R. J. Sproule, postage, 90c.; Robt. Davis, insurance on town hall, $5.88; W. J. Bellamy, quarter salary as clerk and registrar, $37.50. Mr. Wright moved, seconded by Mr. Pedlar, that this council do cordially co operate with the municipality of Euphrasia in repairing the place known as Nelson's bridge, on town line between Artemesia and Euphrasia, provided the proportion to be paid by Artemesia shall only be two-fifths of the amount expended, upon the dissent of Euphasia of the proportion named the sum to be paid by each municipality shall be determined immediately on or after the work is performed; in case of settlement by arbitration then Robert Sherman is hereby appointed by council for Artemesia. These considerations are enforced by Artemesia believing that that portion of the town line is used chiefly for the benefit of Euphrasia. It is furthermore directed that Councillor Elliot do carry out the fixing of the bridge conjointly with Euphrasia by letting down the present structure, ditching and covering the whole with substantial material. Carried. Orders were issued for the following road jobs:—Thos. Sullivan, $17; T. B. Gilliland, $42.90; John Hughes, $7; T. B. Gilliland, $40; Joseph Pedlar, $2; James Jamieson, $7; Hugh Nesbitt, $10; James Allen, 75c.; John Duncan, $1.50; John Feeney, $16.68. Mr. W. H. Beatty, Solicitor of the T. G. & B. R. Company, addressed the council in reference to a proposed by-law to be submitted to the township. Mr. Elliot, moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, that Wm. Brown be paid $12, being salary as auditor for 1880. Carried. Council adjourned.

W. J. BELLAMY,
Tp. Clerk.

BIRTHS.

In Glenelg, on the 29th ult., the wife of Mr. James Henderson, of a son.

In Priceville, on 30th ult, the wife of Mr. Wm. Conkey, of a daughter.

In Artemesia, on the 28th ult., the wife of Andrew Beaty of a daughter.

MARRIED

At the Primitive Methodist Parsonage, Markdale, on the 13th inst., Mr. Wm. Firth to Margaret, daughter of Mr. James Timmins, all of Glenelg.

At the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, Alex. Nelson, Esq., Inistioge, by Rev. D. McLeod, Miss Margaret, daughter of Wm. Wright, Esq., late of Glenelg, to James Skene, Esq., of Bentinck.

DIED.

In this village, on the 8th inst., Thomas Henry, son of Mr. George Wilson, butcher, aged 16 months.

In Hawkstone, County of Simcoe, on the 12th inst., Mr. Sarjeant, father of Mr. W. B. Sarjeant of this place; aged 69 years.

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Oct. 15th, 1880.

Flour	5.00	to	5.00
Spring Wheat per bush., new	0.85	to	1.00
Fall do. do. do.	0.84	to	0.93
Barley	0.40	"	0.56
Oats	0.26	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.56
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	0.18	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed,	4.50	"	5.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese, per lb.	0.05	"	0.00
Ducks, per pair	0.30	"	0.45
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.30
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.05
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1.00
Hides	7.00	"	7.00
Grain seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	3.00
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Green Apples, per. bushel	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

McIntere says he can supply goods, both in the eating and drinking lines. much cheaper than the market quotations. Read his advertisement, give him a call and be convinced.

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Oct. 14th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.85	to	0.97
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.95
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.26	"	0.27
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed.	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5 00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	7.00	"	7.50
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

OWEN SOUND.

OWEN SOUND, Oct. 14th, 1880.

Flour, $4.50 to $5 00; Fall Wheat, $0 90 to $0 96; Spring Wheat, $0 95 to $1 00; Barley, 45c to 58c; Oats, 30c to 30c; Peas, 50c to 58c; Hay, $7 00 to $7 50; Potatoes, 25c to 30c; Butter, 20c to 21c; Eggs, 12c to 14c; Apples, per bushel, 25c to 30c; Sheep skins, $0 50 to $1 00; Hides, $7 00 to $7 00

TORONTO.

(Special to the Standard.)

TORONTO, Oct. 14, 1880.

Wheat, fall, per bush.	$1 00	to	$1 06
Wheat, spring, do.	1 00	to	1 10
Barley, do.	0 58	to	0 72
Oats, do.	0 33	to	0 34
Peas, do.	0 60	to	0 68
Rye, do.	0 85	to	0 87
Clover Seed do.	0 00	to	0 00
Dressed hogs, per 100 lbs.	6 50	to	7 25
Beef, hind quarters	5 50	to	7 00
Beef, fore quarters	3 00	to	4 50
Chickens, per pair	33	to	0 50
Fowls, do.	40	to	0 55
Ducks, per brace	40	to	0 60
Geese, each	00	to	0 00
Turkeys	50	to	1 25
Butter, large rolls	12	to	0 70
Butter, tub dairy	20	to	0 21
Butter, store-packed	12	to	0 10
Eggs, fresh, per doz.	0 20	to	0 21
Eggs, packed	0 00	to	0 00
Apples, per brl	0 75	to	1 25
Potatoes, per bag	0 30	to	0 35
Onions, per bag	0 00	to	0 00
Hay	9 00	to	9 50

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

W. BENSON,

—OF THE—

"Belfast House,"

Begs to announce that he is fully prepared to dispose of all articles usual to a general Grocery and Provision Establishment, at the Lowest Possible Prices!

The stock consists of

Groceries and Provisions!

together with

LIQUORS of all kinds,

such as SCOTCH, IRISH and CANADIAN, of the best brands. I have no desire to puff or misrepresent the performance of impossibilities, but I may say in response to a brother retailer who offers a book worth $1.25 to every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea, that I will Give Two Books of superior value to those mentioned to all buyers of a like quantity. My house is known as the

Belfast House, op. Haskett Bros

NO SECOND PRICE.

W. BENSON.

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880. 5-tf.

Auction Sale OF Valuable Real Estate!

IN pursuance of the powers in that behalf contained in a certain mortgage made by John McInnes to the vendors, which said mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be offered for sale

By Public Auction!

ON

Tuesday, 26th of October next,

AT McCULLOUGH'S HOTEL,

IN THE VILLAGE OF DUNDALK

at the hour of Twelve O'Clock, noon, the following valuable real estate, that is to say:

All and singular that certain parcel or tract of land and premises situate lying and being in the Township of Proton in the County of Grey and Province of Ontario, and being composed of a part of Village Lots numbers one, two and three, south west of Toronto, Grey and Bruce Rail Road, according to the plan filed in the Registry Office of the South Riding of the said County of Grey on the ninth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, sub-dividing a part of lot number two hundred and thirty-one, in the second range south west of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the said Township, and made by W. R. Rombough, Provincial Land Surveyor, and which may be more particularly described as follows, that is to say:—Beginning at a point on the north westerly limit of said village lot number two, sixty-one and one-tenth links from the north easterly limit of Yonge street, thence north 39° 30' east along the north westerly limit of said village lots numbers one and two, sixty one and one-tenth links, more or less, to a point twenty-two and two-tenths links from the south westerly angle of said village lot number one; thence south 50° 30" east two chains forty-two and five-tenths links, more or less, to a point on the south easterly limit of said village lot number two, forty-four and six-tenths links south westerly from the north easterly angle of said village lot number two; thence south 39° 30" west along the north easterly limit of said village lots numbers two and three, forty-one and one-tenth links; thence north 50° 30" west two chains, forty-two and five tenths links, more or less, to the place of beginning, and containing by admeasurement twenty-three and seven-tenths perches of land, be the same more or less, upon which is erected a frame store and dwelling house.

Also, lot number twenty-five, in the fifth concession of the township of Osprey, in the said county, containing by admeasurement one hundred acres of land, be the same more or less, upon which is erected a two story frame dwelling-house and good frame barn.

For particulars and condition of sale, apply to Mr. Alexander Brown, Auctioneer, Priceville, A. McLennan, Esq., Durham, or to the undersigned.

Dated at Toronto, the 5th day of October, A.D. 1880.

BARRETT & MACINTYRE,
Vendor's Solicitors,
5-2in No. 65 Yonge-st., Toronto.

FOR SALE.

20 CHARMS—Snowflake, Granite, Wedding, Marble, Basket, (comic china), Mottled Stone, Ashes of Roses, &c., Cards with name on all, 10 cents.
Address, J. A. BROLLEY, Box 79 Creemore P.O. Simcoe, Ont.

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments.

Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880. 4-tf

AUCTION SALE OF Valuable Farm Property IN THE Township of Glenelg,

In the County of Grey.

There will be sold on

Saturday, the 30th day of October

1880, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at RUTLEDGE'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

by virtue of a power of sale contained in certain mortgages, which will be produced at the sale, the following properties:

PARCEL I.

Under mortgage from Neil Campbell, lot number one, in the twelfth concession of the Township of Glenelg, County of Grey, containing one hundred acres.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 50 acres cleared, having erected thereon a cedar log barn; situated about 8 miles from the village of Markdale.

PARCEL II.

Lot 27, in the 8th concession of the Township of Glenelg, in the County of Grey, containing one hundred acres, more or less.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 60 acres cleared, with log buildings erected thereon.

TERMS.—One-tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance, terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
Or to JOHN LYONS, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Sept. 24th, 1880. 3-5in.

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the subscriber, lot 12, concession 6, Euphrasia, about the middle of June, a heifer, two years old, red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges, and take her away.

CHARLES SYKES.
Euphrasia, Oct. 12, 1880. 5-3t

CAUTION.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating in any way a note drawn by Thomas Townsend in favour of William Handberry, for the sum of twenty-three dollars ($23), for value has not been received therefor.

THOS. TOWNSEND.
Markdale, Oct. 4, 1880. 4-3in

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERAL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT.

Markdale, October 1, 1880.

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS

TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions

AND

VETERINARY PREPERATIONS

CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M.D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

HILL BROS.,

When their new building is completed.

Space to be occupied by HILL BROS. when they remove.

Advertisement will appear in this space

MARKDALE.

STRAYED

FROM the premises of John Bowers, near Ford's Mill, Glenelg, a red Heifer with small star on head, and a few white spots on body—is small for a three year old. Any person giving such information to the undersigned as will lead to her recovery will be rewarded.

MRS. S. CASWELL.
Markdale, Oct. 2, 1880. 4-3in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of R. J. Sproule, one medium sized Red Cow. Any person returning the same, or giving such information as will lead to her recovery, will be suitably rewarded.

R. J. SPROULE.
Flesherton, Oct. 8, 1880. 4-1in

STRAYED

FROM the premises of JOHN MOORE, lot 10, concession 12, Euphrasia, about the 15th of June, three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white; one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Euphrasia, Sept. 16, 1880. 4-3in

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.

Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.

Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880. 2-3

J. M. Webster,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.

LOAN AND LAND AGENT.

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

Subscribe for the Standard

We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

LANCE Height Clocks for $3.50, at Doll's, Flesherton.

HILL BROS. expect to be in their new store early next week.

THE weather for the past few days was all that could be desired—very fine indeed.

SOLID Gold Hunting Lever Watches reduced from $30 and $35 to $20 and $25, at Doll's, Flesherton.

The ... says that "a man who won't support his local paper is a ... specimen of humanity."

TAILORING.—We learn that a new man has been engaged, who in the course of a few days will occupy the shop just vacated by Mr. Pridham.

SABBATH School Tea-Meeting in School House No. 18, lot 8, concession ..., Euphrasia, on the 19th Oct. Tea will be served at 4 p.m.; admission 25 cents.

HEALTH.—This village was never more healthy than at present. There have been a few cases of sore throat, which is common with children, but apart from this we are happy.

WILCOX has got into his new shop, in Hill's block. He informs us that owing to pressure of business and trouble in moving, he is unabled to write his advertisement for this issue.

DR. SPROULE's mansion is progressing, but not as rapidly as one would like to see it. Winter is rapidly approaching and a little more exertion on the part of the contractor appears desirable.

J. F. SPROULE's Millinery will, it is said, when in full working order, not be surpassed by any first-class house in the Dominion—a few days will prove the authenticity of the assertion. Ladies, bear this in mind.

THE Dominion exhibition at Montreal was a thorough success financially. Both the exhibition and the citizens committee have substantial surpluses. In inviting the Governor-General it was forgotten to provide for his entertainment.

DR. EVA returned yesterday and requests us to announce that his engagements elsewhere demand his immediate attention. The Dr. leaves within a few days, and those indebted to him are required to pay up and thereby save trouble.

THE annual meeting of Markdale branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society, will be held in the Methodist Church, Markdale, on Tuesday the 19th inst., commencing at 7 o'clock p.m. Mr. J. G. Manley permanent agent for the society, and other gentlemen will address the meeting.

COMING BACK.—It is encouraging to see a large number of my old customers again coming back to me. I can assure all such, together with these new ones who have kindly favored me, that I can and will give them good value for their money.—A. MCINTYRE.

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement of Mr. W. Benson, to be found elsewhere. He informs us that his goods are all new, and direct from the market. Intending purchasers would read Mr. B's notice, and if in want of anything in his line give him a call.

AN extensive credit sale will take place (according to posters,) on Monday, Oct. 25th, at the residence of Wm. Smith, lot 2, con. 8, Osprey, when a quantity of farm stock, implements, &c., will be disposed of. Terms, fourteen months credit. R. Davis, Auctioneer.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Eaton, who we announced in our last, as rapidly recovering, is, as we predicted, doing well, he is now able to move around, and possessed of a good constitution, as he is, will undoubtedly surmount the affliction he has been subjected to. One more week and he will be himself again—good.

WE have received a communication from Wm. Brown Esq., in answer to Dr. Christoe's letter relative to the T. G. & B. R. It will appear next week. We are anxious to forward the interests of the community, and at the same time would suggest to our correspondents the necessity of promptness in the sending in of communications.

RE-UNION.—A social entertainment will be held next Wednesday evening, commencing at 7 o'clock, in the Dufferin Hall, under the supervision of the M. Church, Markdale. There will be vocal and instrumental music, recitations and address. The Rev. Mr. Griffith of Orangeville, who is said to be a host in himself will be present. A most agreeable time is anticipated.

"ANY letter for me?" asked a young lady of the female postmaster in a country town not far from here. "No," was the reply. "Strange," said the young lady aloud to herself, as she turned away. "Nothing strange about it," cried the f. p., through the delivery window, "you, to my certain knowledge have not answered the last letter he sent you. I do his correspondence." The young lady left, looking dark, with a frown on her chin.

A NEW BOOK is called the "Horse's foot, and how to shoe it." The author of course, is a man. When you see a book entitled, "The hen and how to shoe it," you can lay a heavy wager the writer is a woman. What she does not know about shoeing hens, no man can teach her—not by a large majority.—Meaford Monitor.

The man who wrote the foregoing is evidently not a member of the 'ladies' aid society. And as to the shoeing of hens, perhaps his wife might throw some light on that question.

OWING to absence from Meaford we did not notice the letter of Lieut. Robinson in the Times of two weeks ago until too late to speak of it in our last, and this week we have not space to give it that attention which justice to ourself demands. Had Robinson confined himself to a statement of what he calls "the facts" of the case between himself and Capt. Rorke we would have nothing to say, but when he deliberately falsifies our position as ... would, we are in duty bound to enter a defence, as we purpose doing in our next.—Meaford Monitor. We anxiously await the appearance of the next Monitor; the editor of that journal having promised an original article. Oh dear, dear! when will the paper come.

MR. J... to Wiarton ... a visit ... returning ... been ... month.

BURGLARY ... line of E... 9th inst., ... Thomas ... quantity ... prising 16 ... made clo... vests, one ... 2 boxes ... jewellery, ... and ma... amount of ... not yet be... council, w... ward for ... the guil...

WE sha... time as we ... to note ... in both vil... a synopsis ... a very fi... half miles ... S. Road,) ... summer, ... with basem... a diagram, ... pleted will ... the county ... our colum... fully as it ... mend those ... in that lin... have no d... prietor, ... tion neces... may here ... a very hig... tractors. ... James Leu... ship, fair d... peditious m...

WE forgo... issue one of ... hibits in the ... a magnifice... prominent ... entrance. ... thing of be... consisting ... silver-plate... watches, att... of crowds a... novel and be... ware which ... describe, the... preciated. ... we are infor... hibiter, we... with real ge... in design a... rocco cases ... stock of wat... a country t... all grades, ... pocket watc... cased watche... ulate Mr. ... speak for h... enterprise ...

SNOBBY T... this week to ... particularly, ... through this ... indeed, we ... not confined ... he is to be f... the wanderin... His stock in ... amount of i... to its utmost ... upon you, ... learned, ... neighbour, ... after the ... is sorry to ... has not yet ... know all ab... of dinner, w... farmer is sur... opens up his ... the astonish... such goods ... The scoundrel ... nections with ... houses on the ... the agent of ... purchase ... of course, they ... away—but ... hand are comp... unsuspecting ... lieves every w... is immediately ... family require. ... ured off, the t... note and the p... There is no law ... disposal of good... done is to war... dealing with su... here mention th... for sale is of th... shoddy—it look... it is good for n... was honored las... a couple of th... and we are not ... is still in town. ... whom we now w... have honest, st... men here, who ... ness, and why ou... themselves to be ... paled rascals such ... ed is a mystery. ... of the press to pa... scamps around, ... may be rid of the...

THE NORTHERN R... meeting of the ... Railway Company ... the lately discharged ... day last. The ... ment was made to ... in the afternoon ... tors Drohan and Ray... minent part in the ... ceived back on the ... of the discharged ... return only on the ... new hands. When ... tor Sloan, one of th... line, refused to conti... service, and declined ... that evening. He w... brakesmen, and there ... curing other hands for ... considerably late in co...

CHURCH D...

CHRIST C...

Services—Sept. 26, ... 6:30 p. m.; 10th, 10:30 ... m.; 24th, 6:30 p. m.; ... 7th 10:30 a. m.; ... 10:30 a. m.; 28th ... p. m.; 12th, 10:30 a. m.; 27th, 6:30 p. m., ... Rev. James Ward, Inc...

CANADA MET...

Services every Sabbath ... 6:30 p. m. Sabbath ... G. S. Bowes, Superintendent ... ing, Thursday Evening ... McDiarmid, Pastor.

PRIMATIVE M...

Services every 1st and ... o'clock p. m. Every 2... 10:30 a. m., in the Orange ... nett, Pastor.

PRES...

Services in D... Sabbath at 11 a. m., and ... baths at 6:30 p. m. ... Sabbath ... p. m. Bible Class and ... Fridays at 7 ...

RE,

sions

st Received

RICES AND

LL.

micals!

S!

s, Tooth, Nail Appliances,

Books!

ACCOS!

OILS.

ptions,

ATIONS,

LE, M.D.

S.,

Advertisement will appear in this space

E.

ctioneers.

l Morrow,

THE STANDARD.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

Large Height Clocks for $3.50, at Doll's, Flesherton.

Hill Bros. expect to be in their new store early next week.

The weather for the past few days has all that could be desired—very fine indeed.

Solid Gold Hunting Lever Watches reduced from $30 and $35 to $20 and at Doll's, Flesherton.

The Mail says that "a man who won't support his local paper is a specimen of humanity."

Tailoring.—We learn that a new man has been engaged, who in the course of a few days will occupy the shop just vacated by Mr. Pridham.

Sabbath School Tea-Meeting in School House No. 18, lot 8, concession Euphrasia, on the 19th Oct.. Tea be served at 4 p.m.; admission cents.

Health.—This village was never more healthy than at present. There have been a few cases of sore throat, which is common with children, but apart from this we are happy.

Wilcox has got into his new shop, in Hill's block. He informs us that owing to pressure of business and trouble in moving, he is unabled to his advertisement for this issue.

Dr. Sproule's mansion is progressing but not as rapidly as one would like to see it. Winter is rapidly approaching and a little more exertion on the part of the contractor appears desirable.

W. F. Sproule's Millinery will, it is said, when in full working order, not be surpassed by any first-class house in the Dominion—a few days will prove the authenticity of the assertion. Ladies, bear this in mind.

The Dominion exhibition at Montreal was a thorough success financially. Both the exhibition and the citizens committee have substantial surpluses. In inviting the Governor-General it was forgotten to provide for his entertainment.

Dr. Eva returned yesterday and requests us to announce that his engagements elsewhere demand his immediate attention. The Dr. leaves within a few days, and those indebted to him are required to pay up and thereby save trouble.

The annual meeting of Markdale branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society, will be held in the Methodist Church, Markdale, on Tuesday the 19th inst., commencing at 7 o'clock p.m. Mr. J. G. Manley permanent agent for the society, and other gentlemen will address the meeting.

Coming Back. It is encouraging to see a large number of my old customers again coming back to me. I assure all such, together with the new ones who have kindly favored me, that I can and will give them value for their money.—A. McIntyre.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of Mr. W. Benson, to be found elsewhere. He informs us that goods are all new, and direct from market. Intending purchasers should read Mr. B's notice, and if in want of anything in his line give him a call.

An extensive credit sale will take place (according to posters,) on Monday, Oct. 25th, at the residence of Smith, lot 2, con. 8, Osprey, when a quantity of farm stock, implements, &c., will be disposed of. Terms, fourteen months credit. R. Davis, Auctioneer.

Personal.—Mr. Eaton, who we announced in our last, as rapidly recovering, is, as we predicted, doing; he is now able to move around, possessed of a good constitution, this is, will undoubtedly surmount affliction he has been subjected to. more week and he will be himself —good.

We have received a communication Wm. Brown Esq., in answer to Christoe's letter relative to the & B. R. It will appear next. We are anxious to forward interests of the community, and same time would suggest to our correspondents the necessity of promptness in the sending in of communications.

Re-Union.—A social entertainment be held next Wednesday evening, commencing at 7 o'clock, in the Dufferin Hall, under the supervision of M. Church, Markdale. There will vocal and instrumental music, readings and address. The Rev. Griffith of Orangeville, who is said a host in himself will be present. agreeable time is anticipated.

"Any letter for me?" asked a young of the female postmaster in a country town not far from here. was the reply. "Strange," the young lady aloud to herself, she turned away. "Nothing strange it," cried the f. p., through the delivery window, "you, to my certain knowledge have not answered the letter he sent you. I do his correspondence." The young lady left, looking dark, with a frown on her

New Book is called the "Horse's and how to shoe it." The author course, is a man. When you see a entitled, "The hen and how to it" you can lay a heavy wager the writer is a woman. What does not know about shoeing man, no man can teach her—not by large majority.—Meaford Monitor. The man who wrote the foregoing is certainly not a member of the ladies' society. And as to the shoeing of perhaps his wife might throw light on that question.

Owing to absence from Meaford we not notice the letter of Lieut. Robinson in the Times of two weeks until too late to speak of it in our and this week we have not space give it that attention which justice itself demands. Had Robinson confined himself to a statement of what he calls "the facts" of the case between himself and Capt. Rorke we have nothing to say, but when deliberately falsifies our position as gentleman would, we are in duty to enter a defence, as we purpose doing in our next.—Meaford Monitor. We anxiously await the appearance of the next Monitor; the editor of that journal having promised an original article. Oh dear, dear! when will the paper come.

Mr. John M. Walker, who went to Winnipeg last Spring, is home on a visit. He looks well, and purposes returning to Duluth (where he has been most of the Summer) in about a month.

Burglary.—At Epping, on the 4th line of Euphrasia, on the night of the 9th inst., (Saturday,) the store of Mr. Thomas Jordan was entered and a quantity of goods were stolen, comprising 10 overcoats, 15 suits of ready made clothing, several pairs of pants, vests, one dozen ganzies, 1 chest tea, 2 boxes tobacco, all his cutlery and jewellery, hats, caps, boots and shoes, and many other articles, to the amount of $500. The thieves have not yet been caught. The Euphrasia council, we think, ought to offer a reward for the capture and conviction of the guilty parties.

We shall endeavour from time to time, as we travel through the country, to note any valuable improvements, in both village and country, and give a synopsis to our readers. We notice a very fine bank barn about one and half miles West of Flesherton, (T. & S. Road,) which has been erected this summer, the building is 52x80 feet, with basement full size, we have seen a diagram, and consider when completed will be perhaps unsurpassed in the county. We have not space in our columns to give particulars as fully as it deserves, but would recommend those who contemplate building in that line, to examine it, and we have no doubt Mr. Brown, the proprietor, will gladly give all information necessary, as to plans, &c. It may here be stated that Mr. B. gives a very high recommend to the contractors, Messrs. John Whitton & James Leudlow, for good workmanship, fair dealing, economical and expeditious management.

We forgot to mention in last week's issue one of the most attractive exhibits in the hall, at Flesherton, was a magnificent show case placed in a prominent position facing the front entrance. The case alone was "a thing of beauty," but its contents, consisting of a choice collection of silver-plate, gold jewellery, and watches, attracted admiring attention of crowds all day. We noticed some novel and beautiful designs in silverware which we will not attempt to describe, they must be seen to be appreciated. The jewellery, sets which we are informed by Mr. Doll, the exhibitor, were solid gold, sparkling with real gems, were very beautiful in design and fitted tastefully in Morocco cases lined with satin. The stock of watches seemed immense for a country town, comprising as it did all grades, sizes, and prices from neat pocket watches at $4 to heavy gold cased watches at $100. We congratulate Mr. Doll on his success and bespeak for him the wide patronage his enterprise deserves.—Com.

Shoddy Tramps.—It devolves on us this week to warn our farmer friends particularly, against this description of animal that is now on its travel through this section of country, and, indeed, we may say the creature is not confined to this or any locality—he is to be found everywhere, he is the wandering Jew, his name is legion. His stock in trade consists of a large amount of impudence which he uses to its utmost capacity; he will call upon you, and from information learned, perhaps from your next neighbour, calls you by name, asks after the health of your family, and is sorry to learn that poor Tommy has not yet recovered—in fact he knows all about you. After partaking of dinner, which the good natured farmer is sure to invite him to, he opens up his wares, and displays to the astonished gaze of the farmer such goods as he never saw before. The scoundrel states that he has connections with some of the largest houses on the continent, that he is the agent of a firm who continually purchase bankrupt stock—for which of course, they get for almost carrying away—but having so much of it on hand are compelled to peddle it. The unsuspecting and honest farmer believes every word of it, and an order is immediately given for what the family require. The goods are measured off, the tramp gets his cash, or note and the purchaser is badly sold. There is no law to stop this nefarious disposal of goods, and all that can be done is to warn purchasers against dealing with such scamps. We may here mention that the stuff they offer for sale is of the worst description of shoddy—it looks well, it is true—but it is good for nothing. This village was honored last week by a visit from a couple of those barefaced rascals, and we are not sure but one of them is still in town, against dealing with whom we now warn the public. We have honest, straightforward tradesmen here, who do a legitimate business, and why our people should allow themselves to be gulled by unprincipaled rascals such as we have mentioned is a mystery. We ask our friends of the press to pass these consummate scamps around, so that the country may be rid of them.

The Northern Railway.—The promised meeting of the Directors of the Northern Railway Company to consider the case of the lately discharged men was held on Tuesday last. The result was that an announcement was made to some of the conductors in the afternoon to the effect that conductors Drohan and Raymond, who took a prominent part in the strike, could not be received back on the road, and that the rest of the discharged men would be at liberty to return only on the footing and at the pay of new hands. When this was heard conductor Sloan, one of the steadiest men on the line, refused to continue in the company's service, and declined to take out his train that evening. He was sustained by his brakesmen, and there was some delay in securing other hands for the train, which left considerably late in consequence.

CHURCH DIRECTORY.

CHRIST CHURCH.

Services—Sept. 26, 10:30 a. m.; Oct. 3rd, 6:30 p. m.; 10th, 10:30 a. m.; 17th, 10:30 a. m.; 24th, 6:30 p. m.; 31st, 6:30 p. m.; Nov. 7th 10:30 a. m.; 14th, 10:30 a. m.; 21st, 10:30 a. m.; 28th, 6.30 p. m.; Dec. 5th, 6:30 p. m.; 12th, 10:30 a. m.; 19th, 10:30 a. m.; 27th, 6:30 p. m, Sabbath School, 2:30 p. m. Rev. James Ward, Incumbent.

CANADA METHODIST CHURCH.

Services every Sabbath at 10:30 a.m., and 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. G. S. Bowes, Superintendent. Prayer Meeting, Thursday Evenings at 7:30. Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Pastor.

PRIMATIVE METHODIST.

Services every 1st and 3rd Sabbath at 3 o'clock p. m. Every 2nd & 4th Sabbath at 10:30 a. m., in the Orange Hall. C. C. Garnett, Pastor.

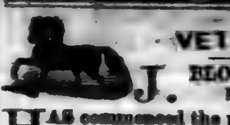
PRESBYTERIAN.

Services in Dunn Hall every alternate Sabbath at 11 a. m., and intervening Sabbaths at 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. Bible Class and Prayer Meeting on Fridays at 7:30 p. m.

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith.

GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880. 2



VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

E. D. WILCOX,

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, &c. &c.

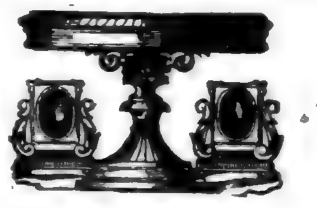
This space to be occupied by E. D. Wilcox's Advertisement as soon as his new Brick Store, now being fitted for him is completed.

MARKDALE.

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!



GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.
Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

APPRENTICE WANTED.

A BOY about 16 years of age, to learn Shoemaking.

THOS. HANBURY.
Dundalk, Oct. 1st, 1880. 3-3in.

CHASE BROS. & BOWMAN,

Nurserymen and eedsmen,

Nurseries at Rochester, N.Y.

ENOCH BALL, MEAFORD,

Agent to sell and collect for the
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Foster,

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

Wholesale and Retail dealer in all kinds of

Pine and Hardwood Lumber,

LATH, SHINGLES, CEDAR POSTS, AND CORDWOOD.

☞ Office and yard opposite SHELDON'S HOTEL,

OWEN SOUND, ONT.

N.B.—Lumber, etc., shipped to all parts, by rail or water.

September. 1880. 2-4

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 1-y

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

A Word to the Public.

The era of prosperity which now happily reigns throughout the length and breadth of our glorious dominion benefits every branch of industry, and has very materially benefited my business, which has increased in volume several thousands of dollars over any previous year, and is steadily increasing.

Appreciating the tastes and requirements of the Public I have studiously, and I trust successfully, labored for 18 years to meet the wishes of purchasers. The support and patronage I have had justifies me in increasing my stock, extending my facilities, and at the same time materially reducing my prices.

Ambitious as I have ever been to be first and foremost in my business, I am resolved that henceforth the reputation I have achieved in this particular, shall be promoted and enhanced. Egotistical mention is not essential, but I do feel warranted in calling attention to my present full and complete stock of Goods, a stock, the greater part of which has been purchased for cash, and direct from the manufacturers, and the equal of which, for extent or variety, I do not think can be found north of Toronto. I solicit from strangers an inspection, and to my friends and customers say, that I have for them in goods and prices a succession of what I believe will be very agreeable surprises. I am in a position to fill all orders, and it will not be necessary to send to Toronto or elsewhere for goods. Give me a chance to supply your wants, and I guarantee the best Goods at the most economical rates.

A call and examination will be gratifying to me, for I feel sure that an experience in patronizing me will fully confirm all that I claim for my goods.

W. J. McFARLAND,

WHOLESASE AND RETAIL,

MARKDALE.

September 17, 1880. 1

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Flesherton Advertisements.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse.

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,

Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880. 1

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS!

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments I would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted, with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,

LOCK BOX 78,

8 Uxbridge, Ont.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistant with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER.

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mills

Sheep and Cattle.

FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave there names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & A. [illegible]

Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.

☞ Meat delivered at any house in town.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

General Advertisements.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings;

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime.

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES:

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

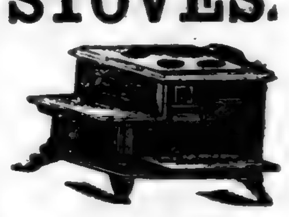
Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

STOVES.

STOVES. STOVES.



Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND

AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES:

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18.
Same, with Low Oven, $17.
5 BOX STOVE, $4
All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All

AT

W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill sreett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continnance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.
Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

James Sullivan,

FLESHERTON.

Manufacturer and Dealer in

Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and

Japanned Wares,

Eave Troughing, &c.

A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware.

Wooden Wares, Washboards, Brooms, Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.

Stove Ovens Lined.

Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.

☞ Prices most reasonable,

JAMES SULLIVAN.
Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres

FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale;

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE,
Proprietor,
Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

Last and Worst.

BY FRANCIS ELKIN ALLISON.

Upon life's highway I was hastening, when
I met a trouble grim,
Whom I had often seen with other men,
But I was far from him.

He seized my arm, and with a sneering lip
Looked o'er my happy past;
With sinking heart I felt his bony grip
Clutch tight and hold me fast.

"You look," he said, "so happy and so bright
That I have come to see
Why other troubles miss you in their flight,
And what you'll do with me."

"And have you come to stay with me?" I cried,
Hoping respite to win.
"Yes, I have come to stay. Your world is wide;
I'm crowded where I've been."

I would not look him in the face, but turned
To take him home with me
To all my other troubles, who had spurned
His hateful company.

So he was "crowded," and with me would roam?
I laughed with sullen glee;
At arm's-length took him up the steps of home
Under my own roof tree.

And there I clutched his scrawny neck and thin,
To thrust him in the room
Where, locked and barred, I kept my troubles, in Seclusion's friendly gloom.

Grimly he looked at me with eyes that burned:
"You know nothing of me;
The key on other troubles may be turned,
But I—am Poverty."

Ah! soon I knew it was in vain, in vain!
No locks availed for him;
Nor double doors, nor thickly curtained pane,
Could make his presence dim.

He wrote his name on all my threadbare ways,
And in my shrinking air
He told the tale of useless shifts and stays
I made against despair.

He brushed the smile from off my sweet wife's face,
And let an anxious frown;
The fresh young joys that should my children grace
His heavy feet trod down.

He took my other troubles out, and walked
With them the public street;
Clad in my sacred sorrows, cheaply talked
With all he chanced to meet.

The hours he stretched upon the rack of days,
The days to weeks of fears;
The weeks were months, whose weary, toilsome ways
Stretched out through hopeless years.

To-day I stooped to fan with eager strife
A single hope which glowed,
And 'mid the fading embers of my life
A fitful warmth bestowed.

Cheered by a spark, I turned with trembling limb
Once more the strife to wage;
But, as I turned I saw my trouble grim
Linking his arm with Age.

Old age and poverty,—here end the strife!
And ye, remorseless pair,
Drape on the last, dim mile-stone of my life,
Your banner of despair.

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

"No, you scarcely impress me as the ideal strong-minded woman; you are not of the order that tends others and goes untended; you want a brave knight to stand between you and the world's woes."

"Nonsense. I am capable of taking care of myself. It is such as Judith, fragile, sweet, pliant, who demand to love and be beloved with gentleness."

"Indeed!" I wish he would not look so steadily at me; I am sure my face is burning shockingly; "and how would you demand to be loved?"

My ire rises. I am afraid of making a simpleton of myself. I answer curtly—

"That is a question I have not considered."

"Have you not?"

There is an exquisite stillness everywhere. I am speechless. Mistily I observe the green blades at my feet. Dale puts his hand on mine.

"Deborah, will you consider it? I want you for my wife."

Some people are equal to every occasion. I am not. I shrink from him crying—

"No, no, no!"

He is patient. He waits until my foolish fit of shivering is over, and then resumes.

"Maybe I have spoken too soon; but I fancied you understood I loved you. I have tried to show you again and again. Will said you did not comprehend me."

"Does Will know?"

"Yes."

"And is he not angry?"

"Why should he be? I know I am not good enough for you"—disconsolately. "But if any one can make anything of me, you can."

"No, no."

"My mother and father are ready to bless you if you will take pity on me. A girl a hundred times dearer, sweeter, prettier than Letty must be a treasure."

"How can you?" raising my red face. "Why should you mock me? I am not nearly so pretty as Letty."

"Are you not? Deborah, you are lovely to me; you always will be lovely to me, whether you grant my prayer or not. Darling, is it quite beyond your power to care for me? Have I been a fool to imagine you can like me?"

I do not choose to hear him disparage himself.

"You are not a fool"—with a sob.

"You like—love—me?"

"Y-e-s."

"Deborah! Oh, you silly child! I declare I believed you cared for some one else."

"Some one else?"

My tone or words thoroughly upset him. He throws his arms about me and kisses me. I strive to get from him, but he will not let me. I am obliged to be passive. I am not very disturbed. Will knows. When, however, I free myself, I say demurely—

"You are taking it all for granted. I have not promised I will——"

"Marry me? But you will!"

It is not easy to tease when tears are near the surface. I hide my face on his coat-sleeve, and weep desperately. He soothes me as tenderly as my mother could. When I raise my head, I have confessed I love him with a love intense, unfathomable.

. . . .

I have been in bed and asleep more than an hour when I am awakened by a tap at my door. I start up; the moonlight is streaming in and is lying on carpet and counterpane in a silvery flood.

"Who is there?" I call, perturbed.

"It is I," Judith answers.

I unfasten the door, and she enters timidly. I am struck by the ghastly pallor of her face; her lips are white and bloodless, and her eyes are heavy, as though she were under the influence of a narcotic. She is the first to speak.

"I did not think you would be in bed," she says. "Sometimes you stay up late, writing. It is eleven o'clock."

"Mrs. Santon was tired, and I was no disinclined for a beauty sleep," I explain; "but I am wide awake now. I am glad you have looked in on me. I will slip on my dressing-gown, and we will have a chat. I have scarcely seen you all day."

She does not respond. I touch her accidentally, and am startled. She is stony cold this warm night.

"Judith, what is it?"

She stares at me blankly; horror chills me. It is possible, she is losing her senses? I twine my arms about her.

"I am so weary," she sighs, her features quivering.

"Sleep with me," I implore—"do, Judith!"

"Yes."

I undress her without any fuss. She is literally incapable of undressing herself, and so weary. Oh, Judith, Judith! Is Squire Ellerslie worse? I wonder. What can have happened? I am thirsting for information, but I do not vex Judith with questions. Not until her head is on the pillow will I allow her to unburden her mind. She does so, slowly, disconnectedly. I cannot believe what she says. I cry incredulously—

"You are going to marry Mr. Thornton to-morrow?"

"Yes."

"To-morrow!" I repeat, in profound consternation.

"You knew I was to marry him."

"Aye, but what this unseemly haste."

"My grandfather wishes it. He is dying, and I cannot deny him; and, if it is to be done, it had better be done quickly."

"I am not sure of that. He is not a fit man for you to wed."

She checks me.

"I have given my word to my grandfather—I gave it to my grandmother."

"But he is a gambler," I cry; "not one who should be your husband. Judith, think while there is time—delay now."

"I have thought," she mutters sorrowfully. "It is useless to remonstrate with me. The Squire would not die in peace if his wish were thwarted."

After musing, I say—

"Who will marry you? Not Will?"

"Oh, no"—with a shudder—"not Will, but Mr. Carruthers! I shall be married in my grandfather's room."

It is terrible.

"Oh, Judith, must it be?" I cry.

"It must be"—drearily. "Dear, you will help me, will you not?"

"Help you to what? Oh, my darling, I am afraid your wedding-ring will bring you bitter misery!"

She is mute. Through the ordeal before her she will go without resistance. I writhe in rage, but she is stoically, icily calm. At last my eyelids close. I am young, and unused to night vigils. Do I dream or not? I fancy Judith sobs and moans, fancy she murmurs my brother's name again and again as she tosses in agony. Ah, she is at the beginning of a thorny road! No wonder she weeps, as stricken women do, knowing she must tread it uncomplainingly.

. . . .

We are all grouped in Squire Elleslie's room. Judith in her white silk robe resembles a corpse. Mr Thornton is a little agitated. I have decked myself in gala attire; but I am very conscious of my swollen eyes and pale cheeks. The clergyman is fidgetty; Mrs. Santon is thoughtful; and only the Squire is perfectly calm. He does not discern the incongruous elements to which we are so keenly alive. For many years he has regarded his granddaughter's marriage with Silas Thornton as un fait accompli. The legal rite about to be performed is but the crowning of the edifice reared by his imagination. I wish—how earnestly no tongue can tell—something may occur to hinder the nuptial knot being tied; but I wish in vain. I hear the solemn words, the promises on either side. Judith's voice is as clear and sweet as the most tuneful bell. I know that nothing but death can sever the two now made one.

It is all over. Mr. Carruthers murmurs congratulations, and subsides into quietude. The squire's face is flushed; ten minutes since it was deathly white. Judith draws near, but he puts her back.

"Silas must be first," he says, distinctly.

She trembles from head to foot, shrinks, and then is impassive, as are those in peril who have no hope in this life. Does her husband see her involuntarily recoil? He kisses her without a word, and she darts from him to lavish caresses on her grandfather with a wild fierceness that would betray her were the Squire not already dull to things of time and sense.

I stumble to my room. Barley, Judith's maid, is putting it straight. I am beyond respect for appearances, and throw myself upon my bed recklessly. Barley is very troubled.

"I do not like it," she assures me, as I drink the water she brings me. "I am ill-satisfied. Will it bring Miss Judith luck?"

"Why should it not?"

We start, for Judith is in the doorway.

"Take off my dress, Barley," she says. "Doctor Balfour will be here directly. I want to speak to him. Deborah, I have brought you a letter, one delivered by the second post."

It is from Will. My eyes are dim. I rub them furtively ere I read it. When I look up Judith is looking at me.

"Well?" she queries.

"It is from Will," I say stupidly. "Mr. Thorold has gone to America; Will has seen him off, and he will be home this evening."

"Alack-a-day!" Barley cries. "If you had but waited you might have been married by Mr. Carey, and not a person you know little of."

Judith twists her wedding-ring round and round, reels, and falls fainting.

The house is very quiet, and the Squire has his lawyer with him. Judith is an ottoman by my side. There is certainly nothing bridal in her attire; she is wearing a thin black crape dress, a jet necklace round her pearly throat, and jet bracelets on her slender wrists. A slumbering intensity in her eyes warns me that her repressed feeling will shortly revenge itself. I pat her hands childishly, but I doubt if she notices my touch; she is brooding—brooding deeply. Night is closing in, and soon the stars will shine—shine as gloriously as though the world illumined by them were as blissful as Heaven. I look at Judith; she has recovered from her fainting-fit. How stately and serene she is! I almost wonder whether she does suffer acutely. Does her frigid exterior hide volcanic heat? I let my head droop; thoughts of Dale carry me from the quaint perfumed room. Suddenly Judith's grasp causes me to wince. Will is before us.

"Oh, Will!" I cry. And he holds me with fraternal affection.

Judith rises. She is very lovely! Her supple willowy figure, her exquisite figure, her dark, luminous eyes, dazzle me. An exceedingly bitter pang thrills me through and through.

"Are you well, Miss Napine?" Will asks.

There is no reply. My breath comes and goes chokingly. There must be no scene; everything must be done decently and in order. When our dearest ones die, we scrupulously pull down the blinds.

"Judith is Miss Napine no longer," I say, with a desperate effort at gaiety; "she is Mrs. Thornton."

"Mrs. Thornton?" he repeats.

"Yes," she interrupts; "I was married this morning."

Will is still. The time-piece ticks a few seconds. Presently Will whispers, but loud enough for me to hear—

"I hope you will be happy. Heaven bless you!"

Her lips part in a vain attempt to answer. Then she drops into a chair like one destitute of strength. Will walks to the window and gazes at the darkening landscape. Judith wipes the moisture from her face, and he turns round.

"Deborah," he says, and his tone is not rough or harsh, "will you return to-night with me?"

I hesitate. Can I leave Judith. She solves my doubt.

"Yes, dear, you will be happier at the Vicarage; this is a house of mourning."

I put on my hat and mantle quickly. When I enter the drawing-room, Mr. Thornton, Mrs. Santon, and the lawyer are with Will and Judith. The Squire is dozing. Will promises to call early in the morning. Judith's hand is in his. We take our leave, and walk homewards silent, as though dumb; words were not needed to tell me that Will's heart is broken, and his hopes wrecked.

. . . .

Dale and I are picking roses. It is a pleasant task, and we are both inclined to prolong it as much as may be. Will is paying parochial visits, and the servants are at tea. There is a dolce far niente air abroad. Lazily I drop on the grass and command Dale to continue to labour for himself and me; but he refuses, and stretches at full length half a yard from me, scattering our spoil with a sublime unconcern. I scold as vigorously as the warmth will permit, but he listens unmoved. We are now formally engaged. Will has given consent for mamma until she can refuse or accede to Dale's request. I am not anxious on this score. She will say "Amen," and complete my content.

I am happy. There is but one drop of sorrow in my daintily-flavoured cup, and that is Judith's lot. I push my hair from my brow—Dale is fastening leaves in my hat—and ponder. Will my present felicity last? Yes—oh, yes! Dale is inquisitive.

"What is it, sweetheart?" he entreats; and I, because already I have given him the key to my thoughts, and fancies, and dreams, tell him. He eyes me narrowly. "Deb," he says gravely, "do not mistrust your gladness. Hope and faith are life's elixirs. I believe you will be happy all your days."

"But why should Judith be miserable?"

"Will she be? Does she not love Mr. Thornton?"

I let the question pass. By chance I have learned her secret, and I must not divulge it even to him. Gratefully I hear a step behind us. Dale leaps up.

"Why, Will," he cries, "you have a face as sober as an undertaker's!"

A foreboding seizes me. I almost hate myself for having been so wantonly merry and blithe this sunny afternoon. I silence Dale with an imperative gesture.

"Squire Ellerslie is dead?" I say to my brother inquiringly.

"Yes, he died an hour since."

Gloom eclipses our smiles. Will tells us all as we go in-doors. It is summed up in one sentence.

"He fell into a sleep and never awoke."

. . . .

It is six weeks to-day since Judith became Mrs. Thornton, and not one visit has she paid to the Vicarage. I have paid her many, but, though her pleasure at seeing me is manifest, I cannot persuade her to return my calls. Squire Ellerslie is gathered to his fathers, and a goodly company attended his funeral. With pomp and state he was buried; but none mourned him as did Judith. His will has caused surprise. The bulk of his property is left to Silas Thornton. Judith's name is not mentioned.

We recollect Lady Napine's will, and debate whether the similarity between hers and the Squire's is accidental. Very extraordinary faith must they both have had in Mr. Thornton if they arranged to leave all their possessions to their granddaughter's husband under the impression that to do so was wiser than to leave them to Judith herself. I know they have desired to do that which is best for their grandchild; but I fear they have made a fatal mistake in placing unlimited faith in Mr. Thornton. It is not right to anticipate evil, but my forebodings are very melancholy. When the master of Napine and Ellerslie shows the cloven hoof, what will be his wife's position?

Letty and the baby are at the Vicarage. I have confided some of my cares to her. She thinks I am over-anxious about Judith, and is inclined to believe that time will shape things smoothly. She does not know about Will; does not realise that, wherever flowers are planted, there may always be a worm at their root.

Mrs. Austey wants us to spend the evening with her; indeed, we have promised to do so; but when Will comes to bid us be ready, I entreat to be allowed to remain behind, and tell him that Letty and he must make my excuses. I will stay with baby. I have my way, after many useless expostulations; then I help Letty to don her prettiest garment, pin a flower in Will's button-hole, and watch them down the path with satisfaction.

. . . .

It is a gusty summer night; the leaves are beginning to fall, and are swept hither and thither thoroughly. Autumn's sad music is in the breeze. I glance at the grey sky dolefully. I have a gloomy, miserable sensation that ill is looming; perchance, because I have no genuine sorrows, I try to create some. I am not given to low spirits, but to-night I am dismal enough to please the most saturnine. Luckily, before I quite succeed in scaring myself, Ray knocks.

"Nurse wishes to go into the village, Miss Deborah. I am willing to mind baby, if you will allow her.

"Yes, she can go, but let me have baby."

Ray is reluctant; but I want my little niece.

I am assuredly going to have a bad cold; I shiver repeatedly, and my throat is sore. I put on some coals, and draw close to the blaze. Baby falls asleep. I undress her carefully, place her in the cradle, and tuck her up snugly. Do I fall asleep myself? It is quite possible. I am conscious of a comfortable warmth, of a delightful drowsy feeling, and naught else.

When I open my eyes, a singular notion possesses me, an idea is on me of which I cannot get rid—I have been kissed! I smile and look about me; the duskiness prevailing is not to be lightened by the sparse flame in the grate. I peer into the corners. Baby cries, and I move hurriedly; as I do so a slight black figure approaches from the far end of the room. My frightened exclamation is quickly subdued. Judith! In my pleasure I embrace her passionately, pull her toward the fire, and gazes at her as if she and I had been sundered for years. She returns my caresses with loving ardour; but, when the feverish red has faded from her cheeks, I am pained at her pallor, at her patient, suffering air. Some change has passed over her since I last saw her; what can it be? Beneath her eyes are black lines, lines never wrought save by mental anguish; and her lips are dry and parched. I am loath to question her, fearful lest in my ignorance I may touch a wound too fresh to bear the tenderest contact; and she understands my embarrassment.

"You do not ask how I came here," she says. "Did I startle you?"

"No, no."

"Ray told me you were up-stairs, and, when I entered and found you sleeping so restfully, I preferred to wait until you roused yourself rather than rouse you. Deb, are you happy?"

"Yes."

For one moment she is silent. Is she comparing her destiny and mine? She takes my faces in her hands and raises it to hers.

"Heaven bless you, and grant that may always be so!"

Vainly I try to force back my tears. I cannot. She draws me to her forcibly; she has altered, and is not now a weak yielding girl, but a woman capable of enduring without sigh or protest. She says—and her voice is as unemotional as her face—

"I thought this a good chance of coming to you. Mr. Brenton is dining at Ellerslie. I am not wanted."

It sounds, oh, so forlorn! I repress vehement words bravely. She continues—

"Deborah, if I had known all I know now, when my dear grandmother begged me to marry Mr. Thornton——"

"You would not have married him!" I interject rashly.

"May be I ought not to admit it, but it was an error—a terrible error!"

A mighty yearning to soothe this sweet lovely woman seizes me. I look at her, and, amid mingled feelings—grief, anger, despair—marvel at her fairness. Is Silas Thornton a brute, and not a man, that he can regard her and not bow before her! Oh, Judith, Judith, you have indeed committed an error—alas, one no repentance can undo!

"I must not stay. Ah, Deborah, if I might! Child, what a mysterious thing life is! They say it is in our power, individually, to make or mar it; but, like a great many other oracular sayings, that is not an infallible one. My life was spoilt when it began. If my mother had lived it might have been otherwise; but—— Deb, you never showed me your mother's likeness."

"You may see it now," I reply, opening the locket at my throat—"my mother and Will."

They are excellent photographs. She examines my mother's face with well-satisfied eyes, then a faint colour tinges her cheeks, and her eyes sparkle; ere I can divine what she is about to do, she is pressing her unsmiling lips on my brother's grave handsome visage. I cannot hinder her. I look over her bent head moodily.

"Deborah, I am not wicked. I only care for him as one infinitely above me, not—not as you care for Dale Ord.

I say something indistinctly. She is not at ease.

"Dear"—pathetically—"I have not vexed you. I meant no wrong, but Mr. Carey was so kind to me when grandmamma was ill. I owed him very much."

Her face is glorified with an unearthly loveliness, and I kiss her reverently. What makes me wish that her days may be few? What is it that assures me that the grave would be a better home for her than any other? She rises, holding the locket—I have taken it off lingeringly. Impulsively I cry—

"Would you like the likeness? I have another I can wear."

"Deborah, am I to be trusted?"

I remove the gold rim and glass, and give her the likeness without comment. She covers it with her slender fingers.

"Thank you," she says. "Good-bye."

"I am coming with you into the garden."

I wrap myself up in a fleecy woolen shawl, ring for Ray to sit with baby, and we go out. There is a watery halo round the moon; the flowers look very fair and quaint; a solemn calm reigns. Night has a witching charm. I slip my arm within Judith's. I am full of thoughts too deep for words. At the white gate we separate. I kiss her softly; she kisses me with curious intensity.

"You have been a sister to me, a loving sister," she says, her voice rich and deep. "Deborah, I dare not say what my heart urges, but you know I love you!"

"Yes, yes."

"And you will always love me? Ay, Once more, Heaven bless you! Good-bye."

The plash of raindrops wakes me. When I enter the breakfast-parlour our trim little garden bids fair to become a pond, the rain is coming down so heavily. I eat my breakfast tranquilly. I have no longing to walk, ride, or drive. I have letters to write, books to read, work to arrange with Letty. Also, it is Will's sermon day; he can shut himself in his study, and, if it shall please him, we can have a cosy family evening together.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Question of Higher Education.

There are few subjects which, in our time, have been worn more thoroughly threadbare than that of education. Unless it be for the behoof of what has been aptly called the "everlasting rising generation," this matter might be allowed to rest. Accepted theories have not been so thoroughly worked as to warrant, one would think, the demand just yet for the trial of new ones—as a matter of fact, we know that there are a great many old-fashioned Conservative sort of folk who are disposed to let well-enough alone,—and even where they see defects, to rather bear the ills they have than to fly to those they know not of. But this is scarcely the spirit of the age. "Progress" is the watchword of the time. Whether it be backward or forward, or up or down, there must be movement; better to go anywhere than to stand still, and—as the inevitable consequence is supposed to be—be run over. Higher education must not be an exception to this rule. In the general mobilization of everything else this must not, of all things, remain immobile.

Time was when the distinction between a liberal and a professional education was pretty clear. That sort of intellectual training which aimed simply at the full and harmonious development of the faculties of the student was never confounded with that which is specially designed to fit a man for earning his bread. Indeed, it was thought that the farther the "pot-boiling," or as the Germans call it, the "bread-and-butter" idea was kept from the mind of the student engaged in the pursuit of a liberal education, and the more thoroughly he was trained to love study for its own sake, and for the sake of the consciousness of freedom and strength which it imported, the better. Then it was no objection to Latin or Greek that, in all probability, the person learning them would make very little direct use of them after he left College; or to logic, metaphysics, and the higher mathematics, that he was not likely to adopt a profession which would call these branches of knowledge directly into requisition. Then, if the precocious and impatient youngster objected to the lessons which he was required to learn, that he did not see the use of them, it was deemed a sufficient answer that what he knew not then he would know in after years. And it must be admitted that, in this way, some excellent scholars were made, and—which is still more important—some excellent characters were formed.

But, it appears, a more excellent theory has been discovered, and all this is to be changed, or to give place to something better. Latin and Greek if they are not to be altogether discarded are at least to be relegated to the region of the options. Metaphysics is to give place to the physical sciences. In a word, what have heretofore been grouped under the general head of liberal studies, if they are to be retained at all, are to have a subordinate position assigned to them, and education is to be made, in the more materialistic and matter-of-fact sense of the terms, "practical and useful." In the process of effecting this change, an entirely new method of instruction is to be called into requisition. The "object-lesson" is to perform a conspicuous part. Not only are the academy and the Porch to be used as heretofore, but the "grove" and even places less congenial to the feelings of the student are to be brought into prominence as places of instruction. The editor of the Popular Science Monthly who is a leader in this reform, or rather, perhaps, this agitation for reform, suggests some measures which probably will appear to many to seem rather radical and even startling innovations. We may mention a few of these.

As a first instalment of what he would like to see introduced into our institutions of learning, he thinks great good both immediate and prospective would result if, for example, the college buildings of the Michigan University, at Ann Arbor, were treated as an object-lesson; and if after this was mastered, the water-supply and sewage system of the town were treated in the same way. After perfecting themselves in those preliminary lessons, he would have the students to systematically extend their studies to the schoolhouses, the poorhouse, and the gaol, with a view to understanding the scientific principles involved in their hygienic, and sanitary conditions and arrangements. Of course he would not have them to end there, but, as we may take for granted, extend their investigations to everything else, either immediately or remotely connected with human welfare. If an object-lesson should be made of the water supply, why not of the food supply? What people eat is quite as important as what they drink. To investigate, with sufficient thoroughness to be of any value to the student in after life, all the sources from which the commissariat of a single city is supplied, opens a pretty wide field, furnishing material for several object-lessons. Then, while man continues to be a clothes-wearing animal, and especially while he continues to be so largely dependent upon clothes, both for his respectability and comfort, there does not seem to be any good reason why the "science of clothes" should not receive its full share of attention.

It may be an evidence of weakness on our part, but we confess, the vastness of the curriculum suggested by Prof. Youmans, in the article referred to, rather appalls us. To say nothing of the mistaken notion of education, which, as we conceive, underlies the whole of this theory, if the mind is to be made a catch-all, which is to be crammed with all sorts of "practical" knowledge, which a gross materialistic utilitarianism may judge to be "useful," and if this be the proper work of schools and colleges, one can scarcely see where the school-days of the coming generation are to end. In fact, if the work is to be done thoroughly, it appears to stretch out, popularly speaking, almost to infinity. Besides, when one thinks of it, to say nothing of the grotesque situations which it suggests, the carrying out of this comprehensive course of instruction would, as it appears to us, be attended with considerable inconvenience.

Think of Dr. McCaul, with his noble staff of co-labourers, for example, leading a few hundred students in a subterranean exploration of the city of Toronto, in order to induct them into the scientific mysteries involved in the sewage system of our good city,—or taking them down for a month to Governor Green's Castle to form a scientific and practical acquaintance with its dietetic hygienic, sanitary, and disciplinary arrangements, and then to have every other institution existing among us subjected to the same process. We hope our educational authorities will make haste slowly in adopting so radical a programme.

Talk Over What You Read.

Nearly forty years' experience as a teacher has shown how little I know of a subject until I begin to explain it or teach it. Let any young person try the experiment of giving in conversation, briefly and connectedly and in the simplest language, the chief points of any book or article he has read, and he will at once see what I mean. The gaps that are likely to appear in the knowledge that he felt was his own will no doubt be very surprising. I know of no training superior to this in utilizing one's reading, in strengthening the memory and in forming habits of clear, connected statement. It will doubtless teach other things than those I have mentioned, which the persons who honestly make the experiment will find out for themselves. Children who read can be encouraged to give, in a familiar way, the interesting parts of the books they have read with great advantage to all concerned. More than one youth I know has laid the foundation of intellectual tastes in a New England family, where hearty encouragement was given to children and adults in their attempts to sketch the lectures they had heard the evening previous. The same thing was done with books.

A Grand Trade.

An old Glasgow bookseller used to give a humorous account of what was in his days an almost daily occurrence:—"Indeed," he would say, "it's but a poor trade the selling of stationery. A muckle stupit simph comes into the shop, and says, 'Gie's a bawbee's worth o' paper.' 'Is is post ye want?' 'Oh, yes.' 'Bless me, man, dae ye want short or lang?' 'Ah, no; I'll tak this ane, for it's biggest.' Well, ye wad think ane was done wi' the fallow after a' that fash, and mair nor five or ten minutes lost; but no—he's at ye yet. 'Mend that pen,' he says, handing out an auld stump to ye that nae body almost could men'; and when ye hae dun that, he follows it wi' 'Pit a wee drap ink in that bottle.' Ye pit some in in his bottle a' for naething, and syne he shoves out his great horny hand, and says, 'I'll thank ye for a wafer.' Now only think o' the fasheerie, sic a loss o' time, forbye the ink and the wafer for naething! Ye'll see that the stationery trade's a grand trade."

When the Cat is away.

ORGIES HELD BY SERVANTS IN A GENTLEMAN'S HOUSE.

(From the Second Edition.)

Shrieks, curses, and the sound of blows arose from a aristocratic quarter, early Sunday morning, and caused the residents of the neighborhood to fly to their windows. They saw three men emerging from the front yard of one of the prettiest 'ouses, hatless, shoeless, and coatless. The house belongs to Mr. Dalmolin, a wealthy Italian. He was found at home yesterday. Said Mr. Dalmolin:—"It's a good joke on me, but I dare say two families out of three who are enjoying their vacation are in the same fix. I left for the White Mountains June 20th. Two girls remained to take care of the house, and a colored boy. Last Saturday the boy James came to the store and said the servants had been receiving visitors, who slept in the house, and made free with my choicest wines, liquors, and cigars, to say nothing of eatables.

HIS STORY.

amazed me, especially when he talked of parties of fourteen occupying my house and drinking $10 wine, ten years old. My wife's and daughter's bedrooms were made free with, as were their dresses, &c. The more I thought about it the madder I got. I went down to Elberon, however, as if nothing had happened, and then took the train back to town. I arrived between 2 and 3 o'clock. I had a double-barrelled shot gun, and James, who opened the door, told me that three of the rascals were in the house. I rushed up stairs. I was about to kick open the door of my wife's room. The cook opened it herself. I found a man dressing. He was a coachman discharged by a next door neighbor a short time before for similar conduct.

I KICKED HIM.

down stairs, where he showed fight, but my gun cooled him, and he was off like a shot. I went up stairs again, and found another man behind the dresses in my daughter's room. He was a burly six-footer. I kicked him down stairs, but he made no resistance. I thought they were all out, but hearing a noise in the room opposite my daughter's I found a chunky fellow on the bed, hidden by a heavy mattress. I prodded him down stairs with my gun." Mr. Dalmolin then ruefully showed his visitors through the house. The dining room was in confusion. Empty bottles were strewn around, the carpet stained with wine, and several of the chairs were broken. He then to the wine cellar. "They must have had a duplicate key," said Mr. Dalmolin, mournfully. "Confound the rascals! They were not satisfied with good claret, or even Moscota Spumante, or my choice champagnes, madeiras or sherries, but they took almost all my San Colombano at $10 a bottle." Mr. Dalmolin's San Colombano was only brought out on rare occasions. The visitors had excellent taste. A dozen would come at a time, and the girls brought out wine, cakes, canned fruits and meats, and cigars. All would sleep in the house. On July 10th there were fourteen. They sang, drank wine, played on the piano, and broke down the hammocks. Every Saturday and Sunday the orgies were repeated. One of the guests was a nurse discharged for theft four months ago. Her delight was to sport Mr. Dalmolin's daughter's handsome dresses. Some did not relish the fine wines, and brought beer, whiskey, gin, &c., making fearful havoc in the dining-room.

LED THE WAY

Following the Fashions.

When Paris starts a fashion, the milliners of all civilized countries are ready to import it all over Europe and America. But on us English we do not think French inventions sit with much grace. We are too different from the French to adopt with any success the style which best suits them. The English character and mind, being, as compared with the French, simple, vague, and slow; imaginative, rather than fanciful; constant and stable in feeling, rather than quickly sympathetic; proud, rather than vain; and, though proud, decidedly more modest and less self-confident than the French, we invent when we do exert ourselves, and push out our creative faculties on entirely different lines, so to speak, from those on which the French invent; but too often our modesty, vagueness, simplicity, and slowness acting together, ensnare us into an undue admiration of a French quality or achievement, for the very reason that we do not possess the one and cannot readily accomplish the other. French vanity, on the contrary, as a rule admires French qualities and French achievements because they are French. We are apt to surrender our national taste, not because the taste we adopt is superior, but because the weak side of our simplicity is deluded into believing theoretically in the taste which thinks so much of itself. That we are not discriminating in the manner in which we follow French fashions is shown by the fact that we do not copy what is really admirable in their work, and that we exaggerate almost to distortion the most fantastic inventions in French dress. Many a Paris milliner will keep an outre form of the fashions for her English and American customers, and we in England often imitate the frills and furbelows of French trimmings, but we do not make a point of imitating the neatness and perfection of the work, nor are we clever in fitting the wearing of the garment appropriately to the occasion, so that often we see an idea which starts from the Paris milliner in the form of an elaborate and artful piece of needle-work swept about dirty London streets in a slovenly, untidy form. Probably our power of perfecting the details of dress will always fail as long as we imitate another nation's inventions, for the same reason that in higher kinds of art it is so rare to find a copyist of any work of art capable of rendering even the most technical qualities of finish with real skill of elaboration, the interest felt by the inventor himself being the only power sufficiently strong to inspire the patience and ability necessary for perfect completeness in the details. But we believe that, were we to sharpen our inventive qualities and overcome the vagueness which results in an indiscriminate following of fashions which in no way fit into our national characteristics, weaving into such inventions a better side of our modesty and simplicity than we have shown in doing more than justice to another's nation's taste, we might achieve the inventions of costumes at once beautiful and English in character.—The Spectator.

GENERAL.

The rumor that Modjeska and Sarah Bernhardt are to be rivals is based on the fact that Modjeska is a Pole.

PHYSIC.—A witty old physician being asked by a beautiful girl what good all his doctor stuff did people, answered: "Why you see, my dear, by my pills, and powders, and blisters I distract the patient's attention, while nature cuts in and cures the disease before he knows it."

The Fiji Islanders who, up to six year ago, when England adopted them were cannibals, and indulged in fricassed traders, with cold missionary on the sideboard, have become so civilized that they wear clean shirts on Sunday, sing hymns, eat yams and beefsteak like any orthodox Christian. What with cocoanut, cocoanut fibre, cotton, sugar and coffee to export, and a luxuriant soil to grow all these products in, the colony ought to have a grand future.

The oldest infantry regiment in the Austrian army celebrated, on the 21st of last month, the 250th anniversary of its enrollment. It bears the name of "Prince George of Saxony, No. 11," and was raised in Bohemia in 1630, during the "Thirty Years' War." The regiment is at present quartered in Herzegovina. The day was celebrated by a grand banquet given by the officers, while the soldiers had a sort of historical masquerade, illustrating the career of the regiment.

On Saturday night Carter, the negro minstrel, who was performing in one of the big Bowery variety theatres, provoked long and loud applause with his newest story. "I was in Washington the other day," said he, "and I met an old politician there who asked me how things were in New York. I told him that a Pennsylvania man is in a peculiar fix there. He asked how that was, and I said that the man I referred to is on the Island, and is going to be sent up for four years in November."

After the execution of Menesclou in Paris the other day for the murder of the little girl, Lusie Deu, his remains were conveyed to the anatomical theatre, and subjected to a singular experiment. Dr. Sapdey injected under the cutaneous tissue of the head some fresh-drawn blood from the carotid of a living dog. The result was startling, for the colour returned to the cheeks, there was a perceptible nervous tremour, while the lips slightly moved. The same treatment applied to the body produced no effect.

YOUNG FOLKS.

How a Crab Changed his Clothes.

"Say, now, you leave my dinner alone, or I'll tell mamma."

"You can tell, if you have a mind to. I don't care, tell-tale."

No, it was not children that I heard quarrelling; it was only two little crabs. Children never speak so crossly to each other; but those two little crabs scolded and bit down there in the water until— But I am getting ahead of my story. I'll tell you how it was.

I had been out fishing, and as the sun became too hot, I rowed my boat to shore under the shade of the trees, and sat thinking. I looked down into the water, and saw a little crab holding a clam shell under his mouth with his claw, and eating as fast as he could, at the same time turning his queer, bulging eyes in all directions to see that he would not be disturbed. But soon another crab came up, and tried to snatch away the clam shell. Then ensued the conversation which I have already quoted. I dropped a piece of clam into the water, and the new-comer seized it. He scuttled away under a piece of sea-weed, and cried out in triumph:—

"Aha! greedy, you didn't get it, and it is much better than your old shell. Don't you wish you had it?"

"I'll change with you," said the other. "Just see this blue on the edge of my shell. Ain't it lovely?"

"Change! I guess not. Who cares for the blue? You can't eat the blue."

"Of course you can't eat it, but it is pretty. However, there is no use of talking to you about it; you have no love for the beautiful," said the other, tauntingly.

"You needn't put on so many airs. I'm bigger than you anyway," snarled the first.

"You won't be long, for I'm growing every day."

"Children! children! what is the matter?" asked the old mamma crab, who just appeared on the scene.

"Mamma, he tried to get my din—"

"I didn't, I only wanted—"

"He's a mean, horrid old thing and I don't—"

"Why, children," interrupted the old crab, "I am ashamed of you. What is the matter?"

"He tried to take away my dinner," said one.

"He said I wasn't growing big," said the other.

"That did not stop your growth, did it?" said mamma.

"N—o," drawled the little one.

"And now," she continued, "I want you to behave yourselves. Stop such silly quarrelling. You act so much like boys and girls that I am ashamed of you."

"Say, mamma, my clothes are getting too tight for me, and I've busted a seam in the back of my coat," said one of the youngsters, after a short pause.

"That is all right," answered mamma, assuringly; "you are only going to 'shed.'"

"Am I going to be all soft and helpless, like papa was, and then be taken away and not come back any more?"

"Oh, no, I hope not. You must find a quiet place, and hide until you can take care of yourself," answered mamma.

Accordingly the young crab wandered around, and found a nice quiet place under the shadow of a large log, here he half buried himself in the mud, and commenced the operation of changing his clothes. He swelled himself out until the upper shell separated from the lower, then worked his claws slowly backward and forward, and expanded and contracted the muscles of his body; little by little, he emerged from his shell, and finally, with one effort, he freed himself entirely from his old clothes. He lay back, exhausted by his exertions. While the crab is soft it is perfectly helpless, and it can be handled without fear of bites. When it first emerges from its shell it is covered with a skin as soft and delicate as yours, but if left undisturbed it will soon harden. It taken out of the water and kept in damp sea-weed, the process of hardening can be delayed for three or four days, when it dies of starvation, as it can eat nothing while soft, and that is the way in which it is brought to the market. But the little crab I saw was fortunate enough not to be disturbed. He lay perfectly still, and in, about an hour, if you could have put your finger on his back, you would have felt that it had grown stiff and rough; in between three or four hours the shell reaches the stage known as "paper shell." It is hard and coarse, like brown paper, and the crab begins to show signs of liveliness, and in about seven hours there is no perceptible difference between our recently reclothed crab and his hard brothers and sisters.

Bee Notes for October.

From the American Agriculturist.

THE HONEY CROP.—The yield of honey from Basswood and other sources, in this section, has not equalled our expectations. During the last days of June the supply of honey, from basswood, promised to be abundant, but it was very suddenly and unexpectedly cut short. Reports from all parts of the United States indicate a small crop. We judge it to be less than one-half of the usual average; many report an entire failure. In our own apiaries we secure over 15,000 pounds from 176 colonies. Thus far we have taken from three selected swarms as follows: July 10th, No. 1, 77½ lbs., No. 2, 66½ lbs., No. 3, 83½ lbs.; July 13th, No. 1, 41 lbs., No. 2, 41 lbs., No. 3, 55 lbs.; July 19th, No. 1, 12 lbs., No. 2, 18 lbs., No. 3, 18 lbs. After the last date given we removed the swarms, with others, to where Buckwheat, Golden Rod, and Eupatorium are found in greater abundance than around the summer stands nearer home.

FALL PASTURAGE.—The subject of fall pasturage is of considerable importance, as, with a fair yield of honey at this season, breeding will be continued, and thus one of the essentials for successful wintering is secured. It will therefore be found profitable to study the sources from which a yield may be expected. In many sections buckwheat is the chief dependence for late honey. In other localities, like our own in the Mohawk Valley, Melilot or Sweet Clover, is of great importance. But more generally, we think that the supply will be gathered chiefly from Golden Rod and Eupatorium. These wild plants can be found upon rough, waste land, in nearly all parts of the country.

FALL MANAGEMENT.—If surplus boxes have not been moved as directed last month, it should be attended to at once. If swarms have been supplied with extra combs for extracting, they should be removed and packed safely away for use another season. The value of these combs, as well as those taken from piece boxes, cannot be overestimated, consequently great care should be taken to preserve them. Mice and rats should be carefully excluded. If disturbed by the destructive moth, the removed combs should be smoked with brimstone.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

HANGING AND STANDING FRAMES.—"Do you not crush more bees, and are you not more liable to kill the queen with the Quinby standing frame, than with the hanging frame?"—We consider the standing frame quite as desirable, yet we, as well as others, in answering such questions, should not lose sight of the fact, that every bee-keeper becomes more familiar with whatever style of hive he adopts, and, naturally, can handle it better than any other, until he acquires a large experience.

OPENING HIVES.—"How often should a beginner open his hives?" Just as often as practical operations requires him to do so.

BEES IN A GARRET.—A correspondent in N. J. comes with the old question of the desirability of keeping bees in a garret. This story of arranging bees in a room in a garret where they will not swarm, and where the owner can go and cut out cards of honey for family use, at any time, is a very old one, and the immense swarm of bees somewhere in the rocks, where bees pour forth in masses, and honey may be found by the ton. As regards keeping bees in an attic or upper room, or even upon a roof they may be so kept, if some practical hive is properly arranged in such a location. There are even some advantages derived, where but few hives are kept. But all things taken into consideration, it is preferable to have the bees placed somewhere near the ground.

Liberalism in Religion.

There is such a thing as liberalism in religion, it appears, as well as in politics. Between these two, however, there is no necessary connection. A man may be liberal in politics, we know, and yet be strictly conservative in respect to both the belief and practice of religion. But whether liberalism in religion, and conservatism in anything that belongs to modern society, can co-exist in the same mind, may well be doubted. There are various degrees in this, as well as in everything else,—but in its extremest form, it seems to aim at nothing else than a complete revolution of the institutions of society, and the principles on which they are founded. Even Mr. Ingersoll, atheist though he be, and though for a time he was recognized as the apostle and high-priest of the new religion, has not been able to go so far as the bulk of his followers. He, apparently, has no quarrel with the State, and though he would destroy the Church if he could, he would let civil government live. He is too much of a family man, too, to have the bond which binds it together relaxed. Thanks to the education which he received in his early puritan home, under the supervision of his Christian parents,—whose memory, alas, he has often blasphemed—obscenity, moral putridity, and rottenness, are loathsome to him; he therefore withdrew from the National Liberal Association, when it lifted up its voice in favour of the transmission of this sort of filthy garbage through the United States mails. A radicalism, so profound and universal that even so extreme an iconoclast as Col. Robert Ingersoll could not away with, must be too thorough to leave room for conservatism of any sort.

This wonderful Association, or League, as it is called, has been in congress or convention—we believe the former is the phrase which it applies to its gathering—in the city of Chicago recently, and its proceedings have furnished a singular commentary on its name and pretensions. To such extremes was its iconoclastic and revolutionary tendencies disclosed, that one of its most prominent members, a man who had occupied a prominent position in the League, and had been a leading spirit in its movements, was led to express his extreme disgust by moving a couple of resolutions which procured his prompt and speedy expulsion. The resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That the National Liberal League, Auxiliary Leagues, and kindred organizations are recommended to consider the propriety and wisdom of allowing the National Congress of Liberal Leagues, to demand, of all the people and powers that be, that said Congress shall be empowered to go at once at work to remedy all the evils and cure all the ills of the world according to their own very liberal and peculiar ideas respecting the same.

Resolved, That the Fourth Congress of the the National Liberal League recommends to the consideration of the Auxiliary Leagues and kindred organizations, the propriety and wisdom of turning over the management and control of this organization to a religious sect of Spiritualists, and to a squad of avowed and practical Free-Lovers.

After Mr. Spencer, the author of these resolutions had been got rid of, the Congress proceeded to pass resolutions of its own, which showed that the spirit which his motions were intended to rebuke, really existed among its members, and that the snub was really deserved. It declared itself in favour of the more ample extension of the doctrines of free-love, and in condemnation of any interference of the Post office authorities or the Court with the free circulation of the vilest literature. The proceedings were farther enlivened by the exhibition of a real live martyr, in the person of a female who had been arrested for selling an indecent book. She was brought on the platform and exhibited to the audience by a certain doctor, who called the admiring attention of the members of the Congress to her beautiful face, and appealed to them to say whether in the exquisite liniaments of that face, they could discover any trace of obscenity. Of course the argument was irresistible. Who could help acquitting a woman with a beautiful face, of the charge of impurity? No wonder that an argument so conclusive was received with sounds of applause. But the oddest part of its proceedings, considering, that fundamental principle of this species of liberalism is liberty, in the most absolute and unrestricted sense, was the censure which was passed upon Mr. Ingersoll for not having declared himself in favour of the transmission of obscene matter through the mails. This Liberal League has proved that whether it equals the churches in any other respect or not, it it quite as intolerant as any of them; and that it is quite as ready to censure or expel a refractory member who dares to think for himself and to manfully express his convictions.

Telegraph Blunders.

A gentleman who had gone to the country to find a summer location for his family telegraphed to his wife, "Home to-night." The wires rendered this into "Come to-night," and so the wife posted into the country at once, while her husband was making his way in a contrary direction.

Not long since a message came to the principal of a business house in the city from his travelling agent, who had reached Philadelphia—"Am at Continental House. Send some hash by mail." The agent did not intend to reflect on the food at the hotel, but wanted "cash" sent by mail.

An affectionate uncle was informed by telegraph: "Mary is to be buried on Wednesday. Come sure." Mary, who lived in Chicago, was his favourite niece, and, as he had not heard of her illness, the sad intelligence gave him a severe shock. He dressed himself in deep mourning, and made a hurried journey to the West to find a jovial party at Mary's wedding. The wires had arranged for her to be "buried" instead of "married."

Probably the worst blunder ever made was one that occurred in the case of a St. Louis merchant, who, while in New York, received a telegram informing him that his wife was ill. He sent a message to his family doctor, asking the nature of the sickness and if there was any danger, and received promptly the answer: "No danger. Your wife has had a child. If we can keep her from having another to-night she will do well." The mystification of the agitated husband was not removed until a second inquiry revealed the fact that this indisposed lady had had a "chill."

"You can't play that on me!" said the piano to the amateur who broke down on a difficult piece of music.

ALL SORTS.

An Ode to a Lot of Stovepipe.

Infernal stuff, your nature well I know,
So, when I took you down six months ago,
Each piece I numbered so that I might know
Exactly how you'd go together well.
And now the time, for chilly days draw nigh,
To put you up again I madly try.
But all in vain. The joints that then did fit
Now do not come within an inch of it.
I get you two-thirds put in place and then
Crash you go tumbling to the floor again.
Once more I try. You're rather full of soot.
And I am getting daubed from head to foot.
I jam my thumb, but still I persevere,
One piece goes down again and rakes my ear.
I grab to catch the piece, another goes,
And, falling, scrapes the hide all off my nose.
And then another piece falls with a slam,
And then the rest goes down and I—say
"Dam."
And then my blood gets boiling and I say,
By all that's blue, I'll fix you anyway.
Once more I go to work. By patience great
I get all but a single section straight,
And that I am about to place, when oh!
The chair I stand on tips. Down flat I go.
While on and round me, with a banging crash,
The whole comes down again in one grand smash.
And then my wife remarks: "I never saw
A man so clumsy!" I say, "Hold your jaw!"
And for a tinman send, while I retire
To wash myself and swear, to vent my ire.

WHY shouldn't a puppy ride in a dog-cart?

WHERE to go when short of money—go to work.

THE man who died in harness probably forgot to shuffle off his mortal coil.

THE baker's business should be profitable, a good part of his stock is rising while he sleeps.

"HE sleeps where he fell," says a late ballad, which suggests that he must have been drunk.

NIAGARA FALLS are three feet lower than they were fifty years ago, but the hack fare is hire.

IT is absurd to suppose that a man can speak above his breath, since his mouth is below his nose.

AN ingenious locomotive engineer has just patented an improved "spark arrester." Here is another enemy to the course of true love.

DINER (sniffing)—"Waiter, I really think this fish is not fresh!" Waiter—"Yes, sir, can't answer for that sir! I've honly been 'ere a week, sir!"

"WHAT a blessing it is," said a bathing Irishman, "that night never comes on till late in the day, whin a man is tired and can't work any at all at all."

How time changes! In the good Old Testament days it was considered a miracle for an ass to speak, and now nothing short of a miracle will keep one quiet.

ANOTHER poet comes forward and says: "And I hear the hiss of a scorching kiss." Beats all what a man can hear if he is only mean enough to listen.

ALLUDING to Beecher's estimate that a female house-fly will lay twenty thousand eggs in a season, The Church Union thinks "it is a pity a fly couldn't be grafted on a hen."

WHAT is life? In infancy, a battle with colic; in youth, a struggle to keep out of mischief; in manhood, a struggle with indigestion; and, in old age, the prelude of a contested will case.

AFTER the choir of one of the churches in Ithaca had performed a rather heavy selection, the minister opened the Bible and began reading in Acts, xx.: "And after the uproar had ceased."

REST is never so sweet as after a long struggle; strength is never so strong as through trial; joy is a more blessed thing after sorrow; and the fair dawning of sunny days could never come if we had no nights.

A NORTH Carolina man planned to frighten his wife by a sham attempt at suicide. He was to very gently hang himself, and a friend was to cut him down; but the friend was not prompt, and the plotter was choked to death.

THE late Rev. Dr. Symington, not feeling well one Sabbath morning, said to his beadle, who was a "character": "Man Robert, I wish you would preach for me the day." "I canna do that," promptly replied Robert, "but I often pray for you."

THE senior Greek professor, in his lecture to the juniors the other day, speaking of the marriage of Venus and Vulcan, remarked that "the handsomest women generally marry the homeliest men," adding grimly: "There's encouragement for a good many of you."

DR. HASTINGS, of Boston, in speaking of religious joy, and of singing as being a natural expression of that joy, remarked that some congregations had so little of it that they had to hire people to do their singing. "Why," says he "I would as soon think of hiring a man to eat my breakfast."

"Do you want to kill the child?" exclaimed a gentleman as he saw a boy tip a baby out of its carriage on the walk. "No, not quite," replied the boy; "but if I can get him to bawl loud enough, mother will take care of him while I go and wade in the ditch with Johnnie Bracer!"

THE Roman Catholic bishop of B—, a most energetic cleric. He performs as much parish duty, I believe, as most priests. He received the other day the confession of a little boy. At the close said his right reverence: "Well, have you anything more to tell me?" "No," said the lad, depreciatingly, "but I'll have more next time."

NOT many miles from New Bedford a small company of coloured brethren decided to take up a collection. The presiding officer offered to pass the hat himself, and, in order to encourage the others, he put in a ten-cent piece. After the collection, during which every hand had been in the hat, the president approached the table, turned the hat upside down, and not even his own contribution dropped out. He opened his eyes in astonishment, and exclaimed: "Bless goodness, but I's eben loss de ten cent I started wid!" The case called for immediate action. The presiding officer demanded the restoration of the ten-cent piece. But nobody came forward. After an impressive pause, a brother remarked, solemnly: "It 'pears to be a great moral lesson round here somewhar."

THE champion jack-of-all-trades belongs to England, and lives near Chichester. He has served as seaman in the four quarters of the globe, and acted as steward, sailmaker, cook, mate, and navigator. He now hangs out his sign as "Prof. Pullinger, contractor, inventor, fisherman, builder, carpenter, joiner, sawyer, undertaker, turner, cooper, painter, glazier, sign painter, wooden pump maker, paper hanger, bell hanger, boat builder, clock cleaner, locksmith, umbrella repairer, china and glass mender, netknitter, wireworker, grocer, baker, farmer, taxidermist, copying clerk, letter writer, accountant, surveyor, engineer, land measurer, house agent, vestry clerk, assistant overseer, clerk to the Selsey Sparrow club, clerk to the Selsay police, assessor and collector of land tax and property and income tax, and collector of church and highway rates."

A STRIKING acoustic effect has been produced at the Covent Garden Theatre concerts, London, by locating one of the bands in the front seats of the top gallery, while the other two perform on the orchestral stand erected for the promenade concerts. The instruments during the realization of this novel idea were drums and bugles to the extent of over a hundred performers, and the players, under the direction of a inventive Frenchman replied to each other from floor and gallery in a kind of ancient antiphonal call and recall, with all the vehemence of military lungs and arms, beating it hard at brass and goatskin. The rapid and almost startling transitions from stillness to thunder were very strange, and as the sound rolled and reverberated round the roof, and up and down the ample building, such a clatter and uproar was produced as has been rarely equalled. The effect was remarkable, and the critics say the effect was sublime.

Nearly Bled to Death.

When the steamer Norseman was coming over from Charlotte on Saturday, a young man who was using a pocket-knife accidentally cut his hand between the thumb and forefinger—it bled very freely. The young man instead of asking some person to dress this wound, held his bleeding hand over the side of the steamer, and when found by one of the officers of the boat had nearly bled to death, and the blood still flowing copiously. A cord was tied tightly around the wrist and the blood stopped. The young man was put off at Cobourg and placed under medical treatment. Had he remained a few minutes longer without being discovered he would have been dead. He could not speak when found.—Port Hope Guide.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

Contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, ... Matter and an Instructive ...

... in advance, $1.50 in three months. ... not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher. ... parties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

..., one year	$50 00
... do do	30 00
...er do do	18 00
... do do	10 00
... do do	4 00
...nes and under, first insertion	50
Each subsequent insertion	15
... to ten lines, first insertion	75
Each subsequent insertion	25
... lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion	2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE—Medical Hall; residence at ...dale House.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed ...erton, Office open every Thursday, as before.
... FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
OFFICES—at Owen Sound and Markdale. M. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. M...nd's store, open on Thursday of every ... 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW. Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
Money loaned at lowest rates on personal real estate. Lands bought and sold, and seller introduced free of commis...
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
... B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

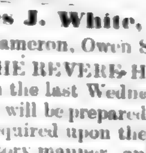
F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end of year 8½ per cent.—principal payable at end of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal ... yearly to suit. Borrowers. ... for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers' ...ants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
...eville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT. Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments.
A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, ...d and Markdale. Having purchased the late Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's stock of original Field Notes, Plans, ...s, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates ... Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. ... by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, ...dale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.



Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1-y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont
J. McGIRR, PROPRIETORS.
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the ... Wines and Liquors and the best ... Cigars. ... to and from all trains.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.
Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the use of a knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 ANN ST., NEW YORK.
Post Office Box, 4586. 90ly

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 6. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1880. WHOLE NO. 6

Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

[EVER]Y FRIDAY MORNING

[in] time to meet the early mails.

[Contai]ns the latest Foreign and Provincial [and L]ocal Intelligence, County Business, [Lo]cal Matters and 'an' Instructive [Stor]y.

[$1 in] advance, $1 50 in three months, [if not] paid till end of the year. No pa[per dis]continued until all arrearages are [paid, ex]cept at the option of the publisher. [Par]ties refusing papers without paying [will] be held responsible for the subscrip[tion unt]il they comply with the rules.

[R]ATES OF ADVERTISING:

[Colum]n, one year	$50 00
do	30 00
do	18 00
do	10 00
do	4 60
[... a]nd under, first insertion	50
subsequent insertion	15
[...] to ten lines, first insertion	75
subsequent insertion	25
[...] lines, first insertion per line	8
[eac]h subsequent insertion	2

[The n]umber of lines to be reckoned by [the space] occupied measured by a scale of [Nonpar]eil. Advertisements without [specific di]rections will be published till for[bid and ch]arged accordingly. All transitory [advertisem]ents must be in the office of pub[lication b]y 11 o'clock on the Thursday [p]receding their publication.

W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

[PROF]ESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

[D]rs. Sproule & Carter,
[Ph]ysicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
[OFFICE]—Medical Hall; residence at [...] House.
[Mar]kdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Thos. R. Wilkes.
[Barr]ister at Law. Owen Sound.
[OF]FICE.—Millers's building, over Robin[son's S]tore, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost.
BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS-AT [LAW], Solicitors in Chancery, Convey[ancers], &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at [Mark]dale. Office open every Thursday, as [her]etofore.
[...] FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane.
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
[Off]ices at Owen Sound and Markdale. [M. B.—]Office at Markdale, over W. J. Mc[...]'s store, open on Thursday of every [wee]k. 1-y

James Masson.
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, [...] Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
[Sept.] 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon.
[A]TTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
[Money] loaned at lowest rates on personal [...] estate. Lands bought and sold. [Buy]er and seller introduced free of commis[sion].
DUNDALK.
[Sept]ember 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown.
[ISSUER] OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly [attend]ed to and carefully executed.
[...]—Money to Lend on Real Estate se[curity].
[Markda]le, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae.
[REAL] ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM [Co]unty of Grey.
[Money] to Loan at reasonable interest, pay[able] yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end [of ...] 8½ per cent.—principal payable [at the e]nd of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal [and inte]rest yearly to suit Borrowers.
[Lands for] Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
[Sept.] 17, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown.
[Issuer] of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Insurance Agent, Commissioner [in B. R.], &c., Conveyancer and Licensed [Auctionee]r for the County of Grey. Farmers, [...], and Land Sales, Punctually at[tended to a]nd charges made very moderate.
[Markda]le, Sept. 17, 1880 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.
[...] LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low [rates of] interest. Principal payable at the [end of a te]rm of years, and interest half year[ly, or princi]pal or principal and interest repay[able in ins]talments.
[A large n]umber of desirable Improved Farms [for sale]. 1-y

I. G. Sing.
[D]OMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND [Sur]veyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, [...] and Markdale. Having purchased [the late] Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's [sto]ck of original Field Notes, Plans, [...] Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys [with]in the last fifty-five years, I am [prepared] to make Surveys in strict accord[ance the]rewith. Profiles and Estimates [of ...] Hills, Plans and Specifications [for ...] Bridges, furnished on applica[tion. Mo]ney to Loan at 8 per cent interest. [Orders by] letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, [...] will be promptly attended to.
[...] 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

[D]r. James J. White,
[Successo]r to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
[WILL] BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, [M]arkdale, on the last Wednesday in [each mont]h, when he will be prepared to per[form all o]perations required upon the mouth [in a most sa]tisfactory manner, and upon [reasonable] terms. 1-y

Hotels.

[MA]NSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
[Having] leased the above hotel and thor[oughly] refurnished and refitted it, the trav[elling pu]blic will find every accommodation. [...], best of liquors and cigars kept. [Good sta]bling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
[Sept.] 17, 1880. 1-y

[RO]YAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
[...] McGIRR, [...] PROPRIETORS.
[Good a]ccommodation for the travelling [public. T]he bar is well stocked with the [best] Wines and Liquors and the best [brands of] Cigars.
[... B]us to and from all trains.
[Sept.] 17, 1880. 1-y

[M]ANHOOD:
LOST HOW RESTORED
We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay [on the ra]dical and permanent cure (without [medicine]) of Nervous Debility, Mental and [Physical] Incapacity, Impediments to Mar[riage, &c.,] resulting from excesses.
[Price], in a sealed envelope, only six [cents, or] two postage stamps.
[The c]elebrated author, in this admirable [Essay, c]learly demonstrates, from thirty [years' suc]cessful practice, that alarming con[sequence]s may be radically cured without the [dangerous] use of internal medicine or the [applicati]on of a knife; pointing out a mode of [cure at o]nce simple, certain and effectual, by [means of] which every sufferer, no matter [what his c]ondition may be, may cure himself [cheaply, p]rivately and radically.
[This Le]cture should be in the hands of every [youth an]d every man in the land.
[THE] CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 ANN ST., NEW YORK.
[Post Offi]ce Box, 4586. 90ly

DYSPEPSIA — DR. CLARK — LIVER DISEASES
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City
LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

(TRADE MARK.)

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.
The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870
9,000,000 Bottles.
This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.
It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.
There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, [...]
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, [...]

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.
MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed any one. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.
MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.
Burford, Brant Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.
ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.
Mt. Forest,
Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.
MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.
MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.
W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.
NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.
Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.
MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.
Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.
DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.
Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.
W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

A LOUISIANA journal speaks of a meteor about the size of a peck measure. Its tail must have been about as long as a piece of string.

THE Japanese would appear to be growing tired of autocratic government, for they are holding numerous meetings and presenting memorials for the establishment of a National Assembly.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Fashion Notes.

POLISH caps with tassels are worn.

MULL fichus and scarfs remain in high favour.

IMPORTED evening dresses have very long trains.

THE first leading bonnet of the fall will be the poke.

ALL very dressy costumes are trimmed with embroidery.

BOTH square and round trains are worn in evening toilet.

SOME very small bonnets appear among late novelties in millinery.

THE "Abbe" is the new hat worn by ladies returned from abroad.

A TRIMMING much in vogue is black jet embroidered with jet beads.

FANCY feathers show the influence of the craze for plaided effects.

PLUSH roses form the favourite garnitures of many lovely evening dresses.

IRISH point and church lace trim the most fashionable mull neck scarfs.

SOME of the jet and crystal beaded dress trimmings range from $40 to $50 a yard.

THE largest and most imposing hat of the season takes the name of Sarah Bernhardt.

AFTER the rage for big bonnets has subsided, the medium sizes will probably be most worn.

BONNETS, muffs and costumes match when worn by the most fastidiously fashionable women.

THE "Vera" is a new hat named for the heroine of Ouida's last and wickedest novel, "Moths."

FEATHERS, birds, flowers, laces, bows of ribbon, and bonnet ornaments trim the new plush muffs.

JET or coloured crystal beads enrich all the richest trimmings and embroideries on dressy costumes.

JET, gold, amber, purple, irridescent and jewel-tinted and crystal beads trim both bonnets and dresses.

To muffle the throat in several yards of white or black tulle, a la Sarah Bernhardt, will be all the fashion.

PLUSH muffs are flat, and the plush is arranged in loose, irregular folds, not tight or smooth around the muff.

CRYSTAL beads in irridescent hues, white and clear as glass, are used to excess in trimming evening dresses.

The petals of many of the new artificial flowers are made of soft plush in most gorgeous and delicate tints.

WHITE plush bonnets, with the crowns or brims dotted with medium-sized pearl beads, bid fair to be the favourites.

BONNET ornaments, in the form of little gilded pigs, spiders, bees, beetles, ornament the new plush muffs.

THE new hats and bonnets take the names of Zola's heroines: Miette, Gervaise, Albinde, Clorinda and Helene.

A WHITE brocaded satin toilet has the petals of each brocaded flower formed by tassels of tiny pearl beads.

BLACK and brown beaver plush bonnets and hats are frequently lined with amber-coloured, yellow, red, blue, and other pale-tinted plush.

PLUSH muffs to match hats are trimmed with coffee-stained lace, and furnished with gold cords, which suspend them around the neck.

MANY of the handsomest wraps are trimmed with jet embroideries in artistic designs, set figures, bands, gimps, cords, tassels, spikes and galloons.

WHITE plush bonnets will take precedence of all others for evening wear. They will be trimmed with feathers, flowers and crystal bead cords and tassels.

THE figures on the costliest velvet and satin brocades are life-size flowers, magnolias, and mammoth roses, with tropical fruits in pairs or triplets, these figures being of velvet, the shading formed by cut and uncut pile, not by difference of colour.

THE richest brocades have large figures and flowers in cut and uncut velvet of the darkest shades of maroon, navy blue, plum, and bronze green on grounds of merveilleuse satin, harmonizing in colour, not contrasting, such as pale rose for maroon flowers, mauve for plum, water blue for navy blue, and tilleul for bronze green.

Waifs.

IT only costs $14 for extra coal to winter six shillings' worth of house plants, and housewives can make arrangements accordingly.

THE young ladies of West Philadelphia have organized a Dickens' Club. All the young men at present feel like going to the Dickens.

"MARRIED—In Chillicothe, Sept. 12, Herbert L. Rollingstone and Emma J. Moss." Thus does one familiar proverb receive a death blow.

"Do you love this girl better than you do her sister?" was what a Kansas clergyman asked the man who stood before him to be made a husband.

CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG signed an engagement for opera before she had been three days in Vienna, which has proved a triumphant success, it is said.

WOMEN have cheek enough to wear men's hats on their heads, but there is one thing they dare not do. Not one of them dare remove her hat in public and dust off the bald spot.

I DON'T c[are to] be a little old. She isn't giddy, and doesn't want so much ice-cream as your young things.—Ashmead Bartlett.

A LADY, being asked her age, said: "When I was married I was eighteen and my husband was thirty. His age has since doubled, and so of course has mine. That makes me thirty-six." And she was astonished at her own frankness.

SOME one having propounded the query, "What invention would most benefit the community at large?" a suspicious married woman replies:

A glass so framed, that when the husband's out,
The wife at home can see what he's about.

IF at a dinner party you happen to upset a glass of claret over your fair neighbour's white satin dress, smile pleasantly, and say: "Ah! it is always a sign of wet weather when the glass falls." You will be forgiven, and in all probability invited by her papa to dine with him on Sunday.

THEY were in the wood. Said he, looking things unutterable: "I wish I were a fern, Gustie." "Why," she asked. "Why—p'raps—you—would—press me, too." She evidently hated to do it, but it is best to nip such things in the bud, so she replied: "I'm afraid you're too green, Charley." The poor boy almost blubbered.

A YOUNG lady at a print store the other day, evidently proud of her erudition, raised her voice to say that the pictures were produced by the "heliotrope process." The smile that travelled over the sea of faces came near being shipwrecked into a vulgar guffaw when a quiet-looking gentleman remarked that the young woman was somewhat flowery in her language.

MRS. PARTINGTON returns from the seaside. "Yes, I've been to a seaside retort, I have had my summer extortion, and I must confess my anticipations surpassed my expectations. To people in indignant circumstances the recommendations might be satisfactory; but it is beyond my reprehension how people of effulgence—people who have lugubrious homes, surmounted by all that embezzles civilized life—can put up in such caverns. They must have invested tastes."

AT one of the balls given to General Trevino's bride the dark carpet on the floor was sprinkled with gold-leaf to give greater brilliancy to the scene. The Mexican home of the pretty American girl is a house fronting one hundred and twenty feet, with a depth of more than two hundred feet; its spacious court-yard is ornamented with shrubbery, and the servants' houses are all detached. General Trevino's example is said to have proved contagious, as various members of the staff are about to lead other American girls across the border.

Too Airy.

When the late Lafayette S. Foster was a rising lawyer he was engaged to a young lady whose family enjoyed a larger social prominence than his own. The wedding day had been fixed, and they were talking over the prospective tour, as a part of which young Foster proposed that they should pass a few days with his parents, who lived in a town at some distance. The lady rather reluctantly consented, but said: "I will go with you this time, but in future you must not expect my visits to your parents to be very frequent. You must remember that our associations have been very different." Shocked by this cold-blooded depreciation of his father and mother, the young man paced the floor for some moments. Finally, taking his hat, he said: "I am glad I have found you out in time; you may go to the devil." The rebuke may not have been choice in style, but it was earnest in spirit. Henceforth their ways lay apart.

A Petrified Woman.

On Thursday last, says The Carson (Nev.) Appeal, Alonzo Zaletto, an Italian fisherman, discovered a petrified woman at Cascade lake. He was going out to fish at the time, and when pushing off his boat struck his oar against something that attracted his attention. He investigated the matter and found a petrified hand protruding from the sand and pebbles on the beach. In a short time he had unearthed a woman in a complete state of petrifaction. It was small in size, brown in colour, and scrawny and emaciated. The petrifaction had a hideous appearance, and the body originally must have belonged to a shrivelled sickly woman. The left breast was well developed, but the arms and legs were not much larger than the bones should have been, and the fingers of the right hand were gone. The petrifaction weighed nearly two hundred pounds, and a more unsightly object could not well be imagined. It was brought down to Lake Bigger in the afternoon, and L. J. Wilson, of San Francisco, has offered $100 for it, as he wished to present it to the academy of science. In all probability, the body is that of an Indian woman. There is a tradition that years ago the Indians had a battle at Cascade lake, in which the squaws joined, and the dead were buried on the shore of the lake. Under certain conditions the human cadaver petrifies more especially in water. The finder wants $150 for his prize, and it is probable that the sum will be paid by the academy, and the curiosity sent to San Francisco.

Schools of House-work.

It would be an excellent thing if some schools for young women, similar to those which have recently been founded in Wurtemburg, were opened in England, as the course of training for household duties imparted at them cannot fail to be of the greatest utility. These Wurtemburg schools intended for the daughters of small farmers and peasants, are only open during the Winter months, and each of them accommodates about 30 pupils, the fee of tuition being about 25s., while a sum equivalent to 9d. a day is charged for board and lodging. The manageress of the school sees that her pupils are taught cooking, washing, house-cleaning, &c., while the ordinary village schoolmaster is employed in the afternoon to give them lessons in reading and writing. A medical man also gives lessons on natural history and domestic medicine, so that nothing is neglected which is likely to make good housewives of them. The system of Herr Clauson-Kaas, which was first applied in Denmark, is also making its way to North Germany, though many of the masters do not much like the idea of having to teach the lads in their schools the rudiments of their future calling, for this is what the Clauson-Kaas system practically amounts to. That it might be introduced, with certain modifications, into England, is probable enough, but more importance attaches to the Wurtemburg experiment, which has in a very short space of time done wonders there, and which if it succeeded in this country, would do much to lenghten the lives of the agricultural labourer and the small farmer.

Stockings.

Few of the ancients had any clothing for the lower part of the body, and must have had extreme difficulty in sheltering themselves from the severity of the season. The northern nations first had a hose or trousers; their stockings were made of pieces of cloth sewed together. We can not say with certainty in what country the art of knitting originated. France, England, Spain, and Scotland respectively claim this useful discovery. Some believe it originated in Scotland in the sixteenth century, because when the French stocking-knitters' guild made choice of a patron saint they selected St. Fiacre, a native of Scotland. On the other hand the invention is attributed to a Spaniard, on the strength of Mezerai, who asserts that silk stockings were worn by Henry II. of France at the marriage of his sister in 1559; but before that Edward VI. had graciously accepted a pair from the merchant prince, Sir Thomas Gresham, who imported them from Spain, the land where they were first manufactured. The story goes that a loyal grandee, the happy possessor of one of the first pairs made in Spain, thought he could not do better than present the novelties to his queen, and to that end placed them in the hands of the first minister of the crown, greatly to the discomposure of that modest man, who astonished the innocent-meaning noble by returning him his stockings, and bidding him remember that "the queen of Spain had no legs."

An Informal Marriage.

A Jewish youngster married a Catholic maiden, last Saturday night, says The San Francisco Chronicle, in a most peculiar fashion. The bridegroom, ætat 16, is Morton Cook, son of Aaron Cook, of M. Simons Sons & Cook, No. 7, Sansome street. The bride, ætat 17, was, or is still, as the tribunal may determine, Miss Gertrude Monesca, daughter of Mrs. Monesca, dressmaker. Miss Gertrude, or Mrs. Cook, is extremely pretty in a brunette way, and calculated in her budding loveliness to captivate even older and more fastidious orbs than those of the Cook youngling. The romance had its rose-colour incipiency in the Athenian wilds of Oakland. It began five months ago, when the tenderly unwise children met by chance at a concert, and recognized a first-class copper-plated mutual affinity at once. Love's young, in fact, adolescent dream, occupying young Cook to the exclusion of commercial practicalities, he was dispatched to Portland by his stern parents, a little over a month ago, and while there, produced a corner in note paper, postage stamps, and tropical adjectives by sending daily missives of ponderous extent to his inamorata, whose dutiful reading of them trenched seriously on her hours devoted to chewing gum and dolls, and private devotions. As a result, it was concluded that whenever Portland did not suffice to dissolve his tender passion, he must be really and truly in love. He came back, and found the ducats necessary for ice cream, theatre tickets, and other smoothers of true love's path not forthcoming. The parental purse being unrelaxed, he drew on the parental parlour and took away two elegant illustrated volumes devoted to the Franco-German war, and sold them for one dollar, an "Irish" profit of precisely $29. The dollar being exhausted, he borrowed $40 from a relative on Kearney street, leaving his $160 gold watch to remind him of the obligation. Thus furnished with funds, matrimony was imminent, but a cruel, unsympathetic, and unappreciative county clerk refused him a license on this side of the bay as well as the other. How to get around the difficulty was an unsolved problem, until it was recollected that two parties of diametrically opposite sexes could be married by simply agreeing, in the presence of witnesses, to live as man and wife. It was at the fair on last Saturday evening that this idea occurred to him. After he had explained it to his intended, who was pendant from his right arm, it also occurred to her. They repaired to the maternal rooms, which had been removed from Oakland to San Francisco. There in the presence of two witnesses the solemn compact was entered into. Gertie renounced her dolls, gum and other maidenly indulgences, to love, honour, and obey her Morton, while Morton swore to love, and support his Gertie, and accordingly went to work in the Standard box factory, for a slender consideration on Monday, trusting that time and slumbering parental love would give him and his a share in his father's half million. Whether the marriage is durable remains to be seen. The father's first intimation of the wedding was a notice in Sunday's Chronicle, inserted by the boy himself. He does not appear greatly worried, however, believing that when the boy is hungry he will come home. He resolutely frowns upon the wife business, however. This is the third marriage between a Hebrew and Christian in the social history of the city. There is little prospect, however, that it will prove valid.

Whipping for Certain Kinds of Criminals.

(From the Journal of Commerce.)

On the 15th ult. one of the most brazen-faced ruffians who ever stood up in a British court suddenly wilted and uttered a scream on hearing the terms of the Judge's sentence, and was taken away in a fainting condition. He had no defence. The evidence against him was conclusive. He was sure of conviction and of a severe sentence, and he knew it. But he was not prepared for one part of the punishment prescribed by Mr. Justice Stephens. He screamed and almost fainted, not in view of the twenty years of penal servitude, but because the Judge ordered, as a fitting prelude, thirty lashes from a cat-o'-nine tails. This man had robbed and attempted to murder by drugging, and then throwing from a railway carriage, a travelling companion, in whose confidence he had artfully ingratiated himself. It would have ended in murder but for the inability of the assassin to eject his victim from the car before the train stopped. The ruffian then escaped with his booty, but was followed by the half-stupefied, badly injured man, who staggered on the platform and gave an alarm which led to the capture of his assailant. This strange affair took place in a car (of the London underground line), of which the two men were the only occupants. Mr. Justice Stephen, in passing sentence, said it was "the most cowardly and brutal outrage that had ever been brought under his notice." He marked his sense of horror, as well as made the sentence a wholesome caution to all other like-minded desperadoes, by prefixing the thirty lashes to the twenty years' imprisonment. The prisoner would not have flinched from the incarceration, but he winced terribly under the judgment of the cat, as if he already felt her nine tails raising wales on his bare back.

It is the uniform experience of British Judges that corporal punishment is the most certain known deterrent of cowardly and brutal offences. When any peculiarly shocking crimes against the person begin to become common in England, the Judges always check it by ordering a doze of the cat, well laid on, in addition to a long term of imprisonment with hard labour. This is the best known preventive of outrages on women and children. It is the only thing that has put a stop to garrotting. Its success is so marked in the declining frequency of cruel and malicious assaults upon the person in England that the British public almost unanimously approve of it. Only a little minority of those philanthropists whose sympathies for criminals rise in exact proportion to the diabolism of their proteges, continue to protest against the lash as a remedial agent of society. While that agent does so manifestly good a work in England, it will be judiciously conserved there. The theoretical opposition to it in the United States is widespread and intense, as any man finds out to his cost who proposes to reintroduce it in our judicial system. But now and then thinking Americans will brave the consequences, and ask themselves and their neighbours if corporal chastisement, so common among our ancestors as a penalty for minor violations of law, might not be revived, with signal advantage to society, for the punishment of certain specially atrocious crimes.

The University Question.

Neither the Globe nor the Mail can be altogether congratulated on the tone they have seen fit to adopt towards their opponent in these University troubles. They have behaved, indeed, more like two scolding fish-wives than like leading journals which must necessarily exert a great and ever increasing influence, either for good or evil, on the minds of at least one generation. The 'cultured youth' of Canada are fortunate in having two such models of elegant English and intelligent controversy constantly before them—if not for imitation, at least for avoidance. They may learn, if they will, how absurd it is to suppose that there can be honest and honourable differences of opinion; how inevitable it is that any man whose conceptions differ materially from their own must of necessity be either a hypocrite or a dunce; how desirable it is that he should be made acquainted with the fact in language as plain and unmistakable as possible; how impossible it is that zeal, in a good cause, can be tempered by politeness, or softened by moderation; how imbecile and foolish it is to conceive that any means can be unjustifiable if only certain ends can be secured.

Neither journal can very well be said to yield to the other in the vigour of its expletive, or in the talent it displays in the selection of necessary adjectives; but, for sheer ill-temper the Mail's effusion of Monday last could not easily be surpassed. That production was hardly creditable either to journalism or education. It can scarcely be for other than mere political purposes that such wearisome iteration is so constantly indulged in, and the same string so strenuously harped upon long after every one is weary of hearing it. Most people are heartily tired, by this time, of listening to a succession of mournful and impolite lucubrations concerning the shortcomings of Mr. Crooks, and the woes of University College, and earnestly hope that they will speedily be allowed a long and much-needed rest.

Mr. Crooks has blundered. So did "some one" at Balaclava. Everybody makes mistakes, but the heavens don't fall in consequence. The thing is done now, and both common sense and reason seem to say, "let us accept the situation." One would almost fancy from the style of the Mail's diatribes that there is some disappointed applicant on the editorial staff, or behind the scenes somewhere. It is one of the nuisances of party journalism that when anything is got hold of which can by any possibility be manœuvred so as to serve political purposes, innocent readers are sure to be dosed ad nauseam with what they very soon come to care not one brass farthing about either one way or other.

CHAT BY THE WAY.

IF an untruth is only a day old it is called a lie; if it is a year old it is called a falsehood; but if it is a century old it is called a legend.

THE time that a boy begins to think his mother doesn't know enough to select his clothing for him is a dangerous period in his history.

IF you can say nothing good of any one, say nothing at all, for in friendship as in love we are often happier in our ignorance than in our knowledge.

A YOUNG gentleman recently, at an evening entertainment, was asked by a number of gushing and music loving young ladies if he would play. "Certainly," he said; "bring on the cards."

LITTLE Paul is sitting before his grandmother, an infirm and very aged lady, whom he regards with great attention. Finally, he speaks up, and says, "Grandmother, at what age do people die?"

NO man should complain of being poor or of hard times who can afford to use rum or tobacco. That which men often puff away in smoke would supply them with broadcloth and roast beef.

"THE SULTAN'S EVIL GENIUS."

THE MAN WHO SWAYED THE DESTINIES OF AN EMPIRE—A THOROUGHLY UNSCRUPULOUS FELLOW—MORE THAN A MATCH FOR THE DIPLOMATS OF EUROPE.

The London correspondent of the New York Sun, is personally acquainted with Said Pasha, the new Prime Minister of Turkey, or rather the old minister restored to power. He has nothing good to say of him. Here is the way in which he describes Said's rise to power. "In the early part of last year he was Minister of Justice, and the official world of Constantinople was even then surprised and disgusted at his sudden rise to a position of so much influence. At the commencement of the Russo-Turkish war he had never been heard of. He was then an obscure clerk in a public office, and was brought to the notice of a very powerful personage in those days, Mahmoud Damad Pasha, the Sultan's brother-in-law, and the evil genius of Turkey; for it was owing to the unscrupulous ambition, the jealousy of all rivals, and the overwhelming influence which this thoroughly dishonest man exercised over the mind of his Majesty, that the latter refused to listen to the counsels of wise and patriotic advisers, distrusted all officers, naval or military, in his employ, and confided the fate of his army to such unmitigated scoundrels as Suleiman Pasha, Eyoub Pasha, and others. Such a man, universally mistrusted and detested by all the better sort of Turks, needed some instrument as thoroughly unscrupulous as himself, and willing to do the dirty work which formed the staple of his political occupation. Such an instrument he found in Said Pasha, and as the use the latter could be turned to was augmented just in the degree in which he was advanced in influence and position, the Sultan was induced, by the advice of his brother-in-law, to promote him with great rapidity." After the treaty of San Stefano the Sultan, in a violent reaction of rage, sent Mahmoud Damad into exile, from which he has never been allowed to return. Said saw the storm coming, prudently turned traitor, denounced his former patron, and was finally made Cabinet Minister. Here are first impressions. "As a rule a Turkish Cabinet Minister is cold, haughty, dignified and reserved, but Said Pasha was exactly the reverse of all this. Instead of a burly man, sitting on a divan, with one leg tucked under him, imperturbably smoking a cigarette, after the manner of a conventional Ottoman functionary, I saw a Parisian looking little creature trot into the room—a creature with a restless, furtive eye, and a quick, uneasy manner, in which extreme cunning seemed blended in equal proportions with abject servility. Had I been the representative of a great power, he could not have been more overwhelmingly civil, or more profoundly distrustful of my intentions. But I no sooner entered into conversation with him than I was struck with the extraordinary intelligence which his ferret-like features displayed. He is a very minute man, with a stoop, and a remarkably soft, gentle voice. He manages after a time to make you forget your first mistrust, and reproach yourself for having done him an injustice. It is only after the wearisome experience of months that you discover he has been from that first interview you bitterest enemy; that the salient points which he took care to dwell upon in your conversation as more particularly meritorious are precisely those which he has specially denounced, and that his only object in keeping you on the most friendly and confidential terms has been to find out new ways of betraying your confidence. When he discovers that you have found him out he becomes invisible; and, as by this time most people have found him out, he sees scarcely any one. When he first became Prime Minister in October, last year, his oily and engaging manner, and his earnest professions of good faith, deluded most of the diplomatic representatives at Constantinople, but one by one they remarked his treachery, and finally, on the arrival of Mr. Goschen, and at the instance of the latter—for he had been forewarned what manner of man Said was—the Sultan dismissed him."

But Said was too clever to be got rid of in this way. He was friends with all the eunuchs, pipe bearers, mollahs, and other riff-raff of the palace, and through their influence managed to retain nearly all his old authority. The Sultan, tired of keeping up appearances, at length dismissed Kadei, and restored Said. This was a direct snub to the English Government at the very moment when their naval demonstration had reached its culminating point. The views of this correspondent on the future prospects of affairs in the East are worthy of attention.

"What Said will do now that he is again responsible in the eyes of Europe, remains to be seen. What particular bait he will dangle before the powers, what apple of discord he will throw among them, what new and unexpected device he will hit upon to ward off the impending catastrophe, it is impossible to conjecture. He has proved himself more than a match for such distinguished and tried statesmen as Khaireddin Pasha and Mahmoud Nedim Pasha, both of them ex-Grand Viziers, with far more real statesmanship than this pliable adventurer. It is possible he may still pilot Turkey through the storm; but on the face of it his reappointment augurs badly for the success of Mr. Gladstone's policy, for there cannot be a question that Said Pasha is the personification of that passive resistance and that determined hostility to the foreigner which are especially acceptable to the Sultan. He is opposed to all internal reform, for he depends for support on those who fatten by abuses, and, being utterly destitute of anything like a sentiment of patriotism, he would unhesitatingly wreck the ship of State if he thought that the advice that would save it, might be unpalatable to the Sultan, and therefore wreck Said Pasha.

This has always been the trouble. No one dares to tell the Sultan the facts. Honest men who endeavour to open his eyes to the dangers by which he is surrounded, and give him advice which is unpalatable, because it implies concession to the foreigners and the introduction of reforms by which his own power would be limited, he distrusts, and finally gets rid of; and there are always to be found plenty of self-seekers who see that the royal road to favour is by confirming him in all his prejudices, exciting his suspicions against the men they fear because they are honest, while they encourage him in his belief that the only true policy is one of determined obstinacy and defiance in so far as the European powers are concerned.

Hence it is that the calculations of these powers are always wrong. Knowing the true state of the case, they suppose that the Sultan knows it too, and they cannot understand an infatuation which impels him to his own destruction. This has been the secret of his passive obstructiveness. The explanation of the recall of Said Pasha to power is that the Sultan wishes to be strengthened in his attitude of resistance, and to believe that the danger is not so great as it is represented to be. Said is quite ready, for his own purposes, to confirm his Majesty in this view, and to give him the advice which he thinks will be most agreeable to him, perfectly regardless whether it is the best under the circumstances.

England vs. Australia.

Outside "the Derby" no such national gathering—estimated at from two hundred and fifty thousand to five hundred thousand—was ever assembled in England as at the great cricket match of England vs. Australia. Kennington Oval, where it took place, is a large space about four times the size of Tompkins square. Around this space, at a hundred feet from its outer circumference, was a solid ring of beholders, dozens deep. The inner rows squatted, the next knelt, the next stood, while the outer fringes formed the highest tier by scaffolding run up impromptu. Then the old and picturesque houses surrounding the oval were ridged and fronted with spectators, as was Rome when Coriolanus marched in. The gate money was five shillings. The receipts were enormous, and were divided between the teams. The colonials were badly beaten. Spofforth, their best man, was prevented playing by a wounded wrist.

NEVER wish a thing done, but do it. Men are generally like wagons; they rattle prodigiously when there is nothing in them.

The Solid South.

It is said that there is a skeleton in every house. The idea is that there is something in the history of every family that it keeps as carefully concealed as possible, and which it would like to have forgotten. There are such things in nations, as well as in families. The thing that most patriotic Americans would like to have concealed and forgotten, is the thing indicated by the word which stands at the head of this article. That "solid south" is the most ugly fact in the current history of the great American Republic. The import of that fact, being interpreted, is, that the unity of the nation is essentially a thing of the past. The South cares no more for the Democrats than it does for the Republicans; it most cordially hates and despises both the one and the other of these. It gives its influence in favour of the former in preference to the latter, simply because such an alliance is the only means by which it can secure its ascendency in the nation, and be once more in a position to redress what it believes to be its wrongs, and to revenge itself upon the hated Yankee. No person can travel in the South without perceiving that a feeling of bitterness against the North, deep and intense, everywhere prevails; and that feeling will never be appeased until all that was done by the war is undone by legislation.

The "solid South" means, too, the systematic suppression of the negro vote. Everybody knows, that knows anything about the feeling which prevails among this class of American citizens, that however much they may respect their old masters and their families, they do not trust them. They know too well how deep rooted and strong this aversion is to the very idea of negro equality with them in anything; especially at the polls and before the courts; and they have sagacity enough to perceive that if the white people of the south cannot reduce them again to bondage, they will do all in their power to make their liberty as little worth to them as possible. They know, too, that the party at the north that did all that they could do to fasten their bonds upon them forever, will in the event of its getting into power, do anything that the south may ask them to do, to reduce them again to virtual, if not actual slavery. The negroes know all this, and would not, therefore, if left to themselves to vote as they pleased, cast one vote in a thousand for the Democratic party. In many parts of the south these coloured voters are largely in the ascendency so far as numbers are concerned; and in spite of this fact the the south will remain solid. This fact speaks for itself; comment is unnecessary.

It follows then that democratic government—the term is used in its proper grammatical, not in its party sense—is a failure, at least so far as the south is concerned. The "solid South" proves beyond a doubt that the government is not to be carried on in accordance with the will of the whole people, but according to a part, and that so far as numbers are concerned, the smallest part. It may, indeed, be said that this is as it should be; that the negroes are not fit for self-government; and that the will of the superior class, the class that owns the greater part of the property, and represents the greater part of the intelligence, are the people that should govern. Into the discussion of that question we enter not. Everyone, however, will see that if there be any force in this argument, it is against the form of goverment which exists in the United States, and only tends to strengthen our position. Besides, all that is said of the ignorance and incapacity for self-government of the negroes is equally true of a large proportion of the enormous foreign element, especially in the great cities of the north. There is no argument that can be validly employed in favour of the suppression of the negro vote in the south that would not be equally valid in favour of the disfranchisement of an immense number of voters at the north.

We do not wonder, in view of these facts, that the American people do not like to have so much said about the "solid South." The northern Democrat, for reasons made sufficiently apparent in this article, is ashamed of it, and would rather, if he could, get on without it; and the Republican can feels maddened by the fact that the very means which he has devised as a make-weight against the South, is not only neutralized, but turned against him.

Royal Resorts.

WHERE THE QUEEN LIVES—WHAT IT COSTS TO RUN HER HOUSE.

A recent number of The London Graphic contains pictures of Osborne House, Queen Victoria's seaside home in the Isle of Wight, which will be the more appreciated from the fact that it is kept jealously closed to the public. Osborne adjoins the estate of Norris Castle, where the queen spent some time in childhood, and her selection of the place in mature years was probably due to early impressions. The queen and prince seem soon to have felt a desire for—what her predecessors never had—a home of their very own, as opposed to an official home, and the private home of Osborne was soon supplemented by that of Balmoral. It is scarcely probable that a radical house of commons will be content to vote much longer the great sum annually demanded for maintaining royal palaces at which the sovereign never resides. Besides Buckingham Palace—where her residence now averages about ten days a year—the queen has Kew, Hampton Court, Kensington, Bushy Park, St. James', the White Lodge in Richmond park, Frogmore, all at her disposal should she please to occupy them, and all maintained at public cost, besides Holyrood in Scotland, where occasionally she has spent a few days. Kensington and Hampton Court are now given up in part to pensioners of position. The accumulation of these palaces has been in a considerable degree due to the individual caprice of various sovereigns. William III. hated the splendid palace of Whiteball, and was not sorry when fire effaced the triumphs of Holbein and Inigo Jones. He lived at Kensington, and occasionally at Hampton Court. Anne lived at Kensington and Windsor, as did the Georges up to and inclusive of George II. George III. and Charlotte lived at St. James', Windsor, and Kew until Buckingham House was bought. George III. also lived a great deal at Frogmore, in Windsor park. For years he did not occupy Windsor Castle. George IV. lived, after he came to the throne, at Buckingham Palace, Windsor, and the Pavilion Brighton, and spent on them then, probably, at a rough calculation, $7,500,000. William IV., not at all a representative king, lived chiefly at Windsor and Buckingham Palaces. So far as Windsor, Hampton Court, Bushy, and Richmond are concerned, their surroundings are entirely free to the public, who can ride or drive in nearly every part of their parks. Were, however, Kensington Palace, a plain brick building, covering several acres, razed, and fine houses erected, the public would not suffer by the loss of a recreation ground, and the public treasury would gain to the extent of a sum nearly covering all allowances paid to the royal family, except that to the queen.

THE total value of metals and minerals produced in Great Britain and Ireland in 1879 was slightly over £66,000,000. The quantity of pig iron smelted was about 6,000,-900 tons, and of coal brought to the surface 134,000,000 tons. Of other ores and minerals raised there were produced 51,000 tons of copper, 70,000 tons of lead, 3,000,000 tons of porcelain clay, and 2,500,000 tons of salt. Altogether there are 3,877 coal mines in the United Kingdom, of which only forty-seven are in Ireland, and the whole of these only produced 129,000 tons of coal, or about one six-hundredth part of the quantity obtained from a single half-riding of Yorkshire.

THE sport-loving Prince of Hanau, who won a 100,000fl. race last year at the Vienna Spring Races, has fallen again into fresh difficulties, for the sheriff's officers have taken possession of all his family chattels, picture gallery, armory, antiquities, including even his decorations, which must go to the hammer.

DISRAELI, in addition to whatever else he has, has a government pension equal to two thousand dollars.

Gored by an Angry Bull.

FARMER JOHN MURRAY'S BATTLE FOR LIFE IN HIS STABLE—THE GROANS THAT CALLED MRS. MURRAY TO THE RESCUE OF HER HUSBAND.

John Murray is a farmer living in Walker avenue, near Grand Avenue, Greenville, N. J. His two story-house stands in the avenue, and behind it he pastures his cattle. The animals are housed at night in small sheds, one story in height, in the rear of his house. In his herd is a young short-horn bull. The bull is a wiry animal, but has heretofore never shown an ugly disposition. On Wednesday evening Mr. Murray went out of the house, saying to his wife that he had forgotten to give the animals a drink of water all round. He would do it before he went to bed. He had not been gone long before Mrs. Murray heard groans from the direction of the barn. She ran out of doors and called her husband's name. There was no reply, except another groan, that unmistakably came from the barn. Mrs. Murray hastened to the barn, and as she approached the bull bounded out of the stable and ran into the open lot. She found Mr. Murray lying on the stable floor, with his left hand upon a wound in his left side. He had been pierced by the horns of the bull so that part of his intestines protruded. Mrs. Murray called for help, and her sons came and aided her to carry Mr. Murray to the house. Dr. Wilkeson of Bergen avenue was summoned, and the wound was sewed up. He says that three days at least must elapse before he can announce positively whether Mr. Murray is out of danger.

Mr. Murray was seen yesterday by a reporter for the Sun. His bed was surrounded by sympathizing neighbours. He is in the prime of life, and if an active life and a hardy constitution can avail he seems pretty sure to recover. He willingly related the story of the struggle he had with the bull. He said: "The bull is a young fellow and a smart one, too, but I never knew him to be ugly before. He seemed to be as gentle as a cow. It was my custom to tie him by a rope; one end of the rope was around his horns and the other end was fastened to the manger. When I went into the stable I untied the rope; and led him out peaceably enough. When I attempted to lead him back he hung back and yanked at the rope viciously. I pulled at the rope and threatened and coaxed the bull by turns, and at last got him inside of the stable. When I had got him inside of the stable I was sure that he was in my power, and as he gave a lunge for the door I twitched the rope around his horns as sharply as I could. This seemed to make him mad. He made a dive at me and I jumped to one side. Then I saw that I had my hands full. By this time I was pretty mad myself. So I gave the rope another yank and yelled to the bull to behave himself. I thought that I could frighten him. But the next thing I knew he had pinned me to the side of the stable with his horns. I couldn't catch my breath. His horns were small and sharp, and he jabbed at me viciously. I couldn't get hold of his horns, and there was no weapon within reach. My back was against the stable and his horns were against my abdomen. When he knew that he had me he just lifted his head up and pushed, and I could feel the flesh tear. Then the bull relaxed his hold and I dropped. Again he came for me and begun to gore and toss me. I made a great outcry and he darted out of the door. Then my wife came to my aid.

ART AND DRAMATIC NOTES.

THEY have commenced the sale of seats for the Bernhardt season in New York, and the indications are that the audiences, unlike the actress, will not be thin.

MISS MARY ANDERSON'S engagement at the Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, during the past week, is said to have drawn the largest houses that have been seen in that city for a long time.

WAGNER says that Germans are "not revolutionaries" in music, "but reformers." Still he thinks that if Beethoven had overthrown the external forms of music which he found extant he would have been acting according to reason.

OLE BULL, as might be known by his playing, had immense strength of muscle. Some years since, on a Mississippi boat, two huge frontiersmen made themselves offensive to him, and refused to desist. When patience had ceased to be a virtue, the artist seized the pair, each by the neck, and after holding them over the water and knocking their heads together, dropped them on the deck, and was let alone for the rest of the voyage.

THE Boston Ideal Opera Company have been successful at Booth's Theatre, New York. Their renditions of the "Pirates of Penzance" and "Fatinitza" are as good, if not better, than anything we have heard in America. Next week "Pinafore" will be repeated. Nearly all of the members of the company are artists, and each exhibits a commendable degree of pride in making the performance unexceptionable.

MUCH surprise was created when it was announced that the Duke of Marlborough was about to sell off the whole of the Sunderland collection by auction. Speculation among literary men and others was active as to what induced his Grace to such a resolve. Be this as it may, the bills were out, and the auctioneer engaged. By the last account, however, the idea has been abandoned. Whether it means that the collection will not be broken up at all, or only that it will not be scattered at auction does not appear.

MOST actors forget about as readily as they learn, and a few days will often suffice to destroy their perfect memory of a role. On a recent voyage from Europe, John McCullough and Rose Coghlan were aboard, and the passengers, on getting up an entertainment, put them down for a scene from "Macbeth." Although Macbeth is one of McCullough's star parts, and Miss Coghlan had not long before acted Lady Macbeth, they were unable to recall the language with anything like accuracy, and, as there wasn't a copy of the play on the steamer, the performance had to be omitted.

THE rector of St. Ruan, in Cornwall, being in want of a bell for one of his churches, which he had rebuilt and restored from the proceeds of the sales of his own paintings, recently secured the services of Madame Modjeska for an out-door performance, in the beautiful and wooded rectory grounds, of Romeo and Juliet. The balcony scene, with real moonlight and a real garden, is said to have been the very top of poetry. Mr. Forbes-Robertson, of the Haymarket, played Romeo, and the Nurse was rendered by his sister, Mrs. Val Bromley, who was staying with him in the neighbourhood. All the Cornish gentry assisted, and it was a great success. Madame Modjeska lost a costly diamond brooch, but it was found next day in a brook that ran through the garden, and which Romeo had to cross in his love-making.

Why Nilsson Doesn't Come.

The reasons for Mdme. Christine Nilsson's decision not to return to the United States this season are very plainly and simply set forth in a letter in which Mdme. Nilsson's husband, M. Rouzaud, informs Mr. Ulmann that he cannot go over to America himself, and that he cannot make up his mind to part with his charming wife for any length of time, though the terms of the engagement offered her were perfectly satisfactory and the guarantees proposed by Mr. Belmont unexceptionable. M. Rouzaud's disinclination to be bereft of the companion of his joys and sorrows is hardly to be wondered at, however much it may be regretted. Can any man conscientiously declare he would think differently on the subject were he Mdme. Nilsson's husband? It is not, then, from any distrust of Mapleson that Nilsson will remain in Europe this autumn. In his letter to Mr. Ulmann, M. Rouzaud expresses the greatest deference for the manager of Her Majesty's. "My wife," he writes, "would on no account forsake Mapleson, who has been her impresario for so many years. It would be downright ingratitude to do so. While Mapleson stands, Christine Nilsson will stand by him, and I am sure that the Gyes would be the first to appreciate the delicacy of her conduct."

THE Countess Theresa Erdoedy-Raczinska has given to the Hungarian National Museum the sword of John Sobieski, a Damascus blade embossed in gold, with the Latin motto, "Beware of false friends; I will save thee from thine enemies." The hilt and basket are of gold; twenty-seven brilliants surrounding the enormous crystal make the scabbard button, and underneath it is a portrait of the hero in enamel.

LORD and Lady Dufferin will leave Russia for England immediately after the departure of the Russian Court for Livadia. Lady Dufferin is not in the best of health. Her summer sojourn at the health resort (so-called) of Narva, so far from redressing the strain on her constitution produced by her winter residence at the unwholesome Russian capital, has done her harm, and it will take several months in England to fit her for a second Russian winter.

NOTICE.

To those who receive this paper in Proton and Melancthon we wish to state that "The Markdale Standard" will be sent to the end of November, Free. We take this method of introducing the Standard, we may here state the principles upon which it is, and will be conducted.

First—In Politics, we purpose being strictly non-political believing it is altogether out of place for a local paper to be filled with that which is unprofitable especially to the agricultural class.

As a local journal it is our intention to gather and publish all such matter connected with the different localities in which the Standard shall find its way, as will be interesting, thereby making the paper one that will be enquired after and appreciated for its energy in procuring what may be going on, and truthfully laying it before our readers at as early a date as practicable.

In agriculture, we shall glean and publish from time to time such articles as may be conducive to the interest of the farmer, thereby making it a paper that will be sought after by this class of the comunity.

In Provincial, Dominion and Foreign news, as also articles of a literary character, we shall endeavour to give a fair share.

Correspondence—we will give reliable notes of local interest which we have no doubt will be much appreciated by our readers.

In conclusion we will just say we have no claim on the parties above mentioned who will get the Standard for six weeks Free. But leave them to judge for themselves whether it is worthy of support. We will continue the paper to the end of 1881 for the small sum of $1.25. Think of it, nearly fifteen months for one year's subscription. Club Rates, five names accompanied with the cash for five dollars.

C. W. RUTLEDGE,
Proprietor.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Oct. 23nd, 1880.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

An apology is due some of our patrons who did not get the Standard last week, owing to the subscription list increasing faster than we had anticipated, we ran short twenty-five copies. While we are pleased to have the list of subscribers enlarged yet we are sorry that any of them had to do without their paper the past week. In future we shall endeavor to have plenty for all emergencies.

FIRE.

By Telegraph to the Standard.

Williamsford, Oct. 21.—The Hotel and sheds belonging to Mr. R. M. Galbraith, were this morning burned to the ground. The fire occurred at 6 a. m., the Hotel was occupied by Mr. S. C. Langley and was undergoing repair. The fire originated in one of the open rooms, caused by shavings having been left near the stove pipe; Mr. L. saved all his household goods. No insurance on the building, loss $1,000.

DUNDALK ITEMS.

Read Gardiner's advertisement, he has something new in stoves. See them.

The Presbyterians of Dundalk and Frazer settlement purpose calling a minister at an early day.

Mr. Wm. Kirby of Melancthon, has sold his farm for $1,250.

A new industry is shortly to be started here—a barrel factory.

Wm. Peterson has improved his woolen factory by putting a large square front to it.

Mr. John Hanbury is building a skating rink; size 50x150 feet.

We had a heavy fall of snow on Monday; it is now fast disappearing.

There is talk of a cheese factory being erected in this neighborhood. Just what is wanted.

Thos. Hanbury is building a wing to his establishment which will be occupied (as soon as completed,) by Wm. Lucas & Co., Bankers.

See A. G. Hunter's, card in another column; he means business.

Fire.—On Saturday last about 5 o'clock p. m., smoke was discovered issuing from the rear of Gardiner's Tin Shop, the fire had made considerable headway before it was got under control, and, had it not been for the manner in which the citizens exerted themselves no doubt it would have laid waste that portion of the village.

EUGENIA.

From our Correspondent.

Look after your butter that you have left in the milk house. A farmer in the valley had three tubs stolen last week. Some time ago Mr. Wm. Hooey had an ox stolen valued at $60. Mr. Beecroft had a heifer stolen out of the barnyard. Houses are being broken into all around, and the enquiry is who is to be the next victim. Locks for graneries are now becoming the order of the day. Municipalities should do something towards hunting up the gangs that are infesting this neighborhood.

COUNTY ITEMS.

Derby Ploughing Match will be held on the farm of Gavin Waddell, Esq., on Tuesday, Oct. 26th.

Creditable.—We are pleased to notice that the Y. M. C. A., in view of providing for the young men of the town a pleasant and profitable way of spending the long fall and winter evenings, have recently placed in their Reading Room a number of reviews and magazines, in addition to the papers and periodicals with which it has hitherto been supplied.—Owen Sound Times.

On Friday afternoon last three large bears were seen crossing Mr. J. Silk's farm, lot 3, con. 5, Melancthon. No attempt was made to capture them.—Shelburne Free Press.

Horrible.—Robert Halliard, a boy aged about 12 years, son of John Halliard, laborer Guelph, on Friday drank from a bottle of whiskey till he died.

GLENELG COUNCIL.

Council met at the Town Hall, on 4th inst. Pursuant to adjournment. All the members present. Moved by Mr. Bennie, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the Clerk instruct the County Treasurer, to withdraw from tax sale, lot 12, 18th con., lot 14, 15th con., lots 15, 16, 17, 18 & 19, Mill street North, Priceville.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Binnie, seconded by Mr. Neil, that the account of J. Townsend and J. A. Johnston, for one dollar each be paid.—Carried. Orders were issued on the Treasurer in payment of work on roads, in Ward No. 4, to the amount of $100,40. A by-law was passed appointing Deputy Returning officers and polling places for next Municipal Election. Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that the Reeve, Mr. Bennie and the mover be appointed a committee to examine and let a contract of building a bridge at lot 6, con. 3, N. D. R., if they consider it necessary—Carried. Moved by Mr. Bennie, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that Mrs. Fanny Smith be allowed $4.00 as charity.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that the notice formerly published in the Markdale Expositor, respecting a road on lots 99. 100 and 101, on 3rd con., W. T. & S. R. be re-published in the Markdale Standard.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that the road commissioner for Ward No. one be autherized to build a railing on bridge at lot 56, con. 3, E. G. R.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Bennie, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that I. Melosh be paid $1.00 for repairing bridge on lot 14, con. 2, E. G. R.—Carried. Moved by Mr. McMillan, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the commissioner for Ward No. 2 be authorized to remove a jam of timber from bridge on side road 15, con. 4, N. D. R.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Bennie, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the road commissioner for Ward No. 4 be granted $4.00 to build a culburt at lot 9, con. 9, and $5.00 to remove a land slide on side road at lot 16, con. 1 E. G. R.—Carried. Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. McMillan that a committee be appointed consisting of the Reeve, Mr. McMillan and the mover to procure titles for the new road on lots 22 and 24, con. 11, and lots 99, 100 and 401, con. 3, W. T. & S. R.—Carried. Council adjourned until 29th December next.

EUPHRASIA FALL SHOW.

The Euphrasia Agricultural Society's Fall Show was held at Rocklyn on Tuesday the 12th inst. The weather was beautiful though somewhat cold, and a large crowd of visitors attended. There were no less than three editors on the grounds, (competitors we presume) we will not say for what.

The outside show was very good on the whole; not being present at former shows in the above place we are not in a position to give a comparison.

In the inside department we believe the exhibit was ahead of most of the township shows we have attended. The samples of grain shown were indeed excellent. Here we noticed a marked improvement in the mode of testing the quality of the grain, that is, by weight. It would be well if all our Societies would adopt the improvement. Roots were well represented. In fruit there was a very large display of an excellent quality. The display of ladies' work was magnificent. Taking the show on the whole it was indeed a success. We have not space for as minute an account as it deserves. The following is the

PRIZE LIST.

Horses.—Team agricultural, 7 entries, Wm. McConnell, John Douglas, R. Thornton. Team carriage horses, harness and rig, 1 entry, C. Clark. Single driving horse, 7 entries, Wm. McConnell, J. Douglas. Brood mare, agricultural purposes, 4 entries, D. Robertson, jr., John Anderson. Brood mare, carriage, 3 entries, John Lawrence, W. Duke. Two years old filly or gelding, 13 entries, A. Davidson, W. McConnell. One year old filly or gelding, 8 entries, James Bowes, John Douglas. Agricultural foal, 4 entries, Jas. Foy, D. Robertson, jr. Carriage foal, 8 entries, J. Lawrence, W. Duke.

Cattle.—Milch Cow, pedigree, Durham, 1 entry, R. Clark. Two years old Heifer, Durham, 1 entry, R. Clark. One year old heifer, Durham, 1 entry, R. Clark. Bull calf, Durham, 1 entry, R. Clark. Milch Cow, Grade, 7 entries, R. Clark, Donald McNaughton. Two years old heifer, 6 entries, D. McNaughton, D. Robertson, jr. One year old heifer, 5 entries Robertson, jr., R. Clarke. Heifer D. calf, 1 entry, R. Clark. Herd of cattle, Durham, 2 entries, R. Clark; Grade, R. Clark.

Sheep.—Ram, aged, 3 entries, E. Shaw, W. Fawcett. Shearling ram, 2 entries, E. Shaw, G. Shepherdson. Ram lamb, 5 entries, W. Fawcett, E. Shaw. Two ewes, raised lambs, 4 entries, E. Shaw, 1st and 2nd. Two shearling ewes, 3 entries, E. Shaw, W. Fawcett. Ewe Lambs, 3 entries, E. Shaw, G. Shepherdson.

Swine.—Boar, aged, 2 entries, J. Perry, R. Beatty. Brood sow, 3 entries, J. Anderson, R. Myles. Boar of 1880, 6 entries, E. Shaw, W. Drinkall.

Poultry.—Pair black Spanish, 1 entry, J. Farewell. Ducks, 3 entries, J. Farewell.

Grain and Roots.—Bushel fall wheat, 6 entries, W. Hartman, C. Clark. 5 bushels spring wheat, 8 entries, W. Hartman, R. Clark. 2 bushels Russian white spring wheat, 5 entries, W. Hartman, R. Clarke. 2 bushels barley, 8 entries, C. Clark, S. Gilmore. Bushel Oats, 7 entries, C. Clark, W. Hartman. Bushel peas, 2 entries, N. Clark, W. Fawcett. Early rose potatoes, 8 entries, James Bowes, jr. Any other sort of potatoes, 6 entries, J. Bowes, jr., W. Hartman. Swede turnips, 8 entries, J. Douglas, J. Robertson. Sugar beets, 2 entries, H. Johnston. Blood beets, 7 entries, R. H. Stinson, W. Hartman. Mangold Wurtzel, 2 entries, W. Hartman, C. Knott. Field Carrots, 6 entries, J. Douglas, W. Hartman. Table carrots, 10 entries, J. Perry, R. H Stinson. Celery, 2 entries, T. Jordan, J. Myles. Parsnips, 6 entries, T. Nicholson, R. H. Stinson. Pumkins, 3 entries, John Lawrence, R. Quinton. Squash, 2 entries, J. Lawrence. Cabbage, 5 entries, C. Clarke, — Abercrombie. Caulflowers, 1 entry, T. Jordan. Onions, black seed, 2 entries, J. Lawrence. Top, 7 entries, T. Nicholson, R. H. Stinson. Onions, potato, 6 entries, J. Myles, C. Knott. Tomatoes, 4 entries, J. Farewell, R. Clark.

Fruit.—Fall apples, 14 entries, J. J. Foy, J. Perry. Winter apples, 19 entries, J. Foy, J. Anderson. Fall pears, 4 entries, J. Marshall, J. Gibson. Winter pears, 6 entries, J. Gibson, R. Gilray. Grapes, 3 entries, 2nd R. Clarke. Plums, 4 entries, S. Gilmore, N. Clarke. Collection fruit, 4 entries, E. E. Knott, J. Myles. Indian corn, 4 entries, C. Clark, C. Knott.

Dairy.—Butter, roll, 14 entries, Mrs. H. Johnston, Mrs. J. Lawrence. Tub, 4 entries, Mrs. H. Johnston, Mrs. J. Perry. Two loaves bread, 12 entries, Mrs. J. Bowes, Mrs. H. Johnston. Cheese, 2 entries, Mrs. D. Robertson, Mrs. R. Gilray. Box honey, 2 entries, S. McKnight, T. Jordan.

Manufactures.—Waggon, 2 entries Stinson & Marshall, no 2nd. Single cutter, 1 entry, McKenzie & McKinnon. Democrat, 2 entries, Stinson & Marshall, 2nd do. Buggy, double or single, 2 entries, McKenzie & McKinnon, Stinson & Marshall. Fanning mill, 1 entry, C. Watt. Set harrows, 2 entries, J. Marshall, 2nd do. Cutting-box, 1 entry, C. Watt. Root cutter, 1 entry, C. Watt. Set team harness, 1 entry, W. Fanson. Set carriage harness, 2 entries, H. McDonald, 2nd do. Single harness, 3 entries, H. McDonald, Wm. Fanson. Saddle, bridle and martingale, 3 entries, H. McDonald, 2nd do. Collection of boots, 2 entries, J. W. Love, 2nd do. Fulled cloth, 6 entries, N. Clarke, J. M. Bole. Satinet, 2 entries, R. Quinton, 2nd do. Fancy flannel, 3 entries, R. Quinton, N. Clark. Plain flannel, 7 entries, F. Eaton, J. Hawkins. Pair horse blankets, 2 entries, R. Clark, R. Quinton Pair blankets, 9 entries, Mrs. R. Clark, Mrs. C. Clark. Coverlet, J. Douglas, R. Gilray. Set horse shoes, 1 entry, R. H Stinson.

Ladies' Work.—Patchwork quilt, 6 entries, Mrs. R. Clark, Mrs. H. Johnston. Quilt of any description, 5 entries, Mrs. R. Gilray, 2nd Mrs. R. H. Stinson. Knit quilt, 1 entry, Mrs. A. T. Buchanan. Embroidery in cotton, or worsted, Mrs. H. Johnston, Mrs. T. Porter. Leather work, 2 entries, Mrs. R. Gilray, Mrs. R. H. Stinson. Braiding, 2 entries, Mrs. N. Clark, Mrs. R. Gilray, Crochet work, 4 entries, Miss Gilray, Miss Douglas. Tidy, knitted or crochet, 9 entries, 2nd Miss C. Quinton. Woolen socks, 7 entries, Mrs. Quinton, Mrs. J. Hawkins. Woolen stockings, 3 entries, Mrs. Quinton, Mrs. Johnston. Woolen mits, 4 entries, Mrs. Quinton, Mrs. Johnston. Woolen gloves, 1 entry, Mrs. Quinton. Rag or wool mat, hooked, 7 entries, Mrs. N. Clark, Mrs. Quinton. Fancy knitting, in cotton, 9 entries, Miss Quinton, Miss Clarke. Hair work, 4 entries, Miss A. Clark, Mrs. T. Porter. Berlin wool work, 4 entries, Miss Gilray, Mrs. Eaton. Gent's fine shirt, 3 entries, Mrs. N. Clark, Mrs. Gilray. Pillow Shams, Mrs. Gilray, Mrs. R. Clark. Collection needle work, Mrs. T. Porter, Mrs. H. Johnston. Feather wreath, 2 entries, Mrs. Stinson, Mrs. J. Myles. Darning in socks or stockings, 5 entries, Mrs. Perry, Mrs. Clark.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Standard,

Sir,—In common with many of my fellow ratepayers, I am sorry to see that our worthy Reeve, Dr. Christoe, is out again in opposition to the new scheme, to aid our sinking Railroad. This is very much to be regretted, as the Dr's influence throughout the Township is considerable, and many people, naturally, from the position he occupies, look up to him as an authority in all municipal matters. I observe the Dr. has completely changed front since the last by-law was under consideration; then his chief objection was to the Company, he feared least they should not succeed with the scheme, and keep faith with the municipalities, but might at some time, again come back for still further aid.

The Dr. at that time frequently expressed—himself, as quite willing to give further aid if the road were to change hands, and pass under the control of some strong company, such as the "Grand Trunk," or "Great Western," now however he seems to have forgotten all that, and proceeds to combat the new scheme upon other grounds, which, Sir, with your kind permission, I shall briefly notice. The Dr. urges no bonus:

1st, "Because the Township has already given more than its fair share," viz.: "$60,000 including 'interest.'" Now the Dr. knows well that this is hyperbole of the most pronounced type; he knows well that the road only cost the Tp. at first, about $30,000, and as a set-off against the interest and sinking fund, we have enjoyed and do now enjoy the benefits which the road has conferred, which the Dr. will admit, have long ere now more than compensated for the outlay.

2nd, Because the agreement with the Grand Trunk has yet to be ratified by the English Board.

3rd, Because the Ontario Parliament may not grant the necessary legislation, to enable the Company to carry out the details of the scheme.

In the name of common sense why should these objections hinder the ratepayers from voting the bonus? It will not cost us one cent either to obtain the sanction of the English Board or that of the Ontario Legislature; besides if (which is quite improbable "the English Board" and the "Ontario Legislature," were to disallow the arrangement, the scheme would fall through and the people of Artemesia would not have to pay the money; but all this talk is entirely beside the question. Is there any reason why the "English Board" should not sanction the agreement of Mr. Hickson, in whom they have implicit confidence? Does any one believe the Ontario House will hesitate to grant the legislation necessary to give effect, to a scheme calculated to confer such lasting benefits, upon the thirty odd municipalities interested?

Besides the foregoing the Dr. has other grievances, which I apprehend appear to him much more formidable than any of the others viz.: "the power of the Company to discriminate in favor of Flesherton and "Priceville will cease when the Grand "Trunk assumes control." Ah! there's the rub. Now Sir it seems to me that this short sentence furnishes a clue to the whole matter and embodies the essence of the Dr's opposition; the other objections being simply thrown out as "chaff" to blind our eyes, and muddle our brains. I fear that the Dr's patriotism is exceedingly circumscribed, that it is bounded by the limits of his own little 'clahan'—the reference to "Priceville" being simply a make weight thrown in to give currency to the Flesherton cry. I fear the Dr. is quite ready to sacrifice the interests of the Township, unless some exceptional advantages are assured to Flesherton.

Like some other well meaning people the Dr. evidently considers Flesherton the "hub" of Artemesia, and apparently he is not willing to see the rest of the municipality flourish but "by the leave" of the "hub."

Sir, I will take the liberty to raise my voice against this miserable spirit of sectionalism which is too often crops out in every municipality to mar the harmony, blight the prospects, crush the energy and retard the progress of the community at large.

Sir, I make bold to say that the special and particular interest of any or of all our villages combined, should not for one moment be allowed to stand in the way of any scheme calculated to stimulate the energy, forward the progress and increase the wealth of the farming community in whose prosperity every other interest rejoices.

It is interesting to observe what a liberal share of the Dr's sympathy, the cause of the "tenant farmer" elicits, particularly at this juncture. Well of course if the "tenant farmers" have not the right to vote for or against a R.R. by-law, they do possess the right of voting for municipal officials and this is a privilege by no means to be despised now at the close of the year. Again Mr. Editor: I must put in my caveat against this style of reasoning; and while I would not lightly regard the claims of any class; yet I do think that the interests of the proprietors, who constitute nine-tenths of the community are paramount to those of the tenants.

I can assure the Dr. that his allusion to the "tenant farmers" is not very flattering to them and I question whether they will feel obliged for the compliment.

It is well known that many poor "tenant farmers" are among our most enlightened and progressive agriculturists, who would as leave think of renting a farm in Central Africa as in a locality destitute of railways.

Before closing for the present I will just say that in my humble opinion, now that we have an opportunity of connection with the Grand Trunk, and of having our Railway thoroughly equipped, its gauge widened, the road, bed and bridges put in thorough repair, and the track steel railed, and that all this will be accomplished at such a trifling cost to the Township, it would be extreme folly on our part to incur the risk of losing this chance, least a like opportunity might not again present itself.

Compared with the immense advantages which a connection with the Grand Trunk would afford $12,000 to the Township of Artemesia is a mere bagatelle—for these and many other reasons equally logent, I am prepared to support the "bonus."

Wm. Brown.

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880.

MARRIED

On the 19th inst., Adam Holley to Miss Jessie A. McKenzie, both of Artemesia.

On the 18th inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Mr. Archibald Lyons, of Markdale, to Miss Elizabeth J. Miller, daughter of Mr. Isaac Miller of Glenelg.

DIED.

In Artemesia, on the 15th inst., Mary Etta, daughter of Bartholamew Wright, aged 7 years, 4 months.

In Markdale, on the 14th inst., John Dufferin McFarland, aged 8 years, 2 months and 22 days.

In Markdale, on the 15th inst., Lucinda Jane Doxy, aged 10 years.

In Markdale, on the 17th inst., Anne Maud, daughter of John Benson, aged 4 years and 3 months.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Read This.

Money loaned at the Very Lowest Rates of Interest. The Borrower can have his own terms as to the Time and the Way he Repays it. Loans put through with the least possible delay.

See the Undersigned before applying Elsewhere.

Offices in Shelburne and Dunkalk.

Always in the Shelburne Office on MONDAYS and TUESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on WEDNESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 2 p. m.

In the Dundalk Office on THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS. On Thursdays, from 2 to 5 p. m., and on Fridays, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.

FARMS SOLD AND RENTED

By sending number of Lot, Concession, Price, Terms, &c., for very moderate charges.

CONVEYANCING
A SPECIALTY.
All Kinds of Writings Executed.

INSURANCES
Effected in the best Stock Companies.

GREAT BARGAINS
Given in the Best and Hardiest Canadian
FRUIT & ORNAMENTAL TREES.

IRON FORCE PUMPS!
—for—
WELLS and CISTERNS,
Sold Very Cheap.
Every Farmer ought to get one.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.
SHELBURNE AND DUNDALK.

October 21, 1880. 6

Legacies! Pensions! Bounties!

Parties having any of the above claims to investigate will please communicate with me at once.

A. G. HUNTER,
Claim Agent,
Dundalk P. O., County Grey. 6

Public Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the new road open through lots 99, 100, and 101, on the 3rd concession W. T. & S. R., in the township of Glenelg, is not properly established.

The corporation of the township of Glenelg not having any title to the road through said lots, will not be responsible for any accident that may happen on said road.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk. FINLAY MacRAE, Reeve.
Township of Glenelg, Oct. 19, 1880. 6t

REMOVED

I would respectfully remind my customers that I have removed from my old stand and may now be found in a portion of

Hill's Block,

where I have a full stock of

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, FANCY GOODS, ETC.

Don't forget to see my Clocks which are very cheap and good.

Repairing as usual at Lowest Price and shortest possible notice.

Don't forget the place—Dominion Telegraph Office, next door to the Standard Office.

E. D. WILCOX.

Markdale, Oct. 18th, 1880. 1-ly

Teacher Wanted.

FOR School Section No. 5, Melancthon, One holding a Second or Third Class Certificate. Applicants to state Salary expected. Applications received up to November 1st.

SAMUEL McDOWELL, ROBERT OLIVER, ABRAM JACKSON, } Trustees.
Dunhalk P. O.

October 20, 1880. 6-3in

W. BENSON,
—OF THE—
"Belfast House,"

Begs to announce that he is fully prepared to dispose of all articles usual to a general Grocery and Provision Establishment, at the Lowest Possible Prices!

The stock consists of

Groceries and Provisions!

together with

LIQUORS of all kinds,

such as Scotch, Irish and Canadian, of the best brands. I have no desire to puff or misrepresent the performance of impossibilities, but I may say in response to a brother retailer who offers a book worth $1.25 to every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea, that I will Give Two Books of superior value to those mentioned to all buyers of a like quantity. My house is known as the

Belfast House, op. Haskett Bros

NO SECOND PRICE.

W. BENSON.

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880. 5-tf.

Auction Sale
OF Valuable Real Estate!

IN pursuance of the powers in that behalf contained in a certain mortgage made by John McInnes to the vendors, which said mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be offered for sale

By Public Auction!
ON
Tuesday, 26th of October next,
AT McCULLOUGH'S HOTEL,
IN THE VILLAGE OF DUNDALK

at the hour of Twelve O'Clock, noon, the following valuable real estate, that is to say:

All and singular that certain parcel or tract of land and premises situate lying and being in the Township of Proton in the County of Grey and Province of Ontario, and being composed of a part of Village Lots numbers one, two and three, south west of Toronto, Grey and Bruce Rail Road, according to the plan filed in the Registry Office of the South Riding of the said County of Grey on the ninth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, sub-dividing a part of lot number two hundred and thirty-one, in the second range south west of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the said Township, and made by W. R. Rombough, Provincial Land Surveyor, and which may be more particularly described as follows, that is to say:—Beginning at a point on the north westerly limit of said village lot number two, sixty-one and one-tenth links from the north easterly limit of Yonge street, thence north 39 ° 30 east along the north westerly limit of said village lots numbers one and two, sixty one and one-tenth links, more or less, to a point twenty-two and two-tenths links from the south westerly angle of said village lot number one; thence south 50 ° 30" east two chains forty-two and five tenths links, more or less, to a point on the south easterly limit of said village lot number two, forty-four and six-tenths links south westerly from the north easterly angle of said village lot number two; thence south 39 ° 30" west along the north easterly limit of said village lots numbers two and three, forty-one and one-tenth links; thence north 50 ° 30" west two chains, forty-two and five tenths links, more or less, to the place of beginning, and containing by admeasurement twenty-three and seven-tenths perches of land, be the same more or less, upon which is erected a frame store and dwelling house.

Also, lot number twenty-five, in the fifth concession of the township of Osprey, in the said county, containing by admeasurement one hundred acres of land, be the same more or less, upon which is erected a two story frame dwelling-house and good frame barn.

For particulars and condition of sale, apply to Mr. Alexander Brown, Auctioneer, Priceville, A. McLennan, Esq., Durham, or to the undersigned.

Dated at Toronto, the 5th day of October, A.D. 1880.

BARRETT & MACINTYRE,
Vendor's Solicitors,
5-3in No. 65 Yonge-st., Toronto.

FOR SALE.

20 CHARMS—Snowflake, Granite, Wedding, Marble, Basket, (comic chains), Mottled Stone, Ashes of Roses, &c., Cards with name on all, 10 cents.

Address, J. A. BROLLEY, Box 79 Creemore P.O. Simcoe, Ont. 5-4

THE MARKETS.

Flour	[illegible]	"	5.00
Spring wheat	[illegible]	"	1.00
Fall do.	[illegible]	"	0.95
Barley	0.45	"	0.60
Oats	0.26	"	0.25
Peas	0.50	"	0.56
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.00
Butter, per lb.	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.18
Pork, dressed	5.00	"	6.00
Beef	4.50	"	5.00
Geese, per lb.	0.05	"	0.00
Ducks, per pair	[illegible]	"	0.45
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.30
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.05
Sheepskins	0.40	"	1.00
Hides	7.00	"	7.00
Grass seed	2.00	"	2.25
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed	2.00	"	3.00
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Green Apples, per bushel	0.50	"	0.75
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.50	"	1.50

McIntyre says he can supply goods, both in the eating and drinking lines, much cheaper than the market quotations. Read his advertisement, give him a call and be convinced.

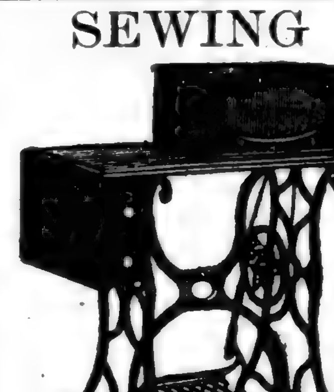
FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

Thursday, Oct. 21st, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$4.75	to	$5.25
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.85	to	1.00
Fall do. do. do.	0.80	"	0.95
Barley	0.40	"	0.60
Oats	0.25	"	0.28
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.35
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.10	"	0.12
Pork, dressed.	4.50	"	5.50
Beef	5 00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	7.00	"	7.50
Hay	8.00	"	10.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

SEWING



MACHINES!

At prices that will astonish the natives at

W. L. Marshall's,
DUNDALK.

ALL KINDS OF
Repairing Attended to.

Dundalk, Oct. 18th, 1880. 6tf

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments.

Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880. 4-tf

AUCTION SALE
OF Valuable Farm Property
IN THE
Township of Glenelg,
In the County of Grey.

There will be sold on

Saturday, the 30th day of October

1880, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at Rutledge's Hotel, in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

by virtue of a power of sale contained in certain mortgages, which will be produced at the sale, the following properties:

PARCEL I.

Under mortgage from Neil Campbell, lot number one, in the twelfth concession of the Township of Glenelg, County of Grey, containing one hundred acres.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 50 acres cleared, having erected thereon a cedar log barn; situated about 8 miles from the village of Markdale.

PARCEL II.

Lot 27, in the 8th concession of the Township of Glenelg, in the County of Grey, containing one hundred acres, more or less.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 60 acres cleared, with log buildings erected thereon.

TERMS.—One-tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance, terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
Or to John Lyons, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Sept. 24th, 1880. 3-5in.

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the subscriber, lot 12, concession 6, Euphrasia, about the middle of June, a heifer, two years old, red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges, and take her away.

CHARLES SYERS.
Euphrasia, Oct. 12, 1880. 5-3t

CAUTION.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating in any way a note drawn by Thomas Townsend in favour of William Handberry, for the sum of twenty-three dollars ($23), for value has not been received therefor.

THOS. TOWNSEND.
Markdale, Oct. 4, 1880. 4-3in

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERAL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT.

Markdale, October 1, 1880.

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS

TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions

AND

VETERINARY PREPERATIONS

CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

HILL BROS.,

When their new building is completed.

Space to be occupied by HILL BROS. when they remove.

MARKDALE.

Money Lost!

By those who buy stoves before going to

J. GARDINER'S

Dundalk.

Best and Cheapest stock of

STOVES and TINWARE

North of Toronto. 6

STRAYED

FROM the premises of John Moore, lot 10, concession 12, Euphrasia, about the 15th of June, three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white; one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Euphrasia, Sept. 14, 1880. 4-3in

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR County of Grey.

Sales attended at shortest notice in or country. Charges moderate.

Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880.

J. M. Webster,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR County of Grey.

LOAN AND LAND AGENT

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, sums to suit borrowers. Agent for the Loan and Saving Co. All business strictly private, and treated as such.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880

DR. PURDY,

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, ACCOUCHER, Eugenia P. O.

THE STANDARD.

Friday. October 22, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

Muddy roads.

Business brisk.

Fine weather again.

Large quantities of grain coming in.

Shoddy pedlar's diappeared suddenly.

McFarland has something nobby in clothing; "better see them."

Mr. William Wright of St. Joseph's Island, late of Glenelg, is in town, Mr. W. look's well.

J. J. White, dentist, will be at the "Revere House," Markdale, on Wednesday, Oct. 27th.

The pews in the Methodist Church, Markdale, will be re-let on the 1st of November, at half-past one p.m.

The meeting of the Bible Society came off as was announced, but we are sorry to say was very poorly attended.

Mr. Reynolds of this place is opening a general store in his premises, lately occupied by McDougall Bro's. Advertisement next week.

Read G. W. Rutherford's advertisement in another column; parties wanting anything in his line would do well to give him a trial.

A Bazaar and concert will be held in connection with the English Church, Markdale, on the 5th November. Full particulars next week.

The Governor-General has appointed Wednesday, November 3rd, a day of general thanksgiving all over the Dominion.

A fall of snow on Monday about eight inches in depth. In fact we saw, (between here and Dundalk) both sawlogs and cord wood being hauled on slays.

A severe storm raged in Minnesota and Dakota on Saturday and Sunday. Trains were blocked, much property was destroyed, great damage done to shipping, and some lives lost

E. D. Wilcox, Jeweller, is now showing a very complete stock of goods in his line. A Silver Plated Tea Set which he has just opened is very handsome. Every one should see his stock.

An extensive credit sale of farm stock, implements, household furniture, etc., will take place on the premises of Mr. Moses Johnston, lot 19, con. 11, Euphrasia, on Saturday, the 30th of October, commencing at 12 o'clock. Moses Johnston, proprietor; Theo. Hall, auctioneer.

Tidings have just reached us to the effect that the Wiarton Echo has ceased to echo. Just what we expected. A printer can subsist on turnips, apples, &c., with a few bunches of grapes thrown in occasionally by way of desert, but when it comes down to tan-bark and hemlock slabs,—ugh! A Tanner fast is preferable to it.

A Narrow Escape.—While threshing at his own place, Mount Pleasant, Holland, Mr. Robert Hannah, when cleaning up the floor, was caught by the bolts of the coupling on the connecting shaft and was stripped of all his clothing except his boots and one wristband of his shirt. He was somewhat injured but not seriously.

Accident.—On Thursday, the 14th inst., Mr. Samuel Wiley, jr., 7th con. Euphrasia, while logging on the farm of Mr. Reynolds received a very severe blow from a log being brought to the heap, the timber striking him across the back part of the legs. How he escaped without having his legs broken is the wonder of those who were present.

Winter is Coming, and all having Farms or even Garden Plots will find valuable aid in the American Agriculturist for October, just issued, with its hundreds of practical directions, hints and suggestions. Among leading topics are Work for the Month; a $1,100 Farm House, with plans and specifications; Shelter for Stock; Numerous Helps and Hints for Farmers; Humbugs exposed; a full Household and Children's Departments, etc.—15 cents per number; $1.50 per annum; Orange Judd Company, publishers, 245 Broadway, New York.

A young man in Sullivan formed an attachment for a young lady of his acquaintance. The course of true love ran smooth for a while, but finally the lover became fickle, and wanted to jilt his sweetheart. The fraulien felt sad at the way in which her dreams of love and happiness were being crushed down, and considered her affections had been injured to the amount of $30. The young man thought his finances would not allow him to pay out so much money, and offered $15, which she accepted, and gave him a document releasing him from all his promises, and making him a free man again.

T. G. & B.—Mr. E. P. Hannaford, the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, has completed a tour of inspection on the T. G. & B. Railway. He has been making an examination of the state of the road, and of the works necessary for converting the gauge into 4 feet 8½ inches, on behalf of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, by whom the work is, he says, to be carried out in the event of the municipalities granting the bonuses which are asked of them. Mr. H. Wallis, the locomotive superintendent of the Grand Trunk has, at the same time, been making an examination of the engines and cars of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Company with a view to their availabilities in part for the purposes of the wider gauge.

The "Globe."—The stock of the Globe newspapr has passed out of the hands of the Brown family, and has fallen into the possession, it is said, of Messrs Donald A. Smith, of Winnipeg; Allan Gilmour, of Ottawa; Wm. McMaster, of the Bank of Commerce; George Stephen, of the Bank of Montreal; James Nelson, Edinburg; Robt. Jaffray, Toronto; Ald. Peter Ryan and Northrop & Lyman, druggists. No prominent Reformer has any interest in the paper, which is now under the control of speculators. Mr. Gordon Brown will be retained as editor for a limited time only. The foregoing has being going the rounds of the Press for the past two weeks, as it has not been contradicted, presumption is that the statement is correct.

THE STANDARD.

Friday. October 22, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

MUDDY roads.

BUSINESS brisk.

FINE weather again.

LARGE quantities of grain coming in.

SHODDY pedlar's diappeared sudden-ly.

McFARLAND has something nobby in clothing; "better see them."

MR. WILLIAM WRIGHT of St. Joseph's Island, late of Glenelg, is in town. W. W. look's well.

J. J. WHITE, dentist, will be at the "Revere House," Markdale, on Wednesday, Oct. 27th.

THE pews in the Methodist Church, Markdale, will be re-let on the 1st of November, at half-past one p.m.

THE meeting of the Bible Society came off as was announced, but we are sorry to say was very poorly attended.

MR. REYNOLDS of this place is opening a general store in his premises, formerly occupied by McDougall Bro's. Advertisement next week.

READ G. W. Rutherford's advertisement in another column; parties wanting anything in his line would do well to give him a trial.

A BAZAAR and concert will be held in connection with the English Church, Markdale, on the 5th November. Full particulars next week.

THE Governor-General has appointed Wednesday, November 3rd, a day of general thanksgiving all over the Dominion.

A FALL of snow on Monday about eight inches in depth. In fact we saw, (between here and Dundalk) both sawlogs and cord wood being hauled on slays.

A SEVERE storm raged in Minnesota and Dakota on Saturday and Sunday. Trains were blocked, much property was destroyed, great damage done to shipping, and some lives lost.

E. D. WILCOX, Jeweller, is now showing a very complete stock of goods in his line. A Silver Plated Tea Set which he has just opened is very handsome. Every one should see his stock.

AN extensive credit sale of farm stock, implements, household furniture, etc., will take place on the premises of Mr. Moses Johnston, lot 19, con. 11, Euphrasia, on Saturday, the 30th of October, commencing at 12 o'clock. Moses Johnston, proprietor; Theo. Hall, auctioneer.

TIDINGS have just reached us to the effect that the Wiarton Echo has ceased to echo. Just what we expected. A printer can subsist on turnips, apples, &c., with a few bunches of grapes thrown in occasionally by way of desert, but when it comes down to tan-bark and hemlock slabs,—ugh! A Tanner fast is preferable to it.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—While threshing at his own place, Mount Pleasant, Holland, Mr. Robert Hannah, when cleaning up the floor, was caught by the bolts of the coupling on the connecting shaft and was stripped of all his clothing except his boots and one wristband of his shirt. He was somewhat injured but not seriously.

ACCIDENT.—On Thursday, the 14th inst., Mr. Samuel Wiley, jr., 7th con. Euphrasia, while logging on the farm of Mr. Reynolds received a very severe blow from a log being brought to the heap, the timber striking him across the back part of the legs. How he escaped without having his legs broken is the wonder of those who were present.

WINTER IS COMING, and all having farms or even Garden Plots will find valuable aid in the American Agriculturist for October, just issued, with its hundreds of practical directions, hints and suggestions. Among leading topics are Work for the Month; a $1,100 Farm House, with plans and specifications; Shelter for Stock; Numerous Helps and Hints for Farmers; Humbugs exposed; a full Household and Children's Departments, etc.—15 cents per number; $1.50 per annum; Orange Judd Company, publishers, 245 Broadway, New York.

A YOUNG man in Sullivan formed an attachment for a young lady of his acquaintance. The course of true love ran smooth for a while, but finally the lover became fickle, and wanted to jilt his sweetheart. The maiden felt sad at the way in which her dreams of love and happiness were being crushed down, and considered her affections had been injured to the amount of $30. The young man thought his finances would not allow him to pay out so much money, and offered $15, which she accepted, and gave him a document releasing him from all his promises, and making him a free man again.

T. G. & B.—Mr. E. P. Hannaford, the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, has completed a tour of inspection on the T. G. & B. Railway. He has been making an examination of the state of the road, and of the works necessary for converting the gauge into 4 feet 8½ inches, on behalf of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, by whom the work is, he says, to be carried out in the event of the municipalities granting the bonuses which are asked of them. Mr. H. Wallis, the locomotive superintendent of the Grand Trunk has, at the same time, been making an examination of the engines and cars of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Company with a view to their availabilities in part for the purposes of the wider gauge.

THE "GLOBE."—The stock of the Globe newspapr has passed out of the hands of the Brown family, and has fallen into the possession, it is said, of Messrs Donald A. Smith, of Winnipeg; Allan Gilmour, of Ottawa; Wm. McMaster, of the Bank of Commerce; George Stephen, of the Bank of Montreal; James Nelson, Edinburg; Robt. Jaffray, Toronto; Ald. Peter Ryan and Northrop & Lyman, druggists. No prominent Reformer has any interest in the paper, which is now under the control of speculators. Mr. Gordon Brown will be retained as editor for a limited time only. The foregoing has being going the rounds of the Press for the past two weeks, as it has not been contradicted, presumption is that the statement is correct.

PERSONAL.—Mr. COSSEY, who was sent here as station agent pro tem in the room of Mr. Davidson, resigned, has had his appointment confirmed. Mr. C. has been but a short time amongst us, but has, so far as we can learn, given satisfaction.

I am bound that you shall not forget that I am offering bargains.—Am going to have a thriving business or know the reason why. Have the right class of customers, and want more of the same kind, they pay for their goods when they buy them and don't grumble.—A. MCINTYRE.

BURGLARY.—Some time on Friday night last, the milk house of Mr. Charles Deavett, 6th con. of Euphrasia, was entered and a tub of butter and two crocks of preserves taken therefrom. This is the third robbery which has taken place within the past few days in that neighborhood.

ACCIDENT.—On Wednesday, the 6th inst., two little boys (sons of William Armstrong, Esq., near this place) were playing on the barn floor, one of them, aged eight years, was endeavoring to carry a bag of bran when he fell breaking his arm just above the elbow. Drs. Sproule and Carter set it and we are pleased to hear he is doing well.

THE HANLAN-TRICKETT RACE.—The 15th of next month is the day fixed for the great boat race for the Sportsman's Cup and the Championship of the World, between our Canadian champion, Edward Hanlan, and the Australian, Trickett. The race will take place over the Thames Championship course, and we hope to see our boy come out victorious. He is at present under training in England.

THE Toronto World says:—If the Grand Trunk Railway takes over the Toronto, Grey & Bruce it will soon become an important branch of the great through line. The Grand Trunk would then be able to command the freight of the Northwest, and with a line of steamers running from a terminus on the Georgian Bay or Lake Huron to Lake Michigan and Lake Superior it would prove a formidable rival to those roads which hope to tap the Canada Pacific.

DUNDALK, Oct. 15.—The Township Council of Melancthon met to-day, and submitted a by-law for $10,000 in aid of the change of gauge of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway. The Township Council of Proton also met to-day, and also submitted a by-law for $8,000 for the same object. In both these townships the proposed arrangements with the Grand Trunk railway is received with much favour. Both the by-laws will be voted upon by the ratepayers on the 30th of November.

TO SPORTSMEN.—It may be necessary to remind some sportsmen that changes have been made in the game laws. The killing time is now fixed; Deer, Oct. 1st to Dec. 15th; partridge, Sept. 1st to Jan 1st; Quail and Turkey, Oct. 1st to Jan. 1st; woodcock, Aug. 1st to Jan. 1st; snipe, Aug. 15th to Jan. 1st; ducks and geese, Aug. 15th to May 1st. Sportsmen throughout the country are awakening to the truth that there will be no game in the land unless prompt steps are taken to carry out the laws.

THE new bank just opened by Messrs. Kerr & McKellar, of Guelph, has been fitted up and painted in a first-class manner, and it is now the neatest office in the country. The bank is now opened and in a position to do all business cheaply and expeditiously. — Orangeville Advertiser. [Just so, friend Advertiser; no doubt you wanted a bank and have got it, but to say it is the neatest in the country is another thing. Perhaps some day when our friend of the quill has leisure he might pay us a visit, and amongst other sights notice the bank office of Wm. Lucas & Co., just opened here.]

THE entertainment of the P. M. Church came off in Dufferin Hall, on Wednesday evening, and considering the inclemency of the weather, and the state of the roads, there was a very goodly number present. The eatables were abundant and of good quality, and judging from appearence, was highly appreciated. After which Dr. Sproule, M. P. took the chair, and after a few brief remarks called on 1, Misses Noble & McNea, for music; 2, Rev. Mr. McDiarmid; 3, McDougall & Speers; 4, C. W. Speers; 5, J. R. Anderson; 6, Rev. Mr. Griffith, Orangeville; 7, Misses McNea & Noble; 8, McDougall; 9, J. R. Anderson; 10, W. J. Speers. Though the programme was somewhat lengthy, yet the best of attention and order prevailed throughout; after singing the National Anthem the meeting broke up in good order.

A VERY MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—It is with deep regret that we have this week to chronicle the death of Mr. John Lamb, a young man about 25 years of age, who resided with his parents on lot 8, con. 14, Glenelg. The particulars of the case are as follows, so far as we could gather. It appears that he was engaged in drawing dung from the barnyard to an adjoining field, and in wending his way through a piece of bush, accompanied by two of his brother's children, and he being seated on the load, a sound like a great crash, as the children speak of it, took place, and the next they saw was, their uncle buried beneath a fallen tree. The children immediately gave alarm, but on arrival of assistance and on the examination of poor Lamb, life was found to be extinct. No inquest was deemed called for, and the unfortunate young man was buried on Monday last, the remains being accompanied by a large concourse of sympathizing relatives and friends. Such is life, in the midst of which we are in death.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

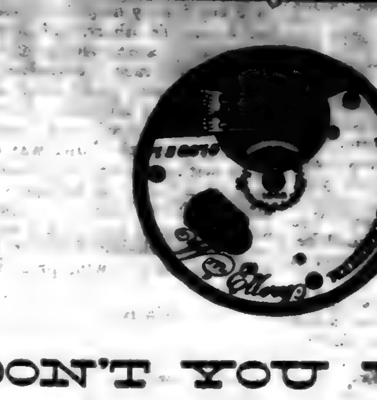
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 3-y

"TIME AND TIDE WAIT FOR NO MAN!"



DON'T YOU WAIT!

They are selling fast, those justly celebrated Watches. You want one. Will give you special quotations for cash and show you a Large Stock to select from. Am showing some beautiful things in

SILVERWARE!

Being suitable for Wedding presents, &c. Some extra bargains in Parlor and Bedroom Clocks!

Large Weight Clocks at $3.50.

Diamond and Wedding Rings!

Very low. Also a comple stock of Gold Chains, Sets, Lockets, Necklets, Pins, Chains, &c., &c., all at the very lowest net cash prices. When in Flesherton give me a call.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Watchmaker, &c.,

6 FLESHERTON AND DUNDALK,

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,

GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursey Stock, Williamsford Station.

Sept. 17, 1880, 1

VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

MARKDALE.

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

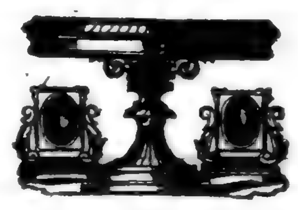
Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!



GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

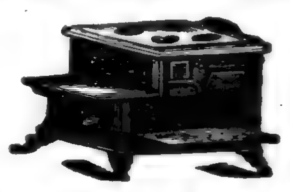
GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.



At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

STRAYED

FROM the premises of John Bowers, near Ford's Mill, Glenelg, a red Heifer with small star on head, and a few white spots on body—is small for a three year old. Any person giving such information to the undersigned as will lead to her recovery will be rewarded.

MRS. S. CASWELL.

Markdale, Oct. 2, 1880. 4-3in

Subscribe for the Standard.

We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

General Advertisements.

James Sullivan,

FLESHERTON.

Manufacturer and Dealer in

Tin, Copper, Sheet-Iron and Japanned Wares,

Eave Troughing, &c.

A Large Stock of Crockery and Stoneware.

Wooden Wares, Washboards, Brooms, Brushes, Rakes, Handles, &c. &c.

Stove Ovens Lined.

Old Metal, Hides and Wool taken in exchange.

☞ Prices most reasonable,

JAMES SULLIVAN.

Flesherton, Sept. 1880. 1

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres

FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood, (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor,

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

STOVES.

STOVES.

STOVES.

Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND

AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES.

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18.

Same, with Low Oven, $17.

5 BOX STOVE, $4

All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.,

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All

AT

W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill street, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continuance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Bloch opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

The NOBBIEST CLOTHING!

In the County at

McFARLAND'S.

See his $5.00 Overcoats.
See his $10 Ulsters.
See his $12 Suit.
See his $16 dress suit.
500 pairs of Boots

To choose from—Men, Women and Children's. Get your AXES at McFARLAND's. These $2.50 MANTLES selling fast. New DRESS GOODS at McFarland's. New FLANNELS at McFarland's. New SHAWLS at McFarland's. New BONNETS and HATS at McFarland's. New TWEEDS at McFarland's. New CARPETS at McFarland's. New Fringes, Buttons, Silks, Laces, Flowers and Feathers. Prices never were lower or value better. A comparison solicited.

W. J. McFARLAND,

IMPORTER. Markdale.

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

General Advertisements.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse.

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,

Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880.

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS!

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments I would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted, with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,

LOCK BOX 73,

8 Uxbridge, Ont.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

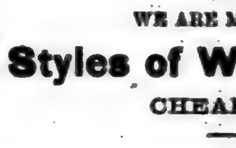
made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistant with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mill.

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path and will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & A. SPEERS.

Sept. 17th, 1880. 4-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to [illegible] Office.

☞ Meat delivered at any [illegible]

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Look Up, Not Down.

Life to some is full of sorrow—
Half is real, half they borrow;
Full of rocks and full of ledges,
Corners sharp and cutting edges.
Though the joy bells may be ringing,
Not a song you'll hear them singing;
Seeing never makes them wise,
Looking out from downcast eyes.

All in vain the sun is shining,
Waters sparkling, blossoms twining;
They but see through these same sorrows
Sad to-days and worse to-morrows;
See the clouds that must pass over—
See the weeds among the clover—
Everything and anything
But the gold the sunbeams bring.

Drinking from the bitter fountain,
Lo! your mole-hill seems a mountain;
Drops of dew are full of rain
Swell into the mighty main.
All in vain the blessings shower,
And the mercies fall with power;
Gathering chaff, ye tread the wheat,
Rich and royal, 'neath your feet.

Let it not be so, my neighbour;
Look up, as you love and labour,
Not for one alone are trials;
Every one has cares and trials.
Joy and care are knit together,
Like the fair and cloudy weather.
May we have, oh, let us pray,
Faith and patience for to-day.

ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR.

By the Author of "A Strange Friendship," &c.

CHAPTER I.

Rose was standing before the great mirror in our dining-room, fastening a spray of forget-me-nots in the soft thick coils of her beautiful golden hair; and I was seated in my favourite nook on the other side of the room, against a heap of piled-up cushions, and watching her with undisguised admiration.

For she was the beauty of our family, the handsomest girl to be met with far and wide in our neighbourhood. I used to call her my "White Rose of all the world."

As I look back at the sad days for years past, it seems to me I never saw Rose look so lovely as on that fair summer afternoon.

Rose was tall and beautifully formed, with magnificent, long, rippling, golden hair, and eyes blue as the forget-me-nots she wore, for they were her favourite flowers. [illegible]

[illegible]

"Oh, nonsense!" I returned. "You flatter me too much."

But in my heart I echoed her wish, for Herbert Tempest was no favourite of mine. [illegible]

[illegible]

"Oh, I can write it all quite calmly now. [illegible]

[illegible]

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Alaska Seal Skins.

During one week recently 950 casks of Alaska seal skins arrived here by the Pennsylvania railroad. They, with 450 casks expected to come were going to London to be dressed for market. The consignment contains about 92,500 skins, and is valued at nearly $1,000,000. The skins cost $600 for a carload of this point was about $600 for a carload of tanned fur. The skins are tied in strong bundles and pickled in salt. It requires eight skins to make a full sack, and they have to be brought to London for dressing. [illegible]

One of the few surviving officers who fought under Napoleon the Great—General Dupleix—died about a fortnight ago at Paris. [illegible] For this exploit Napoleon decorated him on the field.

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

"Have you been dull while we were away?" Letty asks, as I butter some toast for her.

"No; Judith called."

"Judith?"

Letty speaks, but I notice that Will's hand is tighter than he cannot cut very successfully.

"Yes, she did not stay long.— Who is that?"

Some one is coming to the house. I spring from my chair.

"Mr. Thorold!" I exclaim; and the bell rings loudly.

[illegible]

"I am Martin Napine. Nay, do not look at me as if I were a leper or madman. I am not. [illegible] seated. Cicely must have a home, and my mother would cherish her; it was better she should be at Napine than Ellerslie. I left one line for my mother, beseeching her to be good to my darling, and then, not waiting for her—she was paying visits—I left, to hurry to the side of her whom I loved so well.

[illegible]

"I missed my train; I caught one that went to Petra, only to find when there that I could not go any farther till the early morning. It was Thursday consequently ere I got home. Ah me! When I entered our apartments I knew the worst that could come to me had come. Cicely was dying; and she died clinging to me. But why need I pain you with my grief? They told me that I had a little daughter. What cared I? My darling had flown to Paradise. The white rigid figure they took from me was not Cicely. I went into the streets, wild, desperate. As I walked along, notices on the walls referring to emigration, shipping, etc., attracted my attention, and I resolved what I would do. I sold my watch and chain, and that night sailed from the London docks for New York. Do you consider that I was heartless to leave Cicely unburied? I accounted myself her murderer, and fled from the land of my crime. When we reached New York I was ill for several weeks—so ill that I rose from my bed of sickness an old man. I heard nothing of my father's murder. I stayed some time in America; afterwards I wandered north, south, east, west."

"But Lady Napine believed you to be dead?"

"Yes, and the story of my death was singular. Australia was a likely place. I went there. On my road I fell in with a young fellow named John Martin. I, you may be aware, called myself Martin. Circumstances threw us much together. We fraternised. We had both a few pounds, and we agreed to be partners. Exceedingly well we did—made money fast. He thought and talked of going home. I had to go a few days' journey into the country, and was away a fortnight. When I returned he was dead and buried. Word had been sent to my mother that I was dead and buried. My desk had been prised. My mother's letters and likenesses had been forwarded to England. I was astonished. Very zealous had the meddlers been. However, I let the mistake be. I had no intention of revisiting the old country. Later I felt a strange desire to see my daughter. I could not overcome it. I gave into it, and embarked for my native land. I adopted another name—called myself Thorold. My daughter must not know the injury I had done her. I had altered beyond recognition fortunately, I thought, when I found that I was suspected of being guilty of my father's death."

"Were you not anxious to proclaim your innocence?"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

AT SEDAN.

BISMARCK AND MOLTKE AT THE SCENE OF FRENCH DISASTER.

(From a New French Pamphlet.)

The following conversation (somewhat abbreviated in the translation), which took place between Count Bismarck, Gen. Moltke and Gen. de Wimpffen prior to the surrender of Sedan, is taken from a forthcoming pamphlet by M. Georges Bastard, entitled "Bazeilles."

[illegible]

hope that the king would be touched by so complete a submission, and that he would accordingly grant the French army such terms of capitulation it had a right to expect for its courage.

Count Bismarck—Which sword did the emperor surrender? His own or that of his country?

Gen. C.—His own, only.

Count B.—In that case we cannot change our terms.

Gen. W. to Gen. Moltke—I will take advantage of your first offer, general, and will send an officer to view those formidable positions of yours. When he returns I will decide whether to accept or reject your terms.

Gen. M.—It is useless to do that. You have but little time left for reflection, it being now midnight. The armistice is over at 4 o'clock.

Gen. W.—You must, however, understand that I cannot take so important a step upon my own responsibility. I must first consult with my colleagues.

Upon Count Bismarck's advice, Gen. Moltke consented to wait for Gen. Wimpffen's answer until 9 o'clock the next morning.

The result is known.

The French Crown Jewels.

SOME MAGNIFICENT GEMS—RIVALLING THE KOH-I-NOOR—MINOR VALUABLE STONES—THERE ARE MILLIONS IN IT.

The cable brings news that at the next meeting of the French chambers a bill will be introduced, providing for the sale of the French crown jewels. Not all of the precious stones will be disposed of, but only such as are merely valuable from their intrinsic worth. The stones about which there is a history, or which are of interest to students of such subjects, will be placed in one of the national museums, but those brought to the hammer will doubtless realize some $2,000,000, a sum which will be a godsend to the department of fine arts. There will be a favourable opportunity offered to American purchasers—who, indeed, of late years have been formidable competitors in the jewel markets of Europe,—to secure splendid diamonds at reasonable prices, for the sales of Queen Isabella's jewels and those of Madame Musard indicated that the buyers had it all their own way. From 1476 till 1774 the number of diamonds formally inventoried as belonging to the crown was 7,482, and they were valued at $4,000,000. Louis XV. sold 1,471 of them, but bought even more, since brilliants were all the rage for buttons, buckles, and sword-hilts, so that when Louis XVI. came to the throne he had 9,547 diamonds of all sizes. August 16, 1792, just as the convention had concluded the work of taking a new inventory, a band of forty thieves broke into the house, Place Louis XIV., where the jewels were stored, and carried most of them off. Two of the thieves were caught, but the others escaped, and could not be found. How the jewels were restored no one seems to know precisely. According to one story, Lamieville, a barber, who had been sentenced to death for coining, but had escaped from the Conciergerie, purchased his pardon, and a commission in a regiment of the line, by revealing to an official who had treated him kindly, the fact—which he had accidentally overheard—that the thieves had hidden their plunder in the hollow of a beam in a lonely house till the ardour of pursuit had abated. According to another story, however, the fact that the diamonds were hidden in a hole dug in an alleyway of the Champs Elysees was revealed to the government by an anonymous letter. At any rate, most of the stones were recovered. After the XVIII. Brumaire Napoleon pledged the famous "Regent" diamond to the Dutch, for funds to aid him in consolidating his power; when he redeemed it, it went into the pommel of his sword, and is still in the collection. In 1810 his inventory showed that the crown was possessed of 37,393 brilliants and precious stones, and a value of 18,922,477 frs., or about three and three-quarter millions of dollars. Louis XVIII. took another inventory after the Restoration, when there were enumerated 64,000 stones and objects, weighing 18,751 carats and valued at $4,180,052. The crown, which contains the Regent diamond and 5,360 other stones, is valued at $2,940,400; there is a sword worth $48,140; an order of the Holy Ghost in brilliants appraised at $77,200; a cross of the Legion of Honour worth $90,000; a set of pearls valued at $233,000; another of brilliants and sapphires worth $56,000, etc., etc. The famous Regent, or "Pitt," diamond ranked fifth in the list of the world's precious stones, though there is a strong suspicion that the Braganza which stands unapproachably alone in size at the head of the list is really a white topaz, colour being lent to the suspicion by the fact that the Portuguese government refuses to allow it to be inspected. In the rough this jewel weighed 410 carats. A slave found it near Wazulipatam in 1702, and hiding it in a gash cut in his leg offered it to an English sailor if he would aid him to escape. The sailor got the stone and threw the Hindoo overboard, drowning him; then sold it to a merchant named Jamchund for £1,000, wasted the money in a gigantic spree and hanged himself. Jamchund sold it to Thomas Pitt, governor of the Fort of St. Georges for £12,500, and Pitt had it cut into a fine brilliant, the operation taking two years' time and costing £5,000, but the fragments split off were worth £3,000 or £4,000. The stone was reduced in size to 136¼ carats—the Koh-i-Noor is 102¼—but became and continues to this day, the most perfect brilliant in existence, being without a rival as to shape and water. The diamond came near killing its new owner with anxiety. So fearful was he of robbery that he never made known beforehand his intention of travelling, or the route he would take, and never slept consecutively two nights in the same house, while so many stories were invented as to the way in which he had obtained the stone that he had to write and publish a pamphlet giving its history. In 1717 he disposed of the diamond to the duke of Orleans for $675,000. Curiously enough, however, Saint Simon tells us quite another story—that he induced the regent to buy it, and that it was bought from a man who had stolen it in India, and who brought it the rough. Whatever the truth, the Regent was thereafter literally "the brightest ornament of the French crown." It was stolen with the other crown diamonds in 1792, but recovered. Napoleon wore it in the pommel of his sword, but lost it at Waterloo, whereof the Prussians looted his carriage; after the peace it was restored to France. The Sancy diamond had a more singular and interesting history attached to it. It was a brilliant of 54 carats, and is said to have been worn by Charles the Bold as a talisman. When he was killed by a Swiss halberdier at the battle of Nancy, January, 1477, a soldier who stripped the corpse sold the diamond to a priest for 2½ francs, the priest disposing of it at a profit of 12 cents. It passed over to the King of Portugal, who pawned it to Harlay de Sancy for 40,000 livres, Sancy afterward buying it outright for $100,000. One of his descendants sent it by a faithful servant to raise funds upon its pledge for the assistance of Henry IV., but the servant was attacked by robbers aware of his mission, and killed. The king felt sure that the servant would never have parted with the treasure, even in death, and had his body opened, when the stone was recovered. James II., of England, into whose hands it passed, afterward sold it to Louis XIV. for £25,009. It was stolen in 1792, with the Regent, and, after its recovery, sold by the duchess of Berry to the Demidoffs. Count Paul Demidoff lost it, while at a fancy ball given by Count Walewski, but it was found again, and, we believe, finally disposed of, in 1855, to Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy for £20,000. The famous "Blue Diamond," stolen in 1792, never was heard of again, though some dealers believe that it found its way into the collection of a very rich English nobleman, who still owns it. The fate of stolen precious stones is often curious. Twelve diamonds of the French crown jewels, known as "the Mazarines," from the fact that they were cut at the cardinal's order, vanished mysteriously during the revolution 1830, but turned up as mysteriously at Madrid, three years ago, when King Alfonso was purchasing jewels for his first wife, Queen Mercedes, and it was only the other day that some black pearls, stolen from the Austrian crown in the last century, were found at a small shop in Hungary.

Wagner's gout is the music of the present.

The body is the shell of the soul and the dress is the husk of the body, but the husk often indicates what the kernel is. No man or woman of sense would devote more care or attention to the husk than to the kernel.

The true wealth of a community lies in the integrity of its citizens, and its chief honor arises not from the possession of great riches, but from the possession of great and true men.

The only way to cure a man of eating with his knife is to give him raw oysters. When that item was shown to a man of that persuasion he said:—"Suppose you give him a fork and some clear soup."

Druggists and Their Charges.

There is every variety of opinion about the nature, uses, and emoluments of druggists. To some they appear a kind of scarcely half-human usurer, more extortionate by far than any falsely named Christian, or proverbial Jew. To others, and above all to themselves, they are a wholly excellent, though much abused race. Periodical persecutions of the fraternity occur about as regularly as persecutions of the early Christians, or Jews of the Middle Ages; and though not so sanguinary, are in their own way quite terrible. It is with no surprise, therefore, that we hear of a very virulent persecution taking place in New York. A reporter has been making certain domiciliary visits, leading to rather remarkable discoveries. He took with him the following prescription, and set out on a voyage of discovery:

Soda Biborate, 1 drachm.
Sq. as ordered.

This means that he was to get one drachm of ordinary borax, powdered in all probability, and use as he had been told. He was charged as follows, and from the price at which borax can be bought in New York, he calculated the percentage of profit the several druggists probably made. At one place they charged him 10 cents, making a profit of nearly 9,600 per cent.; at another 15 cents, with 14,300 per cent. profit; at another, 20 cents, with a profit of 19,060 per cent., while at a fourth establishment the profit reached the comfortable amount of 23,000 per cent, the druggist feeling himself justified in charging 25 cents. "No wonder" thought the reporter, "that so many go into the business." The lowest charge, as it happened, was made by the best shop, at least the most fashionable, one under Fifth Avenue Hotel. This would hardly have been expected. If a similar experiment were tried in Toronto, we trust that our own druggists would come through the ordeal in a manner very much more creditable to themselves, and satisfactory to others. Making all possible allowances for the druggist being a professional man, and, therefore, justified in charging for his services as well as for his mere drugs, there is no excuse for prices being extortionate. Of course no one in his senses believes that such profits as those this reporter scented out are anything but a wonderful exception, but there is a very general suspicion that the charges are often much higher than they need be. Whether the custom of paying heavy percentages to doctors be a common one or not we cannot say. It is at any rate a wholly bad one, and should be given up. The doctors surely make enough by their professional fees without trying to secure more in a second-hand sort of a way. If they think they have a right to more than the usual charges, let them openly insist on more, but not seek to make druggists their collecting agents, or instruments of extortion.

Principal Cavern on Dogmatic Preaching.

Had our space permitted we should gladly have given a very full report of the lecture delivered by Principal Caven at the opening of Knox College on Wednesday last. It was an exceedingly clear able and timely discussion of a very important and interesting question, and showed very distinctly, that the outcry against dogma, and in favour of the practical, in preaching, is simply absurd irrational and without excuse. That in short there can be no ground for practical preaching, or anything like practical well doing, unless it is versed on dogma, or in other words, on fact, or what is supposed to be such. Indeed, it is not only in religion, but in every other department of life and work, that there must be dogma, understood and believed, before there can be anything like reasonably correct or intelligent conduct. One man says, not, "obey God," but "Obey the law," and unless he be an absolute fool, he bases this advice or command which he gives, upon some consideration, which he thinks ought to have weight. "Obey, or I shall put you in prison;" or "I shall cut your head off;" You will find yourself very miserable" &c. &c. Why, all that is dogma. Fifty other reasons may be given for the obedience required, and every one of them would be of the same character. The same thing is true of every practical advice or command which could be thought of. And why not of religion, the most important of all as well? "Be good," "be kind," "be sweet," "be generous" many are crying. Why? They may give any reason they like, but whatever they may happen to urge, that will be their dogmas just as much as all those considerations and facts, urged in the Bible, and by doctrinal preachers are their dogmata. The true order both in theory and practice, with everything, whether politics, merchandizing, or social life—is first, correct thinking, or the reception of dogma, doctrine or fact, real or supposed, whatever one like to call it! Then secondly, correct feeling, as the result of the thinking; and lastly, as the natural and necessary result of the two preceding, correct acting, or practice. And the man would be a fool (though there are many such, who fancy themselves wise) who could even expect the practice to be what it ought to be, while the thinking and feeling are all astray, or utterly ignored.

"Opinion is nothing" cry some, "practice all in all." Why, in the very statement of such a thing, he is enunciating dogma as he understands it, and how a man's practice can be correct with nothing to stand upon, even the conviction that this course is right, and that other wrong, for that too is dogma, passes any reasonable comprehension, and its cuckoo repitition by many who fancy themselves authorities, intimates a depth of folly as amazing as it is inexplicable. We commend to all such, Dr. Caven's, clear, and cogent reasoning, and ask them for their own sakes, and in order to keep up their self respect to drop the nonsense implied in the persistent quotation of Pope's silly lines:

"For forms of faith let graceless zealots fight,
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

As a man really not professedly thinks, so is he, and so does he act, whether in the matter of buying or selling, or in that of worshipping and serving God.

B. Young's Widows.

Thirteen of the widows of Brigham Young still live in the Lion House at Salt Lake. Their shares of the estate were $21,000 each, according to the will, but by threatening litigation they obtained about $10,000 more. They receive, however, only the income from their property; but that is sufficient to give them excellent fare in the old home, with servants, horses, and $75 a month in money. Louise, one of the daughters of the Prophet by Emeline Fee, the most intellectual and intelligent of the wives, says that all of her full brothers and sisters have renounced polygamy; but a majority of Young's forty-seven children are Mormons. Speaking of the household as it used to be, she says: "We lived very happily. My father's ruling hand had a good deal to do with it. He taught us to love one another. Every morning wives and children met in the parlor, where we had prayers and singing. People have often asked me how in the world father knew all his children and wives, but I can tell you if a single one was missing at prayers he knew it, and found out where he or she was. Our houses were like a great hotel, and we the guests. Our father was a great manager, and very practical in superintending his household affairs. Our rooms opened on to a long hall, like the one in the hotel here, but larger, and when we wanted anything from sisters, brothers, or wives, we went into this room or that at will."

Grass Stain Removed.

I thought grass stain was hopeless. I have asked experienced people several times if anything would take the stain of green grass from children's clothes, but without gaining the desired information until within the last month. Lo! boiling water will remove the colour. Pour boiling water through the stain and it sets the green colouring matter loose, rinsing it away. I tried it on a large stain upon the front of my little girl's white dress, and easily removed every trace of the grass, rubbing it a little in the hot water. Grass stain, after washing with soap-suds, makes a dirt-coloured mark, and remains an ugly blot on children's white clothing.

A Frenchman named Anne has made experiments on himself with regard to the effects of inhaling oxygen, and he makes the statement that one may absorb 100 litres, and even more, daily without inconvenience.

The home of Stephanie and Rudolph of Austria is to be an ancient castle, one of the grandest in Europe, that rises from the Moldau, and towers over Prague. The gift of the Viennese nobles to the Prince is to be an album of Austrian paintings, costing about sixty thousand dollars.

President Grevy, who is shooting in the Jura, has received a present from the Prince of Wales of a gun and four beautiful setters.

FOREIGN ECHOES.

Spain, with only 17,000,000 of inhabitants, turns out yearly twice as much wheat as does Italy with 26,000,000 of inhabitants.

The French government are about to despatch four officers to Senegal to organise topographical surveys with a view to the formation of three new posts beyond Medina, and the choice for the best route for a railway between that place and [illegible] Niger by way of Bafulabe and Fangal[illegible].

Keeping poultry of some kind or other is almost universal in China. The poorest household has, wherever practicable, its pert cock and three or four lean hens, which stalk hungrily in and out of the mud shanty in search of anything eatable that no one else of the family may happen to be able to digest.

On the 11th of January, 1867, there existed only seventeen daily newspapers in Paris, while on the 1st of September, 1880, there were sixty-one daily newspapers in circulation. Another curious fact is that the number of daily journals sold at one sou each amounts to seventeen, or exactly the number of daily newspapers existing in 1867.

Among the recent discoveries of valuable works in the library of the Convent of Monte Cassino is a treatise written by one of the first disciples of S. Thomas Aquinas. This may be said to form the first traditional link of the Thomistic doctrines. The subject is the "Creation of the World;" and it is now published, with notes, and dedicated to Cardinal Zigliara.

All reports from France and Italy agree that the silk crop in those countries will be more abundant this season than for the past ten years. Advices from different districts in Japan, announces that only about four hundred and fifth thousand cartons will be manufactured this year, and, as a considerable quantity will be required for home use, it is expected that the cards available for exportation will realize very remunerative prices.

The forthcoming number of the Geographisch Mittheilungen contains Dr. Regel's account of a trip from Kuldja to Turfan, in Chinese Turkestan, which no European traveller appears to have visited since Father Goes did so in the seventeenth century. The new town consists of two fortresses, inhabited by several thousand Tarantchis, Dungans and Chinese. It lies in the midst of the desert, its fields being irrigated by water conveyed through underground canals from the foot of the Thianshan.

The Unione has the following information from Rome:—"The monument of the holy memory of Pius IX., which the Cardinals nominated by him have agreed to erect, will be placed in the Confession of the Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. The monument will cost the sum of 60,000 francs. The number of cardinals contributing to it is fifty-one." It may be remembered that the Confession of this Basilica is that which was so beautifully restored with the richest marbles by the late Pontiff over twenty years ago.

Divorces are becoming alarmingly frequent in Switzerland, and according to lately published statistics, there are relatively more divorced people in Switzerland than in any other civilized country. Experienced advocates say that among the working classes of towns it is quite a common thing for people to marry in order to try how they like each other. If the result is satisfactory they go on living together as long as it may please them; if not, an interview with a lawyer and an application to the Tribunal Civil, which in ordinary cases costs only a few francs, releases them from their bonds.

The Glasgow Herald states that while some workmen were engaged about half a mile east from Fort William in deepening the dam which supplies the Nevis Distillery with water, one of the men came upon a large shell in a complete state. It was embedded in the moss, and was found to be fifteen inches in diameter, and weighed about one hundred pounds. The powder was quite fresh looking, only the portion of it near the fuse being damp. The fuse itself was burned out. The shell is supposed to be one of those fired from the fort in April, 1746, at a battery raised by "Prince Charlie's" men at the Craigs, within five hundred yards of the fort. It was found in a straight line with the fort and the battery.

An Irish correspondent to the Manchester Courier writes concerning the land league: —"The Roman Catholic bishops, as a body, do not countenance the anti-rent agitation; but the local priests as a rule join the popular movement, and do not seem to be checked by the bishops. Many of the priests, however, I believe, take office that it may not get into worse hands, and that by their position they may regulate the proceedings of the local organization and take legitimate action in cases of real injustice and hardship, some of which I may give in my next letter. The hotheaded young priests are generally those who use the violent language, and when they go the length of telling the tenants not to pay their rents there is little doubt the mass of the people are indoctrinated with that idea."

"A good many military authorities are," a London journal states, "in favour of the abolition of regimental colors. The cry was started after the Isandlana disaster, and has again been raised since the Khusk-i-Nakhud affair. It is by no means certain that those authorities are right. There is, of course, nothing perfect in this world, and the use of the flag has doubtless its drawbacks; but, putting one thing against another, it is doubtful whether the odds are not in favour of its adoption. An English officer relates how, at Inkermann, soon after the French had come to relieve the English, the men of the two nationalities became badly mixed and lost all semblance of method in their fighting. A young French porte-drapeau thereupon raised his tricolor on high and shouted, 'Au drapeau mes garcons!' The English officers took the hint, and directed their men to rally around the English standard, and the confusion was quickly at an end. In such a case as this the value of a flag as a rallying point is evident."

"Guardians of the Peace."

(From the Toronto Truth.)

Our city policemen are fine-looking men. Everybody acknowledges that. We are all proud of them, and if Hamilton, or London, or any other city in Her Majesty's Loyal Dominion, ventures to claim a more magnificent set of civic dignitaries, then no one will hesitate to do doughty battle for the honour of Toronto. They fitly represent the grandeur of that Law which should ever be a terror to the multitude of evil doers, while at the same time it shows itself a praise to such as do well. All sensible people rejoice when civil functionaries draw as good pay, and do as little work as is at all consistent with the eternal fitness of things. But, at the same time, we may venture gently to hint to the gentlemen in question, that they are not placed on duty simply to be looked at, or to help ladies across the street, or to give clear and civil directions to hesitating strangers. Nor is every little disturbance between half-drunken rowdies, incapable of doing much injury to themselves or to other people, the only occasion on which their presence and assistance may become in any wise needful. Nor are servant girls, who steal petticoats from their mistresses, or newsboys whose mouths water for the cool and soothing melon, and whose consciences are not as yet sufficiently developed to permit quite accurate distinctions being made between meum and tuum, the only culprits whom the citizens of Toronto would be glad to see in durance vile. All these things, of course, should be done, but not to the leaving other things, fully as important, undone. Now there is a very prevalent understanding in the city, that as soon as there is any real need for a policeman, there are none to be had. We have heard of gentlemen running up one street, and down another, in fact making quite a lengthened tour of observation in search of a blue-coated protector, but without success. There have been too many burglaries in Toronto for some time back. Nothing has been done of any account. One or two fellows may have been arrested on suspicion, but that is about the last anyone hears of it. Much more determined and persevering efforts should be made than have hitherto been put forth to bring bolder and more unscrupulous felons to justice. There are other iniquities besides housebreaking, which are pretty rampant in the city just now, and which might profitably be looked after. We do not for a moment hint that our policemen are afraid of anything serious, or that any of them are in league with the criminals, as was the case in Scotland Yard some years ago, but something seems wrong somewhere. There may be truth in the suspicion that servant girls are at the bottom of much of the mischief. The "boys in blue" should not allow their faculties to be dimmed by being brought too strongly under female influence.

A man being tormented by corns, kicked his foot through a window, and the pane was instantly gone.

Science in Court.

"Do you plead guilty, or not guilty?" asked the Judge, addressing S[illegible].

"I doesn't plead at all. I isn't no lawyer. Yer can't katch me wid yer [illegible]."

"Look out, you impudent rascal. [illegible] you guilty or not guilty?"

"Now yer's gettin' at de facks. I [illegible] honour ter state dat I's not guilty."

"Yis he is, Jedge," exclaimed [illegible] "He hit me in de mouf wid his fist."

"I neber tetched de man."

"Didn't you hit him in the [illegible]" asked the Judge.

"No, sah; I didn't put my han' on [illegible] In fact, neber tetched him."

"Judge, I swear on de bigges' Bible [illegible] he hit me."

"Now, look a heah," said Simms, [illegible] courts of dis lan' ain't technical [illegible] When yer jerk a man up on a charge [illegible] got ter stantiate de charge. If de [illegible] moah eddycation 'mong de niggers an' [illegible] white folks dar wouldn't be half de trouble in de courts. Is my han' tetchin' dis tal[illegible] Jedge?" And he placed his hand on desk.

"Yes, sir."

"Dar's whar yer's off. Case why? [illegible] ter de flosofy what I'se been [illegible] yer can't tetch nothin'. Dar is air [illegible] my han' an' de table. Ef my han' [illegible] de table it would stick dar. Now I ask [illegible] Ant'hy," and the prisoner turned to [illegible] "is yer gwin to put yerself in such a [illegible] light? Yer's been a stugent to [illegible] ter know better den dis. Is yer goin' [illegible] town branded wid ignorence? Is yer goin' ter add yer weight to holin' de cullad [illegible] of Little Rock ter de groun'? Now, [illegible] gent an' a man what unerstan's flosofy, I tetch yer?"

"Come to think ob hit," answered [illegible] "I doan believe yer did."

"Now, Ant'ny, ez a stugent an' a [illegible] scince, didn't yer run again a [illegible] knock dem teef out?"

"Viewin' this subjeck in a scientific [illegible] I believe I did."

"An' now, Ant'ny, as a stugent an' [illegible] ed man, won't yer withdraw dis case [illegible] agin me, in which yerself is de com[illegible]plainter, an' in what I is de scientific [illegible]dent?"

"Yes, I will. Jedge, dis man [illegible] me, an' I hereby widdraws de mistake."

"Dat was [illegible]kly right," said Simms [illegible] the two men went down together. "[illegible] de men of science would hang tergedder [illegible] way, dar wouldn't be half de trouble an' eaziness in de worl'."

Millionaire Criminal.

(London Telegraph.)

Not every criminal who incurs the [illegible]ment to Siberia is on that account [illegible] compassionated, if we may believe the [illegible] counts of Mr. Jacharzeff's sojourn [illegible] recently published by a St. Petersburg [illegible]al. This eminent malefactor, known through[illegible]out Russia by the significant soubriquet "The Stealer of Millions," has contrived to retain possession of the enormous fortune acquired by high-class swindling. W[illegible] condemned to deportation, he travelled [illegible] Krasnojarsk, the town selected for his [illegible] residence by the imperial authorities [illegible] princely style, attended by a suite of [illegible]vants, carriages and horses, and it would [illegible]pear that he is to become the leader of fashion in that Siberian city. Tailors, [illegible]fumers and tobacconists advertise [illegible] wares under his name; he has been [illegible] a member of the leading club, and is [illegible] to contract an alliance with a young [illegible] belonging to one of the first families [illegible] Krasnojarsk. His dinner parties are [illegible]ed by the chief official personages and [illegible] nobilities; ladies of the best society [illegible] his evening receptions, and accept the [illegible]did presents with which he judiciously [illegible] their favour and social countenance. [illegible] proposed by a committee of Kras[illegible] "lionnes" to present him, upon his [illegible] day, with a wreath of laurel, oak leaves [illegible] roses. Altogether, for a convicted [illegible]meanant, undergoing sentence of [illegible]ment, he appears to be leading an [illegible] monly pleasant life. Not so the thous[illegible] of his dupes who, having trusted their [illegible]unes to his keeping, suffered total [illegible] his hands.

One Hundred and Thirty Years of [illegible]

The Rev. Mr. Collins, a naturalist, [illegible]ty-five years resident in Ceylon, says elephants there live about 130 years, "come of age" at 40. There are three [illegible] of them in the same herds, and when [illegible] are young, the size they will attain is [illegible] nearly known by the number of toes. Those which grow to the largest size [illegible] eighteen toes, five on each of the two [illegible] feet, and four on each of the hind [illegible] Those which grow to a medium size [illegible] seventeen toes, five on each of the fore [illegible] and four on one hind foot, and three on [illegible] other. The least size of elephant has [illegible]teen toes, five on each fore foot, and [illegible] on each hind foot. No Singhalese ele[illegible] has a fewer number than sixteen toes. [illegible] mahout, or elephant driver, rules his [illegible]phant by means of an iron hook, with [illegible] he touches a most sensitive part behind [illegible] ear, which causes the most unruly ele[illegible] to become submissive. When Mr. [illegible] was in Kandy, an elephant which had [illegible]ed its keeper, and which had been [illegible] the head before it could be captured, [illegible] undergo the operation of having the [illegible] extracted, which was performed by [illegible] five doctors, the elephant lying [illegible] down while the mahout kept his [illegible] this sensitive part. The elephant [illegible] are a drunken set of men, and some[illegible] while drunk, will treat their charge [illegible]cifully, and the elephant itself is an [illegible] which bears grudges—the result being [illegible] nearly all elephant keepers are sooner or later killed.

Turkey.

The present aspect of affairs in Turkey [illegible] highly curious, as well as very critical [illegible] little boy, and a sick one at that, [illegible] fully evades all chastisement, by resol[illegible] refusing to hold out his hand; and it [illegible] not appear either, as if the half-dozen [illegible]nies, with all the most improved [illegible]thods of flagellation at their com[illegible] were going to succeed in "coer[illegible] him. There is great power evident [illegible] passive resistance. What may be the outcome of the trouble, it is impossible to say. Turkey may, even yet, come off [illegible] flying colours, after setting all her would-be reformers by the ears. The Sultan [illegible] very well that these European powers [illegible] jealous of one another as drawing-room [illegible]ties, and that by a little judicious flir[illegible] he can at any rate hold his own. [illegible] probably the very game he is playing [illegible] a proposition here, and a proposition [illegible] he keeps up the appearance of being much alarmed by such a display of force, and of a praiseworthy willing[illegible] come to any reasonable understanding while all the time he holds the apple of [illegible]cord, which may prove too much in [illegible] for any naval demonstration. Si[illegible] trying to "coerce" a fox in any other [illegible] than by breaking his neck, is certain[illegible] imposing spectacle. The fox's [illegible] course, is naturally to try and set [illegible] one another's throats in order to [illegible] that important part of his own anatomy.

Bill of Fare in a Monastery.

Here are some culinary memoranda from a monastic account-book of the [illegible] Henry VIII. The items bring vivid[illegible] fore us the abundant and excellent [illegible]vided in these monastic establishments [illegible] perusal of the list of dainties here [illegible] will at least satisfy us that in the [illegible] Ages "the monks, the much-abused [illegible] much-mistaken monks, fanned the [illegible] of a nascent literature, and cherished [illegible] flame of a new cookery. Die corporis [illegible] Apud Boston. Ffyrst Course. [illegible] podage. Chewtes, (a small pie.) [illegible] Carpettes of Venyson. Capons. [illegible] wye, (baken Capons.) Custardys [illegible] damask, fruttes. A Suttelty. [illegible] Course. Cremball to potage. [illegible] Schuffard. peyons. Baken Veneson [illegible] byttes. Yerwhelps, leche viall. A [illegible]te. Thyrd Course. Clere jelly to [illegible] Crane betters, ffesande, Knottes [illegible] Tart. Stynt, leche lombard. A Sotelty [illegible] lxxv messes. The bill of fare for [illegible] luxurious dinner on a fish day, which [illegible] on the same page, is not assigned [illegible] precise date, but was certainly served [illegible] the number of the "messes" being [illegible] the foot: Ffyche, ffyrst course. [illegible] potage, lying and salt fysche. [illegible] Buttes & place. ffreshe Salmon. [illegible] Baken Breme. Trench. leche [illegible] Suttelty e. Second Course. Creme [illegible] des. Byrt, (a kind of turbot, [illegible] Dory. Bremys. Soolys. [illegible] Cong. perche, leche Damask. [illegible] Rost ele, ffreshe porpoose. Crabbe [illegible] lombard. A Suteltye.

The Argyll is a thrifty Scot; [illegible] the shooting on the estates is let at [illegible] profit, and but a limited portion kept [illegible] family amusement.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY FRIDAY MORNING
[illegible] to meet the early mails.
It [illegible] the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, [illegible] if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing [illegible] without paying up will be held responsible for the subscriptions until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year	$50 00
Half do	30 00
Quarter do	18 00
Eight do	10 00
Card do	4 60
Six [illegible] and under, first insertion	50
[illegible] subsequent insertion	15
[illegible] six to ten lines, first insertion	75
Each subsequent insertion	25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line	8
Each subsequent insertion	[illegible]

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
OFFICES—at Owen Sound and Markdale. N. B.—Office at Markdale, over W. J. McFarland's store, open on Thursday of every week. 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c. Money loaned at lowest rates on personal real estate. Lands bought and sold. Buyer and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae,
REAL ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end [illegible] principal payable [illegible] of 8, 9 or 10 years—or principal [illegible] interest yearly to suit Borrowers. [illegible] for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, [illegible]hants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate. [illegible]ceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
[illegible]ND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rate of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly, or principal and interest repayable by instalments.
A number of desirable Improved Farms [illegible] 1-y

J. G. Sing,
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, [illegible]rd and Markdale. Having purchased [illegible] Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates [illegible] Hills, Plans and Specifications [illegible] Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. [illegible] by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, [illegible]ale, will be promptly attended to.
[illegible] 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

Mr. James J. White,
[illegible]tant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in [illegible] month, when he will be prepared to perform operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1-y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
[illegible]ing leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. [illegible] the best of liquors and cigars kept. [illegible] tabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
[illegible] 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
McGIRR, [illegible] PROPRIETORS.
[illegible] accommodation for the travelling [illegible] The bar is well stocked with the [illegible] Wines and Liquors and the best [illegible] of Cigars. [illegible] Buss to and from all trains.
[illegible] 17, 1880. 1-y

MANHOOD: LOST HOW RESTORED
We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.
[illegible] in a sealed envelope, only six cents, or two postage stamps.
[illegible] celebrated author, in this admirable [illegible] demonstrates, from thirty [illegible] practice, that alarming con[illegible] be radically cured without the [illegible] of internal medicine or the [illegible] of the knife; pointing out a mode of [illegible] simple, certain and effectual, by [illegible] which every sufferer, no matter [illegible] condition may be, may cure himself [illegible]privately and radically.
[illegible] should be in the hands of every [illegible] man in the land.
CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 Ann St., New York.
[illegible] Box, 4586. 90ly

[illegible] Indian [illegible]
77 W[illegible]
CURES FEVER AND AGUE. CURES SCROFULA AND SKIN DISEASES. CURES BILIOUSNESS.
CUR[illegible]
Biliousn[illegible]
The Best [illegible]
70,000 [illegible]
9,000 [illegible]
[illegible]
FOR DYS[illegible]
Dear Sir[illegible] your valua[illegible] has benefited [illegible] and Liver C[illegible] cine I ever [illegible]
SA[illegible]
Dear Sir[illegible] doctors had [illegible] eight years. [illegible] that I have [illegible] After using [illegible] for a brief sp[illegible] led to do all [illegible] lieve it was [illegible] life.
CURES CO[illegible]
Dear Sir[illegible] was afflicted [illegible] which grew [illegible] my room, and [illegible] incurable by [illegible] 1877, I comm[illegible] Blood Syrup [illegible] menced to gai[illegible] a short time [illegible] fair day's wor[illegible] entirely gone. ISAA[illegible]
CURES [illegible] Mt. For[illegible] Wel[illegible]
Dear Sir:—I [illegible] Erysipelas for tw[illegible] your Indian B[illegible] me.
LIVER [illegible] Mt. Forest, W[illegible]
Dear Sir:—I [illegible] Blood Syrup for [illegible] received great ben[illegible]
DISEASE O[illegible]
DISEASE O[illegible]
SCAB[illegible]
Dear Sir:—My [illegible] and I was unable to [illegible] went to a doctor, [illegible] which did no good. [illegible] your Indian Blood S[illegible] only a short time, [illegible] ed, and now my han[illegible] I can safely recomm[illegible] remedy.
DYSPEPSIA AND K[illegible]
Dear Sir:—I have [illegible] years with Dyspepsia [illegible] Kidney Complaint, a[illegible] many remedies, but [illegible] came very bad and [illegible] I sent to your Agent [illegible] bottle of your Indian [illegible] not hesitate to say tha[illegible] am completely cured [illegible] man. Last week my [illegible] with severe Headache [illegible] your valuable medicine.
CURES DYSPEPSIA [illegible]
Westport, [illegible]
Dear Sir:—I have [illegible] Dyspepsia for about [illegible] Indian Blood Syrup is [illegible] ever helped me. I wo[illegible] from this disease to give [illegible] trial.
"Sole General Agent [illegible] op and Lyman, No. 2[illegible] Toronto. Also Agents [illegible] Healing Syrup, an Engl[illegible] is well known as a v[illegible] Blood Purifier througho[illegible]

The widow of the [illegible] Countess von Wrangel, [illegible]sis, after having celebr[illegible] wedding.

Mr. Mackay, the Bon[illegible] said to have become mor[illegible] so many adventurers and [illegible] practiced on him that b[illegible] human nature.

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 7. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1880. WHOLE NO. 7

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

... Local Intelligence, County Business, ... Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1.25 in advance, $1.50 in three months, ... if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid except at the option of the publisher, ... parties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

... column, one year	....	$50 00
... do	do	30 00
... do	do	18 00
... do	do	10 00
...	do	4 60
... lines and under, first insertion..		50
Each subsequent insertion..........		15
... six to ten lines, first insertion..		75
Each subsequent insertion........		25
... ten lines, first insertion per line		8
Each subsequent insertion....		...

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday ... preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.
OFFICE.—Miller's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost.
BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS-AT LAW, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at ... Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
... FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor in Chancery, &c.
OFFICES—at Owen Sound and Markdale. ...—Office at Markdale, over W. J. Mc...'s store, open on Thursday of every ... 1-y

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
... 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
Money loaned at lowest rates on personal ... real estate. Lands bought and sold. ... and seller introduced free of commis...

DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches promptly ... to and carefully executed.
...—Money to Lend on Real Estate se...
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae.
REAL ESTATE AGENT. DURHAM ... County of Grey.
Money to Loan at reasonable interest, payable yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end ... per cent.—principal payable ... of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal ... interest yearly to suit Borrowers.
... for Sale. Mortgages bought and sold.
... 17, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and ... Insurance Agent. Commissioner ... &c. Conveyancer and Licensed ... for the County of Grey. Farmers, ... and Land Sales. Punctually attended and charges made very moderate.
...ville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
... LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low ... interest. Principal payable at the ... term of years, and interest half yearly ... or principal and interest repay... instalments.
A number of desirable Improved Farms ... sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing.
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, ... and Markdale. Having purchased ... Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's ... of original Field Notes, Plans, ... Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys ... the last fifty-five years, I am ... to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates ... Hills, Plans and Specifications ... Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. ... letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, ... will be promptly attended to.
... 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

... James J. White,
... to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, ... BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in ... when he will be prepared to perform ... operations required upon the mouth ... satisfactory manner, and upon ... terms. 1-y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
... leased the above hotel and thoroughly furnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. ... best of liquors and cigars kept. ... Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
... 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
... McGIRR, - - PROPRIETORS.
... accommodation for the travelling ... bar is well stocked with the ... Wines and Liquors and the best ... cigars.
... to and from all trains.
... 1880. 1-y

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST HOW RESTORED
We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay ... and permanent cure (without ...) of Nervous Debility, Mental and ... Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, ... resulting from excesses.
... in a sealed envelope, only six ... postage stamps.
... celebrated author, in this admirable ... clearly demonstrates, from thirty ... successful practice, that alarming con... may be radically cured without the ... use of internal medicine or the ... knife; pointing out a mode of ... simple, certain and effectual, by ... which every sufferer, no matter ... condition may be, may cure himself ... privately and radically.
... should be in the hands of every ... man in the land.
CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 ANN ST., NEW YORK.
... Box, 4586. 90ly

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.
DYSPEPSIA LIVER DISEASE
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City
LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870
9,000,000 Bottles.
This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.

MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed ... can ... After using your Indian ... Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.

MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.

Burford, Brant Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.

ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.

Mt. Forest,
Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me. MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.

MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.

W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves. NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.

Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy. MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.

DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial. W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northrop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

THE widow of the Field-Marshal, the Countess von Wrangel, died lately in Prussia, after having celebrated her diamond wedding.

MR. MACKAY, the Bonanza millionaire, is said to have become morose and suspicious, so many adventurers and impostors having practiced on him that he has lost faith in human nature.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

A Bridal Greeting.

On thy bridal morning
Skies are blue and bright;
With how sweet an aspect
Day has followed night!
O! thou gentle maiden,
With the amber hair,
Be thy future bright and pleasant
As this morn is fair.

Fashion Notes.

BUTTONS are more wildly extravagant than ever.

BOTH square and round trains are worn in evening toilet.

FANCY feathers show the influence of the craze for plaided effects.

SOME very small bonnets appear among late novelties in millinery.

THE "Abbe" is the new hat worn by ladies returned from abroad.

A TRIMMING much in vogue is black net embroidered with jet beads.

DEEP tucks on dresses are a recent revival of a fashion of ye olden time.

FRENCH modistes add flowers as accessories to all but the simplest dresses.

PLUSH roses form the favourite garnitures of many lovely evening dresses.

IRISH point and church lace form the most fashionable mull neck scarfs.

BLACK dresses still hold their own and are as elegant and fashionable as ever.

AFTER the rage for big bonnets has subsided, the medium sizes will probably be most worn.

BONNETS, muffs and costumes match when worn by the most fastidiously fashionable women.

JET or coloured crystal beads enrich all the richest trimmings and embroideries on dressy costumes.

Waifs.

A GOOD soldier is an easy catch. He is always ready for an engagement.

THE spots on the sun do not begin to create the disturbance produced by the freckles on the daughter.

WHEN a man and a woman are made one, the question "Which one?" is a bothersome one until it is settled, as it soon is.

A LADY assistant in a glove shop was almost mad when a fellow asked her if she had any nice dark-coloured kids.

WHEN does a budding young damsel burst into fruit?—When she becomes the apple of somebody's eye.

SOME crusty, rusty, fusty, musty, dusty, gusty curmudgeon of a man gave the following toast at a celebration:—"Our fire-engines—may they be like our old maids ever ready, but never wanted!"

"I CAN'T go to Europe," a lady is reported to have said; "I am reading forty-five continued stories, and my limited means would not let me pay the postage."

WHEN old Mrs. Pinaphor heard that a certain young lady had "gone to Europe to catch a husband," she innocently observed: "Why, is there no one in this country who will have the girl?"

THE faculty of an Ohio female seminary has issued orders that no pupil shall have more than one male visitor per week. The smart girls invite their young men to call on Sunday, so that when their fathers come on Monday the old men find themselves barred out.

A YOUNG man with an umbrella overtook an unprotected lady acquaintance in a rainstorm, and, extending his umbrella over her, requested the pleasure of acting as her rainbow. "Oh!" exclaimed the young lady, taking his arm, "you wish me to be your rain dear." Two souls with but a single umbrella, two forms that stepped as one.

Poetry of the Table.

More appetizing than all patent tonics is a perfectly arranged table, sparkling with cleanliness. So let us be a little extravagant in our fresh tablecloths, when soap, water, and a little labour are all we have had to pay. And now we must decide, shall we have the best china and do with some stoneware for every day? Or shall we pay ourselves the respect usually reserved for company? Clearly, we are the persons to whom it is of the most importance. Shall we sit down to odd plates and cracked saucers six days, that we may enjoy gilded china on the seventh? By no means. We will have plain white French china, which can always be matched, when broken, and we will sit down to it every day. In the same way we will bring out the plated knives and silver forks, and partake of our food with a sense of our own deserts. We shall feel increased respect for ourselves, also, with napkins and butter plates; so those we will have.

A Romantic Match.

A Boston bookseller tells a very romantic story as follows: At one time I had prepared boxes of fancy paper with a fancy initial or pet name embossed in it, and I put this up at $1 a box, and advertised it widely. One day I had an order from California, from a Miss Susie——. The box was done up, addressed to her, and lay about here, when a young Englishman came in and wanted to write a letter. I gave him the materials and a place, when his eye caught the address on this box.

"Have you the order that came for that box of paper?" he asked.

"Yes," I replied, "it is about somewhere."

"Would you mind sending it up to my hotel? If it is what I think, I shall leave for California to-night."

I found it and sent it around, and heard no more about it for perhaps three months, when one day the young man, with a lady on his arm, walked in. "I want to present you to my wife," he said. "We could not leave this country till we had thanked you for your part in bringing us together." The denouement was quite a romance. The young man was the son of an aristocratic family, and the girl the daughter of the gardener. But love levels all distinctions, and the young man felt this girl to be the chosen companion of his life. To break off the attachment his father had sent him to the continent, and dispatched the gardener and his pretty daughter to America, where the young man had followed them, ignorant of their address, and at last finding it through the chance of the box of paper.

A Girl Monk.

Matrena Ivanovna, a Russian peasant girl of two-and-twenty, has recently acquired considerable notoriety in her native land, says The London Telegraph, through the fact that, under the monastic designation of "Father Michael," she succeeded in passing several months in the cloister of Staraja Ladoga, without incurring the least suspicion on the part of her fellow-monks that she was other than she seemed to be. Forced by her father to marry a person whom she detested, she disappeared from her home on the day succeeding her wedding, and, upon search being made, her clothes and two long plaits of her "back hair" were found near the Wolchoff river, as well as a letter in her handwriting, stating that, rather than live with her husband, she had resolved to drown herself. Her relatives, believing that she had really committed suicide, forbore any further inquiry, and mourned for her as one dead. She, however, dressed in man's clothing, applied last March for admission to the above-named monastery, and was duly received into the confraternity on probation, taking the minor vows, and officiating as coachman to the prior. There is no knowing to what ecclesiastical dignities she might not in time have risen, had not unkind fortune decreed that a native of her own village should have been sent to Staraja Ladoga by his master for correction at the hands of the brethren, his offence being inveterate drunkenness. Promptly recognized and denounced by this indiscreet toper as Matrena Ivanovna, a friend of his youth, "Father Michael" was handed over to the police authorities by the indignant monks, and is now awaiting trial for imposture upon a religious community—a crime likely to be visited with severe punishment in so priest-ridden a country as Russia.

Small Feet.

An American missionary, Miss Norwood, of Swatow, has lately described how the size of the foot is reduced in Chinese women. The binding of the foot is not begun till the child has learned to walk and do various things. The bandages are specially manufactured, and are about two inches wide and two yards long for the first year, and five yards long for subsequent years. The end of the strip is laid on the inside of the foot at the instep, then carried over the toes, under the foot, and round the heel, the toes being thus drawn toward and over the sole, while a bulge is produced on the instep, and a deep indentation in the sole. The indentation, it is considered, should measure about an inch and a half from the part of the foot that rests on the ground up to the instep. Successive layers of bandages are put on till the strip is all used, and the end is then sewn tightly to the ground. Large quantities of powdered alum are used to prevent ulceration, and lessen the offensive odour. After a month the foot is put in hot water to soak some time; then the bandage is carefully unwound, much dead cuticle coming off with it. Ulcers and other sores are often found on the foot. Frequently, too, a large piece of flesh sloughs off the soles, and one or two toes may even drop off, in which case the woman feels afterward repaid by having smaller and more delicate feet. Each time the bandage is taken off the feet are kneaded, to make the joints more flexible, and are then bound up again as quickly as possible with a fresh bandage, which is drawn up more tightly. During the first year the pain is so intense that the victim can do nothing, and for about two years the foot aches continually, and is the seat of a pain which is like the pricking of sharp needles. With continued rigorous binding, the foot in two years becomes dead, and ceases to ache, and the whole leg, from the knee downward, becomes shrunk, so as to be little more than skin and bone. When once formed, the "golden lily," as the Chinese lady calls her delicate little foot, can never recover its original shape.

How Married Woman Goes to Sleep.

There is an article going the rounds entitled "How Girls Go to Sleep." The manner in which they go to sleep, according to the article, can't hold a candle to the way a married woman goes to sleep. Instead of thinking what she would have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while snugly tucked up in bed, the old man is scratching his legs in front of the fire, and wondering how he will pay the next month's rent. Suddenly she says:

"James, did you lock the door?"

"Which door?" says Jim.

"The cellar door," she says.

"No," says James.

"Well, you had better go down and lock it, for I heard some person in the back-yard last night."

Accordingly Jim paddles down stairs and locks the door. About the time James returns and is going to get into bed, she remarks:

"Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," said James.

"Well, if it isn't shut the cat will get up into the bedroom."

"Let her come up, then," says James, ill-naturedly.

"My goodness, no," returned the wife. "She'd suck the baby's breath."

Then James paddles down stairs again, and steps on a tack and closes the stair door, and curses the cat and returns to the bedroom. Just as he begins to climb into his couch his wife observes:

"I forgot to bring up some water. Suppose you bring up some in the big tin."

And so James with a muttered curse goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair, and rakes all the tinware off the wall in search of the "big" tin, and then jerks the stair door open and howls:

"Where the deuce are the matches?"

She gives him minute instructions where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the neighbourhood raised about it. After which James finds the matches, procures the water, comes up stairs, and prepares himself to retire. Before accomplishing this feat the wife suddenly remembers that she forgot to chain the dog. A trip to the kennel follows, and he once more jumps into bed.

Presently his wife says:

"James, let's have an understanding about money matters. Now next week, I've got to pay—"

"I don't know what you'll have to pay, and I don't care," shouts James, as he lurches around and jams his face against the wall; "all I want now is sleep."

"That's all very well for you," snaps his wife, as she pulls the covers viciously; "you never think of the worry and trouble I have."

A Mixed Telephone.

The telephone, the wonderful offspring of Edison's great mind, is an instrument which is now looked upon as indispensable to the world's good, but it, like a great many other things, will sometimes get out of humor and act in a very crooked manner.

Mr. Charles Augustus Fitzmont is an enterprising but bashful young clerk, whose place of business is on King street, and he is most warmly attached to a fair maiden who lives in an up-town residence with a telephone in it. Oft the telephone has been used as a medium through which he has breathed words of heart-pounding love in the ears of the one he so fondly worshipped, and never did he know it to fail in the performance of its duty until yesterday, when it caused him to moan—yes, to tremble like an aspen leaf, and smite one knee against the other.

At the time mentioned Charles had not seen his affinity for over forty-eight hours, and he determined to inform her of whom he was fondly dreaming that he would be up to the house that night and sit out on the front porch with her and sigh at the moon. Seeking the telephone while no one was in the office, he said:

"Is Miss Minnie at home?"

"Yes."

"Tell her to step to the 'phone, please."

"Is that you, Charlie?" inquired a cooing voice skimming along the wire.

"Yes, dearest, it is your own Charles."

"Oh, Charlie, what made you stay away so long? You must come up to-night because——"

"The baby was born an hour ago."

"Wh-at baby?"

"Your own baby."

"My baby!" shrieked the young woman, "why, I'm—I'm surprised that you—you would say such a thing. I—I didn't expect it——"

"Neither did I; I just heard it a moment ago."

"You don't believe this—this fearful report? Say—say you don't. You know I haven't got a baby. I never did have a baby in my life," howled the young woman in a frenzy.

"Ha! ha! old fellow, you feel so proud and happy that you have to indulge in a joke, do you? Allow me to congratulate you. It's a boy, and weighs twelve pounds. Good-bye."

"Miss Bunter—I say, Miss Bunter——"

"Oh, Charlie! what is the matter?"

"Matter enough. I want to know the man's name who told you that scandalous falsehood. I'll have his gore before sunrise. I'll follow him over sixteen different states to kill him. I'll crush him. I'll mutilate him. Tell me, was it that squint-eyed Bangs who brought that horrible lie to your ears?"

"What lie, Charlie? What do you mean?"

"I want to know who told you that—that I had a baby born to me an hour ago that weighed twelve pounds. Who is the villain?"

A piercing shriek was the only reply that came over the wire, and then Charles realized for the first time that there was some dreadful mistake, that the telephone had become mixed, and he fainted.

Among Famous Authors.

A BLIND MAN'S RECOLLECTIONS OF CELEBRATED ENGLISH WRITERS.

(Cor. Indianapolis Journal.)

"I believe you were a London publisher?"

"Yes; my eyes were good then, and I was in the thick of the trade. I was the confidential clerk of Chapman & Hall, when they became Dickens' publishers, and afterward I set up for myself."

"Did you see much of Dickens?"

"Not very much. He seldom came to office except to draw his money, and he usually overdrew. He inclined to dress rather 'loud,' and it was natural enough that his head was turned for a time by his extraordinary success. It was something more than forty years ago; it was in 1836-'37 and '38 that he was a frequent visitor at Chapman & Hall's."

"I was a member of the celebrated Museum club," he continued, after a short pause; "it was the precursor of the now still more famous Savage club, composed almost wholly of authors and publishers. Inside of the Museum club was another—the Zodiac club—of which there were always fourteen members, one each for ten signs of the zodiac, and two each for the other two—Pisces and Gemini. I belonged to this, also, and Douglas Jerrold, Leigh Hunt, George Henry Lewes, Francis Mahony ("Father Prout"), Landseer, Macready, John Leech, and others, were members.

"Each member was named after some sign in the zodiac and there was a fine of one penny for addressing a man by any but his zodiacal name. Douglas Jerrold, I remember, was 'Scorpio;' Moriarty, an Irish writer, was 'Taurus,' and Dr. Erasmus Wilson, a sort of later Kit North, and author of standard works on skin diseases—was 'Cancer.' I remember a joke of Leigh Hunt's at dinner one day. Lewes was carving a young pig, I think—and he said to Father Prout: 'What part will you have?' 'My favourite part—you know what it is,' said Father Prout. Lewes was nonplussed for a moment, but Hunt exclaimed: 'Give him the pope's eye—he's always trying to get the pope's eye!' You know the pope's eye is the delicate gland in the pig's thigh. Father Prout's relation to the Catholic church gave point to Hunt's suggestion, which was greeted with great laughter. Father Prout was a character. He bothered poor Tom Moor sadly, taking one of his finest songs and translating it into Greek, and then publishing them, side by side, and charging Moore with plagiarism."

"What sort of a man was Leigh Hunt?"

"Cheerful—always cheerful and hopeful, though he had a hard time of it. About 1810 he was fined £500, and imprisoned for two years, for speaking of George, the prince of Wales, as a 'fat Adonis of fifty,' and there are not many men who could have borne the infliction more serenely. He obtained the pension of £200 from the crown, from George's niece, Queen Victoria, when he was a member of the Zodiac club. He was the original of Dickens' 'Skimpole,' you know."

"But Dickens could hardly have thought unkindly of him," I suggested, "for the very year before he wrote 'Bleak House,' he took the lead in a series of unprecedented entertainments for Leigh Hunt's benefit, Dickens, Douglas Jerrold, Cruikshank, Mark Lemon, Lewes, and others, going over the kingdom as a company of strolling actors, to raise money for the impoverished author."

"Oh, no," said Mr. Addey, "Dickens certainly would not wish to harm or offend Leigh Hunt, but the latter's happy-go lucky disposition undoubtedly suggested the extravagant shiftlessness and sunny gabble of Skimpole, notwithstanding."

"What sort of looking man was Jerrold?"

"He was a little man, about five feet high, long hair, prominent cheek bones, a keen eye, and his form a little bent, and he looked up at you with a comical wag of his head. I knew him very well. He was really kind-hearted and sympathetic, but he was so fond of fun and so sarcastic in his method that he sometimes indulged his wit at the expense of other people's feelings. Not many got ahead of him. His publishers, Bradbury & Evans, who, he thought, had treated him rather shabbily, gave him a couple of sucking pigs, which he took out to his suburban cottage, and put in a pen. He named them—one Bradbury and the other Evans. A couple of months after his publishers came out and dined with him. After dinner he took them out and showed them his pigs, and said: 'I have named them after you, gentlemen. They are growing wonderfully, and I believe if I keep them they will grow the greatest hogs in Europe, and I do not forget the donors!'"

"Hepworth Dixon was a member of our club too; Jerrold always called him (behind his back) 'Hap-'orth Dixon.'"

"Did you ever meet Wordsworth or Rogers?"

"I never saw Wordsworth," said Mr. Addey. "He was an old man and he lived out at the lakes. Rogers I have seen, driving or walking through London, for he was a great gad-about, but he was a wealthy banker, and the literary world of London knew little of him. Kit North was in Scotland. I have met Lord Bulwer once or twice but I did not know him very well. Thackeray used to drop in at our house occasionally. I remember that once Chapman said to him: 'Thackeray, what are you going to do to-night? A lot of our fellows are going to dine at my house, and I wish you'd come.' Thackeray stood and thought a minute, and then said: 'Thank you, it is a strong temptation. But I have told my old mother I will take her to the opera, and I can't bear to disappoint her. Count me in next time.' I fancy that reply is a key to Thackeray's character.

"Charles Kemble, the actor, was one whom I occasionally met in society. He was very deaf, and I remember that once somebody asked him a question about a well-known speaker, just as a gentleman began to sing. All unconscious of the music, Kemble spoke up loud enough to be heard by everybody, and said: "He's an arrant humbug! Nobody ought to listen to him!" Explanations followed. I once attended what might properly be called a star performance of "The Merry Wives of Winsor,' Mark Lemon as Falstaff, John Forester as Ford, George Henry Lewes as the Welsh parson, and Dickens and Jerrold as Slender and Shallow. The ladies were professionals. You can imagine that the performance was most attractive.

"I remember well two things that Jerrold frequently repeated. One was that line of poetry. 'The sea that moaneth for the rest that never comes,' and the other was 'There's always sunshine somewhere in the world.'"

Overdue Railway Tickets.

An important question will be settled by law before very long. It has been asked over and over again what right any railway company has to dictate at what time a traveller should use the ticket he buys. As well, it is thought allow the grocer to dictate to his customer within what dates he must finish a certain pound of sugar. The company takes money and agrees to carry a passenger to a certain destination. As long as the ticket remains uncancelled, the question is, has that traveller not a perfect right to use that ticket whenever he chooses. A case in point has occurred this week. A gentleman bought a return ticket to Toronto on the 10th of September, which was considered "good" till the 20th. He was one of the judges at the exhibition. While here, he was persuaded to go on to Hamilton, to perform the same duty there, and then, on again to London. He bought return tickets over the Great Western, which were all honoured, but when he offered his ticket to the conductor on the Grand Trunk, it was refused, and money was demanded on pain of ejectment from the train. The gentleman refused to pay, and accordingly was put off at Scarborough. It is understood that an action for damages, is to be the result of this affair, and it will no doubt be watched with great interest, as the matter is one of no small importance.

A NUMBER of ladies were chatting about their dislike of the use of tobacco by their husbands, when one of them declared, "I never kiss my husband because he smokes!" and then amid the general silence she added—"No, I kiss him because I like to."

To the Victors Belong the Spoils.

None but those who have had a pretty long residence in the United States and have taken some active part in the manipulation and working of the political "machine," can have anything like a correct idea of the depth of degradation and demoralization to which the politics of that country have been reduced, and, in the judgment of the most thoughtful men of the nation, no other one cause has contributed so largely to bring about this deplorable state of things, as the infamous doctrine indicated by the words which stand at the head of this article. However valuable may have been the service which General Andrew Jackson rendered his country in his quality as military leader, it has been a thousand times more than counter-balanced by the adoption of this principle in the exercise of his patronage as the chief magistrate of the republic. The day in which he summarily and arbitrarily ejected five hundred postmasters from office, to make room for as many of his own partisans, was one of the very darkest days in the history of the country. Of course others have not been slow to follow his mischievous example; but "to him," as a recent writer has truthfully said, "must be awarded the unenviable, if not execrable, distinction of accomplishing at once the ruin and prostitition of American politics." One party having adopted this principle, a sort of necessity was created for its adoption by whatever party or parties might thereafter attempt to oppose it. No other political organization could hope to be successful in fighting it, without offering its constituents, at least, as strong inducements as it offered; especially as no one, or at most but few, appeared to have any very clear perception of the essential corruption of this thing itself, or of the baneful consequences which it would produce, and the public sentiment of the country was not strong enough against the infamous proceeding, to nip it in the bud.

The result has been that the government of the country has in a great measure been taken out of the hands of the best men of the nation, and handed over to a set of sharks, whose chief interest in public affairs lies in the opportunity which they afford them of gorging themselves at the public expense. The dignity and emolument—chiefly the latter, for the dignity of official life in the United States, as a rule, is as near zero as possible—are simply looked upon as prizes to be fought for by contending factions, spoils which are to be distributed among the most brazen and self-asserting of the one that happens to be victorious. No wonder that the very name of "politician" has become the synonym of all that is selfish, vile, and contemptible. It is scarcely a matter of surprise that there are thousands of estimable American citizens who would just as soon be called thief, as politician. This is not because there is necessarily anything mean or contemptible in politics; so far from this being the case, there is no nobler science than the science of government, and no sphere of activity in which men can engage more honourable than the management of the public affairs of a great, enlightened and free people. If there be any arena in which the very highest qualities of manhood and citizenship may be most appropriately displayed, any field of action which might be most emphatically styled "the sphere for men" one would think it was this one. But when political life has become degraded into an unseemly and brutal wrangle for personal aggrandizement—a battle between a couple of packs of hungry curs contending for a bone—no wonder that the gorge of respectable men rises at the mention of a politician.

The fact is, all the incidental evils connected with party government, have been aggravated to the highest degree by this doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils;" until, as an American writer says, "The modern political party is more than a machine; it is a huge car of Juggernaut that periodically rolls through the length of this republic, ruthlessly crushing out all pure political motives, all disinterested political conduct, and all noble political action. The stench which rises from these rushed and mangled political sacrifices, has poisoned the moral atmosphere, and inoculated corruption and fraud into the deepest veins and arteries of the body politic.' Black as this picture is, it can scarcely be said that the colour is laid on too thickly. Nor is it any wonder that this appalling state of things has been reached, when we look at the facts as they exist at this very moment. The two great "machines" are about to be set in motion. At least one million of office-holders,—Federal, State, county, and city, including their wives and children—are to-day in breathless anxiety, fear, and suspense, lest the result of the November elections shall bring some great calamity upon them, in the loss of employment, income, and the certainty of a livelihood. On the other hand, another million, or, perhaps, nearer two millions, Federal, State, county, and city, office-seekers, with their wives, children, and relatives, are secretly cherishing the hope, and feasting upon the golden vision of a fat office, and a more easy and luxurious life.

What, in the very nature of things, can the principles and policies of parties, or even the interests of the Commonwealth, be to these feverish and excited millions, or to the bulk of them, in comparison with their own personal interests, and the interests of their families and friends, whose very means of subsistence, and all that gives them the semblance of respectability, and importance, are at stake. "What proportion of public attention"—we still quote from the same writer—"could be directed to, or what genuine disinterested interest could be felt in any political reform in the midst of such a low, vulgar, and contemptible bread-and-butter scramble." But such is politics in the United States, and such they may be, and most likely will be in this country, unless the evil is averted by the utmost watchfulness and patriotic firmness on the part of public leading men; and this can scarcely be expected if their hands are not strengthened by the thoughtful and influential classes of society. "To be forewarned is to be forearmed," and if we, in this country, adopt the pernicious doctrine which has wrought so much mischief elsewhere, we well deserve to be punished.

A Famous Paris Wit.

The famous Romieu was one day caught in a shower, and forced to seek refuge in a doorway of the opera house.

It was 6 o'clock already, and he had an engagement at the Cafe de Paris for that very hour. The rain fell in torrents. There was no carriage to be had. He had no umbrella. What was to be done?

While he was cursing his bad luck, a gentleman with a large umbrella passed by.

Romieu was seized with a sudden inspiration. He rushed out and grasped the stranger by the arm, and gravely installed himself under the protecting umbrella.

"I am overjoyed to see you," he immediately began. "I have been looking for you for two weeks. I wanted to tell you about Clementine."

Without giving the stranger time to express his surprise, Romieu rattled away with gossip and anecdote until he had led his unknown companion to the door of the Cafe de Paris.

Then he glanced at him with a face full of well-feigned astonishment:

"Pardon, monsieur," he cried, "it seems I am mistaken."

"I believe so," said the stranger.

"The devil!" added Romieu, "be discreet; don't repeat what I've told you."

"I promise you."

"A thousand pardons."

Romieu hastens within the cafe and tells the adventure to his friends, amid great laughter.

Suddenly one of them says:

"Your cravat is rumpled."

Romieu puts his hand to his neck and turns pale. His pin, a valuable sapphire, is gone. A further examination—and his purse and watch are gone.

The man with the umbrella was a pick-pocket.

The friends laugh again, but Romieu doesn't join them.

TWIN street, at Piper City, Ill., was so named because six pairs of twins were born in it within a few years.

The Island of Madeira.

One of the principal drawbacks to Madeira is the difficulty of getting about. There are no carriage roads, and the horse tracks are steep pitches up and down; they are also almost invariably paved with hard pebbles. This renders it impossible to ride anywhere except at a foot's pace, so that the time consumed in going a few miles is very great, and the mode of progression very tiresome. On the other hand, the island ponies, shod in a peculiar manner to encounter the aforesaid roads, are usually sure-footed and good walkers, so that within a certain distance of Funchal pleasant expeditions are to be made if you find the time and strength. Thus the fine mountain scenery of the Grand Corral—a gloomy gorge, into which you look down some 2,000 feet or so from the mountains overhanging it—the Ribiero Frio, and other landscapes beautiful of their kind, can on well-chosen days be visited without much difficulty. To get further afield is not so easy. There are but few tolerable hotels in the country districts, and you never can be sure that you will not find the higher levels wrapped in mist or drenched with rain, even whilst fine weather is prevailing. I am speaking of the winter months; anybody who happened to pass a summer in Madeira could visit all parts of the island readily enough.

The remark that there are few comfortable inns out of Funchal does not apply to Santa Cruz (Santa Cruz in Madeira, I mean). The hotel there belongs to a Senhor Gonzalez, but is mainly upheld by the untiring exertions of a worthy woman called Maria. She is a Portuguese by birth, but speaks English quite well, and is indefatigable in her efforts to please. This quiet inn is a pleasant change from the hot tables d'hotes at Funchal; the village may be perhaps somewhat cooler, and is said to possess a lighter and finer air; it is also well situated as a place to make excursions from. A mile or two beyond it lies the well-known Machicho Bay, where, according to the tradition, Madeira was first landed upon by the Englishman Machin. The story is that this Machin, an English esquire, incurred the resentment of a powerful family by gaining the affections of the daughter of its chief. He was thrown into prison, but escaped, and then persuaded the lady to elope with him to France. A violent storm drove their vessel for thirteen days in a southerly direction, and at last they found themselves in a small brig on the shores of an unknown island. Here they landed, but the fatigues of the voyage had exhausted the strength of Machin's companion, Anna d'Arfet; she died there, and was there buried. The fragments of a cross erected over her grave are still shown by the Machico villagers. Her lover did not long survive her, and his companions, in their attempt to sail away home, fell into the hands of the Moors. During their captivity they spoke of this island to an old Portuguese pilot, who, on being ransomed, and returning to his own country, suggested and accompanied the first expedition to Madeira which thus became a dependency of Portugal. Skepticism, of course, has been at work upon this old national tale, but there seems no reason for rejecting the legend, except that it is a legend, and that the fashionable wisdom of the hour pronounces, as usual, anything which has long been a matter of popular belief to be of necessity incredible; otherwise the narrative hangs perfectly well together in all its parts, and, moreover, furnishes a reason why the Portuguese government sent out their expedition a little later to discover the island so reported to them—a reason which otherwise would be wanting. Beyond this bay you can proceed in a boat, along another range of rugged and lofty hills, to the supposed fossil beds at the extremity of the island: these fossils are apparently concretions of lime, which have put on the appearance of branches or roots, as the case may be. An ignorant person would believe that they had formed themselves round real pieces of wood, and that these have decayed, leaving their form to the encompassing stone; but geologists, I fancy, put ... opinion aside, and look upon them as being what they are, merely in obedience to some caprice of nature; they are not, according to them, fossils at all, but merely a good imitation of fossils.

A New Safety Sail Boat.

To the Editor of the Scientific American:

"Don't trust yourself in that craft; you'll be overboard sure." Such was the warning of a professional boatman at the barge office on the Battery, as I stepped upon a frail boat on a "fresh" afternoon. I think I know something of boats myself, and but that I knew this one to be provided with means intended to overcome the very danger against which the honest boatman warned me, I should have more than hesitated. But the pursuit of science must be deterred by no dangers, and, moreover, my pursuit in this instance was in behalf of the whole world, as represented by the Scientific American.

The Jane was an especially dangerous looking craft, 18 or 20 feet long, whose bottom and deck formed the sharp V-shaped edge which proclaim an entire want of bearing power, while her immense sails, main and jib, were ample for a boat of twice her dimensions. Her captain was a New Zealander, whose motions were the reverse of safety-inspiring. My own conception of the care needful under the existing circumstances had no place with him, and, but for entire faith in my ability to swim, I should never have ventured.

As the Jane shot beyond the pier head, her huge sails were struck by a blast more than sufficient for instant destruction. Involuntarily I made ready for an impromptu bath, and the boatman tauntingly called out, "What'd I tell ye?" but only the mast yielded. The boat came to her bearings and moved on as steadily as though impelled by the mildest zephyr. The triumph was already complete; but more was to come. Presently we were in a large seaway, and, with our good speed, a large inflow of sea water over the low and sharp bow was a matter of course. In that, also, I was agreeably disappointed. The boat, instead of carrying the weight of the wind and being thus forced through the sea, rose to it and she glided easily over. Again it was the mast that yielded—yielded to the motion of the boat as easily as before it yielded to the force of the blast. The surplus force of wind, instead of racking the boat and making misery for her passengers, was simply "spilled" over the top of the sail. The motion was free from the thumps and jars usual under the same circumstances.

How all this was accomplished may be difficult of explanation without the aid of an engraving. Instead of being "stepped" in the usual way, the mast was held in a rocking shaft at the deck, and to the keel, on either side, springs were attached, having their opposite ends secured under the deck. Thus the mast, in the absence of pressure, remained upright, but under pressure yielded on either side. The amount of pressure needful to compel this yielding was regulated by nuts and screw on a guide rod inside the springs. A second pair of springs, placed longitudinally under the deck, were connected by pulleys with the shrouds, and these aided to stiffen the mast while they yielded to its movements under pressure.

For pleasure boats, this spring mast is a great addition. It not only insures safety, but gives an ease of motion which cannot but prove especially delightful to those who are timid upon the water. More than this, it permits an unvarying course for the boat, and thus avoids the checks and delays inseparable from "luffing," as also the necessity of unusual skill and care in the management of even a "crank" vessel in a "flowy" wind.

M. S. B.

New York, October, 1880.

[The invention, a practical trial of which is above described, is that of Mr. John McLeod, Hill's Pavilion, Flushing, N. Y. A patent has been allowed. It appears to be a really valuable and practical improvement.—Eds. Scientific American.]

THE English Bank of San Francisco, with a capital of three millions, has returned one million of dollars to its shareholders. The great falling off in business does not afford profitable employment for their former capital.

ART AND DRAMATIC GOSSIP.

An Aspiration.

(From the Elmira Telegram.)

I want to be a minister,
And with them take my stand;
Then in the heated summer months
I'd roam all o'er this land.
I'd like to travel for half fare—
The ministers all do;
I'd like to lay off for three months—
And draw my salary, too!

So would we, but we can't.

MLLE. DE LA RAMEE (Ouida) threatens M. Labouchere, the editor of Truth, with a lawsuit, for having described her unpleasingly.

MISS BRADDON (Mrs. Maxwell) had a stepson married lately, with much ceremony, to Miss Wyndham, the daughter of a former lessee of the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh.

BEETHOVEN'S piano is for sale at Klausenburg, Transylvania, if it has not been already sold. It was given to the musician at the time of the composition of Fidelio, by its maker. It is quite richly ornamented, and one of its panels bears the portrait of the great artist as he looked at twenty.

MRS. ANNIE FIELDS, who is about to publish her first book, other writings of hers having been "printed, not published," is a woman of great benevolence and much strength of character. She was married at the age of seventeen, and taken abroad, visiting Tennyson, the Brownings, and others, and shaping her still expanding nature by companionship with the best that England and Italy could offer. The artists in Rome used to call her "La Bella Donna"—and very aptly, for with her fair skin and its rich colour, her irresistible smile, her great brown eyes, and her wealth of dark brown hair, full of ruddy and golden lights and shadows, she was then, and is still, an exceedingly beautiful woman.

A PASSION play, entitled "The Passion and Death of Our Lord Jesus Christ," was lately produced in Havana by a Spanish theatrical company. Leopoldo Buron, an actor of considerable ability, personated Christ. The piece was largely spectacular, the tableaux of Christ blessing little children, the entry into Jerusalem, the betrayal, the last supper, and the crucifixion being highly artistic. The prayer of Christ on the mountain was introduced with mechanical effects, an angel descending with a silver chalice, and floating away after he had drunk. Ida Williams, describing the play in a letter to the Fishkill Standard, says: "Then was to follow the crucifixion. I had been wrought up to a religious frenzy. The man whom I had seen scourged had become divine in my eyes. Our box commanded a perfect view of the stage, and from the adjoining ante-room we could see behind the scenes. I hoped to get a nearer view of Buron, and looking over saw the three crosses—with Buron and the two with him—waiting to raise the curtain till my hero, the man I had almost deified, had finished his cigar. No more grotesque sight can be imagined—the three in flesh-coloured silk tights, wound about the loins with linen, the Christ painted to look the sorrowing pained martyr upon the cross—smoking a cigar! I returned to the box again. Buron was a man after all, and a very human one.'

GENERAL.

THE Hibernian Bible Society has circulated in Ireland, since it was formed, nearly 4,5000,000 copies of the Bible.

AN Oregon ranchman threw a lasso clumsily, and the noose fell around his own neck. Just then the horse unseated him, and, one end of the rope being fast to the saddle, he was choked to death.

A BILL collector returned to Memphis on horseback, with a bag full of gold and silver coin. The horse ran away, the bag burst, and a great crowd followed for a mile, picking up the money, none of which has been recovered.

Two and a half millions of tropical oranges were received in the past six months at San Francisco from the French islands of Tahiti. They have come in equal numbers every month from March to September, showing that the trees are in perpetual bearing.

THE Buddhists of Japan have established a theological school in imitation of Christians. Their need for such a school is shown by the fact that a Buddhist priest in Osaka, Japan, lately told the Rev. Mr. De Forest that 80,000 miles north of Osaka there was a huge square mountain, on the other side of which was heaven.

ELISHA BLISS, JR., who lately died at Hartford, Conn., made a fortune by discovering the fun of Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad" while the work was in manuscript. Twain had tried in vain to secure a publisher, and was about to throw the matter aside in despair, when a journalist friend sent him to Bliss, who was President of a subscription book company.

THE Crown Prince of Austria during the late military manœuvres in Prussia, repeatedly expressed to several high officers his admiration of the German army. It was, he said, the first in the world. He added, however, that in the Austrian army ceaseless care and labour had brought about such a change as might well permit it to take a place at the side of the German host.

THERE are several hundred physicians in this country and Europe practising under diplomas granted by the New England University of Arts and Sciences. These documents are dated at Boston, but the institution was unknown there, and the police could not find it at all. A newspaper reporter, however, discovered it in the suburban residence of Dr. Harry C. Stickney. It consisted simply of a stock of blank diplomas, handsomely engraved, which Stickney filled out and sold for almost any price that an applicant would pay.

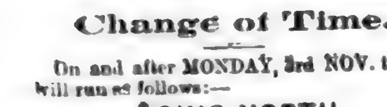
A LONDON undertaker, has, within the last few weeks, driven through the city as an advertisement, an enormous coffin, mounted on a base and drawn by five horses. The final receptacle is got up in the most gaudy colours, ornamented with the name and address of the purveyor on the outside, and lined within with satin, or some other comfortable and pleasant-looking material. A live corpse, with a sheet about him, did duty in the luxurious tenement, just to let the public see what a fine time one would have of it who should be lucky enough to obtain possession of the lodgment in perpetuity.

SIR CHARLES DILKE, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs in England, has a pretty Provencal home to which he always retires when the session is over. There he receives little or no company, keeps regular hours, is a strict teetotaler, and divides his time between grapes and gardening. His grapes have won medals, and some excellent wine has been made on the estate, though the lord thereof never tasted of it. He has been employed for the last six years or so on a history of Europe during the nineteenth century, a book very much wanted if only the author will limit himself to twenty octavos at the most.

THE lines of railway in the five divisions of the earth cost, in round numbers, $16,000,000,000, and would, according to Baron Kolb, reach eight times round the globe, although it is but little over half a century since the first railway worked by steam was opened between Darlington and Stockton, Sept. 27, 1825, and between Manchester and Liverpool, Sept. 15, 1830. It is shown that in France, previous to the existence of railway, there was one passenger in every 335,000 killed, and one out of every 30,000 wounded, whereas between 1835 and 1875 there was but one in 5,177,89) killed, and one in 580,450 wounded, so that we may infer that the tendency to accidents is yearly diminishing. Railway travelling in England is attended with greater risk than in any other country in Europe. A French statistician observes that if a person were to live continually in a railway carriage and spend all his time in railway travelling, the chances in favour of his dying from a railway accident would not occur until he was 960 years old.

THE Presbyterian congregation at Brussels, Ohio, made up a purse of $100 for their pastor, the Rev. Mr. Cunningham, to meet the expenses of his vacation. The reverend gentleman decided to spend the time and money in St. Louis, where an industrial fair was in progress. He had not been in that city an hour before he met an affable young man, who knew all about him and the folks at Brussels, and who brought him to a room where a game of chance was going on. The manager permitted the clergyman to draw several times without charge, and then informed him that there was $700 to his credit. The gambler proposed to pay this with a "good as gold" check for $800, which he professed to have won from a solid merchant, taking the $100 difference in money. The pastor fell into the trap, and parted with his $100, receiving a worthless check. At the police station he was asked if he had never read newspaper accounts of such swindles. "I only read the religious journals," he replied, "and never pay much attention to the secular press."

Toronto, Grey & Bruce R'y.



Change of Time.

On and after MONDAY, 3rd NOV. trains will run as follows:—

GOING NORTH.

Toronto,—Union Station, Dep.	7:30 a. m.	12:20 p. m.	5:00 p. m.
Carlton	7.52 a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
Weston	8.05 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
Humber Sum't	8.30 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
Woodbridge	8.45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
Bolton	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
Mono Road	9.50 a.m.	3.05 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Charleston	10.35 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4.45 p.m.
Orangevil'e Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p.m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Pricev'e	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2.50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
Williamsford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Fleshert'n & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.15 a.m.	3.10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10.15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a.m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—Arr.	11:15 a. m.	5:20 p. m.
Dep.	7.15 a.m.	11.35 a. m.	5.40 p. m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Smt	9.40 a.m.	2.05 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2 27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
TORONTO,—Union Station, Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Oct. 29th, 1880.

WE this week publish a letter from Mr. Wm. Brown, in which he draws the attention of the proper authorities to the slaughter-houses, and urges their immediate removal. Mr. Brown states his case strongly, and we have no doubt that the slaughter-houses have contributed in no small measure to the propagation of the fearful scourge which has prevailed here to such an alarming extent for the past two or three months: but we consider there is another and greater evil than this, and one which we do not believe would be for one moment tollerated in any other town or village in the Dominion. We allude to the grave-yard, which we might say was at our very doors. Sloping as the Village does from the said grave-yard, what must be the condition of the wells in its vicinity in such wet weather as we have had recently? This, we consider has done more to feed the disease than any other cause. Let our readers look at the matter calmly, and we think they will bear us out, in our assertion. Water naturally runs down hill, and in so doing where would it more likely empty itself than into every well in its course. Just think of it! Our wells being made the receptacles of the washings of a densely packed grave-yard that contains humanity in every stage of corruption, and who have died from the various diseases that flesh is heir to. In the primive days of Markdale probably no harm would result, as the houses were few and far between; but now that our Village is fast progressing and extending its limits, bringing the grave-yard into its very centrre, we think it is high time that any further interments therein were prohibited.

OWEN SOUND WATER WORKS.

The Owen Sound water works were formally opened on the 20th inst., and the occasion was observed as a civic holiday. In the evening a complimentry supper was tendered the proprietors, Messrs Parker & Notter. The completion of the works will be a great boon to the people of Owen Sound not only in a sanitary point but in case of fire, as, with a sufficient quantity of hose, and the assistance of the Steam Fire Engine, six powerful streams of water could be brought to bear on any builing, situated on the streets in which Pipes are laid. Messrs Parker & Notter deserve great credit for their enterprise, and we trust they will receive the reward that they justly merit. The works we are informed cost $35,000.

PRICENILLE.

From a Correspondent.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Saturday night last while Donald McArthur, of Glenelg, was proceeding homeward, his team became frightened and ran away. Mr. McArthur was thrown from the waggon, severely cut on the face and stunned. After some time he recovered from the dreadful shock and managed with difficulty—having lost a quantity of blood— to walk a few yards to the house of Mrs. McInnes. The services of Dr. Bennett were procured, and the injured man is doing as well as could be expected.

Mr. John McArthur is making active preparations to build on the site of the old drug store which was burnt last spring.

A horse belonging to Mrs. Watson, Old Durham Road, stolen last week was recovered in Mount Forrest by the authorities. The animal had been very much abused. The thief escaped.

The medicine man whose bed was confiscated by the medicine men, while the former was running a concert at the Commercial says he does not believe in Jubilees.

DUNDALK.

From our Correspondent.

It is all over town—mud. Each man carries a spade to dig himself out.

Mr Ketchum of Orangeville, has bought a lot in town, and will erect a tannery in the spring.

Mr. Connors is opening out a grocery and liquor store in Humphrey's new block.

Mr. Sloan, manager of Mr. Davidson's business, was given a farewell oyster supper at the Anglo American Hotel; a pleasant evening was spent. Mr. S. left for Toronto on Wednesday morning. Mr. Neil Strachn takes his place.

Mr. John Hanbury is pushing his rink, He has been but a short time at it and has the posts of one side up, nothing like push. We will be able to skate in it by July.

Mr. Peter McGregor is having his steam saw mill over-hauled and is building in the boiler with stone, he intends putting in a plainer shortly. Good for Peter.

Our town sports men were out on the war path last week and brought in two fine specimen of Deer.

Mr. Kenneth McAuley jr., of Proton has rented his farm to Mr. Wm. Robinson, and is erecting a frame dwelling in town where he is going to live.—FAST ASLEEP.

EUGENIA.

From a Correspondent.

One day last week while the threshing machine was in operation for the second day's threshing, at Mr. Edward Johnston's farm, on the 8th concession, Artemesia, some of the parties on the straw stack, which was raised on posts forming a shed underneath, became aware of some kind of a feeling as if they were sinking. Others imagined the barn was rising upwards, and was about to topple over on top of the straw stack, while others seeing the straw carriers thought they were on their way up the stack. They had only an instant for thought, however, when down went the stack through the shed, burying a colt and the greater part of Mr. Johnston's fowls. Although this is a considerable loss to Mr. Johnston, yet he is thankful that no lives were lost. His boy had been playing near the stack a short time previous, but fortunately had got out of harms way before the accident. Some of the hands also had but shortly come from under it. There was nearly two days' threshing of straw on the shed.

Thieving still continues. Report has it that some person in Osprey had a steer stolen. Flour, butter and other eatables are disappearing. Shall it become necessary to organize a Vigilence Committee?

Some of our Meaford Road neighbors have went by the light of the moon.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE T., G. & B. RAILWAY BONUS QUESTION.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR—I have observed some letters in your columns of late in regard to the proposed Railroad Bonus. It seems to me that our Reeve, Dr. Christoe, has made himself unnecessarily conspicuous in his opposition to all further aid being given. He professes to do so in the public interest—in the interests of the pockets of the ratepayers of Artemesia. Does any one suppose for a moment that Dr. Christoe, or any one in Flesherton Village, would oppose any bonus to the Road, if the Company agreed to run a spur into their Village? Is it not known to every one around, that the Flesherton people have suggested [illegible] plan, either to abolish part of the present Road and run it into the Village, or to run a spur from the Station to Flesherton? Is it not a fact, that pressure has from time to time been brought to bear upon the Management of the Railroad to induce them to do so; and is it not also a fact, that the Management of the Road have given them courteously to understand, that the Railroad Company could incur no such preposterous expense; but that if they chose to make the spur themselves it could be utilized for their advantage. Nobody, I suppose, would have the smallest objection to Flesherton Village having a spur run into it, if they put their hands into their own pockets and pay for it; but because, forsooth, the Railroad Company will not put itself to the useless and, to other localities, unfair expense of giving them a special road, therefore the people of that Village, as represented by Dr. Christoe, would like to do their utmost to kill any prospective bonus in aid of the Road.

Get over it as Dr. Christoe may, I, and many others, believe now, as we believed during the cauvas for the last bonus, that this is one of the chief reasons of Dr. Christoe's remarkable anxiety for the pockets of the ratepayers in this matter.

When the last bonus was asked, Dr. Christoe had no confidence in the late Company carrying out their pledges. Had they, however, pledged a spur to Flesheoton Village, it would have been quite refreshing to have heard the Doctor expiating on the incomparible difficulties the Company had overcome, and strongly recommending the ratepayers of Artemesia to manifest their confidence in the Company by giving them without hesitation a respectable bonus. Last June Dr. Christoe had great confidence in the Grany Trunk; now, however, the Grand Trunk has lost the Doctor's confidence too. What will become of the Grand Trunk? With the loss of Dr. Christoe's confidence the G. T. Railway may write upon their locomotives, "Ichabod." Its shares will fall to nothing, and its prosperity will vanish! Neither has the Doctor any confidence in the Ontario Parliament. He has no confidence that that House, any more than the Grand Trunk Board will ratify anything that Manager Hickson and the T., G. & B. Railway Company may agree upon. The fact is, the Doctor has no confidence in anything or any body but himself, and railroad facilities for Flesherton Village. It has often been remarked that the greatest scroundrel in the very act of trying to rogue you, is the first to call you scoundrel. In the same way, as a general rule, the man who has no confidence in anything or any body, don't deserve confidence himself.—Last June, when the former bonus was being submitted, Flesherton was offered a rebate of something like one cent per bushel on all grain bought there. At the time I thought this an unnecessary and uncalled for proceeding on the part of the Company; but although an interested party I for one made no objection, anxious as I was, on public grounds, for the passing of the by-law, and the result showed that such special offers are accepted without gratitude, and only feed the desires they are intended to gratify, as all such special rates generally do.

The proposed by-law at present only asks for $12,000, being a little over one-half of what was asked last June. At that time the general opinion amongst our farmers seemed to be, that it would be better if the Grand Trunk got the road. In that case the case would be altered, and they would not object to help if wanted. They have now got their wish. The bonus asked for is much reduced, and the Grand Trunk is to take the road in hand. It is asserted that the road is not likely to stop, bonus or no bonus. That, in my estimation, is quite possible. It is, I should think, likely enough that with the increasing prosperity of the country, and the growing trade with the North-west, an attempt would be made to carry on the road in some way, even should a bonus be refused. This, however, is only one of the probabilities; but even should it be realized what are we to gain by refusing the bonus. Allowing, for argument sake, that the road would go on, it could only do so for a long time in a dragging, discreditable way, hurtful to its own interests, and continuously ruinous to the credit and best interests of the sections of country it serves. It is our chief thoroughfare. Its discredit, financially lowers our credit, diminishes the value of property, and acts as a heavy drag on the general prosperity; whereas, by assisting to place the road on a sound financial basis, our credit as a people is to a large extent established, the value of property in connection with the road's traffic is more or less enhanced, and we thus seconded the efforts of a bountiful Providence in giving us good crops by applying those facilities lying ready to our hands in securing to ourselves prosperous circumstances. There is no doubt but the bonus system has been in many cases overdone; but it cannot be said to have been so in our case, unless it can be shown that we would have been better without the railroad than with it; an assertion which I think no sane person will venture to make. We ought to remember that we never gave a bonus for a broad guage. So far as my memory serves me we gave a bonus of $37,000 for a Narrow gauge, and we are only now asked for help to a Broad Gauge after having been creditably served by the Narrow Gauge for some eight years under almost insurmountable difficulties. We may talk about mismanagement as we choose. That will neither help to get ourselves or the road into a creditable position; but I have failed to lay my finger on any single case of mismanagement that could have altered the state of matters. The mistake was honestly made at the begenning by us all in making a Narrow Gauge, and it ought to be honestly got out of. We ought to be willing to stand part of our share at least in getting out of the mess. The amount now asked would not exceed $1.50 on every thousand dcllars assessment. A bag of good barley would do it, and sure I am if I would offer any farmer, not to say Dr. Christoe, to bags of barley for one, he would think it a very good bargain, so in the same way I have no doubt that by giving this bonus we are in reality securing two bags of barley for the one given; and farther, is it not better to give the bag of barley than have it taken. Has it never occurred to most of the ratepayers that the Management of the railroad could take the bonus from us twice over.—They (the Management) have never so much as insinuated that; rather than do so they have preferred to come to us boldly, even a second time, asking for a straightforward bonus. Let us give it them and have done with bonuses once and for all. I am afraid, sir, I have trespassed too far on your time and space, but this is an important moment for the interests of Artemesia. Our Reeve has busied himself in what I consider pandering to the general feeling against any further railway bonus giving—a feeling quite justifiable, but unfounded in our present exceptional circumstances. I have had the pleasure on various occasions of voting for Dr. Christoe as Reeve, and although I have heard it very freely stated that the Doctor was fishing for popularity in opposing further aid to the railroad, I have avoided even insinuating any such personal motive; but I have not hesitated to charge him with making the interests of the Township subservient to the merely petty interests of his own Village. It might have been better had this second application for a bonus been carried or defeated without any stimulus from newspaper discussion; but as some in public office have thought fit to air their views, it may not be out of place for one, who neither holds nor is looking for public office of any description, to give his canedid views of the situation from a general agricultural business stand point, be they pleasing or displeasing to whom they may.

Yours truly,

ROBERT ROBERTSON.

Flesherton and Priceville Stations, October 25th, 1880.

THE SLAUGHER-HOUSES.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—In reference to the fearful plague, Diphtheria, now raging in our Village, and decimating our children, I crave permission to make a few remarks. It is a well known fact, established beyond dispute by the vital statistics of all lands, that when an epidemic breaks out in any place, some potent and assignable cause can easily be traced out. In like manner, the cause or causes of the present malady is easily traced.

1st—Most of our people have been brought up in rural districts, where attention to cleanliness and sanitary matters are almost wholly neglected. They have carried to their Village homes the personal and domestic habits of their country life; in their houses yards, lanes and offices dirt and filth predominate to an extent that would fairly shock the æsthetic sense of a denizen of a town or city.—They have generally just enough respect for the opinions and feelings of their neighbors as to put a tollerably passable face on that portion of their premises open to public gaze; but let any one go behind the scenes, visit their back yards, lanes and alleys, and he will find a different state of affairs. Oceans of filth, consisting of both animal and vegetable matter, in every stage of decomposition, literally steaming and reeking with miasmatic vapor. Besides this, we have had in our midst two men and several boys actively engaged all summer in the manufacture and dissemination of noxious gases. I refer now to the two slaughter-houses which our butchers have kept in full blast right in the midst of of the most populous portion of our town all summer—slaughter houses in which, on an average, a dozen animals have been killed every week for the past five months.

Just think of it, Mr. Editor, and relize if you can the fearful, the appalling condition of that plague spot, where the blood and offal of half-a-dozen animals are deposited weekly throughout the sultry, sweltering dog days of a Canadian summer, and then consider that the meat served up at our tables all summer has laid perhaps for hours in an atmosphere largely composed of the foul gases generated in such sinks of filth before it was distributed to consumers, and then tell me is it any wonder that our children and youths have been stricken down.

Mr. Editor, we have a Board of Police Trustees, but apparently they have no regard for the requirements of their office, and none of us have had the courage to urge and compel them to an intelligent discharge of their duty till now matters have assumed such a serious aspect, that someteing must be done to set our corparate house in order. Many, very many have suffered severely for our supineness and indifference. The conditions of health, we find to our cost, even in this proverbially healthy locality cannot be violated with impunity.

Now, sir, if our Police Trustees will not do their duty, our citizens must take the matter in their own hands, and adapt such means as will bring our butchers to time, for undoubtedly they are the chief offenders. Let us immediately from this time forward refuse to purchase any meat from them until they remove their slaughter-houses outside the village limits. Let it go abroad to the outside butchers and farmers that we have ceased to buy meat from Markdale butchers, a supply will soon come in, and if not we had far better fast a week or two than tamely submit to the wholesale slaughter of our innocent babes and unoffending children. Sir, it is with considerable reluctance that I thus write. It is always unpleasant to even appear to meddle in other people's business; but I believe it is no part of good citizenship for any one quietly to submit to see his own and his neighbor's home invaded, his domestic circle broken up, his finest and most promising son and daughter stricken down, without raising a warning voice. If the parties more immediately concerned feel agrieved, they have but themselves to blame. They have wantonly and wickedly trespassed on our patience and good nature all summer in the face af repeated remonstrances, and now let all who agree with me in applying the necessary pressure to bring them to a sense of their duty say Amen, and the thing is done.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1880.

BIRTHS.

In Chatsworth, on the 26th inst., the wife of J. W. Elliott, Esq., Postmaster, of a son.

In Egremont, on the 24th inst., the wife of Mr. John Ferris, of a son,

In Proton, on the 22 inst., the wife of Mr. Henry Fowler, of a daughter

DIED.

In Proton, on the 25th inst., Catherine, wife of Mr. Robert Stewart, aged 73 years and 9 months.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE CHURCH.

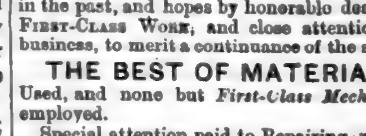
WHEREAS Graves have of late been dug in the Church Yard of Christ Church without the consent of the authorities,

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That any person so offending in the future will be prosecuted for trespass.

(Signed) B. COLEMAN, THOS. ELLIOTT, Jr. } Church-wardens.

Markdale, Oct. 28, 188o. 7-8i*

DONALD McLEOD,



MAKER

BEGS to return his sincere thanks to the public for their very liberal patronage in the past, and hopes by honorable dealing, FIRST-CLASS WORK, and close attention to business, to merit a continuance of the same.

THE BEST OF MATERIAL

Used, and none but First-Class Mechanics employed.

Special attention paid to Repairing, which will be done promptly.

Sewed work a Specialty.

NOTICE.

All over due accounts must be paid without delay or I shall have to resort to more costly means for collection.

D. McLEOD.

Corner of Queen and Mill Streets.

Markdale, Oct. 28, 188o. 7-8i

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments.

☞ Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880. 4-tf

STRAYED

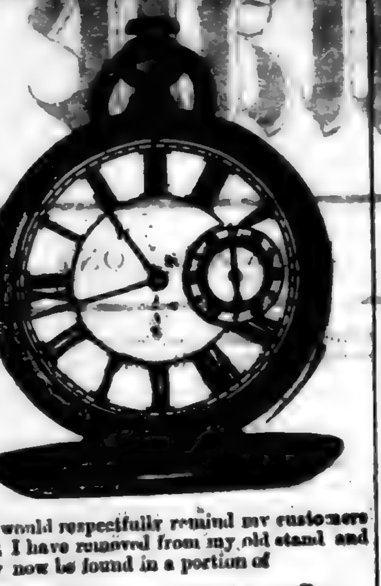
FROM the premises of John Bowers, near Ford's Mill, Glenelg, a red Heifer with small star on head, and a few white spots on body—is small for a three year old. Any person giving such information to the undersigned as will lead to her recovery will be rewarded.

MRS. S. CASWELL.

Markdale, Oct. 2, 1880. 4-3in

General Advertisements.

REOMVED!



I would respectfully remind my customers that I have removed from my old stand and may now be found in a portion of

Hill's Block,

where I have a full stock of

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, FANCY GOODS, ETC.

Don't forget to see my Clocks which are very cheap and good.

Repairing as usual at Lowest Price and shortest possible notice.

Don't forget the place—Dominion Telegraph Office, next door to the STANDARD Office.

E. D. WILCOX.

Markdale, Oct. 18th, 1880. 1-ly

Teacher Wanted.

FOR School Section No. 5, Melancthon, One holding a Second or Third Class Certificate. Applicants to state Salary expected. Applications received up to November 1st.

SAMUEL McDOWELL, ROBERT OLIVER, ABRAM JACKSON, } Trustees.

Dunhalk P. O.

October 20, 1880. 6-3in

W. BENSON,

—OF THE—

"Belfast House,"

Begs to announce that he is fully prepared to dispose of all articles usual to a general Grocery and Provision Establishment, at the Lowest ossible Prices!

The stock consists of

Groceries and Provisions!

together with

LIQUORS of all kinds,

such as SCOTCH, IRISH and CANADIAN, of the best brands. I have no desire to puff or misrepresent the performance of impossibilities, but I may say in response to a brother retailer who offers a book worth $1.25 to every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea, that I will Give Two Books of superior value to those mentioned to all buyers of a like quantity. My house is known as the

Belfast House, op. Haskett Bros

NO SECOND PRICE.

W. BENSON.

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880. 5-tf.

Read This.

MONEY LOANED at the VERY LOWEST RATES OF INTEREST. The BORROWER can have his own terms as to the TIME and the WAY he REPAYS it. LOANS put through with the LEAST possible DELAY.

See the Undersigned before applying Elsewhere.

Offices in Shelburne and Dunkalk.

Always in the Shelburne Office on MONDAYS and TUESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on WEDNESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 2 p. m.

In the Dundalk Office on THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS. On Thursdays, from 2 to 5 p. m., and on Fridays, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

GEO. RUTHERFORD, Estate and General Agent.

FARMS SOLD AND RENTED

By sending number of Lot, Concession, Price, Terms, &c., for very moderate charges.

CONVEYANCING

A SPECIALTY.

All Kinds of Writings Executed.

INSURANCES

Effected in the best Stock Companies.

GREAT BARGAINS

Given in the Best and Hardiest Canadian

FRUIT & ORNAMENTAL TREES.

IRON FOROE PUMPS!

—FOR—

WELLS and CISTERNS,

Sold Very Cheap.

Every Farmer ought to get one.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,

Estate and General Agent.

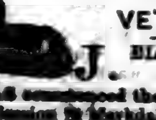
SHELBURNE AND DUNDALK.

October 21, 1880 5

Storekeepers.

W. L. Smith.

GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station. Sept. 17, 1880. 1



VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing disease lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

JOB WORK done neat and prompt at the STANDARD Office.

THE MARKETS

MARKDALE.

Friday, Oct. 29th, 1880.

Flour	[illegible]	to	5.[illegible]
Spring Wheat per bush	[illegible]	to	1.[illegible]
Fall do. do.	[illegible]	to	[illegible]
Barley	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
Oats	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
Peas	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
Potatoes	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
Butter, per lb.	0.20	"	0.22
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed,	5.00	"	5.50
Beef	5.00	"	5.00
Geese, per lb.	0.05	"	0.00
Ducks, per pair	0.40	"	0.45
Fowls, per pair	0.30	"	0.30
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.05
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.00
Hides	7.50	"	5.00
Grass seed,	2.00	"	2.25
Hay	6.50	"	0.00
Timothy seed,	2.25	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.20
Green Apples, per. bushel	0.40	"	0.50
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.75	"	1.75

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Oct. 29th. 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$5.00	to	$5.00
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.95	to	1.02
Fall do. do. do.	0.95	"	0.97
Barley	0.50	"	0.52
Oats	0.30	"	0.30
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.30
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed.	0.00	"	5.50
Beef	5.00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.50	"	1.25
Hides	7.50	"	8.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

OWEN SOUND.

OWEN SOUND, Oct. 29th, 188o.

Flour, $4.5o to $5 oo; Fall Wheat, $o 9o to $o 96; Spring Wheat, $o 95 to $1 oo; Barley, 45c to 58c; Oats, 3oc to 3oc; Peas, 5oc to 58c; Hay, $7 oo to $7 5o; Potatoes, 25c to 3oc; Butter, 2oc to 21c; Eggs, 12c to 14c; Apples, per bushel, 25c to 3oc; Sheep skins, $o 5o to $1 oo; Hides, $7 oo to $7 oo

TORONTO.

(Special to the Standard.)

TORONTO, Oct. 29, 1880.

Wheat, fall, per bush	$1 08	to	$1 o8
Wheat, spring, do.	1 o0	to	1 10
Barley, do.	0 58	to	0 75
Oats, do.	0 32	to	0 34
Peas, do.	0 66	to	0 68
Rye, do.	0 90	to	0 90
Clover Seed do.	o oo	to	o oo
Dressed hogs, per 100 lbs	6 50	to	7 oo
Beef, hind quarters	5 50	to	7 oo
Beef, fore quarters	3 00	to	4 5o
Chickens, per pair	35	to	0 45
Fowls, do.	40	to	0 55
Ducks, per brace	45	to	0 65
Geese, each	50	to	0 6o
Turkeys	75	to	1 00
Butter, large rolls	12	to	0 7o
Butter, tub dairy	2o	to	0 21
Butter, store-packed	18	to	0 19
Eggs, fresh, per doz	o 18	to	0 2o
Eggs, packed	o oo	to	0 oo
Apples, per brl	1 oo	to	1 25
Potatoes, per bag	0 50	to	0 55
Onions, per bag	o o0	to	1 25
Hay	8 50	to	12 oo

SEWING

MACHINES!

At prices that will astonish the natives at

W. L. Marshall's,

DUNDALK.

ALL KINDS OF

Repairing Attended to.

Dundalk, Oct. 18th, 1880. 6tf.

AUCTION SALE OF Valuable Farm Property

IN THE

Township of Glenelg,

In the County of Grey.

There will be sold on

Saturday, the 30th day of October

1880, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at RUTLEDGE'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

by virtue of a power of sale contained in certain mortgages, which will be produced at the sale, the following properties:

PARCEL I.

Under mortgage from Neil Campbell, lot number one, in the twelfth concession of the Township of Glenelg, County of Grey, containing one hundred acres.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 50 acres cleared, having erected thereon a cedar log barn; situated about 8 miles from the village of Markdale.

PARCEL II.

Lot 27, in the 8th concession of the Township of Glenelg, in the County of Grey, containing one hundred acres, more or less.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: About 60 acres cleared, with log buildings erected thereon.

TERMS.—One-tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance, terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE, Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.

Or to JOHN LUCAS, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Sept. 24th, 1880. 5-5in.

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the subscriber, lot 12, concession 6, Euphrasia, about the middle of June, a heifer, two years old, red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges, and take her away.

CHARLES SYERS.

Euphrasia, Oct. 12, 1880. 5-3t*

CAUTION.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating in any way a note drawn by Thomas Townsend in favour of William Handberry, for the sum of twenty-three dollars ($23), for value has not been received therefor.

THOS. TOWNSEND.

Markdale, Oct. 4, 1880. 4-3in

FOR SALE.

20 CHARMS—Snowflake, Granite, Wedding, Marble, Basket, (comic china), Mottled Stones, Ashes of Roses, &c., Cards with name on all, 10 cents.

Address J. A. BROLLEY, Box 79 Crest. [illegible] P. O. [illegible] 5-6

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERAL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

☞ EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT. ☜

Markdale, October 1, 1880. 1y

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, Nail and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances, and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS

TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions

AND

VETERINARY PREPERATIONS

CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M.D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

HILL BROs.,

Space to be occupied by

HILL BROS.

when they remove.

When their new building is completed.

MARKDALE.

Money Lost!

By those who buy stoves before going to

J. GARDINER'S

Dundalk.

Best and Cheapest stock of

STOVES and TINWARE

North of Toronto. 6

STRAYED

FROM the premises of John Moran, lot 10, concession 12, Euphrasia, about the 15th of June, three yearlings, one spotted heifer—red and white; one white heifer and one red steer. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

Euphrasia, Sept. 14, 1880. 4-3in

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow.

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR County of Grey.

Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.

Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880.

J. M. Webster,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR County of Grey.

☞ LOAN AND LAND AGENT

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for [illegible] Loan and Saving Co. All business strictly private, and treated as confidential.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880

DR. PURDY,

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, [illegible] ER, EUGENIA P. O.

THE STANDARD,

Friday, October 29, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

Muddy roads.

Good opening for a foundry here.

Some very bad holes in the sidewalk. The authorities should look after them.

The rain which fell on Monday night and Tuesday last swept all the [illegible] off.

[illegible] IRVING wishes to let the people know that he is still on the war path [with] his celebrated pumps.

W. F[illegible], of Flesherton, is [showing] some beautiful things in [illegible]. Give him a call.

[REVIVAL] services which were began [in] the Mount Forest C. M. Church [last] week, and which we learn have [been] very successful, are to be continued for several weeks.

[Those] who have seen J. F. Sproule's [millinery], say it is the most fashionable and cheapest in town. Ladies [call] and see those elegant Tam O'Shanter's.

MR. Donald McLeod makes his [bow] to the public this week in the [sh]ape of an advertisement, which will [be] found in another column. Be sure [an]d read, it is of interest to ALL.

WE received a communication this [we]ek from Dr. Christoe anent the [Ra]ilway Bonus, but from its length [an]d the crowded state of our columns [we ar]e obliged to omit it this week. It [wi]ll appear in our next.

MISS. Rome of Maxwell, formerly [of] New York, will remain a week or [tw]o in Markdale, any person wishing [to] have their pictures enlarged, will [do] well to call at Mr. Hull's residence [an]d examine specimens of work.

THE Governor-General has appointed [W]ednesday, November 3, a day of [ge]neral thanksgiving all over the [D]ominion. It is to be hoped that it [w]ill be strictly observed by all loyal [ci]tizens.

AUCTION sale on the premises of [W]alter Douglas, 1½ miles North of [M]arkdale, on the 3rd November com[m]encing at one o'clock, when a [qu]antity of stock and implements will [be] sold. 14 month's credit on approved paper.

MR. Thomas Flesher having remov[ed] to Manitoulin Island, requests us [to] state that Mr. T. Hall is now the [au]thorized agent for the Gore District [M]utual Fire Insurance Company. [T]o whom we recommend those in [w]ant of insurance.

A PRIZE was offered for the mother [w]ho presented the greatest number of [h]er own children at an Indian State [Fa]ir. Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Line were [w]ell accompanied to the fair by nine, [b]ut Mrs. Line gave birth to a tenth [o]n the grounds, and so took the prize.

AN auction sale will take place at [E]ugenia on Monday the 8th Nov. [c]ommencing at 1 o'clock; when a [q]uantity of household furniture, stock [an]d lumber the property of Henry [L]ane Esq., will be sold. 12 month's [c]redit will be given on approved paper.

AN extensive credit sale of farm [st]ock, implements, household furni[t]ure, etc., will take place on the pre[m]ises of Mr. Moses Johnston, lot 19, [co]n. 11, Euphrasia, on Saturday, the [30]th of October, commencing at 12 o'clock. Moses Johnston, proprietor; [T]heo. Hall, auctioneer.

WE call attention of our Dundalk [re]aders to the advertisement of George [N]ixon which appears in this issue [o]f the STANDARD Mr. N. keeps a good [g]eneral stock, and we believe they are [fi]rst-class. Those wishing to get [ch]eap goods should give him a call [a]s he is selling at bottom prices for [ca]sh or produce.

LEAP year will be out in about two [m]onths, and while a good number has [ta]ken advantage of the long year, [th]ere are a few yet we would like to [se]e safely into partnership (for life.) [T]hose who contemplate such, we [w]ould advise them to examine Wilcox's [s]tock of gold rings; he has a fine assortment at prices from $2.50 up.

AN extensive credit sale of stock, [im]plements, furniture, and musical [in]struments, will take pace in Flesh[er]ton on "Fair Day," Monday, 8th [D]ay of November. Terms of sale; [a]ll sums over $5—twelve month's [c]redit. Sale to commence at 12 noon. [A] house, lot, and the Flesherton skat[in]g rink will be offered for sale; terms [o]f which will be made known at sale.

THE Durham organ case was to be [c]onsidered before an adjourned meet[i]ng of the Presbytery of Saugeen; [h]eld in St. Andrews church, Mount [F]orest yesterday, we have not learn[e]d the result, but, trust, however, it [w]ill be finally settled, and that the [c]ontroversy which has been going on [f]or some time past will be brought to [a] close.

HALLOW E'en falls on Sunday this [y]ear, which no doubt will be a great [d]isappointment to our mischief-loving "small boys" and some of those of [l]arger growth. Our devil says, how[e]ver, that they (the "small boys") are [n]ot going to be deprived of their just [r]ights but intend celebrating the [t]ime-honored day, on Monday Nov. [fi]rst. So friends look out for your [c]abages.

I CANNOT help but tell the truth; I [h]ave the kind of goods to back me up [i]n what I say. They speak for them[s]elves, no matter what people say. [C]ome all and see for yourselves. If [y]ou are not satisfied that you are not [ge]tting good value for your money, [wh]y don't take the goods and we will [pa]rt by shaking hands, looking pleas[a]nt, hoping we shall soon meet again. [Y]ou will find me in the same place, [a]lways on duty. A. MCINTYRE.

SUPPOSED TO BE STOLEN.—Saturday [l]ast says the Mount Forest Confederate [a] man came into town and offered a [f]ine black looking mare for sale to Mr. John O'Brien. He held it at a [v]ery fair price at first, but came down [f]rom one sum to another until he ex[p]ressed willinguess to accept $20 for [t]he animal. Thinking from the [m]anner in which the man acted that [t]hings were not altogether square Mr. O'Brien caused inquiry to be made of Mayor Swan as to what he thought [w]as best to do in the matter. Furth[er] conversation was had with the man [re]garding the horse. A second visit [w]as made to the mayor, when the [s]tranger, becoming through some [m]eans aware that he was about to be [n]abbed, jumped on the horse's back [an]d made off along the town line east. [C]onstables McGuire and Godfrey, [an]d Mr. O'Brien gave chase. They followed the [illegible] and were ju[st] [illegible] he dismounte[d] [illegible] made across [illegible] Here search [illegible] without avail [illegible] without the[m] [illegible] secured the [illegible] town. It is [illegible] the authori[ties] [illegible] say, fifteen [illegible] about five y[ears] [illegible] yet been obt[ained].

THE 5th [illegible] brated this [illegible] orange proce[ssion] [illegible] and a grand [illegible] From the ar[illegible] promises to [illegible] we would re[illegible] enjoy some [illegible] tend. Tick[ets] [illegible] Orangeville [illegible] intermediate [illegible] good to retu[rn] [illegible]

LAST wee[k] [illegible] riage of Ad[illegible] A. McKenz[ie] [illegible] we received [illegible] Kenzie deny [illegible] and politel[y] [illegible] dict the re[illegible] are exceed[ingly] [illegible] occurred. [illegible] us, and of [illegible] are sorry [illegible] pleasure of [illegible] on the sup[illegible]

SWINDLIN[G] [illegible] lowing is t[illegible] the unsusp[ecting] [illegible] entered a [illegible] et of Brant [illegible] ronto, the [illegible] can in her [illegible] a large [illegible] the propri[illegible] to fill it [illegible] road a mi[illegible] to the barr[illegible] in the oil, [illegible] it running [illegible] ing up th[illegible] eries, viz., [illegible] that the [illegible] the groceri[illegible]

SAD DEA[TH] [illegible] ing a man [illegible] known i[illegible] drowned [illegible] at Durha[m] [illegible] liberately [illegible] off the ro[illegible] an inques[t] [illegible] turned a v[erdict] [illegible] to his dea[th] [illegible] mental d[illegible] cessive dr[illegible] user.

THE [illegible] brought [illegible] Miller, w[illegible] on Tues[day] [illegible] appears [illegible] lying off [illegible] Michael's [illegible] blow, and [illegible] up she w[illegible] scuttled [illegible] injury ti[illegible] there has [illegible] it is fea[red] [illegible] wreck. [illegible] $3,000.—[illegible]

NIGHT [illegible] have bee[n] [illegible] open ni[ght] [illegible] their Ro[oms] [illegible] Writing, [illegible] nology. [illegible] will be f[illegible] ducted b[illegible] each sub[ject] [illegible] to memb[ers] [illegible] others m[illegible] course b[illegible] evenings [illegible] intervals [illegible] for the [illegible] wishing [illegible] in their [illegible] A. Platt [illegible] Times.

FIRE [illegible] o'clock [illegible] rear par[t] [illegible] Geo. Ma[illegible] covered [illegible] was at [illegible] er of re[illegible] and wen[t] [illegible] furnitur[e] [illegible] both th[illegible] Mathew[s] [illegible] neighbo[rs] [illegible] ed on t[illegible] it appea[illegible] ment w[illegible] ns large [illegible] from th[illegible] ls of wo[illegible] but tho[illegible] nowed [illegible] inner sh[illegible] ing up [illegible] out in [illegible] fire sta[illegible] spreadi[ng] [illegible] up the w[illegible] ner co[illegible] cape fo[r] [illegible] probabl[y] [illegible] was no [illegible] building [illegible]

W[illegible]

M[illegible]

IN large [illegible] good [illegible] security.

INTE[illegible]

☞ [illegible] all points [illegible]

Septem[ber] [illegible]

NOTI[CE] [illegible] 101, of t[illegible] the town[illegible] tablished [illegible] The co[illegible] elg not h[illegible] said lots, [illegible] cident th[illegible] JAMES [illegible]

Townshi[p] [illegible]

Sub[illegible]

We will g[illegible] January, [illegible]

TYRE,

...ovisions

...es!

...ice just Received

...TO PRICES AND

...UGHT.

HALL.

Chemicals

...CINES!

..., Combs, Tooth, Nail ...urgical Appliances, ...undries.

...ool Books

...TOBACCOS ...H

...D OILS.

...escriptions

...PERATIONS ...NDED.

...OULE, M.D.

ROs.,

...DALE.

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow.

...ICENSED AUCTIONEER ... County of Grey. ...

J. M. Webster.

...ICENSED AUCTIONEER ... County of Grey. ... LOAN AND LAND ... EUGENIA P.O. ...pt. 17th 1880.

DR. PURDY, ...HYSICIAN, SURGEON, ...

Space to be occupied by

Advertisement will appear in this space

...AL & OTHER NOTICES.

...ddy roads.

...ob opening for a foundry here.

...a very bad holes in the sidewalk, ...thorities should look after them.

... rain which fell on Monday ...and Tuesday last swept all the ...

... IRVING wishes to let the people ...that he is still on the war path ...celebrated pumps.

...F. DOLL, of Flesherton, is ...g some beautiful things in ...ware. Give him a call.

...IVAL services which were began ...e Mount Forest C. M. Church ...week, and which we learn have ...very successful, are to be con... for several weeks.

... who have seen J. F. Sproule's ...y, say it is the most fashion... cheapest in town. Ladies ...d see those elegant Tam O' ...'s.

... Donald McLeod makes his ... the public this week in the ...of an advertisement, which will ...d in another column. Be sure ...d, it is of interest to ALL.

... received a communication this ...from Dr. Christoe anent the ...y Bonus, but from its length ... crowded state of our columns ...bliged to omit it this week. It ...pear in our next.

.... Rome of Maxwell, formerly ... York, will remain a week or ... Markdale, any person wishing ...e their pictures enlarged, will ...ll to call at Mr. Hull's residence ...xamine specimens of work.

... Governor-General has appoint...esday, November 3, a day of ...l thanksgiving all over the ...nion. It is to be hoped that it ...e strictly observed by all loyal ...ns.

...TION sale on the premises of ...r Douglas, 1½ miles North of ...dale, on the 3rd November com...ng at one o'clock, when a ...ity of stock and implements will ...d. 14 month's credit on ap... paper.

.... Thomas Flesher having remov... Manitoulin Island, requests us ...te that Mr. T. Hall is now the ...rized agent for the Gore District ...al Fire Insurance Company. ...whom we recommend those in ... of insurance.

...PRIZE was offered for the mother ...presented the greatest number of ...own children at an Indian State ... Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Line were ...accompanied to the fair by nine, ... Mrs. Line gave birth to a tenth ...e grounds, and so took the prize.

... auction sale will take place at ...enia on Monday the 8th Nov. ...mencing at 1 o'clock; when a ...tity of household furniture, stock ... lumber the property of Henry ...e Esq., will be sold. 12 month's ...it will be given on approved paper.

... extensive credit sale of farm ...k, implements, household furni...e, etc., will take place on the pre...es of Mr. Moses Johnston, lot 19, ... 11, Euphrasia, on Saturday, the ... of October, commencing at 12 ...ock. Moses Johnston, proprietor; ...o. Hall, auctioneer.

WE call attention of our Dundalk ...ders to the advertisement of George ...on which appears in this issue ...he STANDARD Mr. N. keeps a good ...ral stock, and we believe they are ...-class. Those wishing to get ...p goods should give him a call ...e is selling at bottom prices for ... or produce.

...AP year will be out in about two ...hs, and while a good number has ... advantage of the long year, ...are a few yet we would like to ...afely into partnership (for life.) ... who contemplate such, we ...d advise them to examine Wilcox's ... of gold rings; he has a fine as...ent at prices from $2.50 up.

... extensive credit sale of stock, ...ements, furniture, and musical ...uments, will take pace in Flesh... on "Fair Day," Monday, 8th ... of November. Terms of sale; ...ums over $5—twelve month's ...t. Sale to commence at 12 noon. ...use, lot, and the Flesherton skat...ink will be offered for sale; terms ...hich will be made known at sale.

...E Durham organ case was to be ...idered before an adjourned meet... of the Presbytery of Saugeen; ... in St. Andrews church, Mount ...st- yesterday, we have not learn...e result, but, trust, however, it ... be finally settled, and that the ...oversy which has been going on ...ome time past will be brought to ...e.

...LLOW E'en falls on Sunday this ... which no doubt will be a great ...pointment to our mischief-loving ...ll boys" and some of those of ... growth. Our devil says, how... that they (the "small boys") are ...oing to be deprived of their just ... but intend celebrating the ...honored day, on Monday Nov. ... So friends look out for your ...ges.

I CANNOT help but tell the truth; I ...e the kind of goods to back me up ...hat I say. They speak for them...es, no matter what people say. ...ne all and see for yourselves. If ... are not satisfied that you are not ...ing good value for your money, ... don't take the goods and we will ...t by shaking hands, looking pleas..., hoping we shall soon meet again. ... will find me in the same place, ...ays on duty. A. MCINTYRE.

...UPPOSED TO BE STOLEN.—Saturday ... says the Mount Forest Confederate ...man came into town and offered a ... black looking mare for sale to ... John O'Brien. He held it at a ... fair price at first, but came down ... one sum to another until he ex...sed willingness to accept $20 for ... animal. Thinking from the ...ner in which the man acted that ...gs were not altogether square Mr. ...rien caused inquiry to be made of ...yor Swan as to what he thought ... best to do in the matter. Furth... conversation was had with the man ...arding the horse. A second visit ... made to the mayor, when the ...nger, becoming through some ...us aware that he was about to be ...bed, jumped on the horse's back ... made off along the town line east. ...stables McGuire and Godfrey, ... Mr. O'Brien gave chase. They followed the chap for about two miles and were just about up to him when he dismounted, jumped the fence and made across the field to the bush. Here search was made for him without avail. The scouts came home without their man. They however secured the horse and brought it to town. It is now being cared for by the authorities. The beast is a dark bay, fifteen and a half hands high and about five years old. No trace has as yet been obtained of the owner.

THE 5th of November is to be celebrated this year in Markdale, by an orange procession, a Bazaar, Dinner, and a grand concert in the evening. From the array of tallent the concert promises to be a first-class one and we would recommend all who wish to enjoy some really good music to attend. Tickets will be issued from Orangeville and Owen Sound and intermediate stations at single fare, good to return next day.

LAST week we announced the marriage of Adam Holly to Miss Jessie A. McKenzie. A day or two since we received a letter from Miss McKenzie denying that she was married and politely requesting us to contradict the report which we now do we are exceedingly sorry the mistake occurred. The marriage was sent to us, and of course we published it, we are sorry we are not to have the pleasure of congratulating Miss Jessie on the supposed happy event.

SWINDLING THE GROCER.—The following is the latest dodge to get over the unsuspecting grocer: A woman entered a grocery store near the corner of Brant and Adellade streets, Toronto, the other night, with a coal oil can in her hand, and after ordering a large amount of groceries, handed the proprietor the can and told him to fill it while she stepped across the road a minute. The proprietor went to the barrel and commenced to pour in the oil, but stopped when he saw it running over the floor. Upon turning up the can he made two discoveries, viz., that it had no bottom and that the woman had vanished with the groceries.

COUNTY ITEMS.

SAD DEATH.—On Wednesday morning a man named Geo. Robson, well known in this vicinity, was found drowned in the river near the bridge at Durham. Whether he walked deliberately into the river or wandered off the road and fell in is not known. an inquest was held and the jury returned a virdict that "deceased came to his death by drowning while under mental derangement caused by excessive drinking."—Orangeville Advertiser.

THE Emerald on her last trip down brought news of a disaster to the Jane Miller, which left here for Manitoulin on Tuesday night of last week. It appears that on Friday last she was lying off shore with anchors down at Michael's Bay, when it came on to blow, and before she could get steam up she was driven ashore. Capt. Port scuttled her to keep her from further injury till assistance arrived, but as there has been heavy weather since, it is feared she may prove a total wreck. Insured in the Phœnix for $8,000.—O. S. Times.

NIGHT CLASSES.—Arrangements have been made by the Y. M. C. A. to open night classes for young men in their Rooms. Classes in Book-keeping, Writing, Drawing, Arithmetic, Physiology, Chemistry and other subjects will be formed. These will be conducted by competent instructors in each subject. The classes will be free to members of the Association; and others may obtain tickets for the full course by payment of $1 Laterary evenings will also be given at regular intervals during the winter—tickets for the course 50 cents. Persons wishing to join the classes should send in their names at once to Mr. John A. Platt, Sec'y Y. M. C. A.—O. S. Times.

FIRE IN DURHAM.—Just after six o'clock on Tuesday evening last the rear part of the furniture store of Mr. Geo. Mathews, of this town, was discovered to be on fire. The alarm was at once given, and a large number of residents were soon on hand, and went to work with a will. The furniture was quickly taken out of both the store and dwelling of Mr. Mathews, and water fetched from the neighboring pumps in pails and poured on the building. For some time it appeared as if the devouring element was going to gain the mastery, as large volumes of smoke poured from the side of the building, which is of wood, and the flames burst out, but those at work went at it with renewed energy, and by tearing off the inner sheeting of the wall, and breaking up the flooring, the fire was put out in an hours time. It appears the fire started under the floor, and spreading to both sides was burning up the wall between the outer and inner covering. It was a narrow escape for the building. The loss will probably not exceed $100. There was no insurance, we believe, on the building.—Grey Review.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates,

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 1-y

Public Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the new road open through lots 99, 100, and 101, off the 3rd concession W. T. & S. R., in the township of Glenelg, is not properly established.

The corporation of the township of Glenelg not having any title to the road through said lots, will not be responsible for any accident that may happen on said road.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk. FINLAY MacRAE, Reeve.

Township of Glenelg, Oct. 12, 1880.

Subscribe for the Standard. We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

NOTICE.

GEORGE NIXON,
Toronto House,
DUNDALK,

Have on hand a full stock, including

TEAS, SUGARS, AND GENERAL GROCERIES.

Crockery, Glassware and Lamps

In great variety and at prices to suit the people.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

The largest and best Stock in Town, at Lowest Prices.

DRY GOODS!

My Stock in this department is now complete, and contains the newest lines in Plain and Fancy Dress Goods, Winceys, Shirtings, Flannels, Blankets Clouds, Scarfs, and a choice selection of Tweeds.

READY-MADE CLOTHING.—Overcoats—a large Stock. Suits, Shirts, Drawers, Overalls, &c.

HATS, CAPS AND FURS.—A large assortment of A 1 Goods. Also everything else to be found in a First-Class General Store.

The above Goods have all been purchased in the best Markets, and will be sold at BOTTOM PRICES for CASH or PRODUCE.

Dundalk, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-4i

"Time and Tide Wait FOR NO MAN."
DON'T YOU WAIT!

They are selling fast, those justly celebrated Watches. You want one. Will give you special quotations for cash and show you a Large Stock to select from. Am showing some beautiful things in

SILVERWARE!

Being suitable for Wedding presents, &c. Some extra bargains in Parlor and Bedroom Clocks!

Large Weight Clocks at $3.50.

Diamond & Wedding Rings!

Very low. Also a comple stock of Gold Chains, Sets, Lockets, Necklets, Pins, Chains, &c., &c., all at the very lowest net cash prices. When in Flesherton give me a call.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Watchmaker, &c.,

6 FLESHERTON AND DUNDALK,

MARKDALE.

WM. FOX,
Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!

GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legacies! Pensions! Bounties!

Parties having any of the above claims to investigate will please correspond with me at once.

A. M. MCINTYRE, Claim Agent.

Dundalk P. O., County Grey.

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres

FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood, (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

STOVES.

STOVES. STOVES.

Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES.

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18.

Same, with Low Oven, $17.

5 BOX STOVE, $4

All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.,

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All
AT
W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

Always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill street, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again, thanking you for past favors, he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continuance of your support.

W. B. SARJENT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED." ONLY

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

The NOBBIEST CLOTHING!

In the County at

McFARLAND'S.

See his $5.00 Overcoats.
See his $10 Ulsters.
See his $12 Suit.
See his $16 dress suit.
500 pairs of Boots

To choose from—Men, Women and Children's. Get your AXES at McFARLAND's. Those $2.50 MANTLES selling fast. New DRESS GOODS at McFarland's. New FLANNELS at McFarland's. New SHAWLS at McFarland's. New BONNETS and HATS at McFarland's. New TWEEDS at McFarland's. New CARPETS at McFarland's. New Fringes, Buttons, Silks, Laces, Flowers and Feathers. Prices never were lower or value better. A comparison solicited.

W. J. McFARLAND,
IMPORTER, Markdale.

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Water-proof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

Before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

... Wholesale and Retail Warehouse

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,
Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880.

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,
LOCK BOX 73,
3 Uxbridge, Ont.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES.

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES. DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

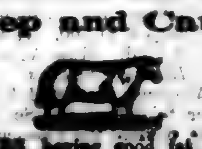
Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,
1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mill

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path and will positively pay the highest price.

C. W. & A. SPEERS.

Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.

...meat delivered at any house in town.

Sept. 17, 1880.

October Colors.

NATHAN D. URNER.

Again the unseen Hand that bends
The rainbow's arch of splendour,
That fires the flash of morn and blends
The sunset's raptures tender,
Its wealth of living light hath brought,
With scarce a line that's sober,
To paint with free poetic thought
The wild woods of October.

The regal oak rules all the holt,
Save where, on angry mission,
The sumac rears its red revolt
And head's intense sedition;
Their beacons o'er the copses leap,
But in the dale grow duller,
And thence through all the forest deep
Run rife with frenzied color.

All purple-plashed, the hawthorn sere
Beneath the chestnut's glory,
Droops, like a hurt vivandiere,
To tell the battle's story.
The ruddy tide hath scarlet-stained
The banners of the beeches,
While still the dark vines, stiffly trained,
Stretch o'er the rocky reaches.

Where late, in green seclusion rolled,
The peaceful Summer rested,
Proud Autumn flaunts her cloth-of-gold,
Starred, liveried, and crested.
With stately step she keeps her tryst,
All bright, though brief, her season;
Green favors now at knee or waist
Were sheer artistic treason.

Through all the land, October woods
Their festal fires have lighted,
The wide earth from her opiate moods
To visions further-sighted.
Back! winter back! nor from her wrest,
The purples that enrobe her,
The passionate hues that still invest
The wild woods of October!

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Letton," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

"Yes; but mine was a prudent anxiety. My dear father was dead. He had been dear to me, in spite of our estrangement. My mother was ill, aged. I must work cautiously if I would prove my innocence and establish the guilt of the guilty. My father's blood cried out to be avenged, and I must avenge it. I rented Ivy Cottage, came here, made friends with you, saw my child was all I desired, learned my mother was dying, believing that she was about to join her husband and son. I did not disturb her belief. Why should I tell her I was living, and so harass her few remaining hours? I waited. Heaven knows, when I looked upon my daughter's sad face, that the waiting was intolerable! Just as love was getting the upper hand of patience, I received a startling communication from my lawyers. They knew who I really was. It appeared that some woman, named Marian Tyler, dying in America, craved to see Martin Napine or his representative, for she had foully cheated him, and could not die till she had confessed her sin. I went to London, and from there to Baltimore, where I saw the woman who had taken the joy from my existence. The story that had sent Cicely to an untimely grave was untrue. Marian Tyler was neither my wife nor Duncombe's. Before she knew either of us she was married to a cousin, married in her own sphere. She told me a rambling story of his profligacy and unkindness, and gave me the certificate of her marriage, and also that of his death. He had died a few months previously, having, after years of absence, gone back to her. I returned to England with the proofs of Judith's legitimacy in my possession, an idea also occurring to me as to who had struck my father's death-blow."

"Yes?"

"Sometimes, when pondering who had murdered him, I was inclined to think it must have been a common thief for the purpose of robbery; but one fact upset this opinion. My mother never saw my father alive after I left him; he was dead when she drove home. Yet she must have known that it was alleged that Judith was basely born, or why should she have bequeathed Upine to Squire Ellerslie, failing me? She must not only have known my secret, but must have told it to the Squire. Would he otherwise have hurried Judith into marriage with Silas Thornton? Would he have left his property to him? Of course not. To what does all this tend? Listen. Whoever killed Sir Percival knew what passed between us in our last interview—knew, and divulged it to my mother."

Will glances at Mr. Thorold, whose face is inscrutable; and Will shakes his head slightly.

"The rain is less heavy," Mr. Thorold says. "Miss Deborah, I must see my daughter's husband, and my daughter."

I leave the room quickly—not so quickly, however, but that I hear Will say

"The murderer? Who is he?"

Mr. Thorold shuts the door. When I open it, Will's face is ghastly.

* * * * *

Mr. Thorold rings the bell at Ellerslie, sharply. A servant replies to the peal, (not the butler. I wonder what is amiss, for he looks worried, agitated. We are shown into the reception-room, and have not long to wait. Silas Thornton comes speedily. He too looks unlike himself. Before we can speak, he cries—

"You have come to tell me, Miss Carey, that she is at the Vicarage. Confound her, giving me this fright!"

I stare at him in bewilderment, and respond with asperity—for I do not like his tone—

"Who is at the Vicarage? What do you mean?"

"Why my wife Judith, to be sure! It was a stupid trick; but she is no better than a baby. I declare I have felt positively wretched. Women like Judith are not to be depended upon. Suicide seems to charm them; and, though no one would throw away life because of an angry word or two, I was really dreading——"

He breaks off with an emphatic sigh of relief. I am helplessly silent, and Mr. Thorold comes to the rescue.

"If you are thinking Mrs. Thornton is at the Vicarage, disabuse your mind of the notion. She is not there. Is she not here?"

"No. Not at the Vicarage! Then where is she?"

Silas Thornton is unaffectedly alarmed. I sit down trembling in every limb, and Mr. Thorold's face is very pale.

"Have you and your wife quarelled?" he asks.

"Yes," the other answers plainly. "Late last night I spoke my mind, and she [illegible]

[illegible]

"Left Ellerslie!" Mr. Thorold repeats.

[illegible]

"Good Heaven!" Mr. Thorold ejaculates. [illegible]

"Look at me well, Silas Thornton. You knew me when you were a lad. I am Martin Napine."

"Martin Napine!" Silas Thornton falls back in dismay.

[illegible]

"I am Martin Napine. Your wife is my daughter. [illegible]" The authoritative demand stirs the young man's ire.

"Your daughter?" he says scornfully. "Have you given her a parentage of which she can be proud, that you claim her thus unblushingly?"

"I have given her a name she need not be ashamed of."

"You think me ignorant. [illegible]"

"Ah! I can see that Martin Napine is curbing his passion with difficulty. "Have you acquainted her with this?"

"What if I have? She, with her delicacy and pride, who is not good enough for my friends. Why, she is not good enough?"

He gets no farther, for Martin Napine throws him violently.

"Scoundrel!" he cries.

Mr. Brenton interposes blandly.

"Pardon me. It is best to apply titles appropriately. If you are the man you profess to be, we apply a term of infamy to you. You may not know it, but there are warrants out for your apprehension. You are accused of your father's death."

Martin Napine looks into Mr. Brenton's eyes, and they shift and blink restlessly.

"You will send for the police?" Mr. Brenton says with a would-be careless air to Silas Thornton.

"No," he answers slowly. "I cannot do that. I have married his daughter."

"I see. I will relieve you of your embarrassment. But you will not let him escape?"

Martin Napine stops Mr. Brenton.

"It will not be well for you by-and-by if the public recollect that you caused my arrest," he says gravely. "I came here with this young lady to see my daughter. Since that is impossible, I shall take Miss Carey home; then I will announce in the proper quarter who I am, sir"—turning to Silas, who is moodily biting his nails. "Will you permit me to see my daughter's maid and the housekeeper?"

They are summoned, but they have little to tell. Judith has fled, leaving neither word nor line. She had taken some linen and a quantity of her jewellery. Her maid saw her about eleven the previous evening. Judith told her that she did not require her services, and dismissed her without admitting her to the room. Her mistress did not look as though she had been weeping, but seemed very weary.

Going home with Martin Napine, I tell of her visit to me. At the Vicarage gate we part. He holds my hand.

"Do not be distressed on my account," he says. "Justice has tarried; but she will be speedy now. Heaven bless you and my darling child! We will find her. If I am perforce inactive, your brother and my lawyers will do my work. Judith is pure and good. Heaven will watch over her."

I hurry in. Letty is in the parlour. I bury my head in her lap, and sob uncontrollably with bitter pain. Judith, my dear one, driven from her home by that coarse fellow she calls husband!

Twenty-four hours later Napine is electrified. Mrs. Thornton has run away; and Martin Napine has come back, and has given himself up to the police. The village is thrilled with a rare excitement. Tongues wag fast, and the most sensational reports are circulated. Every one is uneasy, unsettled, amazed.

I have cried till I can cry no longer, and am now red-eyed and quiet. Will is out. Dale I have not seen. I talk to Letty, and follow her up-stairs and down-stairs, into baby's chamber, the burden of my dirge being that Judith might have come to me in her trouble.

We are now in the study. Letty has her needle in her hand, and I am drumming on the window-pane impatiently. I wonder what is keeping Dale away. Suddenly I perceive a man's head—only the postman. I run out to meet him, and he gives me a letter for myself. I am familiar with the handwriting, and cry wildly—

"From Judith! From Judith!"

Letty glances over my shoulder while I read. It is but a pencilled scribble.

"My darling, good-bye. When I kissed you an hour or two ago, I did not think I was kissing you for the last time; but I was. I shall never see you again. I cannot live with my husband. To-night he has told me that he hates me, that, had he known I had no legal right to the name of Napine, I should never have been his. I know my unhappy father's secret—knew what killed my mother. Oh that the same knowledge would kill me! But, alas, it will not! Do not grieve about me. Heaven will protect me. I have money, and I shall find work.

Your loving JUDITH."

The sheet flies to the ground.

"I do not know where she is," I say.

"No; better not, just at present. I do not think she has acted quite wisely. Wives should condone much ere they desert their homes," Letty says, with a matronly air. "But, poor thing, she has suffered terribly, and has acted on a very natural impulse!"

"Yes. Don't be hard. She was right. I would leave any man if he ill-treated me, or told me he wished he was quit of me!"

"Would you?"

"Oh, Dale, how you startled me!"

He kisses me fondly in spite of Letty's smiles. She departs, shaking her head demurely.

"Have you heard?" I say.

"Yes. It is a sad affair, ma cherie. Will is with my father now."

"Have they locked up Mr. Thorold—Mr. Martin Napine?"

"Ay. Your brother is impressed in his favour."

"Are not you?"

"My dear, how can I be? Who is guilty if he is innocent? His tale is plausible; but you have not forgotten the testimony given at the inquest? Martin Napine was admitted to his father. He was closeted with him a very long time. After a while, sounds as if altercation were heard; then a noise as of a blow and a falling body. The servants were alarmed, but afraid to intrude knowing of the dissension between father and son. At last the butler, when the angry sounds had subsided, plucked up courage. He tapped at the door, and, getting no answer, entered, and found his master on the carpet dead. Martin Napine had disappeared!"

"Mr. Martin must have left Napine before Sir Percival was murdered. By what train did he go? What time was it when the servant discovered what had been done?"

"I can't say. All that will of course be thoroughly inquired into. Martin Napine's case will be in able hands. At the inquest he was absent, and that told terribly against him."

"Try to believe in him, Dale."

"I will. Until a man is proved guilty, his guilt must not be taken for granted. His coming forward looks like innocence. If his story is true, it will not be difficult to understand why he kept dark. Here is Will!"

Will advances with lagging steps, and flings himself into a chair heavily. I pass him Judith's letter. He reads, and, for a moment the shadow vanishes from his brow, only however to return directly.

"Heaven bless her!" he says. Regardless of Dale and myself he puts the paper to his lips, folds up the letter, and pockets it. I do not remonstrate. Will says he will have his lunch. I wait on him assiduously. He eats but a few mouthfuls, and then pushes back his plate.

"I have just seen Mr. Silas Thornton," he says.

"Yes?" Dale returns.

"He owned, on my questioning him, that he had taunted his wife with the supposed stain on her birth. He is a little ashamed of having driven Judith from the home that is hers by right. I asked him who had told him. He said [illegible] hitherto—

[illegible] and then [illegible]

"Martin Napine is anxious to know from what source he gained this information. Whoever was cognizant of the secret [illegible] saw Sir Percival after [illegible]."

"Good. What now?"

"Only that the last comer was probably [illegible]."

I cannot suppress my curiosity while they discuss possibilities. I touch Will imploringly, and he looks at me strangely.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE late Prebendary Aurial, of St. Dunstan's, London, left an estate worth $225,000.

THE base-ball season has ended, and the mellifluous mouthings of the umpires, as he [illegible] with the second-base man, will be heard no more until spring. [illegible] not need [illegible]. The base [illegible] last time [illegible] home plate [illegible] passed, [illegible] is in the griddle-cake pan. The boys have earned a rest.

EDWIN BOOTH has presented to his personal and professional friend Dr. Durant, of this city, a "loving-cup," made by Tiffany & Co., at a cost of $1,000. It is of solid silver lined with gold. Miss Agnes Strickland in her Historic Sketches says that "Margaret Athelling, wife of Malcolm Kenmore, in order to induce the Scotch to remain for grace, devised the grace-cup, which was filled with the choicest wine, of which each one who tarried might drink ad libitum. [illegible] the introduction of [illegible] of wassail [illegible] assumed a [illegible] the wassail [illegible] (loving-cup), a[illegible] companies. [illegible] adjacent [illegible], one to [illegible] his safety [illegible] so occupied."

ONLY A [illegible] HAIR.

By the Author of "A Strange Friendship," &c.

CHAPTER I.—(CONTINUED.)

[illegible]

"You must come away," he said; "this is no place for you." Then in a moment he added, "I will see to it all. Only come away quietly with me now."

He had led me to the open door of the house by this time, and then had turned to leave me.

"Go in, go in," he said peremptorily; then, as if half ashamed of having spoken so imperiously, he added, "I beg your pardon if I spoke too bluntly; I am quite a stranger here. I was calling to make some inquiries about an estate that is advertised for sale in this neighbourhood. I never dreamt of falling in with such a scene as this. Am I addressing Miss Pelham?"

"Yes," I answered; "I am Cathie Pelham, and my father is not at home. What ought we to do?"

"Leave it to me," he said; and, strange to me as he was, I felt confidence in him even then, and I yielded to the masterful tone and manner, and entered the house as he desired me.

But just as I set my foot on the threshold of the door, two figures came round the corner of the house.

They were my father and Herbert Tempest. They were chatting easily and unconcernedly, and evidently knew nothing of what had happened. They had left their horses in the stable. To my surprise my father recognized my companion.

"How do you do, Beresford?" he said. "I did not know you were in this neighbourhood. Of course you will stay the night with us."

Mr. Beresford led him away a few paces. I could see that he was striving to break to my father the news he had to tell. Herbert Tempest shook hands with me in his usual languid fashion.

"How is Rose?" he inquired, in a tone as placid as usual.

"Hush!" I said hurriedly. "You don't know what has happened. Don't ask me any questions. Find out for yourself what it is."

He gave one astonished glance at my white face and excited manner; then, a little stirred out of his usual calm, he followed my father and Mr. Beresford, who were just hastening away in the direction of the garden.

As for me, I fled away to my own room, and, almost as I reached it, my trembling limbs refused to support me any longer, without sense or motion, stricken to the heart by the horror and dismay through which I had so lately passed.

When I came back to life once more, it was hours afterwards. I was lying on my bed, and Mrs. Holland was seated by my side. I believe that when I was at last missed, she had come to look for me, and had found me lying there and lifted me on to the bed. The whole house seemed very quiet—unnaturally so, I thought; the great trouble which had come upon us had hushed it as with the stillness of death. I looked at Mrs. Holland, and I saw that she was crying. Then I remembered everything in a moment, and I started to my feet.

"Where is my father?" I asked. "Does he know what has happened?"

"Oh, lie down again, dear Miss Cathie!" she sobbed. "Don't excite yourself. They say I am to keep you quiet, and not to let you talk at present."

"I can't be still, Mrs. Holland," I said piteously. "Pray tell me where my father is."

"He is in the dining-room," she replied; "and Mr. Beresford is with him. They have sent for the police."

I did not ask for Herbert Tempest; but Mrs. Holland told me of her own accord that he had gone away.

"He said he did not think he could be of any use, and he did not care to stop," she added. "Mr. Beresford has taken everything upon his own shoulders."

"That is just like Herbert," I answered indignantly. "He is never of the slightest use upon an emergency."

Mrs. Holland did not reply. She was wiping away her tears.

"Who is Mr. Beresford?" I asked her presently, after we had both been silent for some moments.

"He seems to know your father well," she answered. "I heard him say Mr. Beresford had only lately arrived from England, and that is all I know."

I scarcely noticed her reply, for my thoughts were too busy with the terrible event that had occurred. Mrs. Holland was again crying softly, with her muslin apron at her eyes.

"Oh, poor dear Miss Rose!" she said. "Who could have had the heart to hurt that poor innocent lamb? I nursed her when she was a baby, and now she is lying there cold and white, and I never wished her good-bye!"

I could not cry; I sat, with my hands tightly clasped together, in sorrow too hopeless for tears. At last I said, almost in a whisper—

"Who do they think did it?"

"That is the most mysterious thing of all, Miss Cathie," she answered. "No one has the slightest idea. No strange or suspicious person has been seen about this place the whole day past. Perhaps the police can find out something out for us when they come."

Later on I rose and smoothed my tumbled hair, bathed my face, and crept down stairs.

The door of the little breakfast-room was locked, and I knew at once that my sister was lying there. As I had my fingers on the handle, the dining-room door opened, and Mr. Beresford came out.

"Don't go in there," he said, and he held open the dining-room door for me, and signed me to walk in.

I obeyed him at once; it was strange how easily he could make me do as he pleased. With Mrs. Holland I should have rebelled, and insisted upon seeing Rose once more.

It was now about 9 o'clock; the soft twilight of the summer evening brooded over everything, and through the open window the scent of the magnolia-tree outside came floating in.

"How sweet the hour when daylight blends
With the pensive shadows on evening's breast;
And dear to the heart is the pleasure it lends,
For 'tis like the departure of saints to their rest!"

Mr. Beresford first closed the window sending a keen glance all round outside as he did so; then he wheeled up an easy-chair to where I was standing, and begged me to sit down. After this he lighted the lamp which was standing on the table; there was tea as well on the table, and he poured out a cup, and brought it to me.

"You look so pale," he said. "Drink this. It will do you good."

I took the cup and began to drink it slowly.

He must have thought me a most meek and docile little creature, from my prompt obedience, which was certainly not the opin-

[illegible]

CHAPTER II.

The man whom I had so suddenly confronted was of medium height, broad-shouldered, brown-faced, brown-bearded, with straight brown eyebrows over dark keen gray eyes.

[illegible]

business which has brought him into our neighbourhood. I felt when he had gone as if I had lost a friend.

I must hasten over the few events which followed his departure. The police did all that was in their power, but in spite of all their efforts they could discover no clue to the murderer of my sister Rose.

No one had been observed near the house or garden during the whole of that long summer's day which ended so tragically for us. No motive could be assigned for the deed. Rose, as far as we knew, had not an enemy in the world.

"It must have been some poor wretch whom her beauty had driven mad," said Mrs. Holland to me in a confidential moment. "Jealousy, Miss Cathie. Depend upon it, that was the cause."

One discovery, it is true, the police who searched our garden did make. Hidden under a pile of dead leaves, in a remote corner of the plantation, they found the rifle with which the deed had been committed. But there their researches ended. There was no clue to the owner of the gun; it was like twenty others in our neighbourhood. No man's rifle was missing, or, if it was, no one would own to the fact.

So the matter ended by a large reward being offered for the discover of the murderer, and by my father's health beginning to suffer severely from his shattered nerves.

We laid Rose quietly to rest in a sheltered valley near the sea. There she sleeps near the roar of the great ocean waves. The everlasting mountains, in the shadow of which she died, look down solemnly upon her resting-place; and there I can stand calmly now, and remember that her troubles are over, and her happiness begun for evermore.

"Nor shall the thoughts of thee depart,
Nor shall my soul regret resign,
Till mem'ry perish, till this heart
Be cold and motionless as thine."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Mr. Parnell.

One of Ireland's greatest curses has always been loud-mouthed and hollow-hearted demagogues, mere talkers, who, simply for their own individual ends it may be, seek to rouse the people by harping on the old old story of their wrongs. Wrongs, of course, Ireland has had. Ever since the conquest of that island there has been much to complain of, and many things very far from creditable to a free, Christian and enlightened country such as England. But how comes it, one may ask, that all these "wrongs," or the great bulk of them at any rate, are to be found towards the South. At the North people seem to get along pretty much in the same way as other folks, and to do very well without such agitators as Parnell. If all Ireland's friends are of that stamp, then may Heaven preserve and help her. If Mr. Parnell and his followers are typical specimens of the average Irishman, then it goes almost without saying that they are as yet totally unfit for self-government. They have yet to learn the very first principles of that science. They are yet but as children, tossed to and fro, and have need that men teach them the rudiments of what they would fain persuade themselves, has reached the highest culmination with themselves.

As has been well said, "there is a certain degree of dignity in a proud protest against oppression, and rebellion frequently commands respect, but Mr. Parnell's party presents itself alternately as a beggar and a bully, and does not appear to advantage in either character." There never was a time in the whole history of the United Kingdom, when English statesmen were more unfeignedly anxious to do every justice to Ireland, to put a stop to the mighty abuses which undoubtedly exist, and to do every thing in their power to give these unhappy people as fair a chance as they can possibly have. But that paragraph from the New York Times, undoubtedly hits off the very character of these present would-be-reformers, and how is it possible that any government, be it ever so willing, can urge measures of redress with any chance of succeeding when demagogues like Parnell have captured the popular ear. Here are some of that worthy's oracular utterances. At New-Ross, speaking of the Boyd murder, he said. "I wish to point out that a recourse to such methods of procedure is entirely unnecessary and absolutely prejudicial, when there is suitable organization among tenants." Mark, not a single word of condemnation against such high-handed proceedings. Not a word to indicate that he thought there was anything morally wrong in such murders, but simply that in certain circumstances they were useless, and wholly detrimental to the best interests of the great cause in hand. What Parnell means by "suitable organization," was explained by himself at Ennis. Farmers are to band themselves together to refuse to pay unjust rents, to decline to take farms from which others have been evicted, and to ostracise any man who dares to act according to his own opinions in opposition to such decrees. "When a man takes a farm from which another has been evicted," says this patriot, "you must shun him on the roadside when you meet him, you must shun him in the streets of the town, you must shun him in the shop, you must shun him in the fair-green, and in the market-place, and even in the place of worship." "In short" says Parnell, "you must do everything in your power to make the country too hot for him, short of murder, that is, if possible. And even though in certain cases excusable it may be, still, murder, where there is proper organization, you will find it prove not only unnecessary, but prejudicial to your own interests." Parnell has a visionary land policy, which he fancies would be the salvation of the Emerald Isle. The farms of 500,000 tenant farmers are to be bought by the State, and handed over as a free gift to the people.

"We want no money," he says, "not a single penny would be necessary. Let the English Government give the landlords their paper as compensation."

The real facts of the case seem to be, that many of the Irish farmers are too lazy for hard work, and would like to get as much as possible done for them without the least exertion of their own, and anything else that has to be done, with the smallest conceivable outlay of trouble and botheration to themselves. There are thousands of Scotch, and English, and German farmers, and others, who have had as hard times as ever Irishmen had, who are not forever making poor mouths over their circumstances, and wishing somebody to help them; but who go about things with a will, and help themselves.

FLOWERS are banners of the vegetable world, which march in various and splendid triumph before the coming of its fruits.

Mr. Bradlaugh and the British Pension List.

Whatever Bradlaugh's religious opinions may be, he will deserve the gratitude of succeeding generations if he persevere and succeed in his attacks on the enormous abuses of the British pension list. [illegible] of pounds are paid away every year to men and families, for no reason whatever than that they are the descendants of some more or less distinguished ancestor. In less than a century the descendants of Lord St. Vincent and Lord Rodney have received $1,000,000 each. For nearly two hundred years the heirs of the Duke of Schomberg have drawn a nice comfortable income from the English Government, though what they have done to deserve it might puzzle the devoutest worshipper of blue blood, and the powers which be. Starvation is by no means a pleasant thing in any case; it must be doubly hard to bear, one would think, were it generally known to the poverty-stricken workpeople and others, that their hard-earned wages help to pamper a lot of idle high-born paupers. The Dukes of Marlborough enjoy a yearly pension of $25,000. The Duke of Wellington was given $3,500,000 by Parliament to support the dignity of his dukedom, and a pension of $10,000 a year, for two generations. Now, these are but a few of the larger grants. The smaller ones are legion. It is somewhat interesting to note the light thrown on the proverbially bull-dog tendencies of the English people by these favoured pensioners of theirs.

All of them are military men. "Saviours" of their country, as they are proudly called. Men who have been destroyers of other men's lives, and who have triumphed in the carnage of battle. It is no doubt true that many of these generals did much for their country, and deserved all the love and gratitude they received from those who were benefitted by their victories, or preserved by their exertions. But the best of them did no more than their duty, without thought of other reward than the approval of their own consciences, and the gratitude of their countrymen, and though the Englishmen of those days did well, it may be, to reward their heroes in the way they did, it is by no means self-evident that the descendants of these heroes, people who have never in any way distinguished themselves, and whose only glory is a reflected one, are entitled to such very substantial evidences of good-will. It may be that "the people" ought to feel themselves privileged in being allowed to contribute towards the dignity of such ancient and honourable houses, but "the people" are beginning to feel that money spent in this way could be put to a much better use. Royalty in all its various manifestations is quite a heavy, enough burden for the ordinary taxpayer, and he is thinking very seriously indeed, that a little judicious economy would not be a bad thing in more ways than one. One thing at least can be said of the English people, and that is, that they have never invested much money in pensioning literary and scientific men, whatever they may have done with their soldiers. Poets, philosophers, statesmen even, scientific men, travellers, inventors, men who have done and dared more for the English nation and the human race, than any conqueror of them all, have been allowed to die in poverty, obscurity, and neglect,—but leaders of armies! well they are more like the roast beef and dumpling, something that the average Englishman can at least understand. The widow of Sir John Franklin received a pension of one hundred pounds, a year or so. The name of Livingstone was honored by some trifle, equally paltry, and equally well deserved. But these, and cases like these are exceptional; only too frequently the greatest, and most gifted of Englishmen, have been left without other approval than their own, and the hope of justice from future generations. If less attention were paid to the mere accident of birth, more might be done for the deserving. It is getting more difficult every year to persuade men to live contentedly in poverty, while other men, without merit of their own, are clothed in purple and fine linen, and, while extravagance is so rife as it is to-day. The state of things is of course, to a certain extent unavoidable, but at least the greatest care should be taken not to aggravate, what may be so far a necessary evil, or rather not an evil, but an unavoidable consequence, if men are to make money, and inherit money at all.

Trouble Brewing in Norway.

THE KING ACCUSES THE STORTHING OF EXCEEDING ITS CONSTITUTIONAL POWERS.

(From the Paris Francaise.)

Not long ago I wrote to you about the constitutional conflict between the Storthing and the Crown on the subject of the attendance of Ministers at the debates in the National Legislature. This conflict is not the only one. A second has arisen which seems likely to reach irritating proportions. At the close of the recent session, several projects for the reorganization of the army, which had been referred to Military Commission, were still incomplete. At one of its last sittings, that of June 19, the Storthing authorized the Commission to sit after the adjournment, and until the beginning of the next session.

Upon the advice of the Norwegian Ministers, the King refused, on August 18, to sanction this action, declaring that it was impossible for him to acquiesce in the introduction of a practice by virtue of which the Storthing could empower a certain number of its members to sit and deliberate in the intervals of the sessions under the name of a committee. The royal decree sets forth that, "in naming a Parliamentary Commission of this nature, the Storthing committed a trespass upon the domain of the Executive, and usurped administrative functions not belonging to it. Furthermore, in authorizing one of its committees to work outside of the sessions, it exceeded its powers in another way, notably by extending the duration of its sessions beyond the term fixed by the Constitution; that is to say, beyond two months." Moreover, "a commission constituted as this one is [three military men, two of whom are very advanced members of the Opposition] does not offer the necessary guarantee that the projects, several of which have not even been examined by the Government, will be subjected to a sufficiently intelligent and impartial study."

It was this last consideration, evidently, that decided the King, for he immediately proposed a royal commission, to be composed of the three members of the Parliamentary Committee and three new and competent members to be named by the Crown. It is clear that this proposition will have to be ratified by the Storthing, which must decide whether or not to permit its members to sit on this new Commission. At this moment it is announced that the President of the Storthing, who is also the President of the Military Commission, has called a meeting of the latter. Naturally this step is represented by the Ministerial press as a grave insult to the sovereign.

The Pocket Handerchief.

We may forget our purse, our penknife, and many other things, says the London Hatter, without experiencing any great inconvenience, and even without its being known at times, but to lose or mislay the handkerchief, may be followed by very grave consequences, as we all know. Moreover, we make use of this article in many other different ways. All who make use of spectacles do not remove them from their nose in order to put them very carefully into the case without using the handkerchief, and they use it again before putting them on, wiping the glasses with great care. The majority of people pay by far too little attention to an object so indispensable. Many put it into the same pocket with their keys, their purse, their snuff-box, without troubling themselves concerning the many strange substances with which its tissue will not fail to come in contact in so miscellaneous a company, and which might sully the purity which the handkerchief ought to possess. Does one go to pay a visit? Before presenting themselves to the person they wish to thank or solicit, some have been known to dust their boots with the handkerchief. Does the careful wife see some grains of dust left on her ornaments? She makes them disappear with her handkerchief. Boys in the school room clean their slates with them; in the playground their handkerchief is the necessary attendant of a multitude of games. With this they wipe of the dirt; they strike off the dust. It is used to stop the blood that flows from wounds—always very numerous in the age of leap-frog and prisoners base; the age also of communism in handkerchiefs. With wounds come tears, and the handkerchief, full of dust, spotted with dirt, with the blood of bodies known or unknown, serves again for wiping the eyes, the nose, or the cheeks furrowed with tears. We do not wish, and we cannot tell here all the strange uses that people make of the pocket handkerchief. And then what signals have been conveyed by it! How many sad farewells, how many cheerful congratulations! The very method of waving it has a language, as the motions of the fan also have. But we can but glance in this connection at the language of the pocket handkerchief. And how useful it often is as a help to the pocket or the hand-bag! How many mushrooms, myrtle-berries, strawberries, and raspberries [illegible] handkerchief [illegible] valuable things in later life! Then there may be evil results traced to it—a number of ailments of which one cannot guess the origin; diseases of the nose and eyes. Fortunate it is for him that incurs nothing worse; diphtheria, for example, which the handkerchief may heedlessly transmit. Let us not use the handkerchief except for its proper purpose; let us devote to it a special place; let us change it as often as possible, and inspire our children with a great disgust for another's handkerchief on account of the disagreeable, nay, dangerous consequences that may ensue. Much more might be said about the pocket handkerchief, but enough has been hinted at to set my readers a-thinking upon its importance, its uses, and its abuses.

Rev. John Potts, Pastor Metropolitan Church, Toronto.

The Metropolitan Church and grounds, are justly regarded as among the sights of Toronto. Perhaps correct taste might find some points against which to take objection, both in the building and its surroundings. But these are quite beyond ordinary comprehension, and would puzzle the average stranger even though they were pointed out. Some think the grounds too large for the church, and that the latter is hereby given a squat and somewhat insignificant appearance. Others are equally sure of something very much the reverse. While others still, to show their discernment and their taste, insist upon the incongruity of some part of the structure as compared with others,—the tawdriness of some of the internal decorations, and the far from attractive appearance of some of the stained windows. All this may or may not be, yet after everything has been said in depreciation that well can be, it remains unquestionable that the Metropolitan church is one of the finest and most attractive in the city, and that those who say it is not, don't know what they are speaking about. For all purposes of worship, whether in the matter of hearing, sitting, kneeling, or seeing, it is very near perfection, and when it is full, as it generally is every Sunday evening, it presents a very attractive appearance, quite "fair to see."

A great many doubted the wisdom and worldly policy of erecting such a building. Financially it was thought that it could never be made a success. It was all very well it was contended, so long as Mr. Punshon preached in it, with greater or less regularity. The power and popularity of that distinguished gentleman were acknowledged to be quite sufficient to fill any church, however large, and to pay for any one, however expensive. But then, what was to be expected when he should leave or die? Financial embarrassment and ultimately, humiliating failure. That a native Canadian could successfully step into the gap was thought too absurd to be seriously discussed. These were too really rough and uneducated to successfully come after the great man and preacher, whom more than mere Methodism delighted to honour. The actual subsequent facts have shown that all these fears and proceedings were groundless. Punshon came out to marry a wife whom he could not legally wed in England, and no sooner had got rid of this apparent encumbrance, by death, than he again made tracks for home, and very speedily forgot his sorrow in another spouse. Some thought that the haste made to get off was scarcely decent, and was anything but respectful to his departed wife. Others trembled for the Metropolitan ark, and wished that the great man could stay, till things were in a somewhat better shape. Go, however, he must, and so he went, "bag and baggage" for good, and all after the deceased wife's sister episode had been brought to its somewhat sorrowful conclusion. What was to be done to supply the great man's lack of service, and build wisely and successfully on the foundation that had been laid? The Methodists are a shrewd, wise people, though they do about sometimes with unnecessary vehemence at camp meetings, and fall conveniently from grace when a shabby dodge has to be put through. Let it be said, at any rate, that they keep a keen eye upon any of the more likely of their young men. They know the importance of having continual relays of fresh, active, and pious preachers. Their cause could not otherwise live, much less flourish. And they are not afraid to put young men forward when they are found to be of the right stuff. It is all very well to talk of 'pets' in the Methodist Ministry, and of some being unduly pushed forward, and others as being unfairly kept back. We don't believe there is much in all this. The energetic and able, will, generally, under this popular system, come to the front, and those who ultimately don't, may draw what conclusions they please from that fact. When the hour of necessity struck with the Metropolitan people, the man was ready.

John Potts has a name neither very euphonious nor very romantic. It is decidedly plebeian, and intimates, we fear, in a very unmistakable manner that there is not much "blue blood" running in the veins of this sturdy Methodist. The incidents in his history are neither many nor startling, so that it would be as difficult as possible, even in these days of terrible book marking, to construct a decently sized volume with the record either of what he has said, or what he has done. Starting in a very humble mercantile sphere, we believe, in Hamilton, young Potts was very soon kindly taken in hand by one of Hamilton's most respectable and open handed citizens, and through the instrumentality of that gentleman was in due time fairly started as an itinerant preacher. That Mr. Potts was at first but poorly equipped for his work may go without saying. His opportunities had been few, and the course of instruction through which he passed was comparatively meagre. To learning, in the proper sense of that term, he has never made any pretensions, and it is just as well, for learned he is not. He knows, however, his forte, and has from the first diligently cultivated it. He is a preacher, if he is anything, and to make himself a success in this line has been the object of his most strenuous and sustained endeavours. He has thought and spoken of, perhaps even dreamed about, sermons and the best way of preparing them, for many years past. He knows that all honest and intelligent labour eventually tells, and so, when called upon to occupy the Metropolitan pulpit as successor to Dr. Punshon, he was found quite equal to the labour, and quite deserving of the honour. The cause flourished more than ever, Punshon was not missed, for Potts reigned and ruled in his stead. It could scarcely be said that, with his installation as occupant of the chief Methodist pulpit of Toronto, the reputation of the Doctor began. He had been previously well-known, but henceforth he became a power in the country, and has continued to be so ever since. His second term in this charge, has not been so brilliant as the first, and it is saying nothing but what is notorious, to affirm that he has little or no chance of a "third term."

It would be difficult to intimate wherein Dr. Potts' strength and attractiveness lie. He has no brilliant and poetical flights, like his friend and neighbour Briggs, he has not the polish of either of the Hunters, and for rugged strength and general vigour of thought and expression, he can't be placed on the same plane with either Dr. Dewart, or the Mission Secretary. Yet, there he is, in the very front rank of Methodist ministers, and in some respects more widely popular than any of them who could be mentioned. His bodily presence does a good deal for him, as well as his voice, and his jolly Irish temperament and bearing, which are warm without being boisterous, and friendly without being too familiar. He cultivates no specialty. He is not odd, either in his manner or his talk. Genius he has none, but he has good sense, fair abilities, commendable industry, and both relish and faculty for his work. Perhaps his popularity has somewhat spoiled him, for he is now apt occasionally to play "Sir Oracle," while his growing impatience of opposition, has been sometimes remarked upon, and lamented. He has his temper and feelings under very good control, though sometimes they will break through restraint, and lead him to say not the most prudent things. Though his [illegible] is well kept up, and are always well worth hearing, yet we fear his popularity is rather on the wane, though it would be difficult to indicate the rising light that is going to take his place. Altogether we like the Doctor. He is not so great a man as the inner circle of his admirers believe him to be. Not perhaps so much so, as he himself imagines. But he is far above the average of his brethren, and if the people of the Metropolitan, are always blessed with a succession of preachers and pastors as good as he has been, and is, they will have very little cause to complain.

HIGH WAYS AND BYE WAYS OF TORONTO.

(From The Truth.)

THE AWFUL SWELL.

You should have seen me, when for the first, or almost the first time I found myself in print. Mentally, literally and corporeally, I became sensibly enlarged. I threw back my head with an air, and felt as if I could strike the lofty stars. I trod the Empyrean, and got into the strange delusion that everybody was looking at me. It seemed as if the very air was conscious, and had no room for any kind of thought, except that which I possessed, or rather which possessed me. I laughed inwardly. I was greatly tempted to ask my friends and acquaintances if they had seen TRUTH. Indeed, I directly spoke of it once or twice, and in order to be natural, said that there were some rather good things in it.

OH THE JOY OF AUTHORSHIP!

It far surpasses that which comes to a boy, when the first ghost of a beard makes its appearance on his chin; when young ladies first recognise him as a man; Or when for the first time—well everybody knows how that sentence ought to close. I was taken down just a little, and for an instant, when an old croney who had invested four cents in the paper said,—There are a good many things in that paper which I like, but what an enormous fool that man must be, who signs himself Jacob Faithful. The fellow has neither common sense, nor common decency." What could I say? What could I do? I could not get angry, or own up. I could not, in short, in any way show that the shaft had gone home. So all I could reply was: "I haven't an idea. Rather think he is pretty weak," though all the while I hugged myself with the thought that, that man was an old stoopid who knew nothing. And I tried hard to square up with my conscience by urging as pretty a piece of Jesuitry as ever any one would wish to have at hand when he wanted to prove that, in certain circumstances a lie was no lie at all, but only a praiseworthy device for escaping from unpleasant situations. And then didn't I feel big when I learned that and that even the news boys pushed it with great vigour and corresponding success! It was altogether a new sensation, and I enjoyed it immensely. Away I went down town, —along King and up Yonge, till I got to the College avenue, away to the Queen street avenue, and other places too numerous to mention. I looked to see if there were any boys in search of horse-chestnuts, and if any bobbies were chasing them from branch to branch. I thought if these things were worth putting into the big dailies as they seem to be, I should never be without subjects to write about. As I passed Osgood Hall, I thought I should look in to see that everything was as it ought to be, and that both Judges and lawyers were doing their duty. I walked into the library as if it were all my own, and passed out again without having bagged a single item. This rather brought me down a peg, but I was stirred by the conviction that I should be more successful when I reached Queen. Queen as every body knows, is not a nice street. The houses are generally mean in their appearance, the great majority of the people have a common like look about them, and the children are correspondingly dirty, with a strong tendency to shabbiness.

TRUTH TOOK AMAZINGLY,

THE STREET RAILWAY IS A GREAT CONVENIENCE,

but it does not improve the roadway, and neither horses nor men, to say nothing of the carriages, are a sight to see. It juggles us to find out what can be the reason that the Street Railway Co. in Toronto roles with such a rod of iron, and does just as it pleases, let people grumble as they may. Is there any power behind the throne? Are there means taken to make it pleasant with those who could make them the reverse? Nobody seems to know, but this at any rate is plain, that the Street Railway folks in this city can do with perfect safety, what in any other place would raise a big row, and lead to a very great change of conduct on the part of the officials, high and low. As it is, the conductors and drivers can be as saucy as they please; can pack as many into their miserable vehicles as can find an inch to stand upon, and can abuse horses to their hearts' content and nobody says a word. One never can make out how it happens, but that it does, is beyond all question. Be this or be that the case, the whole affair pays splendidly, and the owners, if they pleased, could afford to make things smart, and insist upon there being reasonable loads and civil conduct every day, and all the day long.

Didn't I say I had a mind to go and

INTERVIEW CAPT. PRINCE

and the other officials at the Central Prison? Well I made another attempt, and in order to screw my courage to the sticking point, I went in just to have a chat with Mr. Donaldson the Emigration Agent. He's a pleasant intelligent man, but he knows it equally well, and when he thinks it worth while, he can blarney people at a great rate. He did not know that I was the correspondent of TRUTH. Perhaps if he had, he would not have been quite so communicative. I am not the man, however, to betray confidence, and what I learned there, I shall keep religiously to myself till I can make use of it to advantage without hurting anybody's feelings, or compromising any of the officials. After my experience with Mr. Donaldson I went boldly into the prison and discussed the whole situation with the Captain. Now, you may believe the Captain, when taken in the right way and at the right time is a pleasant gentlemanly fellow.

HE IS A LITTLE DUNDREARYISH

of course, and some ill-natured people would say that his eyes are, if anything, somewhat sodden. But the World is too hard upon him, though I doubt if the Captain had not been his father's son, whether he would have been where he is to-day. But who would be just exactly in their present positions but for some such accident? Even I myself might not exactly be what I am had the "old man" not left me that cash which I never could have earned, and secured for me friends that possibly I could never have made. Let anybody look over the public men in this city. How have they come to be what they are? Merit? Heaven help them, in many cases, no. Influence, influence, that's the thing!

EVEN SOME THAT ARE ALDERMEN might have been different, had everybody got his due. By the way, speaking of Aldermen, is it not about time these gentlemen were pulling up and behaving themselves? The elections will soon be here, and they had better try to furbish up a little bit of character for economy and common sense. I know if I were one I should. And I am always telling them this, but they won't listen. They are continually making rules only to break them, and in many ways they are far from prudent. Gentlemen, gentlemen, I say to them, remember it is getting on in October, and as Buzfuz would phrase it, "You must be careful." Of course, I make it a point to attend at and generally button-hole the members as much as possible. It is quite wonderful how wise they are, at least a good many of them, wise in their own conceit, as I say, when they are in a jocular humour, and will stand some nonsense. I thought once of giving pen-and-ink sketches of the whole lot, but my space is exhausted, and it would be unfair to bring any of them in at the fag end of a letter. There, now, what a goodly man the Mayor is. I like him. I actually do, and since he became Member as well as Mayor, my liking has risen to positive affection.

COUNCIL MEETINGS,

AND THERE IS BAXTER!

What a man, to be sure! Where will you find, for his inches, any one that carries more weight? And Love! Why, he is positively lovely, and, of course, never made a mistake in his life. Blevins I positively honour, and especially since I learned that he had a frugal mind, and was so bent on economy that he would do all the law business of the city for $1500. It is very fine. I honour him for the offer, whether he is successful or not, in obtaining the object of his ambition. Ah, but

ONE MISSES SUCH MEN AS TURNER AND THOMPSON

and,—I forget the rest. The high-toned people, you know, those that could give dignity to any assembly. Well, peace be with them. They may come back again, for they still honour our streets with their presence, their friends with a smile, and their foes with—a blessing.

I was going to speak about

[illegible] THE "GLOBE" COMPANY,

as I see everybody seems to think that that is fine game, but I am afraid if I go on this way, I shall put all my raisins into one dumpling, and that will be foolish in two ways. It will make this bill of fare too rich, and will leave me destitute for coming days.

[illegible] of that [illegible] and bye, though what in the [illegible] or any other outsider may [illegible] its affairs, as long as it pays [illegible] keep out of the bankruptcy [illegible] than I can imagine. Do [illegible]

THEY SAY DONALD [illegible]

has some share in the concern [illegible] why not? And why should [illegible] have some shares? N[illegible] see, and when I think of it, I [illegible] go for some of that stock [illegible] as my name is

JACOB [illegible]

P. S.—What a lot of I's have [illegible] ed into this letter! Well, [illegible] makes the whole look more [illegible] like what it is in real life, when [illegible] capital letter does such a [illegible] ness!—J. F.

The Excavation of Flood [illegible] Gate.

The mining of Flood Rock, [illegible] the East River at the northerly [illegible] York city, preparatory to [illegible] after the manner of the Hal[illegible] work, is being pushed forward [illegible] expenditure last year amount[illegible] 000, and a large part of the [illegible] propriated this year for the [illegible] East River will go to this work [illegible] ment is now given to 135 men [illegible] three shifts of eight hours each [illegible] shaft is fifty feet deep.

Running across the river are [illegible] ings; at right angles to these [illegible] cross headings, none of which [illegible] extended their entire length. [illegible] seven feet high and ten feet wi[illegible] situated about twenty feet apart [illegible] main shaft, however, where more [illegible] space are required for working [illegible] larger. Three acres have thus [illegible] mined, or one-third of the wh[illegible] intended to enlarge the heading [illegible] one has been carried out to it [illegible] Then the chambers will be [illegible] made higher, so that the whole [illegible] will resemble an immense cav[illegible] being supported by the rock pi[illegible] now form the sides of the head[illegible] thickness of the rock forming [illegible] then be about ten feet, varying [illegible] to the character of the rock, [illegible] now from fifteen to thirty feet [illegible]

The work of tunneling [illegible] slowly, owing to the hardness [illegible] which the reef is composed. [illegible] which it is now going on is fro[illegible] feet a month, representing an [illegible] fabout 1,500 cubic yards. It is [illegible] tell when the whole will be [illegible] even at this rate. Frequently [illegible] struck in blasting which stops [illegible] that heading altogether, on acc[illegible] leakage. In such a case it is [illegible] work around the leak. Accor[illegible] last report, the work done du[illegible] year was much greater than in [illegible] year; 24,000 cubic yards of [illegible] moved, 43,000 blasts made, and [illegible] sharpened. The number of bla[illegible] each night now average 150. The [illegible] broken up is loaded on scows and [illegible] the deep water to the south of [illegible] Part of it was also used to fill up [illegible] between Big and Little Mill Ro[illegible] lie to the north.

Our Salmon Fisheries.

Professor H. Y. Hind has wr[illegible] to the Forest and Stream, in [illegible] verts to the climate question in [illegible] the late appearance of salmon in [illegible] this season, also to "biennial [illegible] also to the habit of salmon se[illegible] rivers than their native streams [illegible] purposes, and to the developme[illegible] hook on the male salmon in his [illegible] year only. He writes to Mr. M[illegible] seer of Fisheries, and asks to be [illegible] through the columns of the Mira[illegible] for reliable information about th[illegible] salmon in the Bay of Chaleurs [illegible] ago." He further says:—I wi[illegible] whether any record, or tradition [illegible] pecting the salmon catch in the ye[illegible] 1835; and 1836, 1841, 1842 and [illegible] fact the record of any particularly [illegible] any particularly poor year, will be [illegible] received. I have prepared a not[illegible] salmon catch and character of the [illegible] certain rivers in Scotland for a[illegible] hundred years, and I wish to [illegible] whether the experience in New B[illegible] bears out certain remarkable relatio[illegible] found to exist between [illegible] cold in the appearance of certain [illegible] fish particularly the salmon.

I should be glad if Mr. Mowat w[illegible] state whether he has ever taken or [illegible] male salmon late in the season wi[illegible] hook being developed largely on [illegible] jaw; also, whether he has ever seen [illegible] of large male salmon, having milt [illegible] veloped, without the hook on the lo[illegible] I should also like to ask him whether [illegible] ever seen any nests of the salmon [illegible] supposes were made in the spring of [illegible] I have seen such nests at the heads [illegible] the North West branch of the So[illegible] Miramichi. I saw them with tro[illegible] eggs in them on the 24th of Ju[illegible] when I was making the Geological S[illegible] the Province.

The Advance says:—Professor [illegible] writing on the Fisheries with a view [illegible] the subject better understood than it [illegible] not only by the people, but also by [illegible] partment at Ottawa, whose knowl[illegible] modes are both susceptible of impro[illegible]

Diamond Cutting in New Y[illegible]

Among the curious and interesting [illegible] trial facts brought to light during the [illegible] inquiries, not the least is the fact th[illegible] cently introduced art of diamond [illegible] been so admirably developed here th[illegible] monds cut in Amsterdam are sent to th[illegible] for recutting. Hitherto Amsterdam [illegible] monopolized the work of diamond c[illegible] and the aim there has been to remove [illegible] ting the least possible weight of th[illegible] The American plan is to cut mat[illegible] cally, according to recognized laws of [illegible] as to secure the utmost brilliancy fo[illegible] ished stone. The greater loss in wei[illegible] compared with the Amsterdam cut [illegible] thus more than made good by the [illegible] brilliancy of the product. From the [illegible] ies made by chief special census agent [illegible] E. Hill, it appears that the average in[illegible] value given to diamonds by New Yo[illegible] ting is $5,000 for each person emplo[illegible] twelve months; also, that our dealers [illegible] ceiving the best Amsterdam-cut gem[illegible] abroad to be recut here and returned.

THE Marquis Robert de San [illegible] who married an American, Miss He[illegible] lender, has ordered in this country [illegible] things for their baby. A willow cra[illegible] a canopy decorated with draperies, [illegible] lions, points of Valenciennes lace, a[illegible] satin ribbon. There are sheets with [illegible] borders and bands of French embr[illegible] and others of lawn, with lace ends [illegible] them to make the cost $500 for fou[illegible] eider down quilt and some exquisite [illegible] blankets are included in the outfit. [illegible] are three dozen dresses in the w[illegible] many of them of lawn, mull, and fine [illegible] "Young mothers," says a correspond[illegible] the Philadelphia Times, "can easily i[illegible] the dainty beauty of the tiny sl[illegible] the exquisitely embroidered law[illegible] nitured with the finest of [illegible] richest of the flannel skirts w[illegible] broidery, and the handsome [illegible] med, and lace-finished pettic[illegible] difficult to conceive of anything [illegible] the robes of real lace, arranged in dia[illegible] medallions, squares, and all manner [illegible] ceits, with applique of embroidery in [illegible] and other flowers, each figure in the [illegible] ciennes lace being punched or upraise[illegible] it looks like round point."

BUT, children, you should never let [illegible] angry passions rise; your little ha[illegible] never made to tear each other's eyes [illegible] foregoing is not original, having been [illegible] some years ago by a good man, who de[illegible] ed not in juvenile combats. The [illegible] should have been impressed on [illegible] children in Honesdale, Pa. A girl and [illegible] boys, aged respectively, 9, 7 and 6 [illegible] assaulted a girl of 8, and literally [illegible] "little hands" tore out the eyes of [illegible] Myers, the girl referred to. Besides [illegible] her eyesight, the poor girl has also lo[illegible] hearing, through the fiendishness [illegible] youthful ruffians. The aggressive three [illegible] tried the other day and acquitted. [illegible] Watts' verse had been thoroughly [illegible] ed on them with a rod, such as [illegible] recommended, it would seem more [illegible] tice.

BISHOP ELEGIO COSI, at Chang-Tu[illegible] China, has invented an alphabet of [illegible] ters, by means of which all the sounds [illegible] Chinese language can, it is said, be [illegible] sented. The Emperor of Austria ha[illegible] so well pleased with the invention th[illegible] has presented the Bishop with a co[illegible] typographical apparatus, so that the [illegible] alphabet may be employed in printing [illegible] characters used by the Chinese [illegible] 50,000.

[illegible] Standard

IS PUBLISHED

[illegible] FRIDAY MORNING

[illegible] the early mails.

[illegible] the [illegible] Foreign and Provincial [illegible] Intelligence, County Business, [illegible] an Instructive [illegible]

[illegible] advance, $1 50 in three months, [illegible] till end of the year. No paper [illegible] continued until all arrearages are [illegible] at the option of the publisher. [illegible] refusing papers without paying [illegible] held responsible for the subscrip[illegible] they comply with the rules.

[illegible] OF ADVERTISING:

[illegible] one year	$50 00
do	30 00
do	18 00
do	10 00
do	4 50
[illegible] first insertion	50
[illegible] subsequent insertion	15
[illegible] lines, first insertion	75
[illegible] subsequent insertion	25
[illegible] lines, first insertion per line	8
[illegible] subsequent insertion	2

[illegible] number of lines to be reckoned by [illegible] occupied measured by a scale of [illegible] Advertisements without [illegible] directions will be published till for[illegible] charged accordingly. All transitory [illegible] ments must be in the office of pub[illegible] by 11 o'clock on the Thursday [illegible] preceding their publication.

[illegible] W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

[illegible]ESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

[illegible]rs. Sproule & Carter, [illegible]ians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.

[illegible] E.—Medical Hall; residence at [illegible] House. [illegible]ale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes, [illegible]er at Law, - Owen Sound. [illegible] E.—Miller's building, over Robin[illegible] Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost, [illegible]ISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT [illegible] Solicitors in Chancery, Convey[illegible] Owen Sound, have resumed at [illegible] Office open every Thursday, as [illegible] FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B. [illegible]nty Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane, [illegible]ISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, [illegible]licitor in Chancery, &c. [illegible]s—at Owen Sound and Markdale. [illegible] Office at Markdale, over W. J. Mc[illegible] store, open on Thursday of every [illegible] 1-y

James Masson, [illegible]ISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, [illegible]ster in Chancery, Owen Sound. [illegible]7, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon, [illegible]RNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN [illegible]ncery, Notary Public, &c. [illegible] loaned at lowest rates on personal [illegible] estate. Lands bought and sold. [illegible]d seller introduced free of commis[illegible] DUNDALK. [illegible]mber 21st, 1880. 1 [illegible]veyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown. [illegible]R OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c. [illegible]missioner in B. R. &c. [illegible]ancing in all its branches promptly [illegible] to and carefully executed. [illegible] Money to Lend on Real Estate [illegible] [illegible]le, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae, [illegible] ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM [illegible]nty of Grey. [illegible] to Loan at reasonable interest, pay[illegible] yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end [illegible] 8½ per cent.—principal payable [illegible] of 5, 8 or 10 years—or principal [illegible] yearly to suit Borrowers. [illegible] Sale. Mortgages bought and sold. [illegible]7, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown, [illegible]R of Marriage Licenses, Fire and [illegible] Insurance Agent. Commissioner [illegible] &c. Conveyancer and License [illegible] for the County of Grey. Farmers [illegible] and Land Sales, Punctually at[illegible] and charges made very moderate. [illegible]le, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

[illegible]eorge Corbet, Jr., [illegible] LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT [illegible] Sound. Money to Loan at lo[illegible] interest. Principal payable at th[illegible] term of years, and interest half yea[illegible] y, or principal and interest repa[illegible] talments, [illegible]umber of desirable Improved Farms [illegible] 1-y

J. G. Sing, [illegible]SION AND PROVINCIAL LAND [illegible]veyor, Draughtsman and Valuator [illegible]nd Markdale. Having purchased [illegible] Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's [illegible]k of original Field Notes, Plans, [illegible]nstructions, &c., of all his Surveys [illegible] in the last fifty-five years, I am [illegible] make Surveys in strict accord[illegible]ewith. Profiles and Estimates [illegible] Hills, Plans and Specifications [illegible]ng Bridges, furnished on applic[illegible] ney to Loan at 8 per cent interest [illegible] letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH [illegible] will be promptly attended to. [illegible] 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

[illegible]r. James J. White, [illegible] to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound [illegible] BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE [illegible]arkdale, on the last Wednesday [illegible]h, when he will be prepared to pe[illegible] erations required upon the mou[illegible] most satisfactory manner, and upon [illegible] terms. 1-y

Hotels.

[illegible]NSION HOUSE MARKDALE.

[illegible] leased the above hotel and tho[illegible] furnished and refitted it, the tra[illegible] lic will find every accommodation [illegible] best of liquors and cigars kept [illegible] bling. Careful hostler.

JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor [illegible]7, 1880. 1-y

[illegible]YAL HOTEL, MEAFORD, Ont.

[illegible] MCGIRR, PROPRIETOR.

[illegible] accommodation for the travelling [illegible] The bar is well stocked with th[illegible] Wines and Liquors and the be[illegible] Cigars. [illegible] from all trains. [illegible] 1880. 1-y

MANHOOD: LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published [illegible] new edition of Dr. Culver[illegible]well's Celebrated Essay [illegible] and permanent cure (witho[illegible] of Nervous Debility, Mental a[illegible] Incapacity, Impediments to M[illegible] resulting from excesses. [illegible] in a sealed envelope, only [illegible] two postage stamps. [illegible] celebrated author, in this admirable [illegible] demonstrates, from thir[illegible] practice, that alarming co[illegible] may be radically cured without t[illegible] use of internal medicine or t[illegible] knife; pointing out a mode [illegible] simple, certain and effectual, [illegible] which every sufferer, no mat[illegible] condition may be, may cure him[illegible] privately and radically. [illegible] should be in the hands of ev[illegible] every man in the land.

[illegible] CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO. 41 ANN ST., NEW YOR[illegible]

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 8. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1880. WHOLE NO. 8

Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING

in time to meet the early mails.

Rates of advertising, subscription terms and the publisher's conditions are printed here; most of this notice cannot be read.

.... RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Sproule & Carter, Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs, &c. Medical Hall; residence at ... Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Thos. R. Wilkes. ... at Law, ... Owen Sound. 1-y

Frost & Frost. ...TERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound ... J. W. Frost, LL. B. ... Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane. ...ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ... Owen Sound and Markdale. ... every Thursday ... 1-y

James Masson. ...ER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ... in Chancery, Owen Sound. 1-y

James Lamon. ...TORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN ..., Notary Public, &c. DUNDALK. Sept. 21st, 1880. 1

Insurance & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown. ... OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c. ... promptly ... Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McHue. ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM ... 1-y

Alexander Brown. ... of Marriage Licenses, Fire and ... Agent, Commissioner ... Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr. ...AN AND GENERAL AGENT. ... 1-y

J. G. Sing. ... AND PROVINCIAL LAND ... Markdale. ... 1-y

Dentistry.

James J. White. ... Owen Sound. ... at THE REVERE HOUSE, MARKDALE ... 1-y

Hotels.

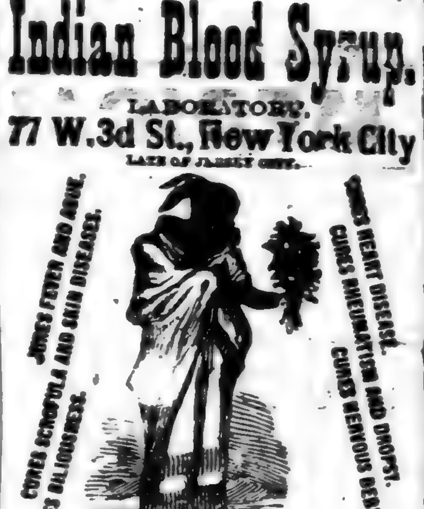
UNION HOUSE MARKDALE. ... JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor. 1-y

...AL HOTEL. ...EAFORD, Ont. ... Proprietor. 1-y

MANHOOD: HOW RESTORED. ... a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay ... CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO., 41 Ann St., New York, P. O. Box 4586.

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

LABORATORY. 77 W. 3d St., New York City. LATE OF JERSEY CITY.



(TRADE MARK.)

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc. The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man! 70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870 9,000,000 Bottles. This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.

Mrs. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed any ... After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.

Mrs. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.

Burford, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.

ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

Dear Sir:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me. Mrs. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

Dear Sir:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted. MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

Dear Sir:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.

W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.

Dear Sir:—I was severely afflicted with Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to procure anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.

NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.

Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.

Dear Sir:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to procure any medicine ... your Indian Blood Syrup ... only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared ... I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.

Mrs. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.

Dear Sir:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and ... many remedies, but without effect. I bought of your agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured ...

DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.

Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ...

W. H. ROBISON.

Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a reliable ... Blood Purifier throughout the World.

The Bishop of Manchester, England, states that he sees no objection to open art exhibition on Sunday so long as they do not interfere with the hours of church service.

A very disagreeable old gentleman dies. A nephew ... "Deeply regretted by ..."

Crockery, G...

In great variety a...

BOOTS A...

The largest and best ...

DRY ...

My Stock in this depa... tains the newest lines i... Winceys, Shirtings, Flan... a choice selection of Tw...

READY-MADE CLOTH...

Suits, Shirts, Drawers, Overall...

HATS, CAPS AND FU...

Goods. Also everything else ... The above Goods have all ... be sold at BOTTOM PRICES ...

...28, 1880.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Waifs.

A calm, delightful Autumn night—
A Moon's mysterious, golden Light—
A Maiden at her Window height,
In Robes of pure and fleecy White.

The little Wicket Gate ajar—
A Lover tripping from afar,
With tuneful voice and light Guitar,
To woo his radiant Guiding Star.

A Lute with soft, insidious Twang—
Oh, how the doting Lover sang!
A Bull-Dog, with Remorseless Fang—
A Nip, a Grip, a Deadly Pang.

A Maiden with a startled Glance—
A Shrieking for Deliverance—
A kind of weird, hilarious Dance—
A Pair of Riven Doeskin Pants.

A maiden fainting with Affright—
A Lover in a sickening Plight—
A Bull-Dog chuckling with Delight—
A wild, delirious Autumn Night!

There was an old lady of Warren,
A traveller stepped on her corren,
She tottered and reeled,
And hollered and squealed,
And wished she had never been borren.

She read all the books of science,
Her fingers were covered with ink,
She hooted at marriage alliance,
She talked of the missing link.

She quoted savants and preachers
Of greater and less renown—
Plantonic in all her features,
She got mashed on a circus clown.

And now Lady Godiva is said to be a myth—a bare falsehood, as it were.

Some one inquires: "Where have all the ladies' belts gone?" Gone to waist long ago.

It requires but a short time for a young lady out shopping to learn all the countersigns of the dry-goods trade.

Rebecca—"Yes, a man who is continually sticking his nose into other people's business can be said to possess a roamin' nose."

The custom-house officers in New York carefully inspect the inside of fishing-rods. Sara Bernhardt can't slip into the country in that fashion.

Every lady who educates her servants into greater truthfulness, fidelity, self-respect, and the orderly ways of life, is doing missionary work of the best sort.

The women in Persia are obliged to ride in a railroad car alone and pass their fare out through a hole in the roof. There isn't a living soul to flirt with except the driver.

"I think, dear, the dew has commenced falling," he said, in his softest accents. "Yes," she yawned, "I've been hoping to hear adieu for some time." He didn't call the next evening.

A young woman in Denver flung herself into a cistern, but she was fished out. A local paragrapher advises her as follows: "Cis turn from your evil ways." But he won't joke that way when it becomes cistern.

A Galveston woman, just married, wishing to impress her husband with her ability as a housekeeper, bawled out to the servant as she entered the door: "Matilda, bring me the washboard; I want to wash the potatoes for dinner."

The first hat of a new fashion for ladies is not the result of any particular design. One is finished plain and then sat down upon by the head milliner. Whatever shape it may take under pressure is adopted as the style, and becomes the pattern for others.

Fashion Notes

Red lace veils will be worn by a few eccentric ladies.

Feather ruchings are revived for dresses and cloaks.

Chameleon fabrics shot in two colours will be worn.

Jet collars go with black silk and velvet costumes.

Madras plaids take precedence over Scotch tartans.

Red and grey are fashionable colours in combinations.

Brocaded fabrics of velvet, silk, and wool will be in high favour.

Hoods appear on many sacques, as well as on cloaks and mantles.

Chameleon fabrics trimmed with plush appear among fall costumes.

Plain skirts, with a single narrow balayeuse flounce, will be much worn.

Pekin velvet and tiger plush are found among the new trimming materials.

Amber satin bonnets, embroidered with amber beads, are pretty novelties.

Velvet brocades take precedence of all dress fabrics for the coming season.

All wool Jersey webbing is found among late importations of dress materials.

Box-pleated balayeuse flounces are more fashionable than knife-pleated ones.

White mousseline de l'Inde is the material most used for bridesmaids' dresses.

Girdles of heavy silken cord finished by balls of spikes are among novelties shown.

Velvet brocade dresses are made perfectly plain without any looping or draperies.

Champagne wine colour is a new shade of pinkish crime that combines well with ecru.

The new shades of red are Titian, pheasant, garnet, cinnamon, copper, and Cytoubier.

Breton lace pleatings in many rows cover one side of some of the dr...ssiest Japanese fans.

White satin, white nun's veiling, and lace make a lovely combination for bridesmaids' dresses.

All sorts of pelerines, fichus, shoulder capes, round capes, and mantles are worn as street wraps.

Renton is a new shade of coppery yellow that is very handsome and luminous for evening wear.

Silver and gold thread and tinsel illuminate many of the new white and black Spanish blonde laces.

Red, heliotrope, and shades of ecru and old gold are the favourite colours of the plush lining of cloaks.

Uncertain shades of green and blue combined with every imaginable shade of red, prevail in plaids.

Mr. and Mrs. Tinsley were divorced years ago at Columbus, Ind. Both made subsequent matrimonial ventures, he taking four wives in succession, and she two husbands. At length, both being free, they discussed their varied experiences, admitted that neither had been happy since their parting, and finally were re-united.

Whole dresses of seal-skin are made for a young English lady of rank who is to spend the winter in Russia. One of these garments is cut en princesse, lined with brown silk, and trimmed down the front with frogs of brown and amber cord. The train is caught back with cords, and gold and amber and old Flanders point are the ornaments.

Few young brides have such a flavour of antiquity surrounding their weddings as there was about the recent wedding of the daughter of Major Ben Perley Poore, Miss Alice Poore, to Mr. Frederick Moseley. The picturesque old mansion in which the affair took place had been in the possession of the bride's family for two hundred years, very little of its furniture was less than one hundred years old; the bride wore some point lace long an heirloom in the family; her veil was fastened by a brooch of precious stones worn by her grandmother at her own wedding fifty years before; and she stood in the slippers worn by her mother at her wedding, adorned by the diamond shoe-buckles of her great-grandfather. Among the guests were Senators Anthony and Burnside, Mr. Parton, Mrs. Spofford, Miss Prescott, Miss Harriet Preston (the Provencal translator), Mrs. Governor Claflin, and the notables and dignitaries of all the surrounding region.

The Pope gave the new Spanish baby a satin robe covered with lace, made and embroidered, at his request, by ladies of the Roman nobility. The layette of this unfortunate infant fills six large wardrobes, and although cut after English styles, was made, for the sake of the national pride, by Castilian hands and of Spanish stuffs. The two grandmothers, the ex-Queen and the Archduchess, are ruining themselves in a rivalry of costly gifts, cradles, and laces to the little princess. The baby is burdened with no less than thirteen names—Maria de las Mercedes, after the late Queen of Spain, and at the request of Queen Christina; Isabel, after the two royal grandmothers; Teresa, after the great Empress of Austria; Christina, after the Queen; Alfonsa, after the King; Ana, after the Empress of Austria; Jeesia, after the Emperor; Francisca, after her grandfather; Fernanda, after her great-grandfather; Sacinta-Carolina Filomena, after the saints of the day on which she was born; and finally, Maria de Todos los Santos, which includes all the saints, as usual in Spain.

A Useful Maid.

Although English people are almost as well known to the Parisians as to Londoners, occasionally a story of the traditional hauteur of milords and miladies finds its way into a French newspaper. In one of them I read the other day that a milady had entered a Post Office to buy a stamp. Having purchased it, she turned to her maid, who was standing behind her, and made a sign. The maid at once put out her tongue, over which the milady lightly passed the stamp, and then affixed it to her letter.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart is back in New York from Saratoga, and is reported by a correspondent to be animated and jovial, and to have an extensive wardrobe, including more than a hundred gowns of the latest mode for morning, evening, walking, driving, breakfast, luncheon, dinner, reception, theatre, opera, party, etc. She is evidently renewing her youth, for she is over 80. During her husband's life she was kept in the background, and was rarely ever in society, with or without him. She is a queer-looking little woman, and is respected as being very kind and benevolent, giving generously, both publicly and privately. A worthy person always receives a hearing from her, and she gives without ostentation. She entertains handsomely when at Saratoga, where she has a splendid suite of apartments. She drives out often in a neat coupe with two superb chestnuts, and coachman and footman in dark green. She is continually troubled with inquiries regarding Stewart's body, and Stewart dead seems to attract more attention than Stewart alive ever did.

Badly Marked.

The other day the reporter of a Leadville paper and one of the best-known medical practitioners of Leadville were talking over odd episodes, in business, when the man of pills and plaster said:

"I think, to tell the truth, I had the most singular experience of my whole professiona career, the other day."

"What was it, doctor?"

"Well, I'll tell you, leaving out all names, for I expect the party will be recognized anyhow. It was just this:

"The middle part of last week one of the best young ladies of Leadville—she's sweet as a peach, too,—came to my office in the evening, told me, in a great deal of embarrassment, that she wanted me to help her out of some trouble. Well, from her manner, my worst suspicions were aroused, and I began to question her closely. And what the deuce do you think? Well, the confounded little fool had had the name of the fellow whom she used to be engaged to tatooed on the calf of her leg. Now, she's just about to get married to quite a different married to quite a different party, and had sense enough to see that the marking would be likely to kick up a big row in the family. She was awfully distressed and ready to submit to almost anything, even a surgical operation, to 'wipe out the damned spot.'

"I was puzzled at first, but after studying over it for a little while I happened to remember that I had read somewhere in some old scientific magazine that tatooing may be removed by going over the design with a needle dipped in milk. It was a forlorn hope, but I thought I would try it, and, taking her little foot—delicate position, wasn't it, for a married man?—I carefully went over the letters. It must have hurt, but she never whimpered, and when it was all over I told her to go home and come again in a couple of days.

"Well, sir, when she came I had the satisfaction of knowing that the letters had faded into an indiguisable blue line. The operation is a perfect success, and she is the happiest girl in Leadville. I got $50 for the job. Let's go and have a smoke."

Too Many Wives.

The question as to how near a couple can come to being married without actually being married has been many times practically answered. There have been hysterical brides in the chancel vainly expecting a false bridegroom. There have been inconsiderate and even revengeful brides who have scandalised the clergyman and the witnesses with a final "No" when the service was in progress. There have been forgetful clergymen and belated certificates of authority. But perhaps the narrowest escape from matrimony yet recorded is reported from Lyons, in France. It seems that the bride and the groom were charmingly agreed, not only in the affairs of the heart, but of the pocket, for she was an heiress. There had been harmonious family meetings under the civil code, and no disturbance of the harmony at the preliminary lunches. The contract had been arranged at the notary's office. The day had arrived for the civil marriage—which is, under the law of the republic, the binding one,—in the morning, and for the blessings of the priests at the cathedral altar in the afternoon. The parties were before the mayor, and what a Chicago lawyer before a divorce jury called the "fatal question," had been duly asked of each and duly answered, whereupon the mayor had tendered his personal as well as his official congratulations, and had placed before them the attesting document which, when signed, made them lawfully man and wife. At this moment entered a telegraphic messenger, R. U. R. The couple paused, pens in hands, the witnesses looked amazed, and the mayor dropped his spectacles in a nervous fit as he handed the message to the bride's father. Thus the message: "Monsieur —— has already been married in Germany, and his wife lives. Vouchers are on the way to you by post." The mayor postpones the authentication for a week, as is his duty under the civil code when a warning comes. The week passes, and no vouchers come. Everybody agrees it was the trick of a wretched and mean rival—everybody excepting the bride, who had been pondering over the telegram, and, to the surprise of all, believed it. She sends back the diamond ring, the silver candlesticks, the gold-mounted priedieu, and the almost mother-in-law's ivory-bound breviary, and annuls the settlements. The juge de paix of Lyons and the mayor hold a consultation with the lawyers and the notary, when it is unanimously agreed that the couple, as the English peasantry put it, were not a couple but a pair. The groom, resuming his condition as bachelor, has searched for the sender of the telegram, only to be made aware, without getting a clue to identity, that it was paid for by "a veiled woman in black."

Rev. D. J. Macdonnell and New St. Andrew's Church.

There are in Toronto two claimants for the honour of being specially under the protection of Scotland's Saint. How this came about is well understood, and easily explained. The first Presbyterian Church erected in Toronto, naturally received the distinctive title of St. Andrew's, and for many a long day enjoyed its honour without any wishing to share the privilege or enjoy any of the protection likely to result from the arrangement. The congregation so known had a chequered history of prosperity and reverses, and at last came down so low that nothing but extinction seemed to be in store for it. The members were few and considerably discouraged. They, however, managed at last to persuade Mr. Macdonnell to come to the city, and lead what was generally regarded as a forlorn hope. He did so, and the result was as gratifying as it was unexpected. The congregation grew rapidly and steadily, both in numbers and resources, till at last the overwhelming majority of those connected with it resolved to erect a new church on a lot they had on the corner of Simcoe and King. This was done, and as the emigrants were so much the most numerous part of the congregation, they thought they had a right to take both the minister and the name of the church along with them. They did so. Hence the name of New St. Andrew's. Those who remained in the old building held that they kept up the continuity of ecclesiastical descent, and hence they also called their Church by the old use and wont name, but in order to distinguish it from the other, prefixed the word "Old," and allowed the world to know from the names what was the distinction in fact. Afterward, this remnant also built a new church, and called it by the old name, so that the new building rejoices in the old title, and the real old St. Andrew's has become a thing of the past. Very likely, in a short time, some great commercial establishment will rise upon the old Church site, and pilgrims of other days may have some difficulty in discovering where that old way mark stood. Of course, Truth will be in existence then, and its fyle will naturally be consulted both for business and pleasure. In view, then, of the possibility of such enquiries, we state now that the real original St. Andrew's stood on the south-west corner of the intersection of Church and Adelaide streets, and was thought at the time of its erection to be a notably fine building. And so it was. Perhaps, considering the wealth in the hands of the congregation quite as fine as the finest of our modern ecclesiastical erections, great as the actual contrast no doubt is.

If the Metropolitan has too much ground round it, for the very perfection of effect, New St. Andrews has decidedly too little. It has a grand massive appearance, but it is cribbed, cabined, and confined by its surroundings, and does not strike the stranger, as it ought to do, and as it would have done, had the location and the grounds been more in accord with the magnitude of the structure, and its improved style.

The success which attended Mr. Macdonnel's ministrations in the old building followed him to the new, and though the weight of debt resting upon the edifice is still heavy, it can scarcely be called burdensome, and is in the course of being slowly, but steadily paid off, so that, at no distant day it will be among the things of the past.

Like most men in his position, Mr. Macdonnel has had in the course of his life, no very startling or extraordinary experiences. His career has been all but uniformly, what the world calls a successful one, and we should hope and believe, more than usually happy. "A child of the Manse," he has grown up surrounded by all the humanizing and beneficent influences of a Christian home, and has enjoyed the benefits arising from cultivated society, a liberal education, and a considerable amount of travel, and general intercourse with the world. His collegiate course was entered upon and finished at too early a period of life, to permit his reaping the full benefit of the opportunities, thus placed within his reach, nor do his friends and intimates claim, on his behalf, that he has to any great extent, made up by subsequent efforts, the loss which he thus incurred. His life has been too active, and the various duties of the pastorage have been too many, and too exacting, to permit of his leading a student's life, or adding greatly to his original stores of learning. No one would ever dream of claiming for him any great vigour of thought, wealth of imagination, minuteness, and variety of knowledge with that general force and massiveness of intellect and heart, which might set him forth as a great leader, who was destined to put his mark upon his generation and his race. "Great" in the ordinary sense of that term Mr. Macdonnell is not and is never likely to become. But while this statement cannot reasonably be called into question, the position he has attained and the influence which he undoubtedly exerts show that he is far above the ordinary range of men and ministers. His sermons are always fresh, simple and interesting. He affects nothing outre, and naturally necessarily detests the slightest approach to clap-trap. He seeks to bring the services of the sanctuary to bear upon the business and temptations of ordinary every day life, and in a variety of ways makes it manifest that he can use great plainness of speech in dealing with the follies as well as the sins of the hour. There is never any great power of expression, or originality of idea, displayed in his public ministrations or in his more or less private utterances, but in his every word, we had almost said in his every look, he shows that he is face to face with the world in which his lot is cast, that he takes a keen interest in current affairs, whether religious or secular, and that according to his abilities and opportunity he is anxious to do all the good possible to the bodies as well as to the souls of his fellows. His utterances some time ago in reference to his doubt about the eternity of Future Punishments brought his name rather prominently, for a time, before the Church Courts and the general public. But he has either seen the error of his ways in the matter or has learned to be more careful and circumspect in his modes of expression; as we hear no more of his being in any degree out of accord with the Confession of Faith and the general opinion of the Church on that, or, indeed, on any other question. One has said that it is an exceedingly good plan to write one's self into a knowledge of a subject provided always that the manuscript is kept sacredly under lock and key, and never allowed to fall into the hands of a printer. We are not so sure about its being an equally good plan to preach one's self into acquaintance with any scriptural truth or doctrine, and giving all the processes of doubt and perplexity through which one may be led, and at last landing in the confession that as yet he knows positively nothing on the whole subject. The preacher is understood to have become a truth finder, and not merely a truth-seeker, a resolver of other people's doubts not a mere propounder of his own. The average run of mankind can do their own doubting generally without any outside assistance. They don't need to fall back upon any one for help in this matter, for fear are they inclined to pay him for doing for them what they can so very easily and very successfully do for themselves. It is very easy to say, "I don't know, I am not sure," but the good a religious teacher can accomplish in this way is not very apparent. Men can't live either on negations or on doubts, and so Mr. Macdonnell has to all appearance given himself exclusively to the proclamation of his convictions not of his perplexities, of his certainty, not of his doubt, as indeed it is only justice to him to say that with the exception of what was perhaps made far too much of, he has always so far as we know been in the habit of doing. And so he rises continually as an able and faithful preacher of divine truth rather than as a mere promulgator of human doubts and individual difficulties. He is still a young man, and has we trust a long, useful and distinguished career before him. His congregation is among the largest in the city and contains an unusual number of active intelligent young men. He throws his whole soul into the pastoral and congregational work; is respected by all; liked by even his casual acquaintances, and positively loved by those who have the pleasure of reckoning him among their friends. No one as we have said could truthfully call him a great man, or even say that he has in him the makings of greatness, but judging him all in all, he is one of Toronto's best know citizens, an excellent and popular preacher, a diligent pastor, a faithful friend a genial associate, a good man. Truth does not flatter him or any man, and consequently cannot call him an eighth wonder of the world, a profound theologian, an astute reasoner, a finished scholar, a suggestive writer, a prudent adviser or an infallible guide either in things secular or sacred; but what it can honestly say in commendation it says, and its praise is as sincere as its hints at blame are both honest and considerate.

Art in Courtship.

An authority on this subject wishes us to know that it is quite a mistake to suppose that the average woman is the merely passive recipient of favours of a matrimonial kind, offered for her acceptance. This may be the general opinion, and there is very great reason, indeed, to believe that such is really the deeply-seated conviction of the vast majority of the human race; but this affords but one more example of the great fact which is so constantly forcing itself upon the attention of thoughtful men, that popular opinions, whether on one subject or another, are very, very little worth. That man is invariably, or even, indeed, for the most part, the proposer, and woman simply the acceptor of whatever affection his wisdom may see fit to bestow, is an opinion which, in view of the immense advances which are constantly being made in the various walks of physical science, must be relegated to the limbo of attenuated vanities. Sympathy bestowed on the average woman, because of her inability to choose her own happiness, and the impossibility of any self-directed preferences on her part, is just so much waste of valuable emotion. That woman's happiness or misery depends on the advances of the man, is nonsense. Woman does not simply wait for opportunities to come, but like every other genius, she seizes time by the forelock, and manages, very successfully sometimes, too, to make her own opportunities.

Women are neither the simpletons nor the merely negative recipients of offered favours which poets and novelists succeed very often in making them. They have vastly more to do with the disposal of themselves, and the establishment of the estate of connubial happiness than is vulgarly supposed. There is no necessity for her being reduced to that stupid resource of the merely male mind—talking, in order to accomplish all the courtship she wishes. She has a hundred little ways and means of getting at her ends when once she has settled what these are to be. Not one man in a hundred is any match for her in this respect. He may boast of his accurate and profound knowledge of the opposite sex, of his fixed determination to avoid the snares of these fair trappers, of the idiocy of the man who can allow himself to be brought to a declaration against his will; but if he has anything like the knowledge and experience, he would fain persuade himself he has, he will know that if he is at all sincere in his protestations of avoidance, his only real safety must lie in flight. This authority asserts that "almost any woman outside of a cloister feels that, up to a certain point she is the equal, if not the superior, of any man when they are emotionally pitted against one another." He is almost entirely at her mercy, and unless he is possessed of more than ordinary strength of mind, or to seeks safety in retirement, he may as well strike his colours at once, if he gets an inkling at all that she is bearing down on him.

Nor is there any reflection on the delicacy appropriate reserve and so naturally looked for from woman, in all this, she simply acts according to her nature. Debarred by the customs of society, as well as by hinderences in the very nature of things, she cannot attain her ends by energy and force of action, and so is of necessity driven to have recourse to subtilty. Her life, more than with man, has an uncomfortable feeling of incompleteness about it, unless it is crowned with matrimony. Accordingly, she is apt to bend the only strength of her resources, and the well-known intensity of her will to accomplish that one great end of her existence. Great indeed must be the assurance of any man who could write in this way, unless, indeed, his words be the ripened fruit of wisdom gathered from the tree of only too sad experience.

"She thinks of wedlock twenty times as much as man does. She has ampler reason to think of it, for it is altogether more important to her than to him, and is in the direct line of her nature and destiny. Consequently, when any man shows a sail in the social offing, she prepares for action, as if the engagement would be inevitable and desperate. He may be on another course; he may steadily increase the distance between them; she may never catch another glimpse of his whitening canvas. But it is a comfort to her to have been ready to think what she might, could or would have done had he borne down upon her, and challenged her to combat on the high seas of possible matrimony. A single woman believes that every unmarried man's sail, whatever flag he may be flying, covers a cargo of goods that may be turned to connubial account." We don't believe this, and thankfully commend such a writer as this to the thoughtful consideration and pitiful compassion of all readers, male, or female, rich or poor, young or old.

An Apple with a History.

Seeing that a number of localities are boasting of their large potatoes, large apples &c., it will not be out of place for Midland to boast too, this is the more excusable as in addition to the size of the apple there is connected with it a quite a history. The apple in question is one left on our table by Mr. Charles Ross, clerk of Tay. The apple was grown from a little shoot taken from a clump of apple sprouts, found at the old fort. In the year 1868 when Mr. Bruneau settled on the Jesuit lot, No. 16, 3rd con., Tay, it was then covered with a dense forest, not having been occupied for 270 years, that is from the date of the massacre of the whites by the Indians, to the year 1868. Mr. Bruneau found evidence of the site of an old orchard by clumps of apple sprouts at regular intervals, these shoots have since then grown two or three years and then died out and have thus done since the above date, but in some cases the farmers have removed these sprouts to their farms and they have invariably grown to fine proportions and are now yielding fine fruit, as the sample furnished by Mr. Ross is a fine specimen. Evidently of the winter variety, measuring 13½ inches in circumference, it is in color a dark red, very firm and of fine flavor. That these trees have, for the last 300 years, the greater portion of that time in the midst of a forest, preserved their vitality is a marvel in horticulture.

I have known vast quantities of nonsense talked about bad men not looking you in the face. Don't trust that conventional idea. Dishonesty will stare you out of countenance any day in the week, if there is anything to be got by it.

With most men in this wicked world, honesty is the best policy so long as it pays, but when it ceases to pay, collect your little bill as soon as you can, because circumstances alter cases.

AN ADVENTUROUS CAREER.

THE STORY OF THE FIRST OFFICER OF THE CITY OF VERA CRUZ—RUNNING THE BLOCKADE—INCARCERATED IN FORT LAFAYETTE—IN THE SERVICE OF THE CUBAN PATRIOTS—PEACEFUL PURSUITS ASHORE.

Frank Marsh Harris, first officer of the lost steamer City of Vera Cruz, who was mistakenly reported as having been rescued, had a remarkable history. He was the son of Dr. Francis Lee Harris, who was Health Officer of the Port of New York, twenty years ago, after distinguishing himself as a famous surgeon and as a Democratic politician in the city of New York. Before he removed to New York Dr. Harris was a physician in good practice in Savannah, Ga. His first wife, the mother of Capt. Harris, was a Livingston, and was descended from Herrmann Kean, of Kean Manor, in Elizabeth, N. J. Frank, the only son by this marriage, who was born in 1832, early betrayed a love of the sea, and shipped on a schooner from Savannah when he was only 15 years of age. His family had sufficient interest to obtain for him an appointment as midshipman in the navy, and in 1852 he sailed with Commander Perry on the important expedition which resulted in the opening of the Japanese ports by the treaty of 1854. After the return of the expedition he resigned from the navy, and went into the coasting trade once more in command of a vessel. He was running a schooner from Restigouche, N.B., to South America when the war broke out, and promptly offered his services to the Confederate Government. His first employment was the command of a gunboat in the celebrated Roanoke expedition, in which young Wise, son of Governor Wise, was killed. Capt. Harris being known to the naval authorities of the Confederacy to have a perfect acquaintance with the Atlantic coast, his next service was in running the blockade to and from the harbour of South Carolina. He sailed thence on the steamer Virgo, under another officer, and brought her back loaded, in safety. He made several voyages afterward with impunity, and earned a high reputation as a skilful and daring seaman.

The gentleman who was first officer in his blockade running enterprises is now Captain of a steamer in the employ of J. W. Quintard, & Co. His second officer became associated with him by a queer occurrence. Capt. Harris was lying at Nassau, N.P., waiting for a favourable opportunity to run into Charleston harbour. Strolling through the streets he saw a man, who was evidently an American seaman, in the chain gang. "What have you done," he asked, "to be punished in this manner?" "Oh, I thrashed a nigger and threw him off the wharf," was the reply. "The sentence was $900 fine or three months in the chain gang. I had no money, and here I am." Captain Harris sought out the Judge, paid the fine, and the seaman was liberated. He was a native of Baltimore, of good family, an educated man, and a sympathizer with the Confederacy. Hence he readily accepted the offer of Capt. Harris to take the position of second officer of the blockade runner. He, too, is now commander of a steamer running out of the port of New York, and is not afraid to tell how Capt. Harris released him from the chain gang in Nassau.

In 1863 Capt. Harris was captured in the Kingfisher, in which he had made several successful trips to Charleston. He was taking the course which he had followed successfully before, but found himself at daybreak under the guns of a Federal gunboat. To save the lives of his crew he thought it best to surrender at discretion, and was carried to Fort Lafayette in double irons.

The better to prosecute his dangerous avocation in safety, Capt. Harris had gone before the British Board of Admiralty in London, passed an examination, and received his papers as a British shipmaster. So it was with some colour of authority that he presented his papers to Colonel Burke, commanding Fort Lafayette, and demanded his release as a British seaman, taken off a British vessel.

An exciting episode of his prison life was related by himself. It came to the ears of his father, who had, in the mean time, become Health Officer Harris of the Port of New York, that Frank was a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, and he came to visit him. As soon as Col. Burke learned his visitor's business he hastened up to Capt. Harris's casemate. "You're a nice British seaman!" he said, sneeringly. "You're an American, and your father is Dr. Harris, the Health Officer of this port."

"You're a liar!" retorted Capt. Harris. "I am a native of Hull, and a British seaman."

"Well, I'll send your father up to see you," retorted the Colonel.

He was told to send him up and be blowed.

"Hallo! son Frank; how are you? said the old Doctor, as he reached the casemate, with both hands extended.

"I'm no son of yours," was Frank's cold response; "I'm an English shipmaster."

"Frank, are you crazy?" said the old man.

"No, you old lunatic," rejoined Frank, stoutly. And, turning to Col. Burke, he added: "I claim the protection of Lord Lyons. He will restore me to my Government."

Strangely enough, the British Minister did interfere in his behalf, and, after spending six months between Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren, in Boston harbour, Capt. Harris was liberated, and allowed to depart over the Suspension Bridge into Canada, whence he made his way to Halifax, took ship for Liverpool, and was soon once more in command of a blockade runner. His father lived to forgive him for denying his parentage, believing that the end justified the means.

After the war Capt. Harris was engaged for some time in such peaceful pursuits as as superintending the mining of clay in Woodbridge, N. J., for a company in which the Hon. Cortlandt Parker and District Attorney Keasbey of New Jersey were interested, the building of a sea wall at New Haven, and of a reservoir on Jersey City Heights.

In 1869, when the Government of Free Cuba bought a fleet of fast steamers to carry reinforcements and supplies to the Cuban coast, a number of ex-Confederate officers enlisted in the cause of Cuban liberty. Knowing Capt. Harris's character for reckless daring, his thorough seamanship, and his thorough acquaintance with the coast it was natural that he should be sought out to take part in the expedition. He was put in command of the Lilian, a Clyde built vessel which had been a blockade runner, and a commission was given him as commodore in the Cuban navy. The ill-fated Gen. Ryan, afterward shot in cold blood by the Spaniards, had made several unsuccessful attempts to get to Cuba with his command, which was encamped at various places about New York. They and other volunteers for Cuba rendezvoused at Macon, Ga. The United States Marshal had warrants for Gen. Castro and ex-Confederate Major Bridgeport, Lieut. Puryear, and others, but they escaped with most of their men, and proceeded to Cedar Keys, where they were joined by Gen. Ryan and others by steamer from New York, by way of Fernandina, and the combined forces of about 500 men, under Gen. Goicouria, were embarked on the steamers—Lilian and Teaser. At sea the name of the Lilian was changed to the Cespedes, after the President of the Cuban Republic, and the Cuban flag was hoisted. When Gen. Goicouria opened his orders he found they were to go to the Western Department. This at once made dissatisfaction among the new recruits, who insisted upon being taken at once to the Eastern Department, to which he readily acceded.

The Cespedes had been hurried away from Cedar Keys by the approach of the United States vessel Lone Star, under orders to stop the expedition. She had insufficient coal and water for the voyage. When two days out it was determined to land the men on one of the Bahama keys, and take the vessel to Nassau for fuel and water. They were landed accordingly. The Cespedes sailed for Nassau. Her fuel gave out when she was within a a short distance of Nassau, and, coming to anchor, Capt. Harris despatched three men in a life-boat to Nassau, with instructions to buy two schooner loads of coal and other supplies. In the mean time the presence of the Cespedes had been discovered by fishing smacks, and they had notified the Governor of Nassau. He detained the schooners that were chartered by Capt. Harris's messengers, and despatched the British vessel Lapwing to bring the Cespedes into the port of Nassau. Capt. Harris kept his Cuban flag flying, and refused to lower it or deliver up his papers at the command of the British Captain when there had been no condemnation and no trial. She was towed up to Nassau, where Capt. Harris made written protest to the Governor, and the Cespedes was released, but ordered to leave the port within twelve hours. Capt. Harris asked the privilege of taking on board the coal he had bought, which was denied him. He set fifty men to work with axes and hatchets and demolished his handsome cabins and his upper deck to get sufficient fuel with which to steam out of port. He had arranged with the Captains of the coaling schooners to meet him a short distance out of the harbour next morning (Oct. 20), and they did so. But the Lapwing, which had followed closely on the heels of the Cespedes, opened fire on the schooners, and prevented them from putting their coal aboard, and Capt. Harris was fain to sail back to Nassau. He entered the port with his Cuban flag flying, and the Cespedes and her cargo were seized in the name of the military authority of the Bahamas, after Capt. Harris had refused to comply with the order to leave the harbour. The triumph of the captors of the Cespedes was short lived. They awoke one morning to find her scuttled at her wharf. The Cuban volunteers who had been left on one of the Bahama keys were brought off by the Lapwing, on Oct. 27, in a famished condition, 200 of them being fit subjects for a hospital.

Capt. Harris's part in the Cuban expedition becoming known among shipowners, he was out of employment for several years afterward. He was not lost sight of, however, and when the Cuban war was declared at an end he entered the employ of Alexandre & Co. After making several trips as Captain of the Howadji, he became first officer of the City of Alexandria and of the Vera Cruz rather than remain idle until Alexandre & Co.'s new ships were completed, of one of which he was to have command.

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

The site of a millstone manufactory of the bronze age is thought to have been discovered at Auvenir, near Neuchatel. Millstones in all stages of manufacture have recently been brought to light there.

The jubilee of the zoological museum of the Academy of Sciences, St. Petersburg, established by the Emperor Nicholas in 1831, will be celebrated in that city by Russians and foreign zoologists next year.

Before their intercourse with Europeans, the Maoris, according to Mr. J. W. Stack, of the New Zealand Institute, had terms only for three colours—white, black, and red. His paper is valuable as throwing light on some of the recent learned disputations regarding the colour-sense of the Greeks about the time of the siege of Troy. It is one thing to appreciate colour, and quite another thing to give precise expression to that appreciation.

The history of the bayonet is thus set forth in the catalogue of Gen. Pitt River's anthropological collection, which the British Government will probably buy for the public benefit and place upon exhibition in the South Kensington Museum: In the early part of the seventeenth century it was found necessary to retain the use of pikemen in the infantry on account of the defenseless position of the firelockmen when the enemy approached to close quarters. To remedy this defect they were accustomed about the middle of the century to stick the handles of their daggers into the muzzles of their guns in order to use them a pikes. Of course, when the dagger was so fixed the gun could not be fired. But as many of the daggers had rings at the guard the men saw the expediency of fastening the dagger to the muzzle of the piece by means of the ring. Soon the dagger or plug bayonet was so secured to the outside of the barrel that the firelock could be loaded and discharged although bayonets were fixed. The British had their first experience of what may be called the compound gun and pike in the time of William III., in one of the Flanders campaigns, and they "swore terribly," no doubt, when they found that their opponents could fire at them with fixed bayonets. River's collection shows all the transition stages of the bayonet from the plug handle to the modern tube-and-catch attachment. This is only a sample brick, so to speak, of the civil and warlike gropings of man from precedent to precedent to his present condition. We have a fine opportunity of doing something of the same kind to this continent, and the marvel is why some men of wealth do not embrace it, and so secure the perpetuity of their own name through the advancement of an important department of science.

Our Girls.

If our girls are not the very best girls that ever existed, it is not on account of not having sufficient attention bestowed upon them. We speak not now of the attention which they receive from those of the opposite sex, about their own age, but of the innumerable inventors, male and female, who exhaust their energies in inventing theories for their physical, mental, and moral, improvement. If every one of them does not develop into an Amazon, capable of wielding the spear of a Goliath, it will not be the fault of sundry strong-minded, elderly spinsters who, whether they have made much of themselves or not, are intent upon perfecting the women of the coming generation. Indeed, at times, one is almost appalled at the vision which arises before the mind as it looks into the future, of the gigantic, rawboned, and muscular, womanhood which is to take the place of the embodiment of feminine charms, which we have in the mothers, the wives, the sisters, "the cousins and the aunts" of this and past generations. Their intellect withal is not to be neglected. Every one of them is to be a "blue stocking." The culture of the taste and feeling, which has heretofore filled so large a space in the education of girls, is to give place to a sort of intellectual training, which shall fit her to enter the list with man, as a competitor, for those prizes which have heretofore been supposed to be only within the reach of the rougher sex. With her hardened muscle, and enlarged brain, why should she not take her place beside man in all the activities of life, and share with him to the fullest extent in all its honours and emoluments? Why should men be permitted to monopolize the position of policemen, standing at our street corners, in more or less splendid uniforms, where their duties could be done quite as well, or better, by women quite as strong, and courageous as they are. Already, there are a few of them doctors, and half a dozen of them—more or less—ministers! Why should they not be lawyers and legislators? And should they not be permitted to lead armies, and to serve in the ranks, to act as ship-masters, and to serve before the mast. The fact is, women is coming to the front. The brutality of man has crowded her into an inferior position long enough, but when the girls of the present become women, things will be different, and the time may come, when some female City Commissioner will have an army of women under her, cleaning the streets. The age of gold will come.

The Murder of Lord Mountmorres.

(From the London World)

Lord Mountmorres, the last victim of Hibernian agrarianism, could not have been a very unpopular sort of a man after all. Father Lavelle, the parish priest of Cong, knew him well, and attended his funeral. Father Lavelle is no lover of a lord. He is the fire-eating cleric known as the ecclesiastic apologist for Fenianism, the foe of Cardinal Cullen, and the particular protege of John, Archbishop of Tuam. Father Lavelle is an extreme land agitator in principle, and yet he was the friend of the murdered Lord Mountmorres. The cause of the strange friendship was simply that the murdered nobleman, though severe in his dealings with breakers of the law, was thoroughly Irish, and was deeply imbued with charity toward the poor which covereth a multitude of offences. No one knew this better than the parish priest of one of the poorest populations in the west of Ireland.

Nebraska theatre audiences are unconventional in their conduct. At Lincoln, while John T. Raymond was presenting the trial scene in "Colonel Sellers," two dogs began to fight in the centre aisle. All attention was instantly diverted from the stage to the fight. "I move we suspend proceedings in this court," said Raymond, "and I'll bet a dollar on the white dog." "I'll take you," cried a man in the audience. The white dog won, the dollar was passed across the footlights to the star, and the acting of the play was resumed.

The barber's apprentice is usually a strapping fellow.

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 8. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1880. WHOLE NO. 8

Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

FRIDAY MORNING

...to meet the early mails.

...the Foreign and Provincial ...telligence, County Business, ...

...ance, $1 50 in three months, ...till end of the year. No paper ...until all arrearages are ...the option of the publisher, ...fusing papers without paying ...responsible for the subscription ...comply with the rules.

...OF ADVERTISING:

...year	$50 00
...	30 00
...do	18 00
...do	10 00
...do	4 60
...ader, first insertion	50
...quent insertion	15
...n lines, first insertion	75
...quent insertion	25
..., first insertion per line	8
...quent insertion	2

...of lines to be reckoned by ...ied measured by a scale of ...Advertisements without ...ons will be published till for... accordingly. All transitory ...must be in the office of publication ...o'clock on the Thursday ...ing their publication.

...RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

...ONAL & BUSINESS ...RECTORY.

Medical.

...proule & Carter, ...Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c. ...dical Hall; residence at ... Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

...s. R. Wilkes, ...Law. — Owen Sound. ...Miller's building, over Robin... ...ulet Street. 1-y

...rost & Frost. ...RS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-... ...licitors in Chancery, Convey... ...wen Sound, have resumed at ...ffice open every Thursday, as ... J. W. Frost, LL. B. ...rown Attorney. 1

...S. J. Lane. ...R and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ...r in Chancery, &c. ...Owen Sound and Markdale. ...e at Markdale, over W. J. Me... ...open on Thursday of every ... 1-y

...ames Masson. ...R and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW. ...r in Chancery, Owen Sound. ...880. 1-y

...ames Lamon. ...NEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN ...ancery, Notary Public, &c. ...ed at lowest rates on personal ...Lands bought and sold. ...eller introduced free of commis... ...DUNDALK. ...21st, 1880. 1

...eyancers & Land Agents.

...Wm. Brown. ...MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., ...ioner in B. R. &c. ...in all its branches promptly ...d carefully executed. ...y to Lend on Real Estate se... ...ept. 17, 1880. 1-y

...F. McRae. ...ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM ...of Grey. ...Loan at reasonable interest, pay... ...8 per cent., at the end ...per cent.—principal payable ...5 or 10 years—or principal ...o suit Borrowers. ...Mortgages bought and sold. ...1880. 1-y

...exander Brown. ...Marriage Licenses, Fire and ...urance Agent. Commissioner ...Conveyancer and Licensed ...the County of Grey. Farmers, ...and Land Sales. Punctually at... ...charges made very moderate. ...Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

...George Corbet, Jr., ...AN AND GENERAL AGENT, ...Money to Loan at low ...Principal payable at the ...s or half-yearly, interest ...ly principal and interest repay... ...of desirable Improved Farms 1-y

...J. G. Sing. ...AND PROVINCIAL LAND ...Draughtsman and Valuator, ...Markdale. Having purchased ...and Surveyor Charles Rankin's ...original Field Notes, Plans, ...tions, &c., of all his Surveys ...last fifty-five years, I am ...ke Surveys in strict accord... ...Profiles and Estimates ...Plans and Specifications ...Bridges, furnished on applica... ...to Loan at 8 per cent interest. ...by will be promptly attended to.

...Dentistry.

...ames J. White, ...Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, ...AT THE REVERE HOUSE, ...on the last Wednesday in ...he will be prepared to per... ...ations required upon the mouth ...sfactory manner, and upon ... 1-y

...Hotels.

...NION HOUSE ...MARKDALE.

...ed the above hotel and thor... ...hed and refitted it, the trav... ...ill find every accommodation. ...of liquors and cigars kept. ...Careful hostler. ...N VAN HORN, Proprietor. ... 1-y

...AL HOTEL, ...EAFORD, Ont. ...IRR. . . PROPRIETORS. ...mmodation for the travelling ...bar is well stocked with the ...es and Liquors and the best ...d from all trains. 1-y

...NHOOD: ...T HOW RESTORED

...e have recently published a ...ew edition of Dr Culver... ...well's Celebrated Essay ...and permanent cure (without ...ervous Debility, Mental and ...pacity, Impediments to Mar... ...ulting from excesses. ...in a sealed envelope, only six ...ostage stamps. ...ated author, in this admirable ...demonstrates, from thirty ...al practice, that alarming con... ...be radically cured without the ...of internal medicine or the ...knife; pointing out a mode of ...mple, certain and effectual, by ...ch every sufferer, no matter ...tion may be, may cure himself ...ply and radically. ...should be in the hands of every ...man in the land.

...VERWELL MEDICAL CO., ...41 ANN ST., NEW YORK. ...x, 4586. 90ly

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

LABORATORY, 77 W. 3d St., New York City

LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870

9,000,000 Bottles.

This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.

MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed my physician. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.

MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.

Burford, Brant Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.

ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.

MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Indian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.

MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.

W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.

NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.

Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.

MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.

DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever did me any good. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.

W. H. BORISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northrop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

THE Bishop of Manchester, England, states that he sees no objection to open art exhibitions on Sunday, providing they do not interfere with the hours of church service.

A VERY disagreeable old gentleman disowned a nephew, charged with the duty of preparing his epitaph suggested: "Deeply regretted by all who never knew him."

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Waifs.

A calm, delightful Autumn night—
A Moon's mysterious, golden Light—
A Maiden at her Window height,
In Robes of pure and fleecy White.

The little Wicket Gate ajar—
A Lover tripping from afar,
With tuneful voice and light Guitar,
To woo his radiant Guiding Star.

A Lute with soft, insidious Twang—
Oh, how the doting Lover sang!
A Bull-Dog, with Remorseless Fang—
A Nip, a Grip, a Deadly Pang.

A Maiden with a startled Glance—
A Shrieking for Deliverance—
A kind of weird, hilarious Dance—
A Pair of Riven Doeskin Pants.

A maiden fainting with Affright—
A Lover in a sickening Plight—
A Bull-Dog chuckling with Delight—
A wild, delirious Autumn Night!

There was an old lady of Warren,
A traveller stepped on her corren,
She tottered and reeled,
And hollered and squealed,
And wished she had never been borren.

She read all the books of science,
Her fingers were covered with ink,
She hooted at marriage alliance,
She talked of the missing link.

She quoted savants and preachers
Of greater and less renown—
Plantonic in all her features,
She got mashed on a circus clown.

AND now Lady Godiva is said to be a myth—a bare falsehood, as it were.

SOME one inquires: "Where have all the ladies' belts gone?" Gone to waist long ago.

IT requires but a short time for a young lady out shopping to learn all the countersigns of the dry-goods trade.

REBECCA—"Yes, a man who is continually sticking his nose into other people's business can be said to possess a roamin' nose."

THE custom-house officers in New York carefully inspect the inside of fishing-rods. Sara Bernhardt can't slip into the country in that fashion.

EVERY lady who educates her servants into greater truthfulness, fidelity, self-respect, and the orderly ways of life, is doing missionary work of the best sort.

THE women in Persia are obliged to ride in a railroad car alone and pass their fare out through a hole in the roof. There isn't a living soul to flirt with except the driver.

"I THINK, dear, the dew has commenced falling," he said, in his softest accents. "Yes," she yawned, "I've been hoping to hear adieu for some time." He didn't call the next evening.

A YOUNG woman in Denver flung herself into a cistern, but she was fished out. A local paragrapher advises her as follows: "Cis turn from your evil ways." But he won't joke that way when it becomes cistern.

A GALVESTON woman, just married, wishing to impress her husband with her ability as a housekeeper, bawled out to the servant as she entered the door: "Matildy, bring me the washboard; I want to wash the potatoes for dinner."

THE first hat of a new fashion for ladies is not the result of any particular design. One is finished plain and then sat down upon by the head milliner. Whatever shape it may take under pressure is adopted as the style, and becomes the pattern for others.

Fashion Notes

RED lace veils will be worn by a few eccentric ladies.

FEATHER ruchings are revived for dresses and cloaks.

CHAMELEON fabrics shot in two colours will be worn.

JET collars go with black silk and velvet costumes.

MADRAS plaids take precedence over Scotch tartans.

RED and grey are fashionable colours in combinations.

BROCADED fabrics of velvet, silk, and wool will be in high favour.

HOODS appear on many sacques, as well as on cloaks and mantles.

CHAMELEON fabrics trimmed with plush appear among fall costumes.

PLAIN skirts, with a single narrow balayeuse flounce, will be much worn.

PEKIN velvet and tiger plush are found among the new trimming materials.

AMBER satin bonnets, embroidered with amber beads, are pretty novelties.

VELVET brocades take precedence of all dress fabrics for the coming season.

ALL wool Jersey webbing is found among late importations of dress materials.

BOX-PLEATED balayeuse flounces are more fashionable than knife-pleated ones.

WHITE mousseline de l'Inde is the material most used for bridesmaids' dresses.

GIRDLES of heavy silken cord finished by balls of spikes are among novelties shown.

VELVET brocade dresses are made perfectly plain without any looping or draperies.

CHAMPAGNE wine colour is a new shade of pinkish crime that combines well with ecru.

THE new shades of red are Titian, pheasant, garnet, cinnamon, copper, and Ottombier.

BRETON lace pleatings in many rows cover one side of some of the dressiest Japanese fans.

WHITE satin, white silk smocking, and lace make a lovely combination for bridesmaids' dresses.

ALL sorts of pelerines, fichus, shoulder capes, round capes, and mantles are worn as street wraps.

RENTON is a new shade of coppery yellow that is very handsome and luminous for evening wear.

SILVER and gold thread and tinsel illuminate many of the new white and black Spanish blonde laces.

RED, heliotrope, and shades of ecru and old gold are the favourite colours of the plush lining of cloaks.

UNCERTAIN shades of green and blue, combined with every imaginable shade of red, prevail in plaids.

MR. AND MRS. TIBBLEY were divorced years ago at Columbus, Ind. Both made subsequent matrimonial ventures, he taking four wives in succession, and she two husbands. At length, both being free, they discussed their varied experience, admitted that neither had been happy since their parting, and finally were re-united.

WHOLE dresses of seal-skin are made for a young English lady of rank who is to spend the winter in Russia. One of these garments is cut en princesse, lined with brown silk, and trimmed down the front with frogs of brown and amber cord. The train is caught back with cords, and gold and amber and old Flanders point are the ornaments.

FEW young brides have such a flavour of antiquity surrounding their weddings as there was about the recent wedding of the daughter of Major Ben Perley Poore, Miss Miss Alice Poore, to Mr. Frederick Moseley. The picturesque old mansion in which the affair took place had been in the possession of the bride's family for two hundred years, very little of its furniture was less than one hundred years old; the bride wore some point lace long an heirloom in the family; her veil was fastened by a brooch of precious stones worn by her grandmother at her own wedding fifty years before; and she stood in the slippers worn by her mother at her wedding, adorned by the diamond shoe-buckles of her great-grandfather. Among the guests were Senators Anthony and Burnside, Mr. Parton, Mrs. Spofford, Miss Prescott, Miss Harriet Preston (the Provencal translator), Mrs. Governor Claflin, and the notables and dignitaries of all the surrounding region.

THE Pope gave the new Spanish baby a satin robe covered with lace, made and embroidered, at his request, by ladies of the Roman nobility. The layette of this unfortunate infant fills six large wardrobes, and although cut after English styles, was made, for the sake of the national pride, by Castilian hands and of Spanish stuffs. The two grandmothers, the ex-Queen and the Archduchess, are ruining themselves in a rivalry of costly gifts, cradles, and laces to the little princess. The baby is burdened with no less than thirteen names—Maria de las Mercedes, after the late Queen of Spain, and at the request of Queen Christina; Isabel, after the two royal grandmothers; Teresa, after the great Empress of Austria; Christina, after the Queen; Alfonsa, after the King; Ana, after the Empress of Austria; Jesefa, after the Emperor; Francisca, after her grandfather; Fernanda, after her great-grandfather; Sacinta-Carolina Filomena, after the saints of the day on which she was born; and finally, Maria de Todos los Santos, which includes all the saints, as usual in Spain.

A Useful Maid.

Although English people are almost as well known to the Parisians as to Londoners, occasionally a story of the traditional hauteur of milords and miladies finds its way into a French newspaper. In one of them I read the other day that a milady had entered a Post Office to buy a stamp. Having purchased it, she turned to her maid, who was standing behind her, and made a sign. The maid at once put out her tongue, over which the milady lightly passed the stamp, and then affixed it to her letter.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart is back in New York from Saratoga, and is reported by a correspondent to be animated and jovial, and to have an extensive wardrobe, including more than a hundred gowns of the latest mode for morning, evening, walking, driving, breakfast, luncheon, dinner, reception, theatre, opera, party, etc. She is evidently renewing her youth, for she is over 80. During her husband's life she was kept in the background, and was rarely ever in society, with or without him. She is a queer-looking little woman, and is respected as being very kind and benevolent, giving generously, both publicly and privately. A worthy person always receives a hearing from her, and she gives without ostentation. She entertains handsomely when at Saratoga, where she has a splendid suite of apartments. She drives out often in a neat coupe with two superb chestnuts, and coachman and footman in dark green. She is continually troubled with inquiries regarding Stewart's body, and Stewart dead seems to attract more attention than Stewart alive ever did.

Badly Marked.

The other day the reporter of a Leadville paper and one of the best-known medical practitioners of Leadville were talking over odd episodes, in business, when the man of pills and plaster said:

"I think, to tell the truth, I had the most singular experience of my whole professional career, the other day."

"What was it, doctor?"

"Well, I'll tell you, leaving out all names, for I expect the party will be recognized anyhow. It was just this:

"The middle part of last week one of the best young ladies of Leadville—she's sweet as a peach, too,—came to my office in the evening, told me, in a great deal of embarrassment, that she wanted me to help her out of some trouble. Well, from her manner, my worst suspicions were aroused, and I began to question her closely. And what the deuce do you think? Well, the confounded little fool had had the name of the fellow whom she used to be engaged to tatooed on the calf of her leg. Now, she's just about to get married to quite a different married to quite a different party, and had sense enough to see that the marking would be likely to kick up a big row in the family. She was awfully distressed and ready to submit to almost anything, even a surgical operation, to 'wipe out the damned spot.'

"I was puzzled at first, but after studying over it for a little while I happened to remember that I had read somewhere in some old scientific magazine that tatooing may be removed by going over the design with a needle dipped in milk. It was a forlorn hope, but I thought I would try it, and, taking her little foot—delicate position, wasn't it, for a married man?—I carefully went over the letters. It must have hurt, but she never whimpered, and when it was all over I told her to go home and come again in a couple of days.

"Well, sir, when she came I had the satisfaction of knowing that the letters had faded into an indiguisable blue line. The operation is a perfect success, and she is the happiest girl in Leadville. I got $50 for the job. Let's go and have a smoke."

Too Many Wives.

The question as to how near a couple can come to being married without actually being married has been many times practically answered. There have been hysterical brides in the chancel vainly expecting a false bridegroom. There have been inconsiderate and even revengeful brides who have scandalized the clergyman and the witnesses with a final "No" when the service was in progress. There have been forgetful clergymen and belated certificates of authority. But perhaps the narrowest escape from matrimony yet recorded is reported from Lyons, in France. It seems that the bride and the groom were charmingly agreed, not only in the affairs of the heart, but of the pocket, for she was an heiress. There had been harmonious family meetings under the civil code, and no disturbance of the harmony at the preliminary lunches. The contract had been arranged at the notary's office. The day had arrived for the civil marriage—which is, under the law of the republic, the binding one,—in the morning, and for the blessings of the priests at the cathedral altar in the afternoon. The parties were before the mayor, and what a Chicago lawyer before a divorce jury called the "fatal question," had been duly asked of each and duly answered, whereupon the mayor had tendered his personal as well as his official congratulations, and had placed before them the attesting document which, when signed, made them lawfully man and wife. At this moment entered a telegraphic messenger, R. U. E. The couple paused, pens in hands, the witnesses looked amused, and the mayor dropped his spectacles in a nervous fit as he handed the message to the bride's father. Then the message: "Monsieur —— has already been married in Germany, and his wife from Vienna are on the way to you by post." The mayor postpones the celebration for a week, as is his duty under the civil code when a warning comes. The week passes, and no vouchers come. Everybody agrees it was the trick of a wretched and mean rival—everybody excepting the bride, who had been pondering over the telegram, and, to the surprise of all, believed it. She sends back the diamond ring, the silver candlesticks, the gold-mounted priedieu, and the almost mother-in-law's ivory-bound breviary, and annuls the settlements. The juge de paix of Lyons and the mayor hold a consultation with the lawyers and the notary, when it is unanimously agreed that the couple, as the English peasantry put it, were not a couple but a pair. The groom, resuming his condition as bachelor, has searched for the sender of the telegram, only to be made aware, without getting a clue to identity, that it was paid for by "a veiled woman in black."

Rev. D. J. Macdonnell and New St. Andrew's Church.

There are in Toronto two claimants for the honour of being specially under the protection of Scotland's Saint. How this came about is well understood, and easily explained. The first Presbyterian Church erected in Toronto, naturally received the distinctive title of St. Andrew's, and for many a long day enjoyed its honour without any wishing to share the privilege or enjoy any of the protection likely to result from the arrangement. The congregation so known had a chequered history of prosperity and reverses, and at last came down so low that nothing but extinction seemed to be in store for it. The members were few and considerably discouraged. They, however, managed at last to persuade Mr. Macdonnell to come to the city, and lead what was generally regarded as a forlorn hope. He did so, and the result was as gratifying as it was unexpected. The congregation grew rapidly and steadily, both in numbers and resources, till at last the overwhelming majority of those connected with it resolved to erect a new church on a lot they had on the corner of Simcoe and King. This was done, and as the emigrants were so much the most numerous part of the congregation, they thought they had a right to take both the minister and the name of the church along with them. They did so. Hence the name of New St. Andrew's. Those who remained in the old building held that they kept up the continuity of ecclesiastical descent, and hence they also called their Church by the old use and wont name, but in order to distinguish it from the other, prefixed the word "Old," and allowed the world to know from the names what was the distinction in fact. Afterward, this remnant also built a new church, and called it by the old name, so that the new building rejoices in the old title, and the real old St. Andrew's has become a thing of the past. Very likely, in a short time, some great commercial establishment will rise upon the old Church site, and pilgrims of other days may have some difficulty in discovering where that old way mark stood. Of course, TRUTH will be in existence then, and its fyle will naturally be consulted both for business and pleasure. In view, then, of the possibility of such enquiries, we state now that the real original St. Andrew's stood on the south-west corner of the intersection of Church and Adelaide streets, and was thought at the time of its erection to be a notably fine building. And so it was. Perhaps, considering the wealth in the hands of the congregation quite as fine as the finest of our modern ecclesiastical erections, great as the actual contrast no doubt is.

If the Metropolitan has too much ground round it, for the very perfection of effect, New St. Andrews has decidedly too little. It has a grand massive appearance, but it is cribbed, cabined, and confined by its surroundings, and does not strike the stranger, as it ought to do, and as it would have done, had the location and the grounds been more in accord with the magnitude of the structure, and its improved style.

The success which attended Mr. Macdonnel's ministrations in the old building followed him to the new, and though the weight of debt resting upon the edifice is still heavy, it can scarcely be called burdensome, and is in the course of being slowly, but steadily paid off, so that, at no distant day it will be among the things of the past.

Like most men in his position, Mr. Macdonnel has had in the course of his life, no very startling or extraordinary experiences. His career has been all but uniformly, what the world calls a successful one, and we should hope and believe, more than usually happy. "A child of the Manse," he has grow up surrounded by all the humanizing and beneficent influences of a Christian home, and has enjoyed the benefits arising from cultivated society, a liberal education, and a considerable amount of travel, and general intercourse with the world. His collegiate course was entered upon and finished at too early a period of life, to permit his reaping the full benefit of the opportunities, thus placed within his reach, nor do his friends and intimates claim, on his behalf, that he has to any great extent, made up by subsequent efforts, the loss which he thus incurred. His life has been too active, and the various duties of the pastorage have been too many, and too exacting, to permit of his leading a student's life, or adding greatly to his original stores of learning. No one would ever dream of claiming for him any great vigour of thought, wealth of imagination, minuteness, and variety of knowledge with that general force and massiveness of intellect and heart, which might set him forth as a great leader, who was destined to put his mark upon his generation and his race. "Great" in the ordinary sense of that term Mr. Macdonnell is not and is never likely to become. But while this statement cannot reasonably be called into question, the position he has attained and the influence which he undoubtedly exerts show that he is far above the ordinary range of men and ministers. His sermons are always fresh, simple and interesting. He affects nothing outre, and naturally necessarily detests the slightest approach to clap-trap. He seeks to bring the services of the sanctuary to bear upon the business and temptations of ordinary every day life, and in a variety of ways makes it manifest that he can use great plainness of speech in dealing with the follies as well as the sins of the hour. There is never any great power of expression, or originality of idea, displayed in his public ministrations or in his more or less private utterances, but in his every word, we had almost said in his every look, he shows that he is face to face with the world in which his lot is cast, that he takes a keen interest in current affairs, whether religious or secular, and that according to his abilities and opportunity he is anxious to do all the good possible to the bodies as as well as to the souls of his fellows. His utterances some time ago in reference to his doubt about the eternity of Future Punishments brought his name rather prominently, for a time, before the Church Courts and the general public. But he has either seen the error of his ways in the matter or has learned to be more careful and circumspect in his modes of expression; as we hear no more of his being in any degree out of accord with the Confession of Faith and the general opinion of the Church on that, or, indeed, on any other question. One has said that it is an exceedingly good plan to write one's self into a knowledge of a subject provided always that the manuscript is kept sacredly under lock and key, and never allowed to fall into the hands of a printer. We are not so sure about its being an equally good plan to preach one's self into acquaintance with any scriptural truth or doctrine, and giving all the processes of doubt and perplexity through which one may be led, and at last landing in the confession that as yet he knows positively nothing on the whole subject. The preacher is understood to have become a truth finder, and not merely a truth-seeker, a resolver of other people's doubts not a mere propounder of his own. The average run of mankind can do their own doubting generally without any outside assistance. They don't need to fall back upon any one for help in this matter, far less are they inclined to pay him for doing for them what they can so very easily and very successfully do for themselves. It is very easy to say, "I don't know, I am not sure," but the good a religious teacher can accomplish in the way is not very apparent. Men can't live either on negations or on doubts, and as Mr. Macdonnell has to all appearance given himself exclusively to the proclamation of his convictions not of his perplexities, of his certainty, not of his doubt, as indeed it is only justice to him to say that with the exception of what was perhaps made far too much of, he has always so far as we know been in the habit of doing. And as he rises continually as an able and faithful preacher of divine truth rather than as a mere promulgator of human doubts and individual difficulties. He is still a young man, and has we trust a long, useful and distinguished career before him. His congregation is among the largest in the city and contains an unusual number of active intelligent young men. He throws his whole soul into the pastoral and congregational work; is respected by all; liked by even his casual acquaintances, and positively loved by those who have the pleasure of reckoning him among their friends. No one as we have said could truthfully call him a great man, or even say that he has in him the makings of greatness, but judging him all in all, he is one of Toronto's best know citizens, an excellent and popular preacher, a diligent pastor, a faithful friend a genial associate, a good man. TRUTH does not flatter him or any man, and consequently cannot call him an eighth wonder of the world, a profound theologian, an astute reasoner, a finished scholar, a suggestive writer, a prudent adviser or an infallible guide either in things secular or sacred; but what it can honestly say in commendation it says, and its praise is as sincere as its hints at blame are both honest and considerate.

Art in Courtship.

An authority on this subject wishes us to know that it is quite a mistake to suppose that the average woman is the merely passive recipient of favours of a matrimonial kind, offered for her acceptance. This may be the general opinion, and, there is very great reason, indeed, to believe that such is really the deeply-seated conviction of the vast majority of the human race; but this affords but one more example of the great fact which is so constantly forcing itself upon the attention of thoughtful men, that popular opinions, whether on one subject or another, are very, very little worth. That man is invariably, or even, indeed, for the most part, the proposer, and woman simply the acceptor of whatever affection his wisdom may see fit to bestow, is an opinion which, in view of the immense advances which are constantly being made in the various walks of physical science, must be relegated to the limbo of attenuated vanities. Sympathy bestowed on the average woman, because of her inability to choose her own happiness, and the impossibility of any self-directed preferences on her part, is just so much waste of valuable emotion. That woman's happiness or misery depends on the advances of the man, is nonsense. Woman does not simply wait for opportunities to come, but like every other genius, she seizes time by the forelock, and manages, very successfully sometimes, too, to make her own opportunities.

Women are neither the simpletons nor the merely negative recipients of offered favours which poets and novelists succeed very often in making them. They have vastly more to do with the disposal of themselves, and the establishment of the estate of connubial happiness than is vulgarly supposed. There is no necessity for her being reduced to that stupid resource of the merely male mind—talking, in order to accomplish all the courtship she wishes. She has a hundred little ways and means of getting at her ends when once she has settled what these are to be. Not one man in a hundred is any match for her in this respect. He may boast of his accurate and profound knowledge of the opposite sex, of his fixed determination to avoid the snares of these fair trappers, of the idiocy of the man who can allow himself to be brought to a declaration against his will; but if he has anything like the knowledge and experience, he would fain persuade himself he has, he will know that if he is at all sincere in his protestations of avoidance, his only real safety must lie in flight. This authority asserts that "almost any woman outside of a cloister feels that, up to a certain point she is the equal, if not the superior, of any man when they are emotionally pitted against one another." He is almost entirely at her mercy, and unless he is possessed of more than ordinary strength of mind, or to seeks safety in retirement, he may as well strike his colours at once, if he gets an inkling at all that she is bearing down on him.

Nor is there any reflection on the delicacy appropriate reserve and so naturally looked for from woman, in all this, she simply acts according to her nature. Debarred by the customs of society, as well as by hinderences in the very nature of things, she cannot attain her ends by energy and force of action, and so is of necessity driven to have recourse to subtilty. Her life, more than with man, has an uncomfortable feeling of incompleteness about it, unless it is crowned with matrimony. Accordingly, she is apt to bend the only strength of her resources, and the well-known intensity of her will to accomplish that one great end of her existence. Great indeed must be the assurance of any man who could write in this way, unless, indeed, his words be the ripened fruit of wisdom gathered from the tree of only too sad experience.

"She thinks of wedlock twenty times as much as man does. She has ampler reason to think of it, for it is altogether more important to her than to him, and is in the direct line of her nature and destiny. Consequently, when any man shows a sail in the social offing, she prepares for action, as if the engagement would be inevitable and desperate. He may be on another course; he may steadily increase the distance between them; she may never catch another glimpse of his whitening canvas. But it is a comfort to her to have been ready to think what she might, could or would have done had he borne down upon her, and challenged her to combat on the high seas of possible matrimony." A single woman believes that every unmarried man's sail, whatever flag he, may be flying, covers a cargo of goods that may be turned to connubial account." We don't believe this, and thankfully commend such a writer as this to the thoughtful consideration and pitiful compassion of all readers, male, or female, rich or poor, young or old.

An Apple with a History.

Seeing that a number of localities are boasting of their large potatoes, large apples &c., it will not be out of place for Midland to boast too, this is the more excusable as in addition to the size of the apple there is connected with it a quite a history. The apple in question is one left on our table by Mr. Charles Ross, clerk of Tay. The apple was grown from a little shoot taken from a clump of apple sprouts, found at the old fort. In the year 1868 when Mr. Bruneau settled on the Jesuit lot, No. 16, 3rd con., Tay, it was then covered with a dense forest, not having been occupied for 270 years, that is from the date of the massacre of the whites by the Indians, to the year 1868. Mr. Bruneau found evidence of the site of an old orchard by clumps of apple sprouts at regular intervals, these shoots have since then grown two or three years and then died out and have thus done since the above date, but in some cases the farmers have removed these sprouts to their farms and they have invariably grown to fine proportions and are now yielding fine fruit, as the sample furnished by Mr. Ross is a fine specimen. Evidently of the winter variety, measuring 13½ inches in circumference, it is in color a dark red, very firm and of fine flavor. That these trees have, for the last 200 years, the greater portion of that time in the midst of a forest, preserved their vitality is a marvel in horticulture.

I HAVE known vast quantities of nonsense talked about bad men not looking you in the face. Don't trust that conventional idea. Dishonesty will stare you out of countenance any day in the week, if there is anything to be got by it.

WITH most men in this wicked world, honesty is the best policy so long as it pays, but when it ceases to pay, collect your little bill as soon as you can, because circumstances alter cases.

AN ADVENTUROUS CAREER.

THE STORY OF THE FIRST OFFICER OF THE CITY OF VERA CRUZ—RUNNING THE BLOCKADE—INCARCERATED IN FORT LAFAYETTE—IN THE SERVICE OF THE CUBAN PATRIOTS—PEACEFUL PURSUITS ASHORE.

Frank Marsh Harris, first officer of the lost steamer City of Vera Cruz, who was mistakenly reported as having been rescued, had a remarkable history. He was the son of Dr. Francis Lee Harris, who was Health Officer of the Port of New York, twenty years ago, after distinguishing himself as a famous surgeon and as a Democratic politician in the city of New York. Before he removed to New York Dr. Harris was a physician in good practice in Savannah, Ga. His first wife, the mother of Capt. Harris, was a Livingston, and was descended from Herrmann Kean, of Kean Manor, in Elizabeth, N. J. Frank, the only son by this marriage, who was born in 1832, early betrayed a love of the sea, and shipped on a schooner from Savannah when he was only 15 years of age. His family had sufficient interest to obtain for him an appointment as midshipman in the navy, and in 1852 he sailed with Commander Perry on the important expedition which resulted in the opening of the Japanese ports by the treaty of 1854. After the return of the expedition he resigned from the navy, and went into the coasting trade once more in command of a vessel. He was running a schooner from Restigouche, N.B., to South America when the war broke out, and promptly offered his services to the Confederate Government. His first employment was the command of a gunboat in the celebrated Roanoke expedition, in which young Wise, son of Governor Wise, was killed. Capt. Harris being known to the naval authorities of the Confederacy to have a perfect acquaintance with the Atlantic coast, his next service was in running the blockade to and from the harbour of South Carolina. He sailed thence on the steamer Virgo, under another officer, and brought her back loaded, in safety. He made several voyages afterward with impunity, and earned a high reputation as a skilful and daring seaman.

The gentleman who was first officer in his blocade running enterprises is now Captain of a steamer in the employ of J. W. Quintard, & Co. His second officer became associated with him by a queer occurrence. Capt. Harris was lying at Nassau, N. P., waiting for a favourable opportunity to run into Charleston harbour. Strolling through the streets he saw a man, who was evidently an American seaman, in the chain gang. "What have you done," he asked, "to be punished in this manner?" "Oh, I thrashed a nigger and threw him off the wharf," was the reply. "The sentence was $900 fine or three months in the chain gang. I had no money, and here I am." Captain Harris sought out the Judge, paid the fine, and the seaman was liberated. He was a native of Baltimore, of good family, an educated man, and a sympathiser with the Confederacy. Hence he readily accepted the offer of Capt. Harris to take the position of second officer of the blockade runner. He, too, is now commander of a steamer running out of the port of New York, and is not afraid to tell how Capt. Harris released him from the chain gang in Nassau.

In 1863 Capt. Harris was captured in the Kingfisher, in which he had made several successful trips to Charleston. He was taking the course which he had followed successfully before, but found himself at daybreak under the guns of a Federal gunboat. To save the lives of his crew he thought it best to surrender at discretion, and was carried to Fort Lafayette in double irons.

The better to prosecute his dangerous avocation in safety, Capt. Harris had gone before the British Board of Admiralty in London, passed an examination, and received his papers as a British shipmaster. So it was with some colour of authority that he presented his papers to Colonel Burke, commanding Fort Lafayette, and demanded his release as a British seaman, taken off a British vessel.

An exciting episode of his prison life was related by himself. It came to the ears of his father, who had, in the mean time, become Health Officer Harris of the Port of New York, that Frank was a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, and he came to visit him. As soon as Col. Burke learned his visitor's business he hastened up to Capt. Harris's casemate. "You're a nice British seaman!" he said, sneeringly. "You're an American, and your father is Dr. Harris, the Health Officer of this port."

"You're a liar!" retorted Capt. Harris. "I am a native of Hull, and a British seaman."

"Well, I'll send your father up to see you," retorted the Colonel.

He was told to send him up and be blowed.

"Hallo! son Frank; how are you? said the old Doctor, as he reached the casemate, with both hands extended.

"I'm no son of yours," was Frank's cold response; "I'm an English shipmaster."

"Frank, are you crazy?" said the old man.

"No, you old lunatic," rejoined Frank, stoutly. And, turning to Col. Burke, he added: "I claim the protection of Lord Lyons. He will restore me to my Government."

Strangely enough, the British Minister did interfere in his behalf, and, after spending six months between Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren, in Boston harbour, Capt. Harris was liberated, and allowed to depart over the Suspension Bridge into Canada, whence he made his way to Halifax, took ship for Liverpool, and was soon once more in command of a blockade runner. His father lived to forgive him for denying his parentage, believing that the end justified the means.

After the war Capt. Harris was engaged for some time in such peaceful pursuits as as superintending the mining of clay in Woodbridge, N. J., for a company in which the Hon. Cortlandt Parker and District Attorney Keasbey of New Jersey were interested, the building of a sea wall at New Haven, and of a reservoir on Jersey City Heights.

In 1869, when the Government of Free Cuba bought a fleet of fast steamers to carry reinforcements and supplies to the Cuban coast, a number of ex-Confederate officers enlisted in the cause of Cuban liberty. Knowing Capt. Harris's character for reckless daring, his thorough seamanship, and his thorough acquaintance with the coast it was natural that he should be sought out to take part in the expedition. He was put in command of the Lilian, a Clyde built vessel which had been a blockade runner, and a commission was given him as commodore in the Cuban navy. The ill-fated Gen. Ryan, afterward shot in cold blood by the Spaniards, had made several unsuccessful attempts to get to Cuba with his command, which was encamped at various places about New York. They and other volunteers for Cuba rendezvoused at Macon, Ga. The United States Marshal had warrants for Gen. Castro and ex-Confederate Major Bridgeport, Lieut. Puryear, and others, but they escaped with most of their men, and proceeded to Cedar Keys, where they were joined by Gen. Ryan and others by steamer from New York, by way of Fernandina, and the combined forces of about 500 men, under Gen. Goicouria, were embarked on the steamers—Lilian and Teaser. At sea the name of the Lilian was changed to the Cespedes, after the President of the Cuban Republic, and the Cuban flag was hoisted. When Gen. Goicouria opened his orders he found they were to go to the Western Department. This at once made dissatisfaction among the new recruits, who insisted upon being taken at once to the Eastern Department, to which he readily acceded.

The Cespedes had been hurried away from Cedar Keys by the approach of the United States vessel Lone Star, under orders to stop the expedition. She had insufficient coal and water for the voyage. When two days out it was determined to land the men on one of the Bahama keys, and take the vessel to Nassau for fuel and water. They were landed accordingly. The Cespedes sailed for Nassau. Her fuel gave out when she was within a short distance of Nassau, and, coming to anchor, Capt. Harris despatched three men in a life-boat to Nassau, with instructions to buy two schooner loads of coal and other supplies. In the meantime the presence of the Cespedes had been discovered by fishing smacks, and they had notified the Governor of Nassau. He detained the schooners that were chartered by Capt. Harris's messengers, and despatched the British vessel Lapwing to bring the Cespedes into the port of Nassau. Capt. Harris kept his Cuban flag flying, and refused to lower it or deliver up his papers at the command of the British Captain when there had been no condemnation and no trial. She was towed up to Nassau, where Capt. Harris made written protest to the Governor, and the Cespedes was released, but ordered to leave the port within twelve hours. Capt. Harris asked the privilege of taking on board the coal he had bought, which was denied him. He set fifty men to work with axes and hatchets and demolished his handsome cabins and his upper deck to get sufficient fuel with which to steam out of port. He had arranged with the Captains of the coaling schooners to meet him a short distance out of the harbour next morning (Oct. 20), and they did so. But the Lapwing, which had followed closely on the heels of the Cespedes, opened fire on the schooners, and prevented them from putting their coal aboard, and Capt. Harris was fain to sail back to Nassau. He entered the port with his Cuban flag flying, and the Cespedes and her cargo were seized in the name of the military authority of the Bahamas, after Capt. Harris had refused to comply with the order to leave the harbour. The triumph of the captors of the Cespedes was short lived. They awoke one morning to find her scuttled at her wharf. The Cuban volunteers who had been left on one of the Bahama keys were brought off by the Lapwing, on Oct. 27, in a famished condition, 200 of them being fit subjects for a hospital.

Capt. Harris's part in the Cuban expedition becoming known among shipowners, he was out of employment for several years afterward. He was not lost sight of, however, and when the Cuban war was declared at an end he entered the employ of Alexandre & Co. After making several trips as Captain of the Howadji, he became first officer of the City of Alexandria and of the Vera Cruz rather than remain idle until Alexandre & Co.'s new ships were completed, of one of which he was to have command.

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

THE site of a millstone manufactory of the bronze age is thought to have been discovered at Auvenir, near Neuchatel. Millstones in all stages of manufacture have recently been brought to light there.

THE jubilee of the zoological museum of the Academy of Sciences, St. Petersburg, established by the Emperor Nicholas in 1831, will be celebrated in that city by Russians and foreign zoologists next year.

BEFORE their intercourse with Europeans, the Maoris, according to Mr. J. W. Stack, of the New Zealand Institute, had terms only for three colours—white, black, and red. His paper is valuable as throwing light on some of the recent learned disputations regarding the colour-sense of the Greeks about the time of the siege of Troy. It is one thing to appreciate colour, and quite another thing to give precise expression to that appreciation.

THE history of the bayonet is thus set forth in the catalogue of Gen. Pitt River's anthropological collection, which the British Government will probably buy for the public benefit and place upon exhibition in the South Kensington Museum: In the early part of the seventeenth century it was found necessary to retain the use of pikemen in the infantry on account of the defenseless position of the firelockmen when the enemy approached to close quarters. To remedy this defect they were accustomed about the middle of the century to stick the handles of their daggers into the muzzles of their guns in order to use them a pikes. Of course, when the dagger was so fixed the gun could not be fired. But as many of the daggers had rings at the guard the men saw the expediency of fastening the dagger to the muzzle of the piece by means of the ring. Soon the dagger or plug bayonet was so secured to the outside of the barrel that the firelock could be loaded and discharged although bayonets were fixed. The British had their first experience of what may be called the compound gun and pike in the time of William III., in one of the Flanders campaigns, and they "swore terribly," no doubt, when they found that their opponents could fire at them with fixed bayonets. River's collection shows all the transition stages of the bayonet from the plug handle to the modern tube-and-catch attachment. This is only a sample brick, so to speak, of the civil and warlike gropings of man from precedent to precedent to his present condition. We have a fine opportunity of doing something of the same kind to this continent, and the marvel is why some men of wealth do not embrace it, and so secure the perpetuity of their own name through the advancement of an important department of science.

Our Girls.

If our girls are not the very best girls that ever existed, it is not on account of not having sufficient attention bestowed upon them. We speak not now of the attention which they receive from those of the opposite sex, about their own age, but of the innumerable inventors, male and female, who exhaust their energies in inventing theories for their physical, mental, and moral, improvement. If every one of them does not develop into an Amazon, capable of wielding the spear of a Goliath, it will not be the fault of sundry strong-minded, elderly spinsters who, whether they have made much of themselves or not, are intent upon perfecting the women of the coming generation. Indeed, at times, one is almost appalled at the vision which arises before the mind as it looks into the future, of the gigantic, rawboned, and muscular, womanhood which is to take the place of the embodiment of femenine charms, which we have in the mothers, the wives, the sisters, "the cousins and the aunts" of this and past generations. Their intellect withal is not to be neglected. Every one of them is to be a "blue stocking." The culture of the taste and feeling, which has heretofore filled so large a space in the education of girls, is to give place to a sort of intellectual training, which shall fit her to enter the list with man, as a competitor, for those prizes which have heretofore been supposed to be only within the reach of the rougher sex. With her hardened muscle, and enlarged brain, why should she not take her place beside man in all the activities of life, and share with him to the fullest extent in all its honours and emoluments? Why should men be permitted to monopolize the position of policemen, standing at our street corners, in more or less splendid uniforms, where their duties could be done quite as well, or better, by women quite as strong, and courageous as they are. Already, there are a few of them doctors, and half a dozen of them—more or less—ministers! Why should they not be lawyers and legislators? And should they not be permitted to lead armies, and to serve in the ranks, to act as ship-masters, and to serve before the mast. The fact is, women is coming to the front. The brutality of man has crowded her into an inferior position long enough, but when the girls of the present become women, things will be different, and the time may come, when some female City Commissioner will have an army of women under her, cleaning the streets. The age of gold will come.

The Murder of Lord Mountmorres.

(From the London World)

Lord Mountmorres, the last victim of Hibernian agrarianism, could not have been a very unpopular sort of a man after all. Father Lavelle, the parish priest of Cong, knew him well, and attended his funeral. Father Lavelle is no lover of a lord. He is the fire-eating cleric known as the ecclesiastic apologist for Fenianism, the foe of Cardinal Cullen, and the particular protege of John, Archbishop of Tuam. Father Lavelle is an extreme land agitator in principle, and yet he was the friend of the murdered Lord Mountmorres. The cause of the strange friendship was simply that the murdered nobleman, though severe in his dealings with breakers of the law, was thoroughly Irish, and was deeply imbued with charity toward the poor which covereth a multitude of offences. No one knew this better than the parish priest of one of the poorest populations in the west of Ireland.

NEBRASKA theatre audiences are unconventional in their conduct. At Lincoln, while John T. Raymond was presenting the trial scene in "Colonel Sellers," two dogs began to fight in the centre aisle. All attention was instantly diverted from the stage to the fight. "I move we suspend proceedings in this court," said Raymond, "and I'll bet a dollar on the white dog." "I'll take you," cried a man in the audience. The white dog won, the dollar was passed across the footlights to the star, and the acting of the play was resumed.

THE barber's apprentice is usually a strapping fellow.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 5th, 1880.

THE BONUS PETITION.

We understand that the Council of Artemesia, at the dictation of the Reeve, saw fit in their wisdom (?) to throw out the Petition asking the submission of a By-Law for $10,000, in aid of the Railway. To us it seems a very high handed and audacious proceeding of the Council to take the step they did. The 150 influential and respectable ratepayers who signed the petition will certainly not soon forget the insult. Had the Reeve honestly, through ignorance, misinterpreted the purprt of the law in question, there might be some excuse; but the Doctor is not on ignorant man, and can claim no indulgence on this score, hence his culpability is the greater.—He cannot urge the plea of expense, as the Company were quite willing to deposit a sufficient sum to cover all expenses, and if the Reeve is so confident of the result as he states he is, excuse here falls to the ground. There can be no question if the Railway Company apply for a mandamus to compel the Council to obey the law, they will get it, and either the Township or the individual members of the Council, who perpetrated the wrong, will have to pay the costs. Space will not permit a more extended notice of the action of the Council in reference to the said Petition at present; but at some future time we shall take the liberty to refer thereto at greater length.

DIPHTHERIA.

We this week publish two cures for the above disease both said to be very efficatious. They are very simple and we can see no harm in trying them.

"A New Bedford, Mass. woman reports a new, and, as she claims, a successful cure for diphtheria. A little nephew of hers was sick with diphtheria, and the child's mother was told to give him tea made of the bark of the roots of the white birch. She did so, and the white coating of the throat and mouth began to losen and come off, and entire recovery followed The tea may be used as a drink or gargle, or may be held in the mouth.

ANOTHER.—A Hamilton (South Australia) paper publishes details of the "Greathead" cure for diphtheria. The disease is declared by Mr. Greathead to be of hydrate growth, and that the germs float in certain impure atmospheres where they are inhaled by human beings. For a grown person, four drops of sulphuric acid diluted in three quarters of a tumbler of water, with a smaller dose for children. The effect of this treatment was instantaneous, the acid at once destroying the parasites and the patient coughing up the obstruction The papers have teemed with accounts of sufferers who have recovered in a few minutes by adopting the 'Greathead' treatment. Children, almost previously in a dying state, were declared to be playing about within ten minutes, and at a computation some forty or fifty of these sudden recoveries have been placed on record with full particulars.

SAUGEEN PRESBYTERY.

An adjourned meeting of the Presbytery of Saugeen was held at St. Andrew's church, Mount Forest, on Thursday last the 21st inst. commencing at 10 a. m., the Rev. J. MacMillan of Mount Forest in the absence of the moderator, occupying the chair.

The Presbytery took up the consideration of a call from Chalmer's church, Kincardine township, in favor of the Rev. Charles Cameron of Cotswold accompanied by promise of a stipend of $725 per annum with manse and fuel. The Rev. Duncan Cameron of Lucknow, commissioner from the Presbytery of Maitland, was heard in support of the call, also Mr. Fyfe a delegate from the congregation of Cotswold. The call was accepted by Mr. Cameron and his translation agreed to by the Presbytery. The Rev. John Campbell of Harriston was appointed moderator of the session of Cotswold ad interim with instructions to preach the church vacant at an early date.

The Rev. J. M. Aull, of Ratho and Innerkip, having accepted a call to Knox church, Palmerston, his induction was appointed to take place at Palmerston on the 10th of Nov., at 2 p. m.; Mr. Campbell to preside, Mr. Straith to preach, Mr. Fraser to address the minister, and Mr. Baikie the congregation.

Mr. Fraser, on behalf of the committee appointed to visit Durham, with a view, if possible, of effecting a reunion of parties there, reported that they had visited Durham the previous day but had failed in effecting reunion. The committee recommended the Presbytery to decline a prayer of the petitioners for the formation of a second congregation in Durham, and enjoin the congregation to discontinue the use of the organ with a view of securing the return of the petitioners on the understanding if this concession has not the desired effect, the congregation are at liberty to resume the use of the instrument.

After the report was received it was moved by Mr. Nichol and seconded by Mr. Watson, that the prayer of the petition for the organization of a new congregation in Durham be granted. Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Campbell, moved in amendment in the direction by the committee. The original motion was carried by the casting vote of the moderator. Messrs. Fraser, Campbell, Young, Straith and Scott desired to have their dissent recorded. Messrs. Park and Weir on behalf of the congregation asked leave to appeal to the Synod of Toronto and Kingston for reasons to be given in due time and craved extracts.

The Presbytery adjourned to meet in Palmerston on the 10th of Nov. at 2 p.m.—Confederate.

We have no objection to boys having a little fun; but when it comes to disfiguring peoples signs and shutters, and [illegible] houses, and committing other diabolical acts, we think it is time the authorities interfered and put a stop to it.

To the Reeve and the Council of the Corporation of the Township of Artemesia:

The Petition of the undersigned qualified voters under the Municipal Act, who are rated as Freeholders on the last revised Assessment Roll and who are residents of the Township of Artemesia:

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

That your petitioners, in accordance with the terms of the several Acts relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company, desire to aid the Company by giving them money or debentures by way of a bonus for the purpose of enabling it to change the gauge from three feet six inches to four feet eight and a half inches, and for the reconstruction of the Railway; and for the amount they so desire to grant and be assessed for is the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that your worshipful Council will, as required by law, introduce the necessary By-law for granting aid by way of a bonus to the amount of Twelve Thousand Dollars aforesaid, and submit the same to the vote of the qualified ratepayers of the said Municipality of the Township of Artemesia, and in due course pass the same for the purpose of raising the said sum of Twelve Thousand in the said Municipality of the Township of Artemesia for the amount of the said bonus payable in twenty years, with interest thereon payable half yearly and for the delivery of the same to the Trustees to be appointed under the said Act relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company, passed at the last Session of the Ontario Legislature, and under the terms that the said Trustees shall not deliver the said dedentures or any part thereof, or any proceeds of said debentures or any part thereof, unless and until they receive a certificate of the Chief Engineer for the time being, setting forth that the work is completed, so that regular freight and passenger trains are being run over the whole line by the Grand Trunk Company from Toronto to Owen Sound and to Teeswater on a track of the width of the Standard National gauge of 4 feet 8½ and that the whole line has been laid with steel rails on or before the first day of January 1882, nor until the arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company for the working by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of the whole of the Line of the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company for twenty years, from the first day of January, 1882, embodied in an agreement, dated 18th September, 1880, has been approved by the Directors and proprietors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the said Shareholders of the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company, and the said debentures shall not be converted into money until the conditions of this by law have been fulfilled, and for assessing and levying upon all ratable property lying within the said municipality of the ——— a special rate for the payment of said debentures and interest thereon.

Dated at Artemesia, October, A.D., 1880.

Robert Robertson	R. E. Hall
Alex. Hannah	Colin McArthur
John White	Henry King
R. Chapman	D. McDonald
A. Turner	James Harvey
H. Bennet, M. D.	James McNicol
T. A. Conkey	John Snell
Robert Oliver	M. Williamson
Alexander Brown	Alex. Muir
John Simpson	Alex. McRae
D. McKinnon	Duncan Muir
Dugald McLeod	Wm. Hacking
James Ryan	W. J. Ekins
James Sullivan	J. Gichrist
Angus McLean	A. Bentham
W. Conkey	Alex. McLeod
A. McLean	Thomas Currie
J. Aussem	Henry Meldrum
Arch. Elliott	Archibald Foster
George Walker	James Foster
Thomas Kells	A. Whitten
R. Buchanan	Wm. Galbraith
James Lackey	James Beaty
John Blain	Christopher Irwin
Robert Sewell	Arch. Foster, jr.
Edward Davis	Alex. Irwin
Samuel Lackey	H. D. Irwin
John Boland	Wm. Henry
John Rowe	Thos. Boland
J. P. Sparling	Wm. Buchanan
W. S. Bowler	Robt Sparling
Thomas Irwin	W. J. Cooey
Robert Smith	John Warling
Wm. Bowler	J. C. Buchanan
John Bowler	George Sewell
Alex. Mercer	James Brodie
Henry Foster	Edward Rutledge
Henry Foster, jr.	Joseph Donner
James Foster	Arthur Johnston
John Mercer
Wm. Hogg	Wm. Purdy
John Whittaker	A. Whittaker
Peter Muir	Joseph Watson
George Buskin	Patrick Quigg
John Watson	William Taylor
Robt. Neilson	R. Campbell
S. Waucbob, sr.	Matthew Leich
S. Waucbob, jr.	J. Higginbotham
Archie Neilson	Robert Taylor
James Neilson	Thomas Parks
Wm. Ludlow	Patrick Ryan
M. Richardson	Michael Akitt
S. Damude	F. T. Carr
Wm. Wright	R. J. Sproule
Robt. Trimble	Wm. Strain
E. J. Johnston	J. W. Armstrong
W. Brown	Thos. Mathews
John Graham	R. H. Byers
George Wright	Wm. M. Douglass
Samuel Walker	J. F. Sproule
Robert S. Rae	E. S. Mabee
George Hobb	George Haskett
Joseph Beaty	Wm. Haskett
James Walker	S. C. Coleman
C. Reynolds	P. McArthur
Alex. Rutledge	T. S. Sproule
W. R. Walker	Thomas Nichol
G. W. Tryon	Beng. Coleman
Chas. McDougall	Wm. McLaughry
Thomas Atkinson	Geo. J. Blyth
D. F. McDonald	Angus McIntyre
Alex. Webster	James Craig
John Irwin	L. Anderson
John McArthur	John Carter

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

T., G. & B. RAILWAY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—The promised article from the pen of W. Brown, Esq., I accidently heard read by a very intelligent gentleman and after a few moments reflection, he said, "there is nothing in it; there is nothing in it." I have also carefully read it over, and am sorry that I am forced to the same conclusion. It affords me an opportunity however to state that friend Brown was equally interested in the $20,000 bonus; no one I presume, voluntarily took a more active part to impress the ratepayers of the [illegible] of the Company utter ruin, if it were [illegible], and the imperative duty to vote it [illegible] those direful calamities [illegible] cured by refusing it, and therefore [illegible] would have supposed that [illegible] Brown, would have been cautious before crying Wolf! Wolf! again.

I would have been glad if he, instead of impugning my motives and switching the matter into the arena of Municipal Elections had shown, by facts and figures, that it was to the interest of the Township, to give another Bonus; will the ratepayers please read the article again, carefully read it — and show me one fact, one reason real or implied!! It isn't there!

A scheme that affords no arguments, save inuendoes against the motives and person of an opponent ought to be abandoned: Mr. B. seems to have discovered a mare's nest in my allusion to Priceville and Flesherton and he rises in horror at the idea of local jealousies, and finds therein a circumscribed patriotism. I know such to be a trick of the gentleman, he can hang an argument on a baseless vision and persistently push it too, about as easily as most men.

In my reference to those villages my mind rested on facts. Did not the R. R. authorities try to purchase the influence of those villages by an offer of rebate in freight of grain absolutely bought in them? and is it not in force now? I do not know about Flesherton but a Priceville merchant, certainly told me it was. I contend sir, that such a course would be only an act of justice — simple justice to those villages to enable them to compete with Markdale and Dundalk — they should have the rebate or else the authorities of the R. B. should take the freight from each village, free of charge. I merely said the Toronto Company had signed away their right, to do so simple an act of Justice! Mr. B.'s allusion must be insulting to the Merchants of those places—who I believe supported the last Bonus and for anything I know will support it again. Is Mr. Brown sincere in throwing down the gauntlet to those villages? Is he willing to take the consequences of the insinuation? But it is not as this gentleman insinuates. There is a laudable strife to sustain the business the business of those villages, but Markdale has the advantage; the loss of the R. R. means death to her and I cannot blame her people, I do not either, for an honest endeavor to sustain the R. R.—but they are in the minority. Mr. Brown proceeds altogether upon the assumption that he is right and every body else is wrong—he is prepossessed—is a kind of monomaniac for a Bonus.

It doesn't matter to him what the amount is $12,000 or $20,000—hurrah lads! The Township can afford it. Now I ask who is it that lacks patriotism? Who is it that speaks of and fosters the principle of local interests as against the general interest of the Municipality? Certainly not Dr. Christoe. I do sincerely regret the indiscretion of Mr. B. in publicly raising such a question, surely this thing might be discussed in the best of friendship, let no firebrands be thrown into the general harmony and good will existing between the villages—the good of one in a broad sense is the good of all.

Permit me to say that my opinion at first was somewhat favorable to assistance, providing the R. R. passed into the hands of a strong Company; I am exhonorated however by the fact that the R. R. has not changed hands, and is not likely to change hands. It is true the Company is about leasing it to the G. T. for a series of years, subject to all the incidents consequent to misunderstandings, common to leases in general—but aside from this the new regulations, do not carry the same necessities.

Then the Bondholders would only consent to lay aside peremptorily from the earning of the road $150,000 and suffer an issue of Postal Bonds to the extent of $240,000 or total say $390,000, but now, the same Bondholders allow a preferential Stock issue of $1,000,000!! Then too, the total cost, for the required change was $800,000 but now, $100,000 less, so that to realize $700,000, is to place them in ample funds; I contend therefore that all improvements ought to be paid out of the said $1,000,000.

Every dollar paid by the Municipalities, enables them to hold so much of this preferential stock in hand. If I am wrong, will friend Brown please correct me.

I know many persons have the idea that the Road when changed will present altogether a new dress, new Cars, new Engines everything in Grand Trunk style, and therefore the pleasing sight anticipated, decides them in favor of a Bonus. It is a pity to spoil the picture, but the truth had better be told Allow me to state then, that you will have the same rolling stock, Engines coaches and cars; to be converted to be sure, to suit the new state of the rails; by conditions of Lease, only four new locomotives are to be bought, 12 to be converted. Six Cars to be bought—18 to be converted, &c. I am ready to admit however, that even this would be an improvement, and I would be glad to see the change.

Mr. Brown can see no wrong to vote a Bonus and vote it at once.—Although the scheme may not be fully matured. I consider it a very serious objection. You may have what conditions you please in your By-Law and there may be a possibility of evasion. One need only look to the position of the G. B. & W. R. R. at this moment, and the By-Laws granted by Sullivan, Derby and Owen Sound. There was a time limit in those By-Laws—and are righteously forfeited; but still they hold on to them. I contend therefore, supposing the Township of Artemesia were willing to grant a Bonus—everything should be matured, completely, before presenting their scheme for a vote. Would Mr. B. conduct his private business in the same slip-shod principle. I think not. It is easily understood why Mr. B. urges an immediate vote—politically I am not in har, mony with Premier Mowat, but am always ready to acknowledge legislation calculated to act justly towards the Municipalities, and upon this Bonus question, there is certainly praise due, to the present Government.

On the 31st day of December next, the law changes. It will require any one requiring a Bonus to poll a majority of the propertyholders on the voters' list to cary their scheme—not as now, a majority of those who go to the poll—and would require about 365 supporters to vote, to carry a Bonus in Artemesia, after the date above mentioned.

This explains the hurry; it is this, that gives friend Brown the fidgets. A snatch vote is wanted. What does my friend care if the vote is barely carried by a small coterie around Markdale or any other place as long as it is carried.

The act is based on common justice viz.: that a majority of the actual property-owners should place the Bonus on the Township i such be required.

I certainly desire success to the R. R. but not at the expense of the ratepayers; the ratepayers can expect nothing from the road but what they pay for. It was but recently, this township had to pay the piper.

The cheap excursion announcement was thus; from Flesherton and Markdale to Toronto and return one fare, which was $2,60 and $2.75 respectively and all places above Markdale, only $2.00.

If you give a Bonus, you also pay rates discriminated against you—these sums are small, it is true, but a principle is involved—and should excite cautiont before fixing a tax on yourselves for the next twenty years. I blame no one if sincerity lead him to support a Bonus; I will not indulge in invectives, or do a worse thing impute base motives to any one who differs from me—but neither the one nor the other shall direct me from a course, which I believe to be for the benefit of the Township. Men like W. Brown Esquire, who have property and money to spare, and who have business connections with the R. R. may not either feel the pinch of a tax, nor the freedom to speak out against a Bonus. But those who can very badly spare their dollar and those who are free to speak, will not fail to do so.

The clap-trap about tenant farmers is silly if not mawkish. My friend's brief experience to Municipal honors, tell fearfully against his influence by letter or otherwise in the Township. I marvel at his stepping on a mine, so susceptable to explosion.

I fancy by this time the R. R. authorities, will begin to pray, to be saved from the letters of their friends. They contain no argument, nothing but an appeal to sympathy, or terror, to frighten at a picture, the production of their own imagination. It is said corporations have no souls, and so I believe, and as the history of the moral has proved. Give your Bonus, vote it squarely, and who will thank you? Will your freight or fare be reduced one cent? Will you pocket the advantage to be gained? Never!! Isn't $3,000 a year equal to possible advantages? Mr. Brown and a few others say No—their [illegible] idea is to give, give—the amount to be decided by the Company every time. Blind are they, and only desire to lead you into the ditch at the expense may be of the reputation of Dr. Christoe or any one else who in their sincerity are trying to protect their own interests as well as those of the township.

I have given facts and figures which I need not repeat. I will only say in a general way that it [illegible] fairly [illegible] those figures named.

I do [illegible] idea that it [illegible] Dr. Christoe [illegible] who is to father [illegible]. I write for an in[illegible] have not [illegible] judgment. These facts are given as I find them. If right I am sure the vote will be accordingly, if not I am equally convinced it will be otherwise. DR. CHRISTOE.

October 24th, 1880.

P. S.—In your last is a letter from Robert Robertson of Priceville. It is somewhat coarse and personal in its comparisons and allusions. I suppose he courts a little popularity at the Doctor's expense.

"And he bates his hooks with mites of cheese
And sits on a rock and bobs for fleas,"

Well take all you can, with your small bait friend. But I cannot ask you sir, to reprint so often, refutations to the same charges, ner my relations to the Road and the Township.

Facts prove my course, in the last campaign, and I am confident the present one will prove equally so.

This scolding and dirt throwing for preventing the Township, being mulcted in, at least $10,000, must be the result of a disappointed partizen—but if it tickles you friend, "bob" away. The effect on myself is like water on a ducks back.

I cannot avoid stating, that this Mr. R. is a grain buyer! is tete-a-tete with the Management, and therefore is interested, "you know" as the Yankees say—would make the same yelp if the Bonus was $100,000.

He has a wonderful faculty, for big talk, and long letters. One would suppose by his urging the Bonus so strenuously, he had a large interest in the Township, and therefore spake with authority. But here is the secret! $300! assessment to him, the new Bonus would be just fourty-five cents!! yearly. O tempora! O mores! Propriety is a jewel; Mr. B. should have it. What thinks the Taxpaying Ratepayer of such Bonus seekers?

October 30th, 1880. DR. C.

SLAUGHTER HOUSES.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Will you please grant me a little space to reply to Mr. Brown's unjust attack upon the inhabitants and the slaughter-houses of Markdale, or at least one of the latter, as to the other, I leave neighbor Wilson to speak for himself. He starts off with Diphtheria as his test, and like many a wiser man he seeks to find a cause. He asserts that, "it is a well known fact, established beyond dispute by the vital statistics of all lands, that when an epidemic breaks out in any place, some potent and assignable cause can easily be traced out." But this assertion requires proof, and then he proceeds to trace out "the cause or causes of the present malady," establishing it according to his theory in the slaughter-houses, or their surroundings.

Any one unacquainted with the place and reading the article, would imagine that the citizens of Markdale were, of all people, the most filthy. "Visit their back yards," he says, "and you will find oceans of filth, consisting of both animal and vegetable matter, in every stage of decomposition, litterally steaming and reaking with miasmatic vapors." What a state for a town of seven or eight hundred inhabitants to be in. The great wonder is, not that some have died, but that any are left alive to read Mr. B.'s remarkable effusion; for if that is true, it of itself, is sufficient cause for all the plague that we have had and are having, and there was no need of his making a personal attack upon the butchers of the place; but let me ask of the inhabitants of Markdale, is it true? If not, then Mr. B. is guilty of making a statement that is a slander upon the majority of the citizens of this town, and where is the proof that Mr. B. is going to rest his "oceans of filth" upon? Let him bring on his commission and establish it, or take back his slander. If he has thus gone beyond the truth in his general charge, is it not likely that he has gone just as far beyond in his personal assault. Look at his statements and then judge if they are not far beyond either reason or truth—"Slaughter-houses in which, on an average, a dozen animals have been killed every week for the past five months." Now any body of common sense would know that a dozen animals would supply a far larger demand than exists in Markdale for fresh meat; but if it is true, then I must congratulate my neighbor, for I positively assert that there has not been more than an average of 4 head per week slaughtered on my premises in the time mentioned.

M. B. waxes more eloquent and more untruthful as he contemplates the spectre of his imaginrtion, and desires you, Mr. Editor, and I suppose others, to think, and if within the grasp of your minds, "realize, if you can, the fearful, the appalling condition of that plague spot, where the blood and ofal of half-a-dozen animals are deposited weekly throughout the "sultry, sweltering dog-days of a Canadian Summer." Now, Mr. B., neither you nor any one else could possibly find such a spot, now or at any other time since I have been in business, on my premises, for the simple fact, that such a spot does not exist other than in your own imagination, and that slander I request you to prove, or else, if a gentleman, retract. My premises are open for inspection, and I am in a position to prove that, as I keep them now, so have I kept them all summer. But then if Mr. B.'s assertions are true, that does not necessarily prove that the "slaughter-houses" are the cause of the plague referred to. If they were the cause of it, would it not be natural to suppose that it would first appear in that vicinity: but was that the cause? and then should we not look for it spreading from that centre outward? but has such ben its history? The facts say possitively No. Were not the first cases of it in Mr. Rae's family. Now if it has its origin in the causes assigned for it by Mr B., then he could not bring the "slaughter-houses" in at the beginning, and I think that he will hardly attribute the first of his causes as being the means in these first cases; but it would perhaps be as truthful as the rest of his causes.

Now, Mr. Editor, in conclusion let me ask the ratepayers of Markdale if they are ready to build a union slaughter-house outside the Village limits? If so I am prepared to use it, if not, I am not in a position to do any more than keep the one I now occupy, and keep it as I always have done, clean and sweet, always having a safe and proper place for my offal, and plenty of water and unslacked lime on hand (not even so much as the blood being allowed to fall upon the ground). I am still prepared to serve my friends, as in the past, with pure, sweet and uncontaminated meats that never have laid for even a moment in such a sink of filth as Mr. B. supposes, as no such place exists on my preises. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your kindness, and hoping that when Mr. B next appears in print, that he will at least acquaint himself with the facts of the case, and not attack upon the bear supposition of himself or any one else that which does not exist.

I remain, yours &c.
WILLIAM B. SEARGEANT.

Markdale, Nov. 1, 1880

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—The "slaughter of the innocents" still goes on unabated, and apparently our police trustees remain unmoved midst the surrounding desolation. Truly we are a patient, long suffering people, else we would long since have risen in our might, and in righteous indignation demanded the enforcement of the law against public nusances. Have we no one in our midst possessed of moral courage to bring the police trustees to justice for neglect of duty? If we are to judge of their future by their past conduct, nothing short of sharp and decesive measures will suffice to move them to action. Who will take the initiative in this unpleasant but no less necessary and patriotic undertaking?

Now, Sir, this is a practical question, which you will doubtless admit, requires immediate solution. Well, by way of encouragement, and to show that I am willing to assume my full share of the responsibility of enforcing the law, I make this public announcement, that in my capacity of J. P., I shall deem it a pleasing duty to inflict the heaviest penalty upon any offender who may be brought before me. I understand there is an opinion prevalent, that because our village is not incorporated we do not posses the power to enforce sanitary measures. [illegible] the Act [illegible] er to our [illegible] nuisances, [illegible] such to [illegible].

See Con. Stat. [illegible], 17, sec. 591; p. 1782, sec. 868; also p. 1784, sec. 15, 16 & 23, &c.

Since the appearance of my last communication in reference to this matter, I have been informed that there are several yards and back premises in the village that require looking after. I hope the inspecting trustee will make a tour and see that the requirements of the law are being complied with before the winter sets in, else the spring of '81 will find us literally swimming in filth. I would further suggest that at least every three month's a report be published in the STANDARD of the sanitary condition of the village and that the names of all parties who keep their yard &c. in a filthy state, be printed in large red characters that every one may know who the delinquents are. Since commencing to write the above, I have been informed that Mr. Wilson has removed his slaughter house out of the village. This is encouraging, and shows that he has some regard for the feelings and comfort of others, and I doubt not he will be amply repaid. On the other hand, it is reported that Mr. Sarjeant is quite defiant, and declares his intention to still mantain his post house as before. Well, if the police trustees will not try means to bring that gentleman to time, the people doubtless will. If Mr. Sarjeant thinks he can trifle with the health and lives of his patrons, he will find to his cost that he has made a grand mistake, and probably he may discover, that if clenliness is not "godliness," yet, in his trade, it may prove to be the best "policy."

WM. BROWN.

Nov. 2, 1880.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED.

Came into the premises of the subscriber, near Berkeley, about the first of October, a yearling steer. The owner is requested to prove property pay expenses and take him away. WALLACE DRING.

Nov. 1st, 1880. 8-3

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms: Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larder well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's.

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.

October 31st, 1880. 8

SEWING

MACHINES!

At prices that will astonish the natives at

W. L. Marshall's,

DUNDALK.

ALL KINDS OF

Repairing Attended to.

Dundalk, Oct. 18th, 1880. 6tf.

THE CHURCH.

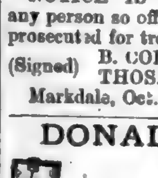
WHEREAS Graves have of late been dug in the Church Yard of Christ Church without the consent of the authorities,

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That any person so offending in the future will be prosecuted for trespass.

(Signed) B. COLEMAN, THOS. ELLIOTT, Jr. } Church-wardens.

Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-3i*

DONALD McLEOD,



MAKER

BEGS to return his sincere thanks to the public for their very liberal patronage in the past, and hopes by honorable dealing, FIRST-CLASS WORK, and close attention to business, to merit a continuance of the same.

THE BEST OF MATERIAL

Used, and none but First-Class Mechanics employed.

Special attention paid to Repairing, which will be done promptly.

Sewed work a Specialty.

NOTICE.

All over due accounts must be paid without delay or I shall have to resort to more costly means for collection.

D. McLEOD.

Corner of Queen and Mill Streets.

Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-8i

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my design, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments. [illegible]

[illegible]

Markdale, Oct. [illegible], 1880.

E. D. WILCOX.

Markdale, Oct. 18th, 1880. 1-ly

Teacher Wanted.

FOR School Section No. 5, Melancthon. One holding a Second or Third Class Certificate. Applicants to state Salary expected. Applications received up to November 1st

SAMUEL McDOWELL, ROBERT OLIVER, ABRAM JACKSON, } Trustees.

Dunhalk P. O.

October 20, 1880. 6-3in

W. BENSON,

—OF THE—

"Bifast House,"

Begs to announce that he is fully prepared to dispose of all articles usual to a general Grocery and Provision Establishment, at the Lowest Possible Prices!

The stock consists of

Groceries and Provisions!

together with

LIQUORS of all kinds,

such as SCOTCH, IRISH and CANADIAN, of the best brands. I have no desire to puff or misrepresent the performance of impossibilities, but I may say in response to a brother retailer who offers a book worth $1.25 to every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea, that I will Give Two Books of superior value to those mentioned to all buyers of a like quantity. My house is known as the

Belfast House, op. Haskett Bros

NO SECOND PRICE.

W. BENSON.

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880. 5-tf.

Read This.

MONEY LOANED at the VERY LOWEST RATES OF INTEREST. The BORROWER can have his own terms as to the TIME and the WAY he REPAYS it. LOANS put through with the LEAST possible DELAY.

See the Undersigned before applying Elsewhere.

Offices in Shelburne and Dunkalk.

Always in the Shelburne Office on MONDAYS and TUESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on WEDNESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 2 p. m.

In the Dundalk Office on THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS. On Thursdays, from 2 to 5 p. m., and on Fridays, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.

FARMS SOLD AND RENTED

By sending number of Lot, Concession, Price, Terms, &c., for very moderate charges.

CONVEYANCING

A SPECIALTY.

All Kinds of Writings Executed.

INSURANCES

Effected in the best Stock Companies.

GREAT BARGAINS

Given in the Best and Hardiest Canadian

FRUIT & ORNAMENTAL TREES,

IRON FORCE PUMPS!

—FOR—

WELLS and CISTERNS,

Sold Very Cheap.

Every Farmer ought to get one.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.
SHELBURNE AND DUNDALK.

October 21, 1880. 6

Nurserymen.

W. L. Smith,

GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing diseases lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-5

JOB WORK done neat and prompt at the Standard Office. 14

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERALL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions

—AND—

LIQUORS!

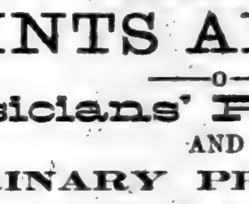
A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT.

Markdale, October 1, 1880.

MEDICAL HALL



Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCO

TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS

Physicians' Prescriptions

AND

VETERINARY PREPERATIONS

CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

Removed! Removed!

HILL BROTHERS

Would intimate to their numerous friends and the public generally, that they have removed to their new premises and will be pleased to receive a call from our many friends and customers. Call and see us. We will give you BARGAINS. WE MEAN BUSINESS.

SEE OUR

Cheap Dress Goods,

Lustres,

Wincies,

Laces,

And Fringes,

Gents, see our CLOTHING. They are Stylish, Good CHEAP.

SEE OUR TWEEDS!

You will find them right in Price and Quality.

Boots and Shoes a Specialty.

Call and get a sample of our Splendid TEAS.

Gentlemen we have a splendid SMOKING TOBACCO, at 40c per lb. Try it.

We again give a general invitation to inspect our goods. Have not time to write long advertisements. Don't believe in them. Would rather have the Goods speak for themselves.

Thanking you for past favors, and trust to have a continuance of the same.

HILL BROS.

Markdale, Nov. 4, 1880.

Money Lost!

By those who buy stoves before going to

J. GARDINER'S

Dundalk.

Best and Cheapest stock of

STOVES and TINWARE

North of Toronto. 6

FOR SALE.

20 CHARMS—Snowflake, Granite, Wedding, Marble, Basket, (comic chine), Motled Stone, Ashes of Roses, &c., Cards with name on all, 10 cents. Address, S. A. BROLLEY, Box 79 Coonsey P.O. [illegible] 5-4.

Auctioneers.

Samuel Morrow.

LICENSED AUCTIONEER for the County of Grey. Sales attended at shortest notice, town or country. Charges moderate. Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880.

J. M. Webster.

LICENSED AUCTIONEER for the County of Grey.

LOAN AND LAND AGENT.

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for [illegible] Loan and Saving Co. All business strictly private, and treated as confidential.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880

DR. PURDY,

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c. EUGENIA P. O.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 5th, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

PERSONS desiring a change in advertisement will please hand it in not later than noon on Wednesday's.

WE have only time this week to draw attention to Hill Bros. new advertisement; will refer to it again next week.

If there are any of our subscribers who do not get their paper regular, they will do us a favor by letting us know at once, so that we may find the cause, and have it removed.

ALLAN McDOUGALL has opened out a harness establishment in Burn's Block, in the building lately occupied by the Expositor. For particulars look out for posters.

THE Owen Sound Tribune says, the Jane Miller, which was reported in our last issue as having been driven ashore, received little or no damage, and is again making her usual trips.

TO POST MASTERS.—Were the STANDARD is not called for, the P. M's will please destribute the papers to whom they please, and not return them, but send us a card with the names of those to whom they are addressed.

THE PRINTERS' MISCELLANY.—This spicy little monthly is to hand, and as usual, is filled with matter useful to those whose interests it advocates. It is a work that should be in the hands of every member of the craft. Subscription, $1; appentices, 50c.

THEFT.—We learn that the parties engaged in the wanton mischief committed on Monday night, brought their proceedings to a close by stealing six turkeys from Mr. Wm. Armstrong. This is carrying matters a little too far, and we trust the perpetrators, who we believe are known, will be dealt with as they deserve.

FROM the Owen Sound Times we learn, that a young man named W. C. Walker, a Land Surveyor and Civil Engineer, committed suicide by placing a pistol to his temple and blowing out his brains. He was for some time in India, and whilst there was severely sun-struck, which appears to have affected his mind, and led him to commit the rash act.

THE Euphrasia Ploughing match took place, according to announcement, and was a complete success. There were ten entries, and the names of the prize-winners are as follows:—Class 1, Men.—1st Joseph Bowes; 2nd Thomas Douglass. Class 2, Men.—1st James McConnell; 2nd John Badger. Class 1, Boys.—1st Valentine Clark; 2nd T. R. Myles. Class 2, Boys.—1st Thomas M[illegible]; 2nd S. J. McKnight.

MR. John Ford placed on our table last week a white Belgian carrot, grown by himself, which measured 11¼ inches in circumference, 20 inches in length and weighed four pounds. Mr F. tells us that he had 100 bushels from an eighth of an acre. We think some of our farmers could obtain a few valuable hints from friend Ford, as he is noted for raising "big things" in the agricultural line.

SUPPER.—Mr. Joseph McCutcheon, proprietor of the Revere Hotel, who is about retiring from business, entertained his numerous friends with a farewell supper, on Wednesday evening, when about 40 sat down to partake of the good things placed before them. The supper was got up in McCutcheon's usual style, and when we say that no farther praise is necessary. From want of space we are unable to give a full report, but suffice it to say, that the usual toasts were drank and responded to, and a very pleasant evening was passed.

WILL not some one commit suicide, break their leg, or get up an elopement, so as to give us a local item. Our readers are aware that the roads are muddy without our telling them. Vennor's prophesies and the weather are 'played out.' The hens are not laying big eggs now, and the time for big strawberries and fine "garding sass" is past. As a reporter must dish up something to his readers to counteract the dryness of the discussion on the Railway Bonus, we will have to punch some body's head or get up a dog fight by way of variety.

EGREMONT PLOUGHING MATCH.—On account of the snow on the 18th ult., this match did not take place until the 21st, consequently there were not as many entries as there otherwise would have been. It came off on the farm of Mr. Taylor, Dromore. There were 9 entries, and the following are the lucky ones:—Men's Class.—1st Alex. Murdoch, 2nd Andrew Waddell, 3rd Donald McFayden, 4th William Ellis, 5th William Hastie. Boy's Class.—1st James Murdoch, 2nd John McArthur, 3rd Thomas Spence, 4th James Snell. The Judges, ploughmen and a number of the spectators, were handsomely entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Taylor at the close of the match.

SIR Walter Raleigh, we believe, was the first to introduce tobacco in England. For some time after his return from America, he always took his smoke in his own room with the door locked. On one occasion he forgot to do so, and his valet entering the room, seeing a dense cloud of smoke, 'round his master's head naturally thought he was on fire, and seizing a pitcher of water douced it over him. We came near doing the same thing this morning. Seeing a heavy smoke just in front of our sanctum, we rushed out to see where the fire was, taking a pail of water with us to assist in quenching it. Upon arriving at the door we found it was only a friend of ours enjoying his morning smoke.

THE Shelburne Free Press says that a man has been making not a few dupes in that neighborhood, by getting them to act as agents for a tin force pump. The mode adopted to entrap the victim, is to induce him to sign an agreement to take one or more cases, each containing 24 pumps, at $30 per case, cash. The retail price of the pumps was placed at $2, leaving a profit to the agent of $18 on each case, provided he succeeded in disposing of them. Each victim was led to believe he was the only agent for the locality; but they were not long left in doubt on this point. No sooner had the experienced agent roped in a sufficient number than he departed, and his place was taken by two new men, who proceeded to collect from the victimized local agents, who were pretty numerous. These collectors do not appear to have had much difficulty in doing so, as it was said that they secured

NTYRE,

rovision

RS!

Choice just Rec

AS TO PRICES

BOUGHT.

HALL

Chemical

DICINES!

ery, Combs, Tooth

Surgical Applian

s sundries.

hool Books

TOBACCO

D OILS.

escriptions

EPERATIONS

ROULE, M.

emoved

THERS,

Fringes,

THING. Th

od CHEAP.

WEEDS!

Price and Quality.

s a Special sample of

have a splen

ACCO, at 40c

to inspect our ertisements. Don't he Goods speak for and trust to have a

HILL BROS

HE STANDARD.

riday, Nov. 5th, 1880.

CAL & OTHER NOTICES.

PERSONS desiring a change in advertisement will please hand it in not later than noon on Wednesday's.

WE have only time this week to call attention to Hill Bros. new advertisement; will refer to it again next week.

If there are any of our subscribers who do not get their paper regular, will do us a favor by letting us know at once, so that we may find the cause, and have it removed.

ALLAN McDongall has opened out a harness establishment in Burn's block, in the building lately occupied by the Expositor. For particulars look out for posters.

THE Owen Sound Tribune says, the Miller, which was reported in last issue as having been driven ashore, received little or no damage, and is again making her usual trips.

POST MASTERS—Were the STANDARD is not called for, the P. M's will please distribute the papers to whom they please, and not return them, but send a card with the names of those to whom they are addressed.

THE PRINTERS' MISCELLANY.—This little monthly is to hand, and as usual, is filled with matter useful to those whose interests it advocates. It is a work that should be in the hands of every member of the craft. Subscription, $1; appentices, 50c.

THEFT.—We learn that the parties engaged in the wanton mischief committed on Monday night, brought their proceedings to a close by stealing six turkeys from Mr. Wm. Armstrong. This is carrying matteps a little too far, and we trust the perpetrators, who we believe are known, will be dealt with as they deserve.

FROM the Owen Sound Times we learn, that a young man named W. Walker, a Land Surveyor and Civil Engineer, committed suicide by placing a pistol to his temple and blowing out his brains. He was for some time in India, and whilst there was severely sun-struck, which appears to have affected his mind, and led him to commit the rash act.

THE Euphrasia Ploughing match took place, according to annoucement, and was a complete success. There were ten entries, and the names of the prize-winners are as follows:—Class 1, Men.—1st Joseph Bowes; 2nd Thomas Douglass. Class 2, Men.—1st James McConnell; 2nd John ...ger. Class 1, Boys.—1st Valentine Clark; 2nd T. R. Myles. Class ... Boys.—1st Thomas McConnell; ... S. J. ...

MR. John Lord placed on our table last week a white Belgian Carrot, grown by himself, which measured ... inches in circumference, 20 inches in length and weighed four pounds! Mr. F. tells us that he had 100 bushels from an eighth of an acre. We think some of our farmers could obtain a few valuable hints from friend Lord, as he is noted for raising "big things" in the agricultural line.

SUPPER.—Mr. Joseph McCutcheon, proprietor of the Revere Hotel, who is about retiring from business, entertained his numerous friends with a farewell supper, on Wednesday evening, when about 40 sat down to partake of the good things placed before them. The supper was got up in McCutcheon's usual style, and when we say that no further praise is necessary. From want of space we are unable to give a full report, but suffice it to say, that the usual toasts were drunk and responded to, and a very pleasant evening was passed.

WILL not some one commit suicide, break their leg, or get up an elopement, so as to give us a local item. Our readers are aware that the roads are muddy without our telling them. Vennor's prophesies and the weather have "played out." The hens are not laying big eggs now, and the time for strawberries and fine "garding sass" is past. As a reporter must dish up something to his readers to counteract the dryness of the discussion on the Railway Bonus, we will have to punch some body's head or get up a dog fight by way of variety.

EGREMONT PLOUGHING MATCH.—On account of the snow on the 18th ult., the match did not take place until the 21st, consequently there were not as many entries as there otherwise would have been. It came off on the farm of Mr. Taylor, Dromore. There were 9 entries, and the following are the lucky ones:—Men's Class.—1st ... Murdoch, 2nd Andrew Waddell, 3rd Donald McFayden, 4th William ..., 5th William Hastie. Boy's Class.—1st James Murdoch, 2nd John McArthur, 3rd Thomas Spence, 4th James Snell. The Judges, ploughmen and a number of the spectators, were handsomely entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Taylor at the close of the match.

SIR Walter Raleigh, we believe, was the first to introduce tobacco in England. For some time after his return from America, he always took his smoke in his own room with the door locked. On one occasion he forgot to do so, and his valet entering the room, seeing a dense cloud of smoke, round his master's head naturally thought he was on fire, and seizing a pitcher of water douced it over him. We came near doing the same thing this morning. Seeing a heavy smoke just in front of our sanctum, we rushed out to see where the fire was, taking a pail of water with us to assist in quenching it. Upon arriving at the door we found it was only a friend of ours enjoying his morning smoke.

THE Shelburne Free Press says that a man has been making not a few dupes in that neighborhood, by getting them to act as agents for a tin force pump. The mode adopted to entrap the victim, is to induce him to sign an agreement to take one or more cases, each containing 24 pumps, at $30 per case, each. The retail price of the pumps is placed at $2, leaving a profit to the agent of $18 on each case, providing he succeeded in disposing of them. Each victim was led to believe he was the only agent for the locality; but they were not long left in doubt on that point. No sooner had the experienced agent roped in a sufficient number than he departed, and his place was taken by two new men, who proceeded to collect from the victims, the local agents, who were pretty numerous. These collectors do not appear to have had much difficulty in doing so, as it was said that they secured about $190 in one day, and altogether have taken between $700 and $800 out of the neighborhood. The article we believe is of little practical value, and is likely to remain a "dead duck," on the hands of the local agents.

RATHER THIN.—A load of barley was offered for sale on the O. S. Market last week, and the Tribune relates the following in connection therewith. The owner of the barley was offered 59c per bushel for it, being 5c above the ruling price, on account of the grain being above the average quality.—When he was about receiving his pay for it, he asked the buyer if it was to be used for the manufacture of liquor. He was informed that such was the intention. He refused to sell, having conscientious scruples against puting his grain to any such use, as he was a strict Temperance man. The buyer then informed him that he would purchase it for milling purposes, but that he could only give him 45c per bushel. "All right," said the farmer, and sold it accordingly, thereby loosing $5.60 on his load of barley. Tell us another funny one.

AN agricltural paper reaching its readers every week, has long been requred, and we have it now in the Canadian Farmer, the only Weekly Agricultural paper published in the Dominion, which is to hand. It contains an unusual amount of excellent reading matter of interest to the agriculturist, besides a goodly proportion of general items and literary extracts of a high order. It contains handsome illustrations of various Agricultural, Hoticultural, and Stock subjects, and altogether is a valuable Journal and should be on the table of every farmer. The publisher is offering special inducements to subscribers, will forward sample copies free to any one desiring them, and will sendt he paper for the remainder of this year and all of 1881 for $1.00, or clubed with the STANDARD both papers will be furnished to subscriber to the 1st January, 1882 for $2. It is published every Wednesday, in Welland, Ont., by N. B. Colcock.

COUNTY ITEMS.

A BRAKESMAN named John Philips met with a serious accident at the station here, on Monday night. It appears that he was engaged in coupling cars at the crossing on Main Street, and being very dark, he could not find the coupling pin. While looking for it he was knocked down by the train and fell into the cattle-guard, with his leg on the rail. The wheel gave it a terrible squeeze below the knee, breaking the small bone and lacerating the flesh. Dr. Norton attended the wounded man, and we are glad to know that, beyond being laid up for some time no serions results will follow.—Shelburne Free Press.

RAILWAY MATTERS.—The rails on the G. B. & W. Railway were laid last evening up to within a hundred feet of Mount Forest station building. A little further track-laying will be done this morning after which the force under Mr. Newman, the contractor, will go back over the line for the purpose of putting in a quantity of ties This work will occupy several days, and about the beginning of next week the laying of the rails will be continued from Mount Forest in the direction of Durham. By-laws in aid of the improvement of the T. G. & B. Railway have been introdaced and read a first time in Orangeville for $10,000 and in Howick for $12,500.—Mount Forest examiner.

KILLED BY A RAM.—On Saturday last Mrs. Richardson, the mother of Mr. John Richardson, who lived with her son and daughter, about three and a half miles from Durham, on the Hanover Road, in Bentinck, was left alone for a time, and on going out into a field near the house, the old lady was attacted by a vicious ram, and on attempting to rise was butted several times, but at last succeeded in reaching the house. When her son returned he found her on the bed, and suffering severely from internal injuries. He at once came into Durham for Dr. Kiernan, who found that her arms were badly lacerated and one of her ribs broken and the lungs affected. The suffer becoming worse on the following day, Dr. Kiernan took Dr. Kelly with him, both doctors doing the best they could for the sufferer, but she gradually sank and died on Tuesday morning. The deceased, who was 78 years of age, was quite active until the time of her fatal mishap.—Grey Review.

MARRIED

On the 3rd inst. at the residence of the bride's brothers, by the Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Mr. Miles Young, of Lakelet, County Huron, to Miss Eliza Haskett, sister of Wm. & Geo. M. Haskett, Hardware merchants of this place.

At Chatsworth, on the 18th inst., by the Rev. James Cameron, Michael Steele, Merchant, Williamsford, to Miss Jessie Mitchell, Chatsworth.

At Clifford, on the 6th inst., by the bride's father, Mr. E. H. Newman of Owen Sound, to Miss Eliza, youngest daughter of the Rev. J. Savage, M. D.

DIED.

In Markdale, on the 30th ult., Thomas Barrington, son of Thomas Mathews, Saddler, aged 3 years, 5 months.

In Markdale, on the 31st ult., Ethel Robinson, daughter of W. J. McFarland, aged 4 years, 9 months.

In Artemesia, on the 31st ult., Willie, son of Andrew Nesbit, aged 6 years.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKER,

MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 2-y

Public Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the new road open through lots 99, 100, and 101, on the 3rd concession W. T. & S. R., in the township of Glenelg, is not properly established.

The corporation of the township of Glenelg not having any title to the road through said lots, will not be responsible for any accident that may happen on said road.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk. FINLAY MACRAE, Reeve.

Township of Glenelg, Oct. 1..., 1880.

NOTICE.

GEORGE NIXON,

Toronto House,

DUNDALK,

Have on hand a full stock, including

TEAS, SUGARS, AND GENERAL GROCERIES.

Crockery, Glassware and Lamps

In great variety and at prices to suit the people.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

The largest and best Stock in Town, at Lowest Prices.

DRY GOODS!

My Stock in this department is now complete, and contains the newest lines in Plain and Fancy Dress Goods, Winceys, Shirtings, Flannels, Blankets Clouds, Scarfs, and a choice selection of Tweeds.

READY-MADE CLOTHING.—Overcoats—a large Stock. Suits, Shirts, Drawers, Overalls, &c.

HATS, CAPS AND FURS.—A large assortment of A 1 Goods. Also everything else to be found in a First-Class General Store.

The above Goods have all been purchased in the best Markets, and will be sold at BOTTOM PRICES for CASH or PRODUCE.

Dundalk, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-4i

"Time and Tide Wait FOR NO MAN."

DON'T YOU WAIT!

They are selling fast, those justly celebrated Watches. You want one. Will give you special quotations for cash and show you a Large Stock to select from. Am showing some beautiful things in

SILVERWARE!

Being suitable for Wedding presents, &c. Some extra bargains in Parlor and Bedroom Clocks!

Large Weight Clocks at $3.50.

Diamond & Wedding Rings!

Very low. Also a comple stock of Gold Chains, Sets, Lockets, Necklets, Pins, Chains, &c., &c., all at the very lowest net cash prices. When in Flesherton give me a call.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

W. F. DOLL, Watchmaker, &c.,

6 FLESHERTON AND DUNDALK,

MARKDALE.

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

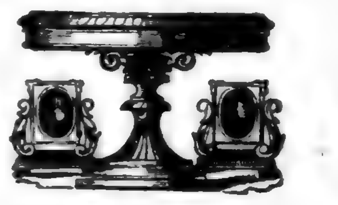
Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queer Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!



GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

Legacies!

Pensions!

Bounties!

Parties having any of the above claims to investigate will please communicate with me at once.

A. C. HUNTER, Claim Agent,

Dundalk P. O., County Grey.

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres

FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood, (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

STOVES.

STOVES.  STOVES.

Haskett Bros.

BOTTOM PRICE FOUND

AT LAST.

Great Reduction to Cash Purchasers.

THINK OF OUR PRICES.

A No. 9 elevated Oven Cook Stove, furnished complete, $18.

Same, with Low Oven, $17.

5 BOX STOVE, $4

All other sizes Equally Low

These Stoves are from the best and largest manufacturers in the Dominion—have all the latest improvements, with illuminated fronts and silver-plated trimmings, and are beyond doubt the best Stoves in the Market.

HARDWARE.

A large stock of axes, cross cut saws, building and Shelf Hardware, Cutlery, Paints, Oils, Varnishes, Brushes, &c. at low prices.

TINWARE.

Coal Oil, Lamps &c., Stock large and prices as low as any in the trade.

HASKETT Bros.,

Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Meat for All

AT

W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill street, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continuance of your support.

W. B. SARJENT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880. 1

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery need or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted, and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

The NOBBIEST CLOTHING!

In the County at

McFARLAND'S.

See his $5.00 Overcoats.
See his $10 Ulsters.
See his $12 Suit.
See his $16 dress suit.
500 pairs of Boots

To choose from—Men, Women and Children's. Get your AXES at McFARLAND'S. Those $2.50 MANTLES selling fast. New DRESS GOODS at McFarland's. New FLANNELS at McFarland's. New SHAWLS at McFarland's. New BONNETS and HATS at McFarland's. New TWEEDS at McFarland's. New CARPETS at McFarland's. New Fringes, Buttons, Silks, Laces, Flowers and Feathers. Prices never were lower or value better. A comparison solicited.

W. J. McFARLAND,

IMPORTER. Markdale.

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Water-proof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse!

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce!

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,

Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880. 1

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS!

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufecture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sel cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,

LOCK BOX 73,

8 Uxbridge, Ont.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

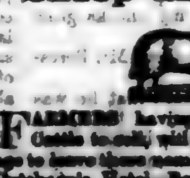
made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, inasmuch as is consistent with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mill.

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & ... RUTLEDGE.

Sept. ..., 1880. 1-y

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER

Mill St., Markdale, next door to Expositor Office.

☞ Meat delivered to any part of the town.

Sept. 17, 1880.

Autumn Sports.

The boy stood on the chestnut tree,
  Whence all but him had hopped ;
The burs lay thickly on the lea,
  Where they had lately dropped.

The honest yeoman came that way ;
  The boy—oh, where was he ?
In horizontal pose he lay
  Across the farmer's knee.

Hark ! How the blows and shrieks resound
  In tuneful resonance ;
Oh, how the baton plays around
  The basement of his pants !

"I prithee hold thy cruel hand,"
  The youth in anguish cried.
"Not till I have thy jacket tanned,"
  The husbandman replied.

He beat the thieving youth full sore,
  And smiled in horrid glee.
"I think," he quoth, "thou nevermore
  Wilt rob my chestnut tree."

Then merrily the farmer said :
  "I'll gather these myself."
The boy ? He eats his daily bread
  From-off the pantry-shelf ?

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

"Deborah, I was not thinking of you. My dear, you will be silent as the grave ?"

"Yes."

He is still very calm. The clock in the hall strikes harsh and loud. He whispers covertly—I am chill, and Dale's face is pale—

"Mr. Brenton !"

* * * * *

Sir Martin Napine—the title is his—is evidently hopeful concerning his trial. The days come and go. Will does not vary his report ; Sir Martin is keen-witted, sagacious, untroubled. His only anxiety is unconnected with his peril—Judith. Skilled detectives are employed in tracing her, yet they have utterly failed. I mourn for her ; but even my regret is divided. I am concerned for her father. Will he be cleared of suspicion or not ? Waking and sleeping, I think of the man whose life is in jeopardy, who, at the bar of justice, must stand accused of his father's murder. The assizes are near. We shall not have much longer to wait ere our suspense ends. I pray the certainty may be joyful. The newspapers are full of the coming trial. Does Judith pursue them ? Surely not, or she would hasten to us ; and yet that she can avoid hearing of Martin Napine seems absurd. His name is on every one's tongue. Will will not tell us what form the defence will take, nor who Sir Martin's witnesses are to be ? We hear all manner of rumours ; but of facts we are thoroughly ignorant.

The expected day dawns eventually. Will and Dale start betimes for Dumton. Letty and I beseech them to return early. They promise readily, but surely without reflection !

Six o'clock—seven, eight, comes and passes. We are excited. We put on our shawls and go out, eager to catch the first sounds of approaching footsteps. I leap like a startled hare. The ring of steps and the echo of voices reach us ! I cannot restrain myself, and I run up the road. Dale sees me and takes me under his protection.

"Deborah," he cries—the moon is shining brightly—"how white you are !"

I look at him, then at Will, and I know Martin Napine is safe ! We grope our way into the dining-room. Letty puts the question my lips refuse to frame.

"Is Sir Martin free ?"

"Yes," Will replies shortly. I gaze at him. There is thankfulness, but little gladness in his tone. Dale interrupts.

"Mrs. Ord, we will have some refreshment, if you please, ere we tell you all that has occurred."

Letty supplies them with food, and rings for coffee when their knives and forks cease to be plied energetically. I wonder, as they drink, when they will appease our thirst. Dale's arm draws me to his side as Will begins

"We have said nothing to you of Sir Martin's intended defence, being afraid to buoy you up with hopes that might be baseless. But, as Deborah is aware, the proof of his innocence mainly hinged on our proving some one else guilty ; that some one was Mr. Brenton. Twenty years ago he swore, at the inquest held on Sir Percival's body, that the last time he saw the deceased Baronet alive was about eight o'clock on the morning of his death. To Silas Thornton he subsequently contradicted this statement. He alleged, in the heat of passion doubtless, that Sir Percival had told him his son had committed bigamy, and that he was likely to be prosecuted for marrying Miss Ellersile, his first wife being alive. Very essential was it that we should prove that he had lied. If we could convict him of perjury our case would look more hopeful. To-day, on being put into the witness-box, Mr. Brenton denied having gained his information from Sir Percival, and asserted that Lady Napine had told him. Silas Thornton was examined ; and, though his evidence was very reluctantly given—had indeed almost to be extorted from him—he was obliged to admit that he had understood that Sir Percival was Mr. Brenton's informant. Mrs. Santon, Judith's governess, was called. She averred that Lady Napine had confidentially communicated to her the disgrace connected with her grand-daughter's birth, and that she had plainly said that Mr. Brenton had broken the unfortunate tidings to her. But her ladyship evidently thought that her husband had known his son's secret, prior to the day of his death, and had not entertained an idea that it was to impart these baleful tidings that Martin Napine came that fatal morning to Napine. The counsel for the prosecution made much of this admission, and hinted we were conspiring at another's expense to save Sir Martin. But even our opponents were silenced when we played our last card. Martin Napine, searching for a cause for Brenton's guilt, deemed it likely that he had embezzled some of Sir Percival's money, and that, as his defalcations could be no longer hidden, the sight of the canvas bag of gold tempted him ; and, in order that he might secure it, Sir Percival's death-blow was aimed. Feasible reasoning was this for us to build upon. Diving into the obscurity of the past, we learned that, with the hard cash Sir Percival had drawn from the bank, he had drawn a two-hundred-pound note. That note was stolen with the gold, and has ever since been missing. The bank had the number, and to-day the note was identified ; for it has been found.

"Found !" I echo.

"Yes ; found in an old and disused safe belonging to Mr. Brenton. The police had a warrant granted them to search the house, and they found the note. It has lain perdu for twenty years ; but it has saved Sir Percival's son from a shameful death ! As soon as the police evidence was heard, and Mr. Maul, the manager of the bank, had sworn to the note being the one issued to Sir Percival, the aspect of affairs changed. When the Judge rose, Sir Martin was acquitted, and Mr. Brenton charged with murder."

I feel for Dale's hand. It is a horrible tale, and yet I am thanking Heaven for Judith's father.

"You will see Sir Martin to-morrow," Will concludes softly. "Try to forget this till then. Letty, give us some music."

Letty goes to the piano. As the sweet liquid notes flow from the instrument my spirit is tranquillised.

* * * * *

The next morning we talk little of Mr. Brenton, shrinking from alluding to the man for whom there can be no possible hope. A rambling walk in the fresh air diverts my thoughts. When Dale and I re-enter the house, Sir Martin Napine is there. Gently he draws me to him and kisses me.

"For my daughters," he whispers, and something impels me to return his caress. Dale shakes hands with him fervently. Letty has been crying. I am not surprised. There is that in Sir Martin's face which tells of bitter shame and anguish. I try to say how rejoiced I am ; but, tongue-tied, I sit down by Letty. Dale asks—

"Does Brenton stand a chance ?"

Sir Martin looks at Letty and me and hesitates. We shudder.

"He will not suffer the penalty of his crime at the hangman's hands," Sir Martin says. And, as Dale stares wonderingly, he adds, "He is dead."

"Dead ?" Dale repeats.

"Yes ; it is an awful tragedy. He was found dead in the cell this morning."

"Then we shall never know——"

"He has left a full confession—a paper for me."

"But, did he die——"

"Hush ; he is dead ! He has escaped the earthly tribunal ; but he cannot escape the higher one."

"He was guilty ?"

"Ay ; it is marvellous that he was never suspected all these years ! But you had made up your minds that I was the offender, and you troubled not to seek traces of guilt in other directions. As I imagined, Brenton had used my father's money for speculative purposes and lost it. From time to time he delayed rendering his accounts ; but at length Sir Percival fixed a day when he would go over the books with him. That day was the one I visited Napine. Almost as I left, he arrived. Sir Percival, in his agitation, disclosed my secret ; then, vexed with himself, he turned hastily to business, chagrined that he had spoken unwisely. He asked Brenton if he had paid the money he held into the bank. Brenton's reply was evasive. My father, who was naturally perturbed, lost his temper.

"'Have you the money ?' he cried. 'Upon my word you act queerly ! Have you it or not ?'

"Brenton, who had in his nervousness picked up my father's heavily-mounted whip, clutched it tightly, but did not reply. Sir Percival, indignant and enraged, went on.

"'If you have misappropriated it, you shall suffer. If you have abused my trust, don't think to find me weakly merciful. I will punish——'

"His threat was never finished. Brenton, beside himself, struck him with force. The blow was fatal. My father fell, with a groan, to the floor. Believing him insensible, and, deeming his only chance of safety was flight, Brenton looked round. On the table was the canvas bag, familiar enough to him. Snatching it, he went to the window stealthily. No one was about, and he dropped to the ground like a cat. Hastening home, he flung some clothes into a portmanteau, and called his servant, to tell her he should be away for a few days ; but she, open-mouthed with horror, blurted out news that altered his course of action. Sir Percival was dead—murdered and robbed by his own son ! A man flying by had just told her.

"Brenton was bold. He went out—went to Napine. He saw Sir Percival, dead—saw the stricken widow ; and did for her all the most compassionate friend could have done. If he hampered the police in their activity, he did so warily. He was sharp enough to perceive that the more time that was lost in following me, the better. Fate favoured him ; I was not overtaken. His reputation was untarnished. He remained in Lady Napine's services, winning golden opinions of all men. By some extraordinary mistake he did not destroy the note which has now proclaimed him guilty. He thought he had burned it with the canvas bag. Robert Brenton is only one more whose sin has been found out through lack of carefulness. He destroyed all traces of his guilt but one. That one would have hanged him."

After a long silence Dale says—

"Silas Thornton will have to give up Napine."

"Yes ;" Sir Martin replies ; "I am its lawful owner. I shall not reside there until I bring home my daughter. I had hoped she would have been with me ere this. I go to London to-night in search of her."

"Judith will be glad. She will find a father, you a daughter."

"Yes"—Sir Martin's voice is mellifluous—"my dear Cicely's child will welcome me. Mr. Carey, may I trouble you with a little private conversation ?"

Will rises. Sir Martin bids Letty farewell, takes me in his arms, and blesses me. I beg him to bring Judith to us quickly. He promises, little guessing when he will fulfil his word. Presently the door closes, and Will returns. As we stand together the bells ring out a gay clamorous peal.

"For Sir Martin," Will explains. "A greeting to Napine."

My thoughts fly off at a tangent. I think of the unhappy man whose confession has reinstated Sir Martin in the eyes of the public—think of him uncared for, dead !

Years after, Dale tells me that he died a suicide's death ; but this I do not know now.

* * * * *

I am resting on the sofa, and mamma is on a lounge near me. Olive, looking so well and bonnie, is cutting the leaves of a new book, and Mr. Ord is nodding comfortably.

Eighteen months and more have gone. I am a spinster no longer. I am Dale Ord's wife. We live at Ord Court, and are perfectly, blissfully happy. Mr. and Mrs. Ord have made a genuine daughter of me ; they care for me as though I were indeed their own child. Very sincerely should I grieve if the once-talked-of arrangement were carried out, and Mr. and Mrs. Ord left Ord Court. It is not the first time by many that I have been down-stairs since my baby was born ; but my dear ones will not cease to love and caress me, and I am not disinclined to be petted and tended as though I were somewhat of an invalid. Mamma and Olive are paying me a visit. Norah is married. Our old maid, as we irreverently termed her, only came back from la belle France to return to it en permanence. She has married a Frenchman, one of the old nobility. We have lost her ; but, as she is content, we cannot be otherwise. Mamma misses her much ; but, believing that woman's life is incomplete if spent in single blessedness, she accepts her unwonted care rejoicingly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR.

By the Author of "A Strange Friendship," &c.

I often wandered by the brink of the creek that crossed a part of our garden, and looking down into the clear water, I fancied I could see that fair ringlet tossing on the pebbles beneath.

"A tress o' golden hair,
O' drowned maiden's hair. . .
Above the nets at sea."

Kingsley's pretty song was always in my mind.

I could not have spoken of these fancies of mine to any one ; they were however, rarely absent from my thoughts ; and I think that constant brooding over them would have been very injurious to me, had not something happened about this time which turned my thoughts into a different direction.

CHAPTER III.

Mr. Beresford did not purchase the estate in our neighbourhood which he had made inquiries about. He had completely disappeared from my horizon, and I knew not what had become of him.

The property in question was bought by a Mr. Vane, who was a stranger to both my father and myself.

One sultry evening I was seated in the verandah, with Mrs. Holland sewing near me, by way of a companion in my loneliness. I was very lonely now that Rose was gone. Mrs. Holland and I were much attached to one another, and I liked to have her with me. She had lived with us ever since Rose was a baby, and was quite one of the family, and we could speak to her confidentially of all that happened.

I had been talking to her about Herbert Tempest. He had quite given up coming to see us now ; he had accepted Rose's loss so quietly as to arouse my disgust and indignation.

"Poor girl !" he had said, in his placid way. "I was certainly very fond of her once."

I thought of Mrs. Browning's lines—

"Say never 'I loved once.'
They never loved
Who say that they , loved once.'"

And then those lines of Southey's occurred to me—

"They sin who tell us love can die ;
Its holy flame for ever burneth ;
From Heaven it came, to Heaven returneth ;
Too oft on earth a troublous guest,
At times received, at times oppressed ;
It here is tried and purified,
In Heaven it hath its perfect rest ;
It cometh here with grief and care,
But the harvest-time of love is there."

Already rumours had reached me that Herbert was paying attention to the reigning beauty in the chief town of our province—the girl who had succeeded to the position poor Rose had occupied only a month or two before.

"He never really loved her," I said scornfully to Mrs. Holland. "If he had he could not have forgotten her so soon."

"He is not the sort of gentleman to love very warmly," she replied calmly, threading her needle as she spoke. "I have seen some who were of a different make."

"Have you really, Carrie dear ?" I asked. Her name was Caroline, and we had always called her "Carrie" in the nursery. "Oh do tell me the names of some of them !" I added, half laughing.

She laughed too, hesitated, and glanced at me, and then she said—

I could not tell why, perhaps it was her look, but I suddenly felt my cheeks grow hot.

I really knew very little about Mr. Beresford.

From my father I had heard that he was one of a very wealthy family at home, but only a younger son, and that he had come out to New Zealand, with a younger son's portion, to make as much more of it as fortune would allow him.

"What is that Carrie," I said hastily, in order to turn the course of the conversation—"that dark speck far away in the distance ?"

She looked in the direction to which I pointed. From where we were seated in the verandah we could see over a wide extent of country. The day had been oppressively hot, but a faint breeze had sprung up as the evening drew on. The sun was just setting ; his declining rays had clothed the mountains in raiment of dazzling gold, and lighted up portions of the plain beneath.

"That dark speck ?" said Mrs. Holland, after a moment's observation of it. "I think it is a man on horseback."

"And he is coming here," I rejoined, after watching him for a moment or two.

"Yes ; he certainly is," she assented.

Slowly, steadily, a dark spot between myself and the sunlight, the man came on. He did not seem to be in haste ; he passed gradually and slowly from light to shadow, then to light again ; and we saw him at last enter the private road to the house.

In due time he appeared before Mrs. Holland and myself, as we sat in the verandah. He dismounted at once and took off his hat to me. I saw before me a tall dark man, with a pale face and a black moustache, and remarkably bright black eyes.

"I have called," he said, "to see Mr. Pelham. Have I the pleasure of addressing Miss Catherine Pelham ?"

His voice and manner were those of a gentleman. I bowed without speaking in reply to his question, and he went on—

"My name is Cyril Vane."

"Then you are our new neighbour," I said. "I believe my father is at home. Will you walk in ?"

He fastened his horse to the verandah and followed me into the house. I led him into the drawing-room and sent Mrs. Holland to tell my father he was wanted.

Meanwhile I addressed a few civil commonplace remarks to Mr. Vane ; but I thought his manner somewhat forward and presuming, and he did not impress me favourably ; so that, when my father at last appeared, I was glad to be set at liberty, and left them alone together.

Mr. Vane remained a long time talking to my father. When I returned to the drawing-room I found that he had been invited to remain the night, and had accepted the invitation. He had bought the property adjoining my father's, which Mr. Beresford had once inquired about ; and he was therefore now our nearest neighbour.

I did not feel attracted by him, and I kept aloof from that side of the room where he was seated. Presently I found that he had crossed over, and had taken a chair quite near to me.

It was growing dusk, and I imagine that he must have been guided by the glimmer of my white dress in the gathering darkness for see me distinctly he could not.

I was of course wearing deep mourning for my sister, but on this hot oppressive evening I had replaced my heavy black silk by a white muslin gown, relieved here and there with black ribbons.

"Papa," I called out, "may I light the lamp ? I cannot see anything."

In truth I did not like sitting in the gloaming so near to a man whose appearance I did not fancy, and, when my father gave the required permission, I rose at once, lighted the lamp, and placed it on the table.

Mr. Vane had risen when I did so, and had remained standing. In the centre of the mantlepiece close to him was a large beautiful photograph of Rose, framed in purple velvet.

She had been photographed and sketched so often that we had a likeness or two of her in nearly every room in the house. My father and I had been so proud of our beautiful Rose ; she was our "white rose of all the world."

In the picture I am speaking of she was seated, arranging a basket of flowers and ferns. There were forget-me-nots in her hair exactly as she wore them when she died. Over her shoulder fell a long curl, just like the one which I was determined never to give up seeking for until I found it again, and found with it the key to the mystery of her death. Mr. Vane bent to examine the photograph.

"Who is that lady ?" he inquired.

"My sister," I answered shortly. I thought it a matter of course that he must be aware of her death, for it was still the talk of our neighbourhood.

He made no reply ; he was still examining the portrait, and something in his look caused me to fancy that he did not admire it.

"You cannot judge of what she was from that likeness," I said. "You never saw her, or you would know that she was very handsome."

"You are mistaken," he replied coolly. "I have seen her." Then he added in a moment, as if in explanation of his words, "I met her several times while she was staying in town, and I heard her beauty much spoken of."

"Then you must have known that it was worth talking about," I remarked, slightly irritated at something in his manner which annoyed me, I did not know why.

"I thought her over-praised," he answered, and he cast what I thought a black look at the photograph.

I felt really indignant ; for this disparagement of Rose to her sister, now that she was gone from us, seemed to me in very bad taste.

"De mortuis nil nisi bonum," I said softly and sadly.

There was a large mirror just opposite to us ; I could see Cyril Vane's face from where I stood, and I could not help looking at it. Suddenly he turned from where I stood, and encountered my eyes fixed on him in the glass. What was written in the look that he gave me ? Anger, hatred, defiance, and—was it only my fancy or not ?—I thought too that there mingled and blended with it all a touch of fear.

However it might be, he moved away from me at once, and we never exchanged another word during the remainder of the evening.

After this I thought that Mr. Vane and I had better keep aloof from one another for the future ; we seemed to have had nearly enough of each other's society.

I never doubted for a moment that the antipathy I felt towards him must be mutual, and that he secretly disliked me as much as I did him. But I was entirely mistaken.

The next morning he approached me as I sat sewing dilligently after breakfast, with a humble and apologetic expression on his dark face and in his fierce black eyes.

"You are angry with me, Miss Cathie," he said softly.

"Angry !" I repeated. "Oh dear no ! Why should I be ?"

"Because," he said, "I have had the good taste to think Miss Rose's sister handsomer than she was herself."

This was a hateful compliment to me, made as it was at the expense of my lost sister, and I was certainly very angry, but I struggled hard not to show it.

"When you know me better, you will know that compliments are thrown away upon me," I said ; "and then you will spare yourself the trouble of trying to pay them." And I tried to laugh, but I failed in the attempt.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Irish Troubles.

According to the English and Irish journals the incendiary utterances of the orators and agitators of the Land league are exciting no little apprehension and uneasiness in the public mind. The government are believed to have under consideration the advisability of prohibiting these gatherings, but so far nothing has been done beyond watching the assemblies and taking notes of the speeches. The resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Catholic bishops and clergymen of Cloyne, to which reference is made in the preceding dispatches are : First, that the rents ought to be fixed by arbitration or valuation, to prevent rack-renting ; second, that no one should be disturbed from his holding so long as he paid that fair rent ; third, that there ought to be free sale in all cases, whether rent was paid or not ; fourth, that there should be permission for laborers' cottages ; fifth, that there ought to be reclamation on waste lands, as the first step in peasant proprietorship ; sixth, that although they disapproved of the constitution of the land commission, still they thought the more intelligent of the farmers ought to give evidence before it and thus make their grievances known ; seventh, all the priests pledged themselves to carry out these resolutions, and to co-operate with any respectable organization, Land league or other, to the extent of these resolutions. In addition they advise the farmers who may have useful evidence to give to tender it to the land commission, although dissatisfied with the constitution of the commission, being convinced of the sincere desire of the present government to regulate on just and equitable principles the relation between landlord and tenant in Ireland. As a necessary preliminary to the practical settlement of the land question, they advise the entire abolition of the law of primogeniture and the other legal obstacles to the free transfer of land. The declaration of the priests has been favourably commented upon by The Freeman's Journal, which considers the Cloyne platform the safest and soundest yet erected. The declaration, continues The Journal, is evidently the work of men who are of the people and with the people.—The London Echo.

"Orange Sauce" ; or, the Pig's Plea.

A GHOST STORY.

[NOTE.—Orange Sauce is composed of the grated rind of bitter oranges, horse-radish, mustard, cayenne pepper, &c. It is as important an adjunct to ham as brown bread and butter to whitebait, or apple sauce to sucking-pig, and brings out in a marvellous manner certain delicate aromas, certain hidden subtleties of flavour, which, without its aid, are almost imperceptible to an ordinary palate.

The story told in the following verses is based on fact, or rather on a dream, in which various facts bearing on the subject were, by the phantastic spell of dyspepsia, strangely inverted and blended.]

I.

The lamps are lit in the banquet hall,
  And glorious scene they light ;
A table, fair with fruit and flowers,
  With plate and crystal bright ;
Aglow with wealth of colour,
  With claret's ruby beam,
With the moonlight haze of Rhine wine,
  And sherry's golden gleam.

II.

While here and there, in contrast,
  Stand flasks of sober hue,
The bottled bliss of Burgundy—
  The yellow seal—the blue ;
And high above their fellows—
  Of all grapes' blood the flower—
The regal magnums of champagne,
  Enthroned on ice-pails, tower.

III.

But who could tell the glories,
  Of all the viands there,
From every land collected,
  From earth and sea and air,
From icy arctic deserts,
  From tropical Brazils,
From shores of the misty Baltic,
  From bonny Scotland's hills ;

IV.

From the blue Alsatian mountains,
  Came the geese's liver "gras,"
And the Russian sturgeon had yielded
  Its eggs, for the caviare ;
By the chine of a British oxen,
  Stood a savoury reindeer tongue,
Which once had licked the snowy moss,
  Far Lapland's plains among.

V.

And there were those ducks, so luscious,
  Known as the "canvas backed,"
Which once on distant Texas' lakes,
  A merry brood, had quacked ;
And salmon, which in Norway
  The rapids high had leapt,
With silver trout from Scottish pools,
  There close together slept.

VI.

And there was a Southdown "gigot,"
  Just lightly touched with "l'ail,"
And fair in garb of vestal white,
  "Supreme de volaille ;"
And larks—the skylark's note is sweet,
  As he soars through the morning air ;
But sweeter far is his tuneful breast,
  Cooked "en aspic" with care.

VII.

And there, ah there, majestic,
  One dish stood in its pride,
The banquet's noblest trophy,
  All others paled beside ;
'Twas neither fish nor pastry,
  Nor beef, nor veal, nor lamb :
In massive grandeur there it lay,
  A huge Westphalian Ham !

VIII.

Vast was it, I ween, and shapely,
  A giant of its kind ;
You might search the wide world over
  Ere you its peer could find.
And oh ! the subtle fragrance,
  That from its core arose,
Sweeter than when the warm south wind
  O'er beds of violets blows.

IX.

But why, with all this splendour
  Spread out before his eyes,
Stands the host, absorbed in moody thought,
  Heaving resounding sighs ?
And why, whene'er he glances
  Towards that glorious Ham,
Does he murmur a monosyllable,
  Which I grieve to say is "Dam !" ?
And why does he groan and mutter,
  In accents of remorse,
Whene'er at the clock he gazes ;
  "The Sauce—the Orange Sauce !" ?

The reason is this : it is ten minutes to twelve. At twelve the guests invited to the banquet are expected to arrive, and as yet the host has not received the recipe for Orange Sauce, a preparation which will enhance a hundredfold the merits of the Great Ham, the piece de resistance of his banquet. At last he rings for the cook, and asks him what is to be done. "As a man of feeling and conscience, as an epicure, there is but one course open to you," said the cook : "leave the Ham for some other day ; the sacrifice is great, I admit, but such a Ham must not, and cannot be eaten except with Orange Sauce." "Impossible !" replied the host, "my reputation as an Amphitryon depends on the success of this feast, and the crowning triumph of the banquet is, as you know, that very Ham, which you would counsel me to put aside. No, it must not be !" The cook, aghast at this decision, threw himself on his knees, and implored his master not to commit the crime he intended, which he averred ran little short of sacrilege, and which was an act of vandalism doubly reprehensible in so distinguished a gastronome.

But the host was deaf to the expostulations of his faithful servant, and at last, losing his temper, swore a terrible oath, and exclaimed that nothing in heaven or earth should stop him from eating the Ham that night with or without the "Orange Sauce." With tears in his eyes, and dumb with horror, the cook left the room, and went to the kitchen, where he remained in fervent prayer, hoping that the expected recipe might yet arrive in time to avert the impending catastrophe. Meanwhile :

X.

The cook had hardly left the room,
  When o'er the host there fell,
A feeling of mysterious awe,
  Some supernatural spell.

XI.

And o'er him crept, he knew not how,
  A shiver of terror and dread ;
As with lead oppressed, was his choking breast,
  And his hair stood up on his head.

XII.

A something, a creeping, a horrible thing,
  Seemed to palsy every limb,
And his blood so bold, ran icily cold,
  And his brain began to swim.

XIII.

He tried to fly, but he could not fly,
  To the spot were glued his feet,
And he tried to shriek, but he could not shriek,
  His heart ceased almost to beat.

XIV.

And there in front of him, loomed the thing,
  Dark, shadowy, mystic, big ;
A weird, blue light around it played :
  'Twas a giant, spectral Pig !

XV.

It spoke, and its voice had a ghastly sound,
  A hollow, mournful tone,
As when the wind, round the house at night,
  Makes a plaintive, sobbing moan.

XVI.

"Oh, I am the Ghost of the Pig," it said,
  "Whose Ham on yonder board
Stands worthy of the noblest m——
  A morsel for a lord.
That Ham—my Ham ! No other
  Was e'er so fair and sleek,
With its flesh of pink and pearly white,
  Like your beauties' damask cheek.
That Ham that you would venture
  (And here its voice grew hoarse),
To eat, on this thrice-cursed night,
  Without the Orange Sauce !

XVII.

"But from the realms of Pig-land,
  I have hither come with speed,
To stop you from the doing
  Of such a heinous deed.
Then listen, foolish mortal,
  To the words I have to say,
And prepare, when I am ended,
  With your life for your crime to pay !

XVIII.

"In a forest of Westphalia,
  That land of noblest swine,
I first came into being,
  The eldest one of nine.

It was the merry spring-time,
  And earth and sky were gay,
Ah ! 'twere a glorious thing to live,
  If it were always May !

XIX.

"In the green Westphalian forest,
  Beneath the oak-tree shade,
A joyous band of sucklings,
  Our childish games we played ;
With capers and with scampers,
  We whiled those happy hours,
What merry grunts of laughter,
  What squeals of joy were ours !

XX.

"How we revelled in the pleasaunce,
  Of that gleeful forest-life,
In innocent oblivion
  Of the fatal butcher's knife.
How we wantoned in the sunshine,
  In the music of the trees,
As they sang in mighty chorus,
  To the anthems of the breeze.

XXI.

"Oh ! those greedy morning-feastings
  On the acorn, tender, sweet ;
And those lazy, dreamy baskings
  In the warm sun's mellow heat ;
Whilst noonday peace and silence,
  Reigned o'er the forest all,
Scarce broke by some far horn ringing,
  Or a blackbird's melodious call.

XXII.

"Out on the fools who fancy
  That pigs to nought aspire,
Save to stuff, and gorge, and guzzle,
  And to wallow in the mire.
Give them the leafy forest !
  Give them the meadows green !
The pure, free air of heaven.
  And see, if they're unclean !

XXIII.

"Of all my herd of kindred,
  The fairest one was I,
For none so sleek, and round of flank,
  And none so long of thigh.
In my promising proportions,
  My mother's heart rejoiced,
And oft would, gazing on me,
  Her dear old eyes grow moist.

XXIV.

"And, gently my snout caressing,
  Old tales she would croon to me,
Of what my fathers once had been,
  What I should try to be.
Bidding me solemnly promise,
  To make my life's chief aim,
To live that I might worthy die,
  Of the old Westphalian fame.

XXV.

"And thus lived I, and thus grew I,
  Until the hour came nigh,
When, in the fulness of my prime,
  They led me forth to die.
Around me pressed my kindred,
  Bitter the tears they shed,
But I walked proudly smiling,
  Erect and firm my head.

XXVI.

"'You must not weep for me, brethren,'
  I said with cheerful voice,
'In the glory that awaits me,
  Rather should you rejoice.
I face my fate with smiling brow,
  Serene and calm, because
I die as my fat fathers died,
  Well worthy Orange Sauce.

XXVII.

"'And Pig who earns that honour,
  To the highest heaven goes,
To glades where, ever ripe and sweet,
  The tender acorn grows.
Where the ground an endless harvest
  Of perfumed truffles yields,
Ah, golden dream is the good Pig's life,
  In these elysian fields.

XXVIII.

"'And I too soon shall go there,
  And I shall taste those joys,
The food that never surfeits,
  The wash that never cloys.
Yes, to those fairy regions,
  My soul must go perforce,
For who would ever eat my Ham,
  Without the Orange Sauce !'

XXIX.

"And thus I died, my Ham stands there ;
  Look on it and declare,
Hast seen a flank more noble,
  Hast seen a Ham more fair ?
Yet you would bring dishonour
  On me, without remorse,
And eat it, sacrilegious wretch !
  Without the Orange Sauce !"

XXX.

And here the spectre bent its head,
  Its eyes like red coals grew,
And its white tusks fiercely baring,
  Full at the host it flew.
Another moment in his gore,
  He would have lain, a corse,
And others might have ate that Ham,
  And perhaps, with Orange Sauce.

XXXI.

But at that moment, at the door
  There came a sudden tap,
And the spectre vanished in thin air,
  With a noise like thunder-clap.

XXXII.

Whilst pale and trembling stood the host,
  As he drew a long, long breath,
And thanked his stars for his near escape
  From the jaws of an awful death.

XXXIII.

At the opened door a servant stood,
  A letter in his hand ;
Quick seized the host the envelope,
  Quick its contents he scanned,
And then he shouted "Victory !"
  And a long, loud laugh laughed he,
For there in his hand he held it,
  The sore-missed recipe.

* * * * *

XXXIV.

The guests arrived, a merry throng,
  And their eyes gleamed at the sight
Of that table, fair with fruit and flowers,
  With plate and crystal bright.
And soon arose a clatter,
  Of plates and knives and forks,
Mingled with merry laughter,
  And bursting of many corks.

XXXV.

Till, making a sign of silence,
  Solemn, up rose the host,
And told them the strange story
  Of the sauce and the warning ghost.
And the Ham was carved, and all present
  Partook of its flesh, of course,
'Midst cries of approbation,
  With the glorious Orange Sauce !
And draining many a bumper,
  Each guest there loudly swore,
Such perfect Ham down mortal throat
  Had never passed before.

MORAL.

When you eat a fine Ham, eat it with Orange Sauce, and thus, while gratifying your own palates, you will be performing a grateful act of justice to the spirit of the animal, who, as would appear from the foregoing, is actuated in life by a nobler purpose than humanity usually gives him credit for.

J. BEERBOHM.

A Bright Bird.

A large and handsome whooping stork, says The Council Bluff's Nonpariel, can be seen daily strutting around the yard at the residence of Prof. Paige in this city. The elongated bird was purchased by the professor during a visit to Mexico some months since and has become quite tame. Among other food that the stork relishes is a nice fat mouse. Mrs Paige has a small wire trap in the house, and whenever a mouse happens to wander therein, he becomes a sweet morsel for his storkship. The other day Mrs. Paige noticed the bird standing near the barn watching intently at a small hole leading beneath the building. The stork remained in an attitude of watchfulness for nearly half an hour, and Mrs. Paige becoming curious, concluded to watch and see what followed. Finally she saw a mouse creep into sight from under the barn, and at the same instant the intelligent stork pounced down on the mouse and "took him in," killing it first and then eating it. After performing this intelligent feat, the stork resumed his vigilance at the mouse hole, and, after watching sharply for over an hour, seemed to grow weary of his work or got out of patience, and marching to the house, entered the kitchen, and picking up the mouse trap, from which he had so often been fed, he returned to the barn and set the trap down near the hole, evidently appreciating the use of the trap, and believing that it would catch a mouse for him. If anyone has got a brighter bird than that we would like to hear from it.

A Rattlesnake's Bite Cured.

THE HAZARDOUS EXPERIMENT AND EXTRAORDINARY RECOVERY OF AN ENGLISH SURGEON.

[From Land and Water.]

The following is an abstract of an account by Dr. Arthur Stradling, dated R. M. steamer Elbe, Santos, Aug. 4, of his extraordinary recovery from a snake bite, received while experimenting to discover a prophylactic against the venom of snakes :

The snake, a Crotalus horridus, which he received at Pernambuco from a friend, was a small one, not eighteen inches long, with only two joints on his rattle. About one o'clock in the morning, when all was quiet, he opened the box containing the snake and introduced his hand, but felt a horror and disgust of the reptile such as he never experienced of any snake before, and withdrew his hand without touching it. He supposed his "nerves" were out of order, for it was some time before he could make up his mind to proceed ; when he did so he put a thick leather glove on his left hand, and grasped the snake by the neck, intending to let it bite his right arm just above the wrist. The snake managed to wriggle through his fingers, and struck him with a back-handed flash like a whip below the gauntlet on the front of the left fore-arm, breaking off one of its fangs in doing so, and the piece was left sticking in the wound. Putting it back in the box, he picked out the bit of fang with a pair of forceps, and sat down quietly to await results. He had ligatures, ammonia, brandy, and nitric acid at hand in readiness. There were two punctures, a little more than half an inch apart, a trace of blood in one of them, no common teeth marks at all.

Nothing came of it, and he went on writing until 5 a.m. Then he noticed that the lymphatics higher up the arm were swollen and inflamed, and that there was a lump painful to the touch underneath, and almost at the same moment he became aware of light-headedness, and of a burning sensation traversing his whole frame. There seemed to great vascular and mental excitement, yet his temperature was down to 90° 4'. He applied nitric acid to the wound, and while considering what to take in the way of internal remedies the excitement was suddenly succeeded by a depression and drowsiness so irresistible that he had only time to reach his bunk, when he became unconscious. Dr. Wyman, a passenger on the Elbe, was called at 11 a.m. to see Dr. Stradling, and found him lying on his back on a bunk, legs stretched out, face and lips pale, expression dull ; eyes fixed and glassy, the lids remaining open or shut as they were placed ; pupils contracted. General surface of body warm and moist, but the feet and legs cold to above the knee. Temperature in axilla 99° 8'. Respiration about thirteen per minute ; shallow. At that time, and for about four hours afterward, there was very little movement of the ribs, there being paralysis of the intercostal muscles, the respiration was almost, if not entirely, abdominal. The breathing during the whole period was very irregular, both in frequency and depth ; occasionally stertorous. Heart sounds at apex and base normal and distinct at first ; pulse varying from 88 to 94, moderately full, but easily compressible, sometimes irregular in force, this irregularity being coincident with irregularity of breathing.

There was complete paralysis of the lower extremities. On the left forearm were two black punctures, surrounded by a dusky margin of inflammation ; the arm swollen, but very slightly. These punctures Dr. Wyman sucked, drawing a little blood from one of them, and applied strong nitric acid freely. He also put on a ligature tightly above the elbow, which gave rise to great swelling of the forearm and hand later on. He administered a drachm of sulphuric ether twice in about twenty minutes, and then half a drachm with the same quantity of compound spirit of ammonia every twenty minutes or half an hour, until 3 o'clock in the afternoon ; about six drachms of ether and an ounce of ammonia altogether being taken. There was no movement of the body whatever until 3 o'clock, when a well-defined tetanic spasm arched the body backward ; hiccough, lasting some minutes, occurred several times, and there was twitching about the muscles of the upper part of the chest and shoulders. There was no vomiting. The sufferer spoke occasionally, complaining of a painful sensation at the heart, and often repeating again and again words which had no meaning in them, several times expressing his belief that he should not recover. At 4 o'clock he was given beef tea, with egg and brandy alternately with the ether and ammonia. After three o'clock the spasmodic movements ceased to recur, and with the right hand he could grasp very feebly ; he gradually recovered power in the right arm, right leg, left leg and arm, in the order given. The ligature was then removed, and at 5 o'clock he was conscious, and all general symptoms had disappeared, except great exhaustion and want of power in the back, which was apparent when he was raised up. He became rather hysterical. An hour later he fell asleep, and slept well for twelve hours, except that he was roused every two hours to take nourishment. Dr. Stradling says that when he awoke he was in no pain, but as weak as a baby, and became a mere lay figure for the exhibition of chicken broth, jelly, smelling salts, strong drink, misplaced sympathy, arrowroot, and slippers.

HIGH WAYS AND BYE WAYS OF TORONTO.

(From The Truth.)

I was wonderfully pleased to notice that Grip had given TRUTH a kindly pat on the shoulder, and had warned it against all naughty ways, especially against all tendencies toward becoming a "society paper," whatever that may mean. What is that after all ? I have no more idea than a child unborn, and when I read that my own lucubrations squinted in that direction I did not know what to think, or how to explain matters. In my ignorance, I thought every newspaper more or less a society one. They all speak of the sayings and doings of men as individuals, or as they are appointed in companies ; of the tricks and sins that are more or less common ; of what men are planning, and how they are acting. In short, they give each day's history, or each week's, according to the particular idea they form of what is important, or the reverse. As to my

MOVING IN "SOCIETY,"

as that is sometimes understood, and trying to make capital out of mens' follies and womans' foibles.—Heaven help me, it is far far out of my line, I am a plain, plain man, with little or no faculty for such work, and with no encouragement from the editor of TRUTH to try my hand at it as a beginner. I leave that to Grip himself, and to the Telegram, and the World, all of which respected publications seem to me to have far more pleasure in that sort of work, than TRUTH has ever manifested in its short and yet encouraging career. Have I ever said a single word against the ladies of Toronto ? Have I ever once hinted at snobbery ? Have I mourned over the rudeness of our cookery, and the necessity there is for getting up a respectable restaurant at which a gentleman may get a decent meal ? Nothing of the kind.

I BELIEVE IN THE LADIES OF TORONTO ; in their beauty, in their graces, in their goodness, and their general culture. I bring no railing accusation against any one, and don't set myself up as a superior person, who can afford to look down on all my neighbours as rude and uncultivated, or to swear at all those who are not in my set, as upstarts and impostors. The fact is, in this country we are all very much on alevel. What is the use in affecting to be something superfine, and in trying to make oneself merry at the expense of decent neighbours and acquaintances, who may have their peculiarities, but are very worthy people after all ? I have no particular idea that I have a mission, and don't set myself to write down this man, or write up that woman. Did you think that I would make a direct set at or play Jeames, or something worse to the Lieut. Governor, in order to show my influence, and make manifest the power of the press ? If you did, you were mistaken, I can assure you. I busy myself with the ordinary works, and the ordinary workers of the city, and shall hope never to go out of my way to notice the "superfines," either in the matter of praise, or blame, except of course, when I cannot help it. It goes without saying, that I was at the meetings of and thought that these dark skinned brothers and sisters did their work remarkably well. One could not help noticing, however, that their finest pieces were least applauded, and that the funny and sensational, or what looked particularly in that direction, chiefly brought down the house. Yet why should that be thought strange ? The taste for the grotesque is very strong, and fun has been so associated with coloured minstrels, that the beautiful, the tender, and the pathetic, are scarcely expected in such a connection, and can scarcely be either appreciated or applauded when they actually appear. Yet let me do my fellow citizens the justice of saying that, in this instance, the admiration given to the most tender and attractive efforts of these wonderful singers was neither stinted nor indiscriminating. Of course, it will always be a minority that can see and feel such things, but the majority was a large one on both these occasions, and the enthusiasm and sympathy were both wide and deep.

CAPTAIN PRINCE,

THE JUBILEE SINGERS

It would never have done had I not gone to hear once more. He is ageing, and that pretty rapidly, yet he has still much of his old fire, and his power over an audience whether to move to temper or to tears, is not much less than in the days of his prime. Isn't it curious that there are so few lecturers who can draw "a paying" house in Toronto, and that of these few, almost all get used up in a year or two, so that it is of no use to bring them back, unless their inviters are prepared for a deficit of funds, and a discouragingly thin house ? Gough, and one or two more may be regarded as the only exceptions, and it speaks volumes for the old man eloquent, that even on the well-worn theme of Total Abstinence, he can always command a full attendance, and awaken any amount of enthusiasm among many who have little sympathy with his hatred for "grog." No man tells a better story than J. B., and none can accompany it better with appropriate histrionics. But that won't account for his continued popularity. He is not a buffoon, by any means, and though I don't believe in every thing he says, and may not approve of everything he has done, yet I like him immensely, and wish from my heart that his shadow may never grow less.

JOHN B. GOUGH

What is all this you have been saying and the Metropolitan ? I have been hearing about it wherever I went, for this week past. You really must be careful, or you'll get into trouble without me helping you in the matter at all. At the same time, were you very, very far from the mark ? I don't believe you were, but it is difficult to speak the truth even in love and admiration, without treading on some unpleasantly swelled toe. I should hope nobody will think of thrashing the truthful editor, or otherwise showing that he belongs to the church militant. Oh when I am about that matter, at any rate, I may mention that there are strange notions about the objects at which TRUTH aims, and the course which it pursues. Of all things in the world, I have heard people saying that it was a paper devoted to "freethinking" and all that was bad. You don't say ? If people would only read and judge for themselves they would soon have a more accurate, and a more favourable idea.

ABOUT DR. POTTS

It would be unpardonable for me to overlook last Saturday, and yet what can be said about it, but that it was a very hotly contested encounter, and that both sides claimed the victory. I am old fogey enough not to admire such rough play. Why should some of the combatants have looked as if they had actually come out of a battle royal with streaming blood, bruised limbs, and all the etc's of an earnest and hot-tempered fight ? Perhaps it makes the whole more sensational, and sends a keener thrill through the hearts of the spectators. But after all, it is rather savage like. I wonder if all this sort of work is necessary, in order to have lacrosse in its perfection ? If so, I would rather not have it at all, though it may seem rather slow, and unpatriotic to hint in this way, a word against Canadas national game.

THE LACROSSE MATCH

It would really seem that our police force are of no use.

BURGLARIES ARE THE ORDER OF THE DAY, or rather of the night, and no trace of the burglars can be had, except in the wreckage which they leave behind. It is all very well to say "keep dark and you'll hear all about it by and bye." But then when the goods are gone, and no return is ever made, and profits in this way disappear, the unfortunate losers may be excused, if they cry out somewhat, and begin to believe that the guardians of the night, should look a little more alive. It would be difficult to say how often one of the stores on Yonge street has been "gone through." I know of at least, half a dozen times, and there may have been a great many more. At one time a thousand dollars worth was taken ; at another six hundred ; and this last time a few days ago fully four hundred, and not a copper's worth even recovered, or the faintest hint ever given of how the "swag" had disappeared. Isn't that bad ? I should just say it was. The truth is, that the system of private watchmen is becoming more and more common, and our whole city will speedily be under a double system of police, and not particularly safe after all.

WHAT IS THE MATTER ?

Is it with me, or the weather ? or what ? I don't feel as if I could write with my usual—well—let me say, elegance and force. I went with such zeal and enthusiasm into the work at first, that, as I feared, I have exhausted myself and am fain to stop, lest your readers should think that I had turned already dull, and were fast hastening to be at once a proser and a bore.

I'll be all right by next week. A walk into the country, with fresh fields and pastures new, will soon set me up. In the meantime, I can only add that the weather has been changeable, and that continued excitement must have put me out of sorts. A good many of my acquaintances, I am glad to say, are quite as serious and as dull as

JACOB FAITHFUL.

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

A WOMAN frequently resists the love she feels, but cannot resist the love she inspires.

IT is not an easy task to so regulate your life that when you come to die you will have nothing to regret.

WITHOUT virtue there can be no true happiness ; but we want love joined with virtue to give us all the good which this world is capable of besto wing

A SOUR Christian is just like sour milk. Both were intended to be sweet, but something as turned them, and after being turned they both become worthless.

IF you leave the cork out of the bottle of perfume the perfume will all evaporate ; and if you are careless about your religion it will take itself off in the same way.

MEASURED by man's desires, he cannot live long enough ; measured by his good deeds, he has not lived long enough ; measured by his evil deeds, he has lived too long.

AS I grow older, I become more lenient to the sins of frail humanity. The man who loudly denounces another I always suspect. A right-thinking man knows too much of crime to denounce a fellow-creature unheard —GOETHE.

A FALSE friend resembles a shadow. When the sun shines and you have plenty of money, the shadow and the friend are both close to your heels ; but when it comes to be dark, where is the shadow ? and when your money is gone, and you want to borrow from the man who often borrowed from you, where is the friend ?

A Cæsarean Operation.

Twelve Philadelphia physicians lately assisted at the delivery of Mrs. William Buisnell, by cæsarean operation. The mother is a dwarf, thirty-two years old, and forty-two inches high. Owing to a peculiar deformity it was seen that it would be impossible for her to give birth to the child in the usual manner. Porrow's method was adopted.

An incision was made on the median line of the abdomen, and the abdominal walls were cut through. The womb was removed, an incision made in it to correspond with those in the abdominal walls, and the infant released. After that the womb was restored to its bed and closed, and the other parts brought together. The clothing and all articles in the room were subjected to a solution of carbolic acid spray, according to Lyster's method, during the operation. The pulse of the woman remained excellent throughout the whole of the severe trial, and all her symptoms were favorable. At last reports both mother and child were doing well. Both would have died except for the heroic treatment adopted.

THE bobtailed horse spends his whole existence in lamenting his lack of terminal facilities.

MRS. MACKENZIE is now the only representative left of the Landseer family, Miss Jessie Landseer having just died and left to her sister the large fortune that had become hers through the wills of her three brothers, Sir Edwin, Charles, and Thomas.

DRAMATIC AND ART NOTES.

THE parents of Sardou, the dramatist, recently celebrated their golden wedding.

MLLE. ALBERT of Gaul French Opera Company, is the favoured wife of a French Count, and is described as beautiful and fascinating.

MARTIN LUTHER'S copy of the Vulgate, the margin covered with annotations and glosses in his own hand, has lately been found.

JULES VERNE is going to Oran for the purpose of exploring the quarries at Kueber, and to turn his travelling to account in a book called A Journey to the Land of Marble.

SIGNORA ADELE CAPEI has given the city of Florence a silver box holding ashes taken from the tomb of Dante. It is to be preserved under the shadow of the ancient bust owned by the city.

WALES, the home of the ancient bards, the cradle of British music, is to have a permanent scholarship in the Academy for the benefit of young Welsh musicians. As soon as Mr. John Thomas, harpist to the Queen, doubles his collection of five hundred pounds for that end.

THIS is an age of statues. It is in contemplation to raise one at Missolonghi to Lord Byron ; the Italians are to raise another to Raphael ; and the first stone has been laid at Genoa for one to Mazzini, the man who fulfilled the dream of Dante, and falsified Metternich's sneer that Italy was a "mere geographical expression."

IT has been found impossible to fill the orders for Miss Neilson's photographs since her death. Next to hers the largest number sold are of Mary Anderson, and the next in popularity are of Maud Branscombe, some of whose pictures are bought by artists for studies, and are used by young ladies in their first attempts at crayon portraiture.

MR. HENRY IRVING would have accompanied Mr. Gladstone on his recent cruise had he not been engaged in rehearsing The Corsican Brothers, which is to be brought out with Augustan splendour, at a cost of more than twenty thousand dollars, and in a manner unparalleled on the English stage, with realistic forest scenes, a bal masque at the Paris opera-house, and triumphs of scenic ingenuity.

ONE of Sara Bernhardt's sumptuous dresses is described as something between the Oriental and the Louis Quinze in style—a long white silk robe, embroidered with pearls and bordered with ermine, with a bodice of crimson waist piece enriched with pearls ; to this waist piece or belt is adapted a magnificent agrafe of silver, inlaid with gems, given her by the Prince of Wales, and a necklet matching the agrafe, a marvel of Oriental workmanship, completes the costume.

A Romance of the Violin.

The history of musicians and singers is often a romance and a dizzy ascent from the depths of poverty to the heights of ease and luxury. One of these musicians, already on the first rounds of the golden ladder, is Theresa Tua, a young Italian girl, says the correspondent of the New York Evening Post. She is thirteen years of age, and yet has already taken the first prize for the violin at the Paris Conservatory. She had twenty-four competitors from sixteen to twenty-five years of age, but received the prize by the unanimous consent of nine of the best masters in Paris. The success of this musical prodigy is due chiefly to her father, a bricklayer of Turin. He earned fifty cents a day, but out of this amount, laying aside one cent daily, saved ten dollars and bought an old violin. Without instruction and with only his natural ear for music to guide him he finally succeeded in playing a number of tunes.

The long evenings after his daily toil were passed thus in digging, as it were, from the violin the melodies that he remembered. At last, music mad, he placed the violin and the bow in the hands of his little daughter, six years old and said : "Do as I do." The child obeyed, and was soon able to play better than her father. The indefatigable bricklayer then said to his wife : "You must learn the guitar." "But I have no guitar, and I cannot play." These objections were useless, and the mother, urged by her inexorable music-loving husband, could at last play a discreet accompaniment to the violin of Theresa. The three went from city to city playing in the cafes and hotels, and the father saved money enough to take them to Paris. A lady of Nice gave him a letter to Monsieur Massart, director of the Conservatory, who immediately perceived the astonishing talent of the child. Here begins the romance of the story, for the father had no more money, and how was the little family to live during the four years necessary for Theresa's instruction ? Monsieur Massart, like Aladdin in the story, rubbed his golden lamp, and ten obedient gentlemen responded by giving him each six dollars monthly for his protegee. The result of their liberality and of Monsieur Massart's instruction is that the ex-bricklayer Tua has been offered by an enterprising American the expenses of himself, his wife and the young violinist, for a period of five years, and forty thousand dollars beside. He, however, thinks it is not enough, and hesitates to accept the offer.

GENERAL.

AN Irish landlord was shot at near Skibbereen, but it was his coachman who was killed.

A RECENT report shows that the increase in the consumption of horse and ass flesh is large and steady in France.

ITALIAN army officers are now exercised in the practical running of railroad trains, so that in time of war they may know all about moving troops by rail.

ANNIE MCGLYN, a servant-girl formerly in Norwich, Connecticut, has fallen heir to a legacy of twenty-five thousand dollars, and can not anywhere be found.

SENHOR PONTES PEREIRA DE MELLO, ex-Prime Minister of Portugal, has negotiated the marriage of the heir apparent to the throne of Portugal with a Russian princess.

A ROMAN newspaper says in regard to the troubles in Ireland that the papal authorities are even more determined than formerly to avoid entanglement in political affairs.

THE devastation caused by rabbits amounts in Australia to a serious calamity. One large estate, which formerly supported 3[illegible],000 sheep, has been abandoned on account of these pests.

A TELEGRAM from Melbourne announcing the opening of the International Exhibition in that city was received in London within twenty-three minutes after the ceremony had taken place.

LORD BEACONSFIELD's agents at High Wycombe have, by his lordship's instructions, returned twenty per cent. of the half year's rent just paid to all his tenants on the Hughenden Manor estate.

A MISS ELIZABETH COOK, who died lately in humble circumstances in New York, was buried in the bridal veil and dress and withered wreath that had been prepared for her marriage forty years before.

MISS BLANCHE, daughter of Lord Colville of Culross, was lately walking on the beach when she heard cries, and saw a woman struggling in the water. She rushed into the sea, dressed as she was, and succeeded in reaching the drowning person, and holding her until help arrived.

THE sarcophagus of Roger of Tuscany, Bishop of Lausanne, who was buried in Lausanne Cathedral in 1220, was opened a few weeks ago. The body was almost intact, the features were perfectly recognizable, and the six and a half centuries had not sufficed to destroy the texture of the episcopal robes.

MRS. LYNN LINTON is in quite poor health after her recent labours, and has been ordered abroad, and is now resting in Milan. She is a lady, it is said, whom the Queen honours with a personal friendship. Her last novel, which is published in the Bazar, from advance sheets, simultaneously with its appearance in England, attracts much attention.

SOME of the boys belonging to the most respectable families of Peru, Ill., fitted up a cave as a club house. For every meeting night two of their number were appointed a burglary committee, and upon them devolved the task of providing refreshments. Cigar stores, saloons, and groceries were frequently robbed than an investigation was made.

MANY clergymen in this country have lately received a circular from a London dealer in second-hand sermons. He offers sermons lithographed in a "bold, round hand," so that those who happened to use them would suppose they were manuscript, for 25 cents, or $20 a hundred. He has a line of cheaper sermons in print, at 10 cents a piece, warranted orthodox ; and others—a little more expensive—which have pleasantness, yet an awful solemnity about them."

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY FRIDAY MORNING
In time to meet the early mails.
... Foreign and Provincial ... Intelligence, County Business, ... Matters and an Instructive ... llany.
...5 in advance, $1 50 in three months, ... not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are ... except at the option of the publisher, ... parties refusing papers without paying ... be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING :

... one year	$50 00
... column ...	30 00
...	18 00
... do	10 00
...	4 60
... under, first insertion..	50
... subsequent insertion.......	15
... ten lines, first insertion....	75
... subsequent insertion......	25
... ten lines, first insertion per line	8
... each subsequent insertion........	2

... number of lines to be reckoned by ... space occupied measured by a scale of ... brevier. Advertisements without ... directions will be published till forbid ... charged accordingly. All transitory ... isements must be in the office of pub... by 11 o'clock on the Thursday ... preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
...cians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
...ICE.—Medical Hall ; residence at ...le House.
...dale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
...ster at Law, - Owen Sound.
...ICE.—Millers's building, over Robin...tore, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost,
...RISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT ...aw, Solicitors in Chancery, Convey... &c. Owen Sound, have resumed at ...ton. Office open every Thursday, as ...fore.
... FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
...unty Crown Attorney. 1

S. J. Lane,
...RISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ...olicitor in Chancery, &c.
...ES—at Owen Sound and Markdale. ...—Office at Markdale, over W. J. Mc...'s store, open on Thursday of every ... 1-y

James Masson,
...RISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ...aster in Chancery, Owen Sound. ... 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
...ORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN ...hancery, Notary Public, &c.
...y loaned at lowest rates on personal ...l estate. Lands bought and sold, ...and seller introduced free of commis...
DUNDALK.
...ember 21st, 1880. 1

...veyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
...ER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., ...mmissioner in B. R. &c.
...veyancing in all its branches promptly ... to and carefully executed.
...—Money to Lend on Real Estate se...
...dale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

F. McRae,
... ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM ...unty of Grey.
... to Loan at reasonable interest, pay... yearly at 8 per cent., or at the end ...ar 8½ per cent.—principal payable ...nd of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal ...est yearly to suit Borrowers.
...r Sale. Mortgages bought and sold ...7, 1880. 1-y

Alexander Brown,
...ER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and ... Insurance Agent. Commissioner ... &c. Conveyancer and Licensed ...eer for the County of Grey. Farmers, ...s, and Land Sales, Punctually at ... and charges made very moderate. ...lle, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
..., LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, ...n Sound. Money to Loan at low ...nterest. Principal payable at the ...erm of years, and interest half year...ly, or principal and interest repay...stalments,
...number of desirable Improved Farms ... 1-y

J. G. Sing,
...NION AND PROVINCIAL LAND ...veyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, ...and Markdale. Having purchased ... Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's ...ck of original Field Notes, Plans, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys ...in the last fifty-five years, I am ... to make Surveys in strict accord...rewith. Profiles and Estimates ...ng Hills, Plans and Specification ...ing Bridges, furnished on applica...ney to Loan at 8 per cent interest. ... letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, ... will be promptly attended to. ...7, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.

...r. James J. White,
...nt to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, ... BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, ...Markdale, on the last Wednesday in ...th, when he will be prepared to per... operations required upon the mouth ...ost satisfactory manner, and upon ...e terms. 1-y

Hotels.

...NSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
...g leased the above hotel and thor... furnished and refitted it, the trav...blic will find every accommodation. ...he best of liquors and cigars kept ...bling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
...7, 1880. 1-y

...YAL HOTEL,
...CAFORD, Ont.
...OWAR, - - PROPRIETORS.
... accommodation for the travelling ... The bar is well stocked with the ... Wines and Liquors and the best ... Cigars.
...us to and from all trains.
...7, 1880. 1-y

MANHOOD :
LOST HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay ... and permanent cure (without ...) of Nervous Debility, Mental and ... Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, resulting from excesses.
... in a sealed envelope, only six ... two postage stamps.
... celebrated author, in this admirable ... clearly demonstrates, from thirty ... successful practice, that alarming con... may be radically cured without the ... use of internal medicine or the ... of a knife ; pointing out a mode of ... simple, certain and effectual, by ... which every sufferer, no matter ... condition he may be, may cure himself ... privately and radically.
... lecture should be in the hands of every ... every man in the land.

CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO.,
41 ANN ST., NEW YORK.
... Box, 4586. 90ly

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 9. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1880. WHOLE NO. 9

Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
FRIDAY MORNING
...e to meet the early mails.
...the Latest Foreign and Provincial ... Intelligence, County Business, ... Matters and an Instructive ...
...advance, $1 50 in three months, ...aid till end of the year. No pa... ...tinued until all arrearages are ...at the option of the publisher, ...refusing papers without paying ...responsible for the subscrip... ...hey comply with the rules.
...S OF ADVERTISING:
...ne year $50 00
do 30 00
do 18 00
do 10 00
do 4 00
...nder, first insertion.. 50
...sequent insertion...... 15
...n lines, first insertion.. 75
...sequent insertion...... 25
..., first insertion per line 8
...equent insertion 2
...r of lines to be reckoned by ...upied measured by a scale of ... Advertisements without ...ions will be publishrd till for... ...d accordingly. All transitory ... must be in the office of pub... ...1 o'clock on the Thursday ...ding their publication.
... RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

...IONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

...Sproule & Carter, ...Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c. ...Medical Hall; residence at ... ...Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

...Chas. R. Wilkes, ...Law, - Owen Sound. ...Millers's building, over Robin... ...ulet Street. 1-y

...Frost & Frost, ...ERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT ...Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Convey... ...Owen Sound, have resumed at ... Office open every Thursday, as ...
J. W. Frost, LL. B. ...Crown Attorney. 1

...S. J. Lane, ...ER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, ...Solicitor in Chancery, &c. ...Owen Sound and Markdale. ...Office at Markdale, over W. J. Mc... ...re, open on Thursday of every ... 1-y

...James Masson, ...ER and ATTORNEY AT-LAW, ...in Chancery, Owen Sound. ...1880. 1-y

...James Lamon, ...EY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN ...y, Notary Public, &c. ...ed at lowest rates on personal ...ate. Lands bought and sold. ...ller introduced free of commis... ... DUNDALK. ...ember 21st, 1880. 1

...ancers & Land Agents.

...Wm. Brown. ...R OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., ...sioner in B. R. &c. ...ing in all its branches promptly ...nd carefully executed. ...ey to Lend on Real Estate se... ...Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

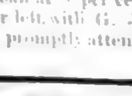
...F. McRae, ...ESTATE AGENT, DURHAM ...of Grey. ...Loan at reasonable interest, pay... ...rly at 8 per cent., or at the end ...per cent.—principal payable ...of 3, 5 or 10 years—or principal ...yearly to suit Borrowers. ...le. Mortgages bought and sold. ...1880. 1-y

...Alexander Brown, ...of Marriage Licenses, Fire and ...Insurance Agent, Commissioner ...&c. Conveyancer and Licensed ...for the County of Grey. Farmers, ...and Land Sales. Punctually at... ...charges made very moderate. ...Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

...George Corbet, Jr., ...LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, ...und. Money to Loan at low ...interest. Principal payable at the ...of years, and interest half year... ...or principal and interest repay... ...ments. ...of desirable Improved Farms ... 1-y

...J. G. Sing, ...WN AND PROVINCIAL LAND ...r, Draughtsman and Valuator, ...Markdale. Having purchased ...Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's ...of original Field Notes, Plans, ...ructions, &c., of all his Surveys ...the last fifty five years, I am ...to make Surveys in strict accord... ...Profiles and Estimates ...Bills, Plans and Specifications ...Bridges, furnished on applica... ...to Loan at 8 per cent interest. ...by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, ...will be promptly attended to. ...1880. 1-y

Dentistry.



...James J. White, ...Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, ...AT THE REVERE HOUSE, ...ale, on the last Wednesday in ...when he will be prepared to per... ...operations required upon the mouth ...most satisfactory manner, and upon ...ble terms. 1 y

Hotels.

...BION HOUSE MARKDALE. ...ed the above hotel and thor... ...ished and refitted it, the trav... ...will find every accommodation. ...st of liquors and cigars kept. ... Careful hostler. ...N VAN HORN, Proprietor ...0. 1-y

...AL HOTEL, ...CAFORD, Ont. ...ER, PROPRIETORS. ...mmodation for the travelling ...bar is well stocked with the ...s and Liquors and the best ...s. ...and from all trains. ...880. 1-y

...ANHOOD: ...T HOW RESTORED

...We have recently published a ...new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay ...and permanent cure (without ...Nervous Debility, Mental and ...pacity, Impediments to Mar... ...sulting from excesses. ...n a sealed envelope, only six ...postage stamps. ...ated author, in this admirable ...demonstrates, from thirty ...al practice, that alarming con... ...y be radically cured without the ...of internal medicine or the ...a knife; pointing out a mode of ...mple, certain and effectual, by ...ch every sufferer, no matter ...tion may be, may cure himself ...tely and radically. ...should be in the hands of every ...y man in the land.

...VERWELL MEDICAL CO., 41 Ann St., New York. ...x, 4586. 90ly

DYSPEPSIA DR. CLARK LIVER DISEASE
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City
LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870
9.000,000 Bottles.
This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.
It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - - - ...
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - - - 50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.
MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.
Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.
Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed ... After using your Indian ... Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.
MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.
Burford, Brant Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.
ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me. MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.
MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.
DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.
W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.
Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves. NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.
Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.
DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy. MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.
Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.
DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.
Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.
W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

LEWIS IRWIN displeased his parents, at Gallipolis, Ohio, and while his mother pounded him with a club, his father shot him with a pistol.

A MAN in a sawmill, at Turnerville, Neb., was found sawed completely in two. It is supposed that he fell on the truck in front of the saw when drunk.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Perennial.

She was but a little girl
  When I first began to woo,
The completest little girl
  Ever doting poet knew.

Still she seemed a little girl
  When to maidenhood she grew,
And evermore a little girl
  I evermore must woo.

Though her hair may turn to silver,
  And her red cheeks lose their hue,
She yet will be the little girl
  My love-charmed fancy drew.

And though death's decay should pierce
  Her sweet body through and through,
She will remain a little girl
  To my enraptured view.

THE BONNY BRIDES.

Some Suggestions About Arranging Affairs for Their Entertainment.

A Little Attention to a Few Simple Details May Add Immeasurably to the Pleasures of a Wedding Party.

HOW TO GET MARRIED.

No event of note has broken the comparative quiet of the past week, only the usual number of club meetings have been well attended and some informal dinner-parties have brought together a number of friends who have arranged to visit in a party, after the repast, one of the numerous theatres. Cards of invitation constantly announce from young friends that "they will tie a knot with their tongues that they cannot untie with their teeth!" And while listening to the gentle tintinnabulation of the merry marriage-bells, whose continued ringing seems to call attention from all other social subjects during the present month, thoughts are suggested on the many appropriate that may be helpful to those contemplating such an occurrence, but as yet undetermined whether it shall be a church celebration or within the sacred precincts of home. Much may be said in favor of both hallowed places, but the hearts of the most interested parties must decide the question, and some mention may be made in regard to the decoration of both. Fashion rules that no longer shall the pure white bell, the auspicious horse-shoe, or the protecting umbrella of flowers, with their supporting garlands, be suspended over the altar, but throughout the home they still hold sway, and were all to listen with attentive ear to the language of the floral world, each leaf and bud and blossom would tell the story of its life, its use, and the thought that it but emblems, many pleading with thoughtless gatherers for time for perfect fruition. Though no ornament so beautiful, all were not meant merely for decoration; let them not be wastefully plucked!

FORMS OF CONDUCTING MATRIMONIAL RITES,

A suggestion regarding

THE FLOWERS MOST APPROPRIATE TO YOUNG BRIDES

may here be added. Leave to widows who marry a second time, or ladies who have arrived at 30 years, the full-blown roses; only buds, orange-blossoms, lilies of the valley, white violets, or other fine flowers are suited to the young, and these are equally inappropriate to ladies of maturer years.

It is thought inelegant and unnecessary to send cards of admission to the church, but the annoying occurrence at a wedding in a neighboring city not long since, where it was necessary to call upon the police to clear the aisles and pews sufficiently to give room for the bridal party and friends, suggests the comfort of the old style, whether according with the fiat of Dame Fashion or in disobedience thereof. Indeed, in this land of liberty, may not each citizen exercise his or her rights, and consider the greatest comfort the most perfect elegance?

Entering, by the invisible power held as oracle in points of etiquette observed in social life, the room in which the bride-elect is being arrayed for the ceremony, let listen to one thought pertaining to her own sweet service in the final adornment. It is her own peculiar privilege to envelop in the pure protecting veil, with her kiss of encouragement and all-embracing blessing, the beloved child she is about to entrust to another's care. Others may assist in arranging the folds according to the prevailing mode, but loving hands alone must throw over her head the mystic veil and place the crowning wreath or spray of blossoms.

THE MOTHER OF THE BRIDE

As an almost perfect model of a wedding in the church may be considered that held in the New England church on Thursday, a week ago, which may be varied in number of bridesmaids and groomsmen, in the styles of dress for the whole bridal party, changing the hour from noonday to evening, which will add brilliancy of light, at least, and many pretty and attractive details may be introduced, if the composure of the bride will permit of the additional time required. Very pretty is the custom of sending a little child in advance of the ushers, or those who walk first in the bridal procession, carrying a shallow basket of flowers, in the centre of which rests the wedding-ring to be offered at the appointed time by the child, who symbolizes love, and, on their return from the altar to the carriage, the child or children may precede the happy pair, strewing their pathway with flowers, full of sweet, significance, heralding peace and happiness on life's pathway and the blossoming of every hope. Following the marriage, of the bride's father, nearest relation, or friend, may take the form of an evening party, with dancing and other diversions, or of an ordinary reception where congratulations are offered and slight refreshments partaken of. Wedding presents may be exhibited only in a room somewhat secluded, as good taste forbids great display of friendship's offerings. Whichever entertainment is preferred, politeness demands a formal call from each guest as soon as may be thereafter. In case of illness or other unavoidable detention, visiting cards may be enclosed in fitting envelopes and sent by messenger or mail. This will answer the oft repeated question. "Need one pay a formal visit after receiving an invitation to a simple reception?"

THE ENTERTAINMENT AT THE HOUSE,

Though matrimonial bonds may be as binding without any pretty preliminaries, yet like Truth severe, by fairy fiction drest—

the event of one's lifetime may be made more beautiful, and a living picture in the memory if but marked with adornments and devices appropriate to all surrounding conditions. An occasion of note combining the celebration of the forty-second anniversary of the marriage of a lady and gentleman of this city, and the twentieth returning of the marriage of their daughter, may be described as carrying out

THE IDEA OF APPROPRIATENESS IN ALL THE DETAILS

pertaining to the age of each couple and the years that marked their married life. As the guests entered the drawing room, on the right-hand side of the doorway stood the elder couple; the lady in rich purple velvet dress, with trimming of fine, broad duchesse point lace, cap of the same, with long tabs falling over the back of the head and shoulders and fastened with tiny silver and gold sheaves of wheat; the gentleman in ordinary evening dress, with a sheaf of golden grain forming the boutonniere. Above their silvered heads were arranged in bright autumn leaves and acorns, the two dates which marked the period of years that they had journied together. On the left of the door the daughter and her husband, both in the prime of life, and both robed in their original wedding attire; the soft, corded white silk dress of the bride grown a rich cream color with passing years; the delicate veil draped to form suitable covering for the decollete corsage, and falling over the train in graceful puffs, caught with full blown roses of various hues. The brown hair, well streaked with silver threads, was plainly dressed in low coil, with a single rose and two buds drooping from the left side. A single rose and two buds—representing two young lives—formed the boutonniere of the mature man, and in full blown roses were the years of their union numbered. Representing the "evening time" of the grandfather and grandmother, whose peaceful countenances told how steadily and perfectly they had overcome the trials and dangers of life's troubled stream, the crowning decorations were of golden, and brown, and crimson autumn leaves, with vines of scarlet woodbine trailing over pictures, doorways and pillars supporting the arch between the drawing-room and library; while beautiful roses, and other flowers in full bloom filled vases and mantels and friezes, emblematic of perfect maturity—before Time's withering touch had turned one petal with its burning blight—in the younger couple. Children and grandchildren received the guests and presented them to those in whose honor the remembrance was celebrated, and at the hour of 11 a golden-haired granddaughter of 3 years and a grandson of 7 took the hands of the reverend grandparents, the two bright-eyed sons of the other couple leading their loved parents, and all repaired to the dining-room, where again a mingling of two seasons was found to grace the bountiful table, and appropriate offerings of good wishes and congratulations were made, while each guest received a beautifully-chosen bon-bon as a souvenir of the occasion; for every grandfather and grandmother there was a tiny sheaf of golden or silver grain, all younger friends receiving flowers suited to their years. Members of their family—from other guests the occasion was kept secret until their arrival at the house—made many presents suitable to each dear couple; those to the younger being of china, which names the twentieth anniversary, and all departing guests bore with them the picture of a memorable evening spent with those whose

  Wedded love is founded on esteem, and many years have proved it

    The pure, open, prosperous love,
  That, pledged on earth and sealed above,
    Grows in the world's approving eyes,
  In friendship's smile, and home's caress,
    Collecting all the heart's sweet ties
  Into one knot of happiness.

A North Carolina Marriage.

Soon after the close of the last war Captain X was appointed a justice of the peace in a country place not far from Raleigh, North Carolina.

His father had been a planter in a rather small way, and his son the captain had acquired considerable experience in the business of managing real estate, drawing up deeds, etc., during the father's lifetime, and then in settling the estate after his decease. Further than this he had no legal knowledge, and, indeed, his entire stock of "book-learning" was small and poorly selected, but any lack in general information was fully made up, for his uses, by self-assertion. Late one afternoon, as he was riding home from Raleigh, he met a young woman and two men, who hailed him and inquired if he was Captain X. The young woman and one of the men wished to be married at once. The other had come as a witness. They had procured the necessary license, but an irate father was on their path, and swore that they should never be married. It was considered on all accounts safest to have the ceremony performed without delay, and try pacification afterward.

Now the captain had never witnessed a marriage, and naturally had no very clear idea of what was usual in such cases. He remembered having seen a book about the house years before with a form for marriage in it, but what the book was and where it was he could not remember.

"Why," said he, when he told the story afterward, "I knew the 'Postles' Creed and Commandments, and at first I thought I'd use 'em to begin on, but then I reckoned, on the whole, they was too durned solemn."

He asked the couple to come to his house, secretly hoping that he could find that book; but they declined, for the reason that the matter admitted of no delay.

A less assured man would have been sorely perplexed, but not he. He lost no time in removing his hat, and remarked, "Hats off in the presence of the court." All being uncovered, he said, "I'll swear you in fust off. Hold up yer right hands."

"Me too?" asked the friend of the groom.

"Of course," said the captain, "all witness must be sworn. You and each of you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in this case shall be the truth, th' 'ole truth, an' nothin' but the truth, s'elf you God. You, John Marvin, do solemnly swear that to the best of your knowledge an' belief you take this yer woman ter have an' ter hold for yerself, yer heirs, exekyerters, administrators, and assigns, for your an' their use an' behoof forever?"

"I do," answered the groom.

"You, Alice Ewer, take this yer man for yer husband, ter hev an' ter hold forever; and you do further swear that you are lawfully seized in fee-simple, are free from all incumbrance, and hev good right to sell, bargain, and convey to the said grantee yerself, yer heirs, administrators, and assigns?"

"I do," said the bride, rather doubtfully.

"Well, John," said the captain, "that'll be about a dollar 'n' fifty cents."

"Are we married?" asked the other.

"Not by a durned sight ye aint," quoth the captain, with emphasis; "but the fee comes in here." After some fumbling it was produced and handed to the "Court," who examined it to make sure that it was all right, and then pocketed it, and continued: "Know all men by these presents, that I, Captain X, of Raleigh, North Carolina, being in good health and of sound and disposin' mind, in consideration of a dollar 'n' fifty cents to me in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do and by these presents have declared you man and wife during good behavior, and until otherwise ordered by the court."

The men put on their hats again, the young couple, after shaking their benefactor's hand, went on to meet their destiny and the irate father, while the captain rode home richer in experience.

Fashion Notes.

Shell pink is a fashionable color. The husband of the lady who wears the pink usually does the shelling.

It is the fashion to cover the shoulders, back and bosom, with hoods, fichus, and pelerines of various styles and dimensions.

Cashmere designs are more in vogue than any others in the new brocades and damasses, though both large and small flower patterns appear in them.

Large gilded hooks and eyes fasten bonnet strings under the chin, and are used largely also on cloaks and wraps of all kinds that require to be fastened.

Some of the handsomest skirts of the season are made of plush, entirely plain, save that a balayeuse plaiting of doubled satin appears below the edge.

Pointed waists are the leading styles for full dress, while round waists, plaited waists, and blouse designs continue to be employed for plain house dresses.

The new brocaded satins and velvets differ from those of last season's manufacture in presenting large detached figures rather than the small matelasse effects.

The morning-gown is generally made long. It is mostly composed of a deep jacket, loose in front, semi-fitting behind, called a matinee, and can be worn with any skirt.

Plush is the favorite material for open wraps. It is imported in three colors—pink and blue in medium shades, and white. Satin is also used for this purpose, with plush as trimming.

Large sleeves are the universal feature of new wraps. Dolmans are called visites, and for the fall months are of light goods, lined with satins of some rich color and trimmed elaborately.

The new shoe-buckles are beautifully chased and enameled. One of the favorite designs is a star, and another is the pretty hook and eye, now so fashionable for dresses, in cut steel.

Fancy feathers which have been so much worn will be superseded this fall by ostrich tips and feathers on the most elegant hats and bonnets. Plush will be as much used as velvet.

Buckles are in fashion again, and are used in many forms. Large ones of cut jet are placed midway of the ends of a Turkish towel, and they are seen on hats, cloaks, and dress waists.

Among the novelties this season for evening dresses are satin-faced grenadines with round designs. They come in every variety of design and tint. They are usually made up over satin or silk.

Very pretty indoor jackets are made in the cossack style, moulding the waist, and coming down low over the hips. The front is trimmed from the neck down to the waist line with a lace quilling.

A new felt skirt for the winter is as soft as ladies' cloth, yet thick and warm. It is seamless, and measures two yards around. The material is Austrian wool, manufactured in England, and it is called the Princess Alice.

A dress that will be popular with young ladies this season is a combination of cloths of camel's hair with plain surah, such as plum-colored cloth with surah that has a plum ground and many gay bars of pale blue, red, and orange.

Wide collars are used universally upon girls' dresses this season, and sashes are seen everywhere. The latter are often embroidered in a loose and sketchy manner across the ends, and ribbons are also decorated with a little odd stitching.

The most costly bonnet made this autumn was fashioned for a wealthy lady in New York recently. It was a model of quiet taste, being of dark rich maroon plush, with diamonds set in the head of pins, which were fastened tastefully over it. The jewels made the bonnet cost $6,000.

The ends of all tabs and trimmings that depend from the waist or skirt are gathered and finished with a tassel or other ornament. The ends of ribbons and bonnet-strings are either gathered at the end or shirred a few inches above and the ends fringed, producing the same effect.

Combination undergarments of different kinds are destined to revolutionize the old and painstaking modes of making. The prevalence of close-fitting cuirass waists requires the nicest adjustment of all that is worn beneath them, and hence these garments are more than ever in demand.

Waifs.

Said he: "Let us be one." And she was won.

Multum in parvo. The little finger carries the biggest ring.

"Oh, dear! I wish I was dead!" exclaimed a neglected maiden. She had heard that matches are made in heaven.

HINT FOR MAMMAS.—An old lady who has several unmarried daughters feeds them on fish diet, because it is rich in phosphorus, and phosphorus is the essential thing in making matches.

"If I have ever used any unkind words, Hannah," said Mr. Smiley to Mrs. Smiley, reflectively, "I take them all back." "Yes, I suppose you want to use them over again," was the not very soothing reply.

THE girls who were to be converted recently in St. John's Roman Catholic Church, Concord, were officially informed beforehand by the Bishop that he would not lay his hands on any head that bore banged or frizzed hair.

At a printers' festival, lately, the following toast was offered: "Woman! Second only to the press in the dissemination of news." The ladies are yet undecided whether to regard this as a compliment or otherwise.

PHONETIC.—Maiden aunt to tall young nephew: "As I stood by you in church, Percy, I could not help being struck by your size." Percy: "Very sorry, aunt, but there was such an awfully pretty girl the other side of the aisle, I couldn't help sighing."

"What! that coffee all gone?" "Yis, mam. There isn't a blessed drawin' left in box." "What! four pounds of coffee used up in our small family in one week?" "Small family? Musha, thin, mam, there's two of yez an' the maid, and ther's me an' me foive admirers, who has aich a night to hisself, and how ye can make a small family out of tin o' us is beyant me intirely. I don't know what ye'll do whin I come to fill in th' other two nights o' the week wid young men who wants a sup o' hot coffee for to keep the chills away!"

A NUMBER of French ladies recently had an amicable contest as to who could arrange the most distinguished toilette from the cheapest and commonest material. The prize was awarded, at a breakfast in the country, to a lady whose dress was of toile d'emballage, or packing cloth, lined with red, and trimmed with lace, and with wild flowers embroidered on a gold ground, parasol and shoes to match, and twelve button gloves. The embroidery cost eight hundred francs, the lace fifteen hundred, the handle of the parasol six hundred, but the material of the dress cost only seventy-five francs. Nothing is said of the dressmaker's bill.

PERSONS who are given to fine china and delicate table adornments may not be displeased to learn that Lady Burdett-Coutts recently gave a dinner where the table ornaments, which were of the priceless turquoise Sevres alone can produce, were displayed to great advantage on a cloth of crimson plush with a narrow border of white linen damask running round the edge for the accommodation of the necessary plates, knives, etc. At this dinner every course was served on a different kind of porcelain—fifteen varieties, and all equally valuable and beautiful. Among the guests were Sir Theodore Martin (the biographer of the Prince Consort) and his wife (distinguished in her day as Helen Faucit, the actress), Mr. Henry Irving, the actor, and several Americans.

They were sitting together in the horse car. "I do hate people who are forever talking about their neighbors," said the woman with the peaked hat. "So do I," coincided her companion in the cashmere shawl. "There's Mis' Green," continued Peaked Hat, "continually a carryin' things back and forth. Think she'd better look to home. Goodness knows she and her husband live a reg'lar cat-and-dog life." "Yes, indeed," said Cashmere; "and her daughter Sarah is'nt half cared for. I was tellin' Mis' Jones only yesterday that the way Mis' Green neglected that girl was a cryin' shame. Oh! by the way, did you hear that story about Tilda Smith?" "No! what is it?" exclaimed Peaked Hat, turning half round in her seat in her eagerness, her eyes sparkling in anticipation of the coming treat. But gentle reader, never mind what it was. Neither you or I care anything about it. We hate tattling just as bad as Peaked Hat and Cashmere.

Milk Poisoned by Sewage Water.

(From the Liverpool Post.)

What appears to be a terrible case of milk poisoning is reported from Rochdale. There has been an alarming outbreak of typhoid fever in the town lately, upward of twenty persons being infected, of whom eight are known to have died. From investigations made it seems that the families in which the deaths occurred were all supplied with milk from a particular farm. An examination of the farm premises in question led to the discovery that there was a well under the kitchen in which sewage water was found, while in front of the farm buildings was a cesspool in a filthy state. The borough medical officer of health, at an inquest of one of the victims of the poisoned milk, said no doubt the milk from the farm in question, polluted by the sewage water, had caused the outbreak of typhoid fever which proved so fatal.

Another Sinking Railway.

An addition must be made to the list of railway submerges printed in this paper some months ago. One day last summer a strip of railway, eight rods in length, near Ravenna, Ohio, suddenly sank, leaving in its place a pond out of which flowed a stream "the size of a barrel," bearing a large number of white shiners, sunfish, and rock bass. Gravel, to the amount of 4,000 loads, was thrown into the opening and a new bed made for the road; but the work was no sooner completed than it followed the original part into the same mysterious cavity.

The Birthday

OF THE BABY MADE FAMOUS IN DICKENS'S AMERICAN NOTES.

The Gentleman who, while a baby, was unconsciously immortalized in Charles Dickens' "Notes" of his trip to St. Louis was met yesterday by a Republican reporter. It was the gentleman's birthday, and that circumstance led to the disclosure of facts comparatively little known regarding the identity of characters described in the "American Notes" of the great novelist.

The pretty little scene on board the boat between St. Louis, as printed in the "Notes," was of the most charming and soul-felt pictures of character and emotion that ever warmed the heart in fact or fiction, and Forster said that of all the writings of Dickens, it was Lord Jeffreys' favourite passage.

In a letter to Forster, dated on board the boat, April, 1842, Dickens gives the story, which for freshness excels the printed account in the "Notes," and its publication will be new to many. It runs as follows:

THE LITTLE WOMAN.

"There was a little woman on board with a little baby; and both little woman and child were cheerful, good-looking, bright-eyed, and fair to see. The little woman had been passing a long time with a sick mother in New York. The baby had been born in her mother's house, and she had not seen her husband (to whom she was now returning) for twelve months. Well, to be sure, there never was a little woman so full of hope, and tenderness, and love, and anxiety, as the little woman was; and there she was, all the live long day, wondering whether he would be at the wharf, and whether he had got her letter, and whether, if she sent the baby on shore by somebody else, he would know it, meeting it in the street; which, seeing that he had never set eyes upon it in his life, was not very likely in the abstract, but was probable enough to the young mother. She was such an artless little creature, and was in such a sunny, beaming, hopeful state, and let out all this matter clinging close about her heart so freely, that all the other lady passengers entered into the spirit of it as much as she did; the captain (who heard all about it from his wife) was wondrous sly, I promise you—inquiring every time we met at table whether she expected anybody to meet her at St. Louis, and supposing

SHE WOULDN'T WANT TO GO

ashore the night we reached it, and cutting many other dry jokes which convulsed all the hearers, but especially the ladies. There was one little, weazen, dried-apple old woman among them who took occasion to doubt the constancy of husbands under such circumstances of bereavement and there was another lady (with a lap dog) old enough to moralize on the lightness of human affections, and yet not so old that she could help nursing the baby now and then, or laughing with the rest when the little woman called it by the father's name, and asked it all manner of fantastic questions concerning him in the joy of her heart. It was something of a blow to the little woman that when we were within twenty miles of our destination it became clearly necessary to put the baby to bed, but she got over that with the same good humour, tied a little handkerchief over her little head and then came out into the gallery with the rest. Then, such an oracle as she became in reference to the localities, and such facetiousness as was displayed by the married ladies, and such sympathy as was shown by the single ones; and such peals of laughter as the little woman herself (who would just as soon have cried) greeted every jest with. At last there were the lights of St. Louis, and there was the wharf, and there were the steps; and the little woman, covering her face with her hands and laughing or seeming to laugh ran into her cabin and shut herself up tight. I have no doubt that in the charming inconsistency of such excitement she stopped her ears least she would hear him ask for her; but I didn't see her to do it. Then a great crowd of people rushed on board, though the boat was not yet made fast, and was staggering about among the other boats to find a landing place; everybody looked for the husband and nobody saw him, when all of a sudden, right in the midst of them—God knows how she ever got there—there was the little woman hugging with both arms round the neck of a fine, good-looking, sturdy fellow. And in a moment afterwards, there she was again dragging him through the small door of her small cabin, to look at the baby as he lay asleep. What a good thing it is to know that so many of us would have been quite down-hearted and sorry if that husband had failed to come."

MORE THAN EVER,

THE BABY

It will be a surprise to many in St. Louis to know who were the parties so feelingly touched by the pen of Dickens. The baby alluded to, which has since grown up to manhood, is Mr. Charles R. Garrison, the eldest son of a well-known citizen, D. R. Garrison, Esq. The "little woman," the mother of Chas. R Garrison, died about six years ago. Her name was Annie Noye Garrison, and her father, Richard Noye, was a native of Plymouth, England. He was a local Methodist preacher, and resided many years in Buffalo, New. York., where his son, John T. Noye, still resides, the proprietor of the largest burrmilling establishment in the United States. Mr. Charles R. Garrison, aforesaid "baby," was 39 years old yesterday, having been born in Brooklyn, N. Y., October 12, 1841. His mother brought him by way of Pittsburg, and, taking a Ohio river steamer for St. Louis, they had unawares fallen in with and had their little history embalmed by the pen of Dickens.

Mr. Garrison has no memory of the event described by Dickens, but as he grew up his mother frequently rallied him on the figure he cut in the "Notes."

About Wine.

The five principal brands of Bordeaux wine are the Chateau d'Yquem, the Chateau Laffitte, the Chateau Margaux, the Chateau-Latour, and the Haut Brion. The Chateau and the domain of Yquem belong to the family of Sur-Saluces, who bought it in 1785 from the Seigneur Sauvage d'Yquem. The domain covers 360 acres, about two-thirds of which are flanked with the vines which yield the wine. The average yield of the best quality is 120 barrels of 200 gallons each, and the prices realized vary very much; for while the vintages of 1859 and 1861 were sold for $1,200 per barrel, those of 1858 and 1867 fetched little more than half the sum. Chateau Laffitte belongs to the Rothschilds, to whom it was bequeathed by the lat Baron James de Rothschild, who purchased it in 1867 for $828,000 the average annual yield of Chateau-Laffitte is 180 barrels of 200 gallons each, and of this 140 barrels are first-class wine, fetching as a rule 1,800 per barrel. Chateau-Margaux is of very ancient origin, the site of the present house being that of a fortress belonging to the family of Montferrand. Vines were not planted on the domain till 1750, and in 1802 the property was purchased by the Marquis de Lacouilla, who pulled down the old castle and built a very handsome chateau, which was bought by Count Aguado in 1830. He sold it for $1,000,000 to a Paris banker, M. Pillet-Will, three or four years ago, the Margaux domain yields upon an average 155 barrels of wine, each being worth from year to year $1,600. Chateau Latour, the joint property of MM. de Flers, de Beaumont, de Gravilles, and de Courtevron, the descendants of the Segur family, belonged in the seventeenth century to a secretary of Louis XIV.; and this vineyard, the produce of which is nearly all exported to England, yields about 90 barrels of first-class wine. The vineyard of the Chateau-Brion, which belongs to M. Amedee Larrien, covers about 120 acres, and now grows about 100 barrels of first-class wine. The price of the Haut Brion and the Chateau-Latour may be put a trifle lower than the Chateau-Margaux; so that, taking these five vineyards, one will not be far wrong in estimating that they yield 646 barrels (or 129,000 gallons), worth, when purchased immediately after the vintage, a million of dollars.

BREAD made from whole wheat soaked before been coarsely ground is used in the French army. Sea water used in the kneading is said to add flavour.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council.

Little by little, we are getting at the "true inwardness" of the great Presbyterian Council which recently held its session in the city of Philadelphia; and even before the volume sees the light, which is to embody, and render permanent its "transactions" we will probably be in a position to form a pretty correct estimate of its value. The Toronto delegates have made their report, in which they have doubtless given most, if not all, about it and its proceedings, which was most worthy of being remembered. From this, as well as from what had previously come to our knowledge, we are led to conclude that one of the noteworthy facts concerning it was, that the gentlemen composing it, one and all, both lay and clerical, had a really good time while they were together. This was due in part, no doubt, to the character of the community whose hospitality they enjoyed, but more largely still to the character and conduct of the members of the Council themselves. Of course this is nothing more than we should expect of a gathering so largely composed of men whose praise is in all the churches, but in the absence of anything more remarkable, we desire to emphasize the fact.

Indeed, as a Mutual Admiration Society the Council appears to have been a complete success. And this itself is greatly to its credit. It is not all sorts of people who can attempt to form themselves into a Mutual-Admiration Society and really succeed. It is only the best of people—the choice spirits of the race—who can be brought into really close association with one another, even for ten days or a fortnight, without developing more or less of thought or feeling inconsistent with the true character and aims of such an institution. That these gentlemen drawn together from so many different countries, representing so many and such diverse nationalities, and whose characters had been formed under such different social influences, should find so much to admire and so little to blame in one another, is no insignificant testimony in favour of Calvinistic Christianity. It may be assumed that in the personnel of such an assembly even of the elect there must have been originally some more or less intractable material; but then, the hardest stones often take the finest polish, and if there ever were any hard cases among these people, or even persons with the ordinary infirmities of human nature, under the refining influence of Presbyterianism the moral miracle had been performed of making them about as nearly absolutely perfect as would be at all consistent with the limitations to human perfectability laid down in the Shorter Catechism or the Confession of Faith.

But what would the most faultless morality, or even the utmost degree of sanctity of life, be worth, if associated with a defective creed? What pleasure can one take in the contemplation of even the most luscious fruit when he is haunted with the suspicion that a poisonous worm is gnawing at the root of the tree upon which it grows? It has been often asserted that this is the condition of all the churches of Christendom, and the charge has even been brought against Presbyterianism itself. It has been said, that Calvinism is dying out in it, or that, if it exists at all, it is in a less severely logical, outspoken, and heroic, type than that which formerly existed. It has been said that if Calvin or Knox, Jonathan Edwards or Dr. Emmons, should revisit the earth, he would find very little in the Presbyterian pulpits of our day, of the sort of strong meat with which the stern old preachers of a former time were wont to feed their flocks. The impressions of the Toronto delegates to the council, one and all, appears to be that it has without any formal deliverance, effectually disposed of that charge. The unanimity with which the Cumberland Presbyterians, who have softened their rigid features of Calvinism, somewhat, were excluded from it, and the fact that the Welsh Methodists were admitted on the ground of their Calvinism, though they are not Presbyterians at all, are sufficient proof on this point, even if we had not the testimony of the Toronto delegates to confirm it.

Indeed, the liberal-minded and gifted pastor of new St. Andrew's church in this city appears to almost incline to the opinion that, in the matter of Presbyterian Orthodoxy, the Council went to the verge of an undesirable extreme. He gives us to understand, that it cropped out both in the psalmody used, and also in the manner of singing, in the devotional exercises connected with its sessions. The psalms of David only were sung; to the rigid exclusion of all human compositions; and neither David's harp, in which he so much delighted, nor his "instrument of ten strings," was permitted to accompany the singing, which appears to have been of the most primitive, puritanic, and inartistic character. In this respect, the Council does not appear to have been strictly representative of all the bodies represented in it, for some of them have so far forgotten themselves, as to suppliment the Hebrew psalms with a psalmody more distinctively Christian, and have even gone so far as to bring a "Kist of whistles into the house of God," but it may be presumed that hereafter, all such anti-Presbyterian profanations will disappear; for it can scarcely be conceived as among the probabilities, that any body represented in a Council of grave and godly men, in which the singing of the doxology "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was rebuked as an "incivility," would persist in such grossly irregular practices.

It is pleasant to learn that, though theology absorbed most of the time and attention of the Council, religion was not wholly excluded, and that such practical matters as Temperance and Mission received appropriate attention. As to the theology, the very fact of its thorough, not to say ultra, orthodoxy, and that the current of thought seldom left the time-worn channels, though perhaps its most commendable characteristic, must have made it a weariness to listen to so much of it; so that we are not surprised to learn that it taked severely the power of endurance, of even so purely intellectual a gentleman as Prof. Caven; and we can well understand what a relief it must have been when something of a practical character was introduced. The reading of papers is a pretty dry business anyway, and when it is carried on, day after day, from weeks end to weeks end, especially when the papers are closely packed together, and of a severely argumentative character, it must impose a pretty severe strain upon the attention and capacity for mental digestion even of Presbyterians. We are afraid if our Methodist friends undertake anything of the sort next year the strain will be too great for them, and that they will break down under it.

Dulcigno.

The Paris Temps gives the following account of Dulcigno: "The town is composed of two parts, separated from each other by the port—the old town, containing the citadel, and the new town, in which the population is almost entirely concentrated, and which comprises about 400 houses. It is evident that if the squadron had opened fire it would have directed it solely against the citadel, where there are not eighty houses. The inhabitants would not have had to suffer from the bombardment. The certainty of not being in danger, even in case of military action, has, perhaps, had something to do with the obstinate resistance the inhabitants of Dulcigno have made to the cession of their town to the Montenegrins. The chief reason, however, is that they are nearly all Musselmans; they number from 2,800 to 2,000, and it is said that till 1858 no Christian was allowed to choose his residence at Dulcigno. Lastly, it is said that the Musulmans are a race of pirates, who have only given up piracy since 1815—that is, since Austria has had possession of Dalmatia and has created a navy.

A GENTLEMAN who has a bill against Gilhooly has been bothering that distinguished Galvestonian for weeks for a settlement. The other day he called on him and said: "Now, Mr. Gilhooly, I want you to tell me when you will pay that bill," "didn't I tell you I was going to pay it ultimately?" "Yes but I want to set some day, so I can make my calculations." "I'll pay it ultimately." "Can't you be more definite? When will you pay it ultimately?" "Well, I will pay it d—d ultimately. Now, I hope you are satisfied."

The Irish Trouble.

It is sad to think of the misery endured by the Irish people for many generations, and sadder still to think that, after all that has been done to mitigate or remove the evil under which they labour, they are, to-day, in as miserable a state as they ever were. Of course, we know it is the fashion of the time to lay the responsibility of all this on the land system of the country. It is not Parnell and his co-agitators alone who charge the sin of all this suffering on the landlords. Ever and anon we find the same sentiment cropping up in leading articles and paragraphs, in both American and Canadian newspapers. But the land system in Ireland, whatever may be its faults, is substantially the same as that which exists both in England and Scotland; and yet, neither of these have been kept in the chronic state of discontent and rebellion which has, unhappily, so long existed in the Island of the Saints. There is not so much dissimilarity in these countries, that we should not expect the same causes to produce the same effects in them all. But, while England and Scotland have enjoyed a large measure of prosperity and contentment, Ireland has had neither. Her people, as a rule, have been miserably poor; in fact, so much so as to be frequently on the verge of actual starvation, from which they have only been kept by the charity of others.

We are told, however, that the landlords in Ireland are not Irishmen; that they were not the original owners of the soil; that they got the land into their possession by confiscation and spoliation; and that they were placed over the Irish people for the purpose of alienating them from the Catholic faith and making Protestants of them. All this may be substantially true; and there may be a great deal in these facts to make the blood of the patriotic Irish student of history boil in his veins; but, after all, the events of three centuries ago can scarcely account for the misery of to-day. The landlords of England are not Englishmen. The followers of William the Conqueror who divided the country among them, and made slaves of the people, did not prevent England from rising. The Norman is the owner of the land to-day, but the Saxon and the Celt, whom he reduced to serfdom, eight hundred years ago, shows more largely than he does to-day both in wealth and political power. It is true that in England we do occasionally hear something about the tenure of land; but it is generally discussed in a calm and philosophical spirit; and, though there are political and social philosophers who believe the English land system ought to be reformed, nobody clamours for the summary ejectment of the landlords as a means of curing either the real or imaginary ills of the country.

The question with which we are brought face to face in this agitation which is going on in Ireland at the present time is, whether there is any such thing as property in land? And, if so, has the owner of the land a right to deal with it just as with any other sort of property; does the doctrine of Free Trade, which is, that every man has a right to buy in the cheapest market and to sell in the dearest, apply to this as well as to everything else! These are questions, however, which we do not propose at present to discuss. Assuming that the gigantic act of spoliation which, apparently, the Irish Land League is seeking to bring about, had become an accomplished fact; and that every landlord in Ireland was sent packing, would that make the Irish a prosperous, contented, and happy people? Could the little farmer, with his miserable patch of ground—often not more than an acre or two—even though he owned it, in fee simple, ever be anything but miserably poor? After all the nonsense which has been talked and written about the eviction of tenants, the fact is, that in nine cases out of ten, we suspect their forcible removal from the overburdened soil, which is no longer able to sustain them, would be the very best thing that could be done for them. One of two things is essential to the prosperity of Ireland, either that it be relieved of its surplus population, or that industries be started on a sufficient scale to give employment to the millions who cannot find it in the cultivation of the land. No country can ever be prosperous that depends upon the cultivation of the land alone. If manufactures had been fostered in Ireland, as they have been in England and Scotland the probability is that it would have been in a very different position from what it is to-day.

As to the land agitation with all its revolting attendants of murder and arson, and every other form of outrage, whatever may be its immediate result, we are satisfied it will afford no considerable measure of permanent relief. Poor Ireland has suffered much from many physicians already, and we fear there is now suffering in store for her under the unskilful and blundering treatment of Parnell, Dillon and Co. Every lover of humanity will hope and pray that the evils with which she is threatened may be avoided, but it must be confessed the outlook at present is gloomy and distressing.

ABOUT EMINENT PEOPLE.

QUEEN RANVALOMANJAKA, of Madagascar, is a Christian, and has just built a stone church, issuing at the same time a proclamation that any subsequent ruler who shall destroy it can then no longer be sovereign of the land.

THE present voyage of the Prince of Wales's sons includes Madeira, Brazil, the Falklands, San Francisco, Vancouver's Island, the Sandwich Islands, China, and Japan. Their great-great-grandfather, George III., never even saw the sea until he was 50.

KING LUDWIG of Bavaria, who in council sits and makes his ministers stand, often wakes his old chamberlain at three o'clock in the morning to play billiards, and if he dares to yawn he is soon made to feel the weight of the royal displeasure.

THE crowned heads of Europe are not noted for their domestic virtues, it being popularly supposed that worse husbands than the Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of Germany, the Emperor of Austria, and the King of Italy it would not be easy to find.

THE present potentate of Turkey, Abdul Hamid, is described by the Constantinople correspondent of the London Times as a nervous, timid man, who is afraid of his own shadow, and who does not venture to ride or drive beyond the limits of his well-guarded private pleasure-grounds. Yet he defies Europe. Though physically a coward, he has something of that peculiar courage which produced the coup d'etat of 1851, and when his cowardice and obstinacy are at issue, the latter generally carries off the victory.

IT is related as characterizing the parties given by Lady Borthwick that at one of them there were present the Duke of Cambridge, the Princess Mary and the Duke of Teck, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg, the Crown Prince of Austria, Prince Ibrahim of Egypt, Midhat Pasha, Stanley and Cameron, the African travellers, and that at the same one Lady Waldegrave became acquainted with the Prince Imperial and Count Schouvaloff.

MR. CHILDERS, First Lord of the Admiralty in England, has been making his holiday tour in Ireland, accompanied by his family. There have been spontaneous demonstrations in all the towns through which he has passed in the west and south of Ireland, and innumerable addresses have been presented. Personally unknown in Ireland, Mr. Childers has received these compliments as the representative of Mr. Gladstone's Government.

LORD VERNON, the father of Archbishop Vernon Harcourt, and great grandfather of Sir William Harcourt, was walking one day with a little boy, the son of his parkkeeper, in his park at Sudbury in Derbyshire, when a stag ran out from a herd of red deer, and desperately attacked him. Lord Vernon caught his assailant by the horns, and held him with great difficulty while the little boy, aged seven years, groped in his master's pocket for a penknife, with which, following Lord Vernon's instructions, he cut the stag's throat, dividing the jugular vein.

A New and Valuable Invention.

Mr. Finlay Ross, of Byng Inlet, has invented and patented a gang of circular saws, which will probably supersede the ordinary stock gangs of upright saws. Mr. Ross can, by a simple contrivance, arrange on one mandril any required number of saws, which may be taken off at pleasure, as easily as the ordinary gang by shifting a key and coupling, placed near a pulley at each end of the mandril. The inventor claims that his gang of circulars will cut a much larger quantity of lumber than the usual gang, and that the face will be smoother. Another advantage claimed by Mr. Ross is, that as the saws are arranged so as to run with the grain of the timber they will cut easier and make smoother work than the ordinary circular saw revolving against the grain of the log. The logs are fed with press rollers in the ordinary way. There seems to be a mine of wealth in this simple invention, when fairly introduced.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 12th, 1880.

THE REEVE OF ARTEMESIA.

In this issue of the STANDARD will be found a communication from Dr. Christoe, in which he "demurs most emphatically" against the position we take in the matter of the bonus by-law. He opens his battery with a deliberate mistatement. He states that we accuse him of "dishonesty." There is no such word in the whole article, and if the Reeve is acting as honestly and disinterestedly as he wishes us to believe, he could have put no such construction on the language we used; if he is not, then the old and trite saying proves true in this case, that a "guilty conscience needs no accuser."

Again we quote the Doctor:—"As to your unnecessary advice to remember us for evil." We gave no such advice and we defy the Reeve to prove it. He then goes on to say he understood that our paper was to be "neutral as far as differences between individuals or parties are concerned." We ask the Reeve, in all sincerity, to point to a single sentence of ours since the STANDARD made its first appearance, wherein we have deviated from that course. With Dr. Christoe as a private individual, we have nothing to do; but as Reeve of Artemesia we consider we have a perfect right to criticise his conduct, and shall not hesitate to do so whenever we find him, in his official capacity as Reeve, acting in a manner we consider detrimental to the best interests of the Township he represents.

Now since the Reeve has put a construction on our language never intended, and put words in our mouth we never uttered, we will ask him is he honest when he tells the farmers they will receive no benefit from the passing of the by-law granting the bonus, and the consequent improvement of the road? Is it not a well known fact, that all grain bought along the line of the T., G. & B. R. R. has to be transhipped at Toronto, and does not the cost thereof come out of the pockets of the farmers? or does the Reeve imagine the farmers are so simple as to believe the grain buyers, from pure disinterestedness, pay this out of their pockets, and consequently pay the same price for grain as is paid along the railways where it is shipped to its destination without breaking bulk.

Is the Reeve honest when he wishes the farmers to believe that the one-horse affair we now have in the shape of a railway, would answer their purpose as well as a good road, widened to the national guage, and worked by one of the strongest and most energectic Companies on the American continent. The one we have answered its day, and has paid back to the ratepayers triple the amount they gave it, in the increased value of land; in the number of villages that have sprung up where before was an utter wilderness, and the greater facilities afforded them for the disposal of their surplus production. And now that, through increased prosperity, the road is inadiquate to meet the demand made upon it, and it is necessary to place it on a better footing, we ask is it unreasonable that the Company, while wishing to benefit themselves, and at the same time conferring an invaluable boon on the ratepayers generally, should seek the assistance of those so benefited in making the necessary improvement. We think not, and we believe that every right thinking man, who sincerely and honestly (since the Reeve is so fond of the word) has the interests of the community at heart, will agree with us.

Again we ask, is the Reeve honest in trying to convey the impression that the petition was not signed by a sufficient number of bona fide voters to entitle it to receive consideration at the hands of the Council, when he knows that, with few exceptions, they are qualified voters; and even after striking off the non-voters, more than double the number required by law would still remain on the petition.—We would bring this little sentence to the notice of the Reeve, "suppressio veri, suggestio falsi."

As to the petition being sprung upon the Council, that is utter bosh. Does the Reeve think that any man with the least particle of common sense believes that a petion, to obtain the signatures of 150 persons, could be circulated in such a private manner that only those interested knew anything about it? Has not the matter been discussed in the colums of this paper for weeks past, and has not our worthy Reeve been the most prominent man engaged in in it.

The excuse that he did not wish to drag the voters unnecessarily to the polls, is childish in the extreme. The by-law will have to be submitted soonner or later, and when some of the most influential and wealthy men in the Township, and probably the heaviest tax-payers, petitioned to have the by-law submitted forthwith, common courtesy, at least, would suggest that it be done. If the Reeve were so confident of success, and has those 500 voters (or there abouts, and of whom he is so solicitous that he does not wish to drag them "unnecessarily to the polls,") at his back, why is he afraid to submit the by-law at once and have the matter finally settled.—But he is not so sanguine as he would have us believe. He is well aware the feeling in favor of granting the bonus is rapidly gaining ground and hence his desire for putting off the day that will show his influence is on the wane.

Now as to "fighting and Editor in his own paper," as he elegantly puts it; we wish to fight no one, but are ready to discuss all cubjects that bear on the welfare of the Township of Artemesia and the County at large, with the Reeve, or any one else; but we must insist they do not twist our articles to suit their own purposes, and place meanings upon them that were never intended.

PROGRESS OF MARKDALE.

Notwithstanding the cry raised by some of the party press that the country was fast going to ruin Markdale is decidedly not troubled with that disease. This year there has been great activity in all branches of business and in the building line in particular.

Hill Bros have just completed the erection of a three story double brick store and dwelling with two storey addition to the rear, facing on Toronto street, one half of which is occupied by C. W. Rutledge as a printing office and the other by E. D. Wilcox, as a telegraph office and jewellry store. The first half of the main building is occupied by Hill Bros themselves, in which they have just opened out one of the largest and best assorted stock of general goods in the village. To the rear of the store and over the printing and telgraph offices is the millinery department, a good view of which can be had from the store. The other half is occupied by Wm. Lucas & Co., Bankers. To the rear of the Bank is a large room, which is used for unpacking goods &c. The upper flats are occupied by the Hill Bros as a dwelling. There is also a magniflicent cellar the whole size of the main building, which we believe is 41x66 feet. The brickwork, plastering carpenter work and painting, are all done in first-class style and reflect great credit on the contractors.

Dr. Sproule has also erected a fine three story double brick store, one of which is to be occupied by himself as drug store, Telegraph and express office, and the other by J. F. Sproule as a general store. The uppper flats are to be used as a dwelling. The Dr. is also erecting a magniflicent mansion, which, when completed, will surpass anything of the kind in any village in the Dominion, and will be equalled by few, if any, in many of the larger towns.

Mr. Joseph McCutcheon, has built an addition to the Revere Hotel, which adds largely to its accomodation and appearance.

The English Church, a very fine building and a credit to the congregation has also been completed this fall at a cost of over $3,000.

There are also several other buildings to be put up next spring one in particular by Messrs. Reid & McDougall. It is to be a three story brick, with a frontage of 81 feet and 50 feet deep, on the vacant corner lot opposite the Revere Hotel.

IN MEMORIAM.

Dear Parents, while it is natural and right that you should mourn for the little ones departed, still we would not have you mourn without hope. We know that all expressions of sympathy that we can give will not heal the wound, still we desire to offer you our christian sympathy, and to weep with those that weep. But through your tears, dear friends, we would point you to the future, and though now your family circle is broken it may be again reunited, and that forever. Listen, dear parents, to the blessed words of Jesus as he unfolds the future to us.

"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in Heaven there angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven."

"Even so it is not the will of your Father, which is in Heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." Matt. xviii.10-14.

Therefore, He said, "suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Like David of old, though your little ones will not return unto you, still you can go to them, for does not this same Jesus say, "whosoever will, may come," and that he is 'the resurrection and the life,' and "that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have ever lasting life."

Therefore dear parents look up to that brighter morn, and be ready to meet them again in the Glory Land.

O think that while you're weeping here;
Those hands the golden harps are stringing,
And with a voice serene and clear,
Those ransomed souls, without a tear,
The Saviour's praise are singing.

And think that all their pains are fled.
Their toils and sorrows closed forever:
While He, whose blood for man was shed,
Has placed upon the children's head,
A crown that fadeth never.

CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

DUNDALK.

From our Correspondent.

(These Itums came to hand too late for insertion last week.)

Weather fine.

Mr. John Bagan, in the employ of Thomas Hanbery for about two years, was leaving for a job down about St. Catherines, and left on Monday, 25th ult, and by some means got run over by a train in Toronto the same night. It was feared at first that his leg would have to come off, but as far as known it is not off yet, and is reported to be doing well. Cause too heavy a load of the extract of corn.

That rink of Hanbery's has not grown another post yet.

Mrs. Carter disposed of her household effects on the 30th ult. by auction, and will leave shortly to join her husband in Boston, where he has been for some months. The Drug Store will still be carried on by a Druggist from Blyth.

The building for the Bank is about completed.

Mr. John Morrow, Auctioneer, disposed of a [illegible] of cheap pigs, Horses, cows, waggons, buggies sleighs, &c, on the 2nd [illegible]. He is to [illegible] shortly [illegible] a [illegible] sale each [illegible] judging from the prices he [illegible] it will [illegible] those who [illegible] of a good opportunity to [illegible].

Nov. 10.—Everything quiet Thanksgiving Day. All places of business closed. Services in the Methodist Church at half-past ten, and in Presbyterian Church at half-past one. A number of the Nimrods went hunting and judging by their appearance on their return, they had a "boss" time, They did not commit much havoc among the denizes of the woods, however, as their trophies amounted to 0.

Mr. Connors has got his grocery and liquor store in full blast. A few of the old citizens have struck the scent already, and are rallying round.

Mr. Phillips of Blyth opens out in the drug store lately occupied by Mr. Carter.

Our fair was well attended considing the state of the roads. A number of cattle changed hands at very fair prices,

Oh, that skating rink! I guess John has flunked. Will not some of the boys take it in hand.

It is reported that Mr. Wm. Nelson is to oppose J. J. Middleton for the office of Reeve for 1881. We wish them both success. FAST ASHEEP.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE BONUS QUESTION.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—The ratepayers of Artemesia should bear in mind that the grant of $800,000 from the interested Municipalities is one condition of the agreement between the T., G. and B. and the Grand Trunk Railway Companies, and that sum has been as equably distributed between the several Municipalities as possible. If Artemesia should fail to do her share, is it likely that other mtnicipalities much less interested will do theirs? If all fail the bargain falls through, and we lose the connection with the Grand Trunk. But some will say, "There is no fear! The Grand Trunk will get the road at any rate, and widen the gauge, too, and that without any aid from the Municipalities." I am sorry that I cannot share in the strong faith of those who talk thus. To my mind there is a very great fear. I think that by refusing the bonus we run the risk of losing that connection, which all admit would prove so beneficial to us. I think that those who talk in this way have not given the matter that attention which the importance of the subject demands. When we consider that throughout this whole Dominion there is not perhaps a single railway that has not been aided, either by the Government or the interested Municipalities, what right have we to expect to be more highly favored than other localities? I take the ground, however, that if our giving a bonus would secure the change of guage a few years earlier than it otherwise would come, it would pay the Township to give the Bonus. But, sir, even though the change of guage be effected without our aid, I hold still that it would have been our wisest course to aid the enterprise for the following reasons:—It is much better for any Municipality to be on friendly terms with the Railway Company by whom it is served—they have mutual interests at stake—favors or the reverse can be given or received. It would be a very easy matter for the Railway Company to discriminate against our Township so that our people would have to pay the bonus ten times over in the course of the next twenty years, and in all probability this may be done and we cannot help ourselves. Artemesia is the most dependent Township on the Railway of any in the County. We have nowhere else to go; our interests either for weal or woe are bound up with the Railway. We cannot change our geographical position, but we can, by our folly and stupidity, convert a friendly corporation into a powerful antagonist. I know that many are opposed to the principal of giving bonuses at all. These people would prefer to remain without any railway accommodation, rather than pay anything to secure it. Happily, however for the good of the country such false economists are largely in the minority. The giving or withholding of bonuses is entirely a business transaction—people give their money because they expect to get some thing in return. To talk of "charity" in reference thereto is so ridiculous and absurd, that I wonder any sensible man would resort thereto. I am aware that the economy cry is very popular, and it is obvious that some are ready to stifle their convictions to pander to this delusion for the sake of popularity. To such I would say, beware! This "penny-wise and pound foolish" policy has often proved ruinous; it may be so in our case. Now, Mr. Editor, at the risk of being considered personal, I cannot refrain from remarking, that if the Doctor feels his position so very secure, why does he deem it necessary to remind the people of this intensely Conservative Township, that he is no friend of the Mowat Government? If the Doctor is so sure that he has the "people at his back," why did he not submit the By Law and allow the ratepayers an opportunity of approving or rejecting it as they might see fit? Does the Doctor think that in the eyes of the people of Artemesia his being "no friend of the Mowat Government," will cover a multitude of sins? or does he think his being "no friend of the Mowat Government," is a good and valid argument against the bonus? You know, sir, that some people's bump of self-esteem is so very large, they imagine their opinions should not be questioned; their pride is wounded if you presume to differ with them; they almost regard you as a personal enemy if you do not meekly swallow all they say as the infallible dictum of unerring wisdom.

I am not by any means one of the heaviest ratepayers in the Township, neither am I among the lowest; but it is not upon this score that I presume to speak. I am simply a citizen of this by no means unimportant Municipality, and as such, whether I pay a large or small share of the taxes, I claim the right to address my fellow citizens upon any subject of common concern. I claim the right because I deem myself possessed of the necessary "gumption" to know what I am talking about [illegible] have sufficient self-respect [illegible] to say anything to hurt the feelings [illegible] and the suspicions [illegible] my fellow citizens [illegible]. I consider it a [illegible] that because a man [illegible] no right to speak in [illegible] be heard in [illegible] streets [illegible] be patriotic, he may be intelligent, he may clearly apprehend the consequences likely to follow the pursuit of a certain course; yet if he do not possess the necessary wealth he may not presume to raise his voice for fear of being insulted by some illnatured neighbor, who, perhaps, in everything that constitutes true manhood, may be entirely his inferior. Away with such an idea! Exploded be the doctrine!!

"The good is but the guinea stamp,
A man's a man for a, that."

It is true that I supported the $20,000 By-Law last summer; I do not regret having done so. I believed then, as I do now, that it was in the interest of the Township to grant that bonus. Artemesia has never burdened herself very seriously with railway debt. Every dollar she has given given has been returned to her with good interest; why then should we hesitate to give another bonus when the prospective advantages are so obvious.

Now, Mr. Mditor, I am done. I will not condescend to bandy words with any one; I have no time, much less have I any inclination for such work. Personally, I have nothing against Dr. Christoe, I think he is an excellent Reeve; but I am no less of opinion that the course he is pursuing in reference to the railway bonus is inimical to the best interests of the Township. WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Nov. 8, 1880.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—I was astonished in reading your editorial, re-council. I demur against your position most imphatically. First, as to insult to so many of my warmest friends. Nothing of the kind was intended, supposing they were all bona-fide voters and had a right to be there, which is not the case by far. Second, as to your unnecessary advice to remember us for evil. I think it most unfortunate, such excites retaliation. Third, as to my dishonesty, I do not intend to discuss the question with you. I understood your paper was neutral, so far as differences between individuals or parties were concerned. If not, it virtually cuts of discussion, for I could not for a moment undertake to fight an Editor through his own paper. I was acting for five hundred voters (about) who don't wish to be dragged unnecessarily to the polls and who are deprived of petitioning the council. Now Sir, as to my interpretation of the clause involving my dishonesty, I am not changed in my opinion, write me down ignorant if you please, for I like it much better than the word dishonest. Five weeks ago the solicitor lead us to understand, that because Artemesia had given so decided a vote against a Bonus he would not ask us to submit a by-law, until the popularity of the scheme were tested in other municipalities; he said, it would look too much like forcing her. The petitions were sprung upon us last Monday, and excited opposition accordingly. We were blameless. The sub-section of the act reads, "and the council shall, within six weeks after the receipt of such petition by the clerk of municipality introduce a by-law to the effect petitioned for, and submit the same for approval of the qualified voters." We in our symplicity thought that two things the council had to do, first introduce the by-law, second submit it, that is, fill it in, arrange for the day of polling, appoint officers and polling places; in a word submit it, and we thought and continue to think, if done in six weeks, it is within the meaning of the act. Now, sir, we may be wrong in the interpretation, we really do not desire to break the law, but you can do no good by talking mandamus, your cause would suffer three fold by coercion, and then sir, it doesn't frighten us I have written as mildly as possible under the circumstances of so aggravated a charge, and I sincerely trust the breach will become no wider. Recollect the vote of council stood 4 to 1.

DR. CHRISTOE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—The P. S. of Dr. Christoe's letter in your issue of last week, is an involuntary admission of the correctness of my conclusions. I expressly avoided charging him with fishing for popularity, although possessed of reasons for doing so; but he does not hesitate to charge me without any reason whatever.—The charge, however falls to the ground in view of his own expressed belief, that a majority of the ratepayers are against any further bonus. The exposure of the fact that I am a grain buyer is superfluous, seeing that it was a well known fact previously. The further exposure as to my assessment was equally unnecessary, considering that most of the ratepayers know pretty well that my means consist chiefly of cash or produce and not of real estate in Artemesia, and I may be allowed to say, that what means I have are thereby much more usefully employed for the Township than if held in the shape of assessable property. When exposing this well know secret, however, why didn't the Doctor expose the secrets in connection with his own assessment. My assessment, such as it is, has always been taken on property legally owned by myself, Can Dr. Christoe say as much? The reasons and arguments of my letter are sound only in exact ratio to their truth and common sense, without regard as to whether my assessment be three hundred or three thousand dollars. During the past six months I have keenly discussed this question with many of the ratepayers, and Dr. Christoe is the only one who has so demeaned himself as to even hint I could be influenced in my opinion or vote by the amount of my assessment. Dr. Christoe says, that 45c is all the bonus asked on three hundred dollars assessment. Well, what is he making such a to-do about? Surely it is worth that proportion to get this section once more into a creditable financial position. Then I am an interested party because according to him I am tete-a-tete with the Management. I can quite understand the sting intended here in a business point of view. The Doctor might have spared himself the humiliation of trying to become a gratuitous mischief-maker. I am just as independent of the Management as the Management is of me. Dr. Christoe evidently measures others by himself, and estimates his own opinions to be right or wrong according to the decision of the electorate. Hear him! "If right, I am sure the vote will be accordingly, if not, I am equally convinced the vote will be otherwise." Also says this self-contradictory Reeve—"A scheme that affords no arguments save inuendoes against the motives and person of an opponent ought to be abandoned." On this ground, if his P. S is worth anything even in his own eyes, he ought to abandon his opinions on the matter in hand. Being unable to meet my arguments, he comes to his natural level in attempting to belittle me—a thing which never having done myself, neither he nor any other person can accomplish; but he has certainly succeeded in belittling himself, his last weeks production being the proof.—His self-drawn likeness to a duck is correct—a duck is never more at home than whilst spluttering in the mud. This man's egotism is something remarkable. Nobody seems to have any business with, or authority with Municipal matters unless himself. He alone has authority to open his mouth, or write a long letter. We, of the common herd, it [illegible] builders, must have [illegible] amount of assessment before we [illegible] sufficiently interested to impugn anything [illegible] this man [illegible] does. Mr. Brown, [illegible] Markdale, [illegible] pears, [illegible] knowle[illegible] much [illegible] in the Coun[illegible] one's wisdo[illegible] "Wisdom i[illegible] children [illegible] Wisdom is personified in [illegible] Reeve, and his dictum is infallible! "I fancy" this! "I believe" that! Just count, sir, how many times the big letter I appears in his epistle [illegible]. This pompous reproduction of his identity may increase his importance in his own eyes, but cannot do so in the eyes of sensible people. Dr. Christoe contends that the widening of the gauge cannot be paid out of the million preferential stock issue proposed to be raised under the new arrangement; but if the Municipalities will not take hold, who else can be expected to do so? The whole arrangement evidently stands or falls on the assistance given or withheld by the Municipalities, and this contention is, therefore, a "baseless vision." Dr. Christoe says,—"By conditions of lease, only 4 new locomotives are to be bought, 12 to be converted; 6 cars to be bought, 18 to be converted, &c." Now, is this statement wilfully given to mislead the electors? It looks much like it. If not, why did he not say that these only referred to the passenger service, and instead of concluding with an etcetra, why did he not continue the quotation from the articles of agreement as follows:—"Freight service—3 Conductors' vans, 80 box cars to be purchased, 5 cattle cars, 275 cars to be converted." It is thus easily seen that there is sometimes a good deal under an &c. It has been truly said that facts only partly told are often proof an intentional fraud. Neither is it thought necessary by this exemplary Reeve to state the fact, that if this agreement with the Grand Trunk is carried out and the road widened, we will have the benefit also of a large portion of that Company's rolling stock, as well as the rolling stock of other lines having running connections with that road, What can be thought of the Reeve of a Township in thus suppressing important facts while professing to write to his constituents on the expressed assumption that "perhaps they have not the papers in their hands to form a judgement." No one need be astonished that the Doctor has succeded for the present in staving off the submission of the by-law. No doubt considerable ingenuity has been displayed. Let the Doctor get a coat of arms with this Heraldric—A picture of a Duck rampant in a stagnant puddle, splashing about mud in all directions, and trying to cover up a large number of box cars with the words ET CÆTERA; while the respected Doktor's own private motto of O, tempora! O, mores j might with much propriety, be conjoined to Quack! this notable designation being specially applicable in more ways than one, and if the duck's back should again require it, I have much pleasure in assuring the Doctor that I shall always have some water on hand reserved for special occasions.

Yours truly,
ROBERT ROBERTSON.

Flesherton and priceville Station,
Nov. 8, 1880.

To the Reeve and the Council of the Corporation of the Township of Artemesia.

The Petition of the undersigned qualified voters under the Municipal Act, who are rated as Freeholders on the last Revised Assessment Roll and who are residents of the Township of Artemesia.

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

That your petitioners, in accordance with the terms of the several Acts relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company, desire to aid the Company by giving them money or debentures by way of a bonus for the purpose of enabling it to change the gauge from three feet six inches to four feet eight and a half inches, and for the reconstruction of the Railway; and for the amount they so desire to grant and be assessed for is the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that your worshipful Council will, as required by law, introduce the necessary By-law for granting aid by way of a bonus to the amount of Twelve Thousand Dollars aforesaid, and submit the same to the vote of the qualified ratepayers of the said Municipality of the Township of Artemesia, and in due course pass the same for the purpose of raising the said sum of Twelve Thousand in the said Municipality of the Township of Artemesia for the amount of the said bonus payable in twenty years, with interest thereon payable half yearly and for the dellivery of the same to the Trustees to be appointed under the said Act relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company, passed at the last Session of the Ontario Legislature, and under the terms that the said Trustees shall not deliver the said dedentures or any part thereof, or any proceeds of said debentures or any part thereof, unless and until they receive a certificate of the Chief Engineer for the time being, setting forth that the work is completed, so that regular freight and passenger trains are being run over the whole line by the Grand Trunk Company from Toronto to Owen Sound and to Teeswater on a track of the width of the Standard National gauge of 4 feet 8½ and that the whole line has been laid with steel rails on or before the first day of January 1882, nor until the arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company for the working by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of the whole of the Line of the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company for twenty years, from the first day of January, 1882, embodied in an agreement, dated 18th September, 1880, has been approved by the Directors and proprietors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the said Shareholders of the Toronto Grey and Bruce Railway Company, and the said debentures shall not be converted into money until the conditions of this by-law have been fulfilled, and for assessing and levying upon all ratable property lying within the said municipality of the———a special rate for the payment of said debentures and interest thereon.

Dated at Artemesia, October, A.D., 1880.

Robert Robertson	R. E. Hall
Alex. Hannah	Colin McArthur
John White	Henry King
R. Chapman	D. McDonald
A. Turner	James Harvey
H. Bennet, M. D.	James McNicol
T. A. Conkey	John Snell
Robert Oliver	M. Williamson
Alexander Brown	Alex. Muir
John Simpson	Alex. McRae
D. McKinnon	Duncan Muir
Dugald McLeod	Wm. Hacking
James Ryan	W. J. Ekins
James Sullivan	J. Gilchrist
Angus McLean	A. Bentham
W. Conkey	Alex. McLeod
A. McLean	Thomas Currie
J. Aussem	Henry Meldrum
Arch. Elliott	Archibald Foster
George Walker	James Foster
Thomas Kells	A. Whitten
R. Buchanan	Wm. Galbraith
James Lackey	James Beaty
John Blair	Christopher Irwin
Robert Sewell	Arch. Foster, jr.
Edward Davis	Alex. Irwin
Samuel Lackey	H. D. Irwin
John Boland	Wm. Henry
John Rowe	Thos. Boland
J. P. Sparling	Wm. Buchanan
W. S. Bowler	Robt Sparling
Thomas Irwin	W. J. Cooey
Robert Smith	John Warling
Wm. Bo[illegible]	J. C. Buchanan
John Bo[illegible]	George Sewell
Alex. [illegible]	[illegible]odie
[illegible]	[illegible] Rutledge
Henry F[illegible], jr.	[illegible] Danner
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Wm. Ho[illegible]	[illegible]
John Whittaker	A. Whittaker
Peter Muir	Joseph Watson
George Buskin	Patrick Quigg
John Watson	William Taylor
Robt. Neilson	R. Campbell
S. Waucbob, sr.	Matthew Leich
S. Waucbob, jr.	J. Higginbotham
Archie Neilson	Robert Taylor
James Neilson	Thomas Parks
Wm. Ludlow	Patrick Ryan
M. Richardson	Michael Akitt
S. Damude	F. T. Carr
Wm. Wright	R. J. Sproule
Robt. Trimble	Wm. Strain
E. J. Johnston	J. W. Armstrong
W. Brown	Thos. Mathews
John Graham	R. H. Byers
George Wright	Wm. M. Douglass
Samuel Walker	J. F. Sproule
Robert S. Rae	E. S. Mabee
George Hobb	George Haskett
Joseph Beaty	Wm. Haskett
James Walker	S. C. Coleman
C. Reynolds	P. McArthur
Alex. Rutledge	T. S. Sproule
W. R. Walker	Thomas Nichol
G. W. Tryon	Beng. Coleman
Chas. McDougall	Wm. McLaughry
Thomas Atkinson	Geo. J. Blyth
D. F. McDonald	Angus McIntyre
Alex. Webster	James Craig
John Irwin	L. Anderson
John McArthur	John Carter

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

FRIDAY, Nov. 12th, 1880.

Flour	5.0o	to	5.0o
Spring Wheat per bush., new	1.00	to	1.00
Fall do. do. do.	0.95	to	0.97
Barley	0.55	"	0.66
Oats	0.00	"	0.28
Peas	0.55	"	0.60
Potatoes,	0.25	"	0.30
Butter, per lb.	0.18	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed	5.50	"	6.00
Beef	5.00	"	5.00
Geese per lb.	0.05	"	0.00
Ducks, per pair	0.40	"	0.45
Fowls, per pair	0.20	"	0.20
Turkeys, per lb	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.00
Hides	7.50	"	5.00
Grass seed,	2.00	"	2.25
Hay	6.50	"	0.00
Timothy seed,	2.25	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.3o
Green Apples, per bushel	0.40	"	0.50
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.75	"	1.75

ANGUS McINTYRE.

I again call your attention to my new and select stock of GROCERIES, LIQUORS, PROVISIONS, FRUITS, CONFECTIONERY and OYSTERS—always FRESH. Don't forget to give me a call, You always need something new in the Grocery line.—Nothing but first-class goods kept. I send all my customers home satisfied that they get good value for their money, and they always come again. I thank my old customers for their patronage, and they don't forget me either. This is encouraging for me to go ahead in our Town of Markdale, where I am sure of friends who never forget me.

Markdale, Nov. 11, 1880. ANGUS McINTYRE. 0-21

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Nov. 12th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$5.00	to	$5.00
Spring Wheat per bush.,	0.95	to	1.02
Fall do. do. do.	0.95	"	1.00
Barley	0.55	"	0.65
Oats	0.00	"	0.28
Peas	0.50	"	0.55
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.30
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed.	0.00	"	5.50
Beef	5.00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	7.50	"	8.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

OWEN SOUND.

OWEN SOUND, Nov. 12th, 1880.

Flour, $4.5o to $5 oo; Fall Wheat, $o 9o to $o 96; Spring Wheat, $o 95 to $1 oo; Barley, 45c to 58c; Oats, 3oc to 3oc; Peas, 5oc to 58c; Hay, $7 oo to $7 5o; Potatoes, 25c to 3oc; Butter, 2oc to 21c; Eggs, 12c to 14c; Apples, per bushel, 25c to 3oc; Sheep skins, $o 5o to $1 oo; Hides, $7 oo to $7 oo

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

THE Undersigned will be at Lot 6, 2nd 3rd Concession, N. D. R., Glenelg on Saturday, Nov. 20, 1880, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of letting contract of building New Bridge across Saugeen River. Plans and Specifications to be seen at the house of Thomas Davis, Lot 2, 3rd Concession, N. D. R.

F. MACRAE,
G. BINNIE,
T. DAVIS,

Glenelg, Nov. 5, 1880.

General Advertisements.

J. M. Webster,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.

LOAN ND LAND AGENT,

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers' Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880 1-tf

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas, Tobaccos & Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

AND WILL

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my investments.

Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880. 1-tf

CHEAP CASH STORE

Reynolds & Son

Are to the front with a complete stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

HARDWARE, CROCKERY, GLASSWARE,

Which for QUALITY and LOW PRICES cannot be passed. Give us a call and try some of our

NEW SEASONED JAPAN TEA, 3lb. FOR

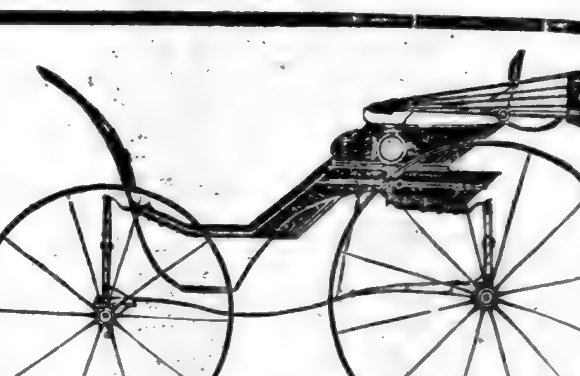
PURE GOLDEN SYRUP ALWAYS ON HAND

Please give us a call before purchasing elsewhere.

BUTTER, POULTRY AND EGGS TAKEN IN CHANGE FOR GOODS.

REYNOLDS & SON

Markdale, Nov. 11, 1880.



Buggies and Waggons

OF ALL KINDS, SOLD BY

W. L. MARSHALL, Dundalk

Dundalk, Nov. 11, 1880.

MEDICAL HALL

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books

IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCO TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS

Physicians' Prescriptions

AND

VETERINARY PREPERATIONS

CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

Read This.

MONEY LOANED at the VERY LOWEST RATES OF INTEREST The BORROWER can have his own terms as to the TIME and the WAY he REPAYS it. LOANS put through with the LEAST possible DELAY.

See the Undersigned before applying Elsewhere.

Offices in Shelburne and Dunkalk.

Always in the Shelburne Office on MONDAYS and TUESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on WEDNESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 2 p. m.

In the Dundalk Office on THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS. On Thursdays, from 2 to 5 p. m., and on Fridays, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.

FARMS SOLD AND RENTED

By sending number of Lot, Concession, Price, Terms, &c., for very moderate charges.

CONVEYANCING

A SPECIALTY.

All Kinds of Writings Executed.

INSURANCES

Effected in the best Stock Companies.

GREAT BARGAINS

Given in the Best and Hardiest Canadian

FRUIT & ORNAMENTAL TREES.

IRON FORCE PUMPS!

—FOR—

WELLS and CISTERNS,

Sold Very Cheap.

Every Farmer ought to get one.

GEO. RUTHERFORD,
Estate and General Agent.
SHELBURNE AND DUNDALK.

October 21, 1880. 6

W. BENSO[N]

—OF THE—

"Blfast House"

Begs to announce that he is fully [...] to dispose of all articles usual to a Grocery and Provision Establishment

Lowest [P]ossible Pr[ices]

The stock consists of—

Groceries and Provi[sions]

together with

LIQUORS of all k[inds]

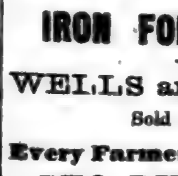
such as SCOTCH, IRISH and CANADIAN best brands. I have no desire to misrepresent the performance of [...] ties, but I may say in response to [...] retailer who offers a book worth [...] every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea [...] Give Two Books of [...] value to those mentioned to [...] a like quantity. My house is [...]

Belfast House, op. Hask[ett]

NO SECOND PRI[CE]

W. BENS[ON]

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880.



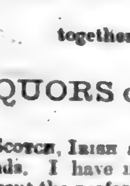
VETERINARY.

J. BLOOMFIELD,
Veterinary Surgeon,

HAS commenced the practice of his profession in Markdale, and from his long experience and extensive practice in England and this country, is enabled to guarantee satisfaction. Regulating Powders, the admiration of thousands that have used them, warranted to purify the blood by removing disease lurking in the system of horses and cattle, always on hand. Medicines may be procured at his office, over Dr. Sproule's Drug Store, Markdale. 1-y

DONALD McLE[OD]

[BOOT AND SHOE] MAKER



BEGS to return his sincere thanks to the public for their very liberal [patronage] in the past, and hopes by honorable [dealing,] FIRST-CLASS WORK, and close [attention to] business, to merit a continuance of [the same.]

THE BEST OF MATE[RIAL]

Used, and none but First-Class [workmen] employed.

Special attention paid to Repairs [which] will be done promptly.

Sewed work a Speci[alty]

NOTICE.

All over due accounts must be p[aid without] delay or I shall have to resort to [other] means for collection.

D. McLEOD

Corner of Queen and M[ill Streets]

Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880.

JOB WORK done neat and promptly at the STANDARD Office.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 12th, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

LOOK out for Doll's now advertisement next week.

THERE is a notice in this week's STANDARD interesting to contractors. Read it.

You can buy any pattern of Burrels double steel [illegible] at Haskett Bros for [illegible] cents.

[illegible] of Dundalk says he has buggies and waggons of all kinds for sale. Give him a call.

JOHN Welsh is building an addition to his skating rink which when completed will be very commodious.

PERSONS desiring a change in advertisement will please hand it in not later than noon on Wednesday's.

PERSONS wishing to get a good weekly city paper should read the advertisement of the Hamilton Spectator in another column.

NOTWITHSTANDING the damp weather and bad roads grain is coming in pretty freely and changing hands at fair prices.

WILCOX is bound to keep up with the times, and is now showing a fine lot of Engagement and Wedding Rings. Young men don't you forget this.

PERSONAL.—Letters address to A. McLellan, (formerly of Durham) will send to P. O. Box 998 Toronto, or, to his residence corner of McCaul & College streets Toronto.

THERE is nothing half so cosy as a warm cup of tea, and you can have it by purchasing some of Reynolds & Son's new seasoned japan tea. Three pounds for one dollar.

WE notice the arrival at Haskett Bros of a large stock of axes, which they claim to have purchased very cheap for cash. Look out for bargains in that line.

WE are pleased to be able to say, that A. McIntyre is doing a very fair business in the grocery line, he keeps fresh goods and sells at very reasonable prices, his teas are really good.

EVERY business man should have his name and address printed on the envelopes he uses. Call at the STANDARD office and you will be astonished how cheap we can do them.

THERE will be an extensive auction sale on the premises of John Devitt, Esq., lot 14, con. 3, Township of Holland, on Saturday Nov. 20th. Twelve months' credit on good paper.

POST MASTERS.—Where the STANDARD is not called for, the P. M's will please destribute the papers to whom they please, and not return them, but send us a card with the names of those to whom they are addressed.

A CREDIT sale of new Furniture, Machinery, &c., belonging to the estate of the late M. E. Merriam, of Flesherton, on the 24th inst. The House, Lot and Wareroom, will also be offered for sale at the same time.

PARTIES visiting Priceville should patronize the Commercial Hotel. They will find the proprietor both attentive and obliging, and ready to supply them with all the requisites necessary to comfort the inner man.

WANTED.—A Boy wanted at this office, from 14 to 16 years of age, to learn the Printing business. To one who is not afraid of work this is a good opportunity—must be able to read manuscript. One from the country prefered.

THANKSGIVING DAY, on the whole passed off pretty quietly. The places of business were closed, and services were held in the C. M. Church. The "Boys" consumed the usual quantity of "corn juice," and the result was a visit to Squire Brown and a contribution to the Township funds of some $18.

WE are compelled to omit a communication from Mr. Meldrum this week touching railway matters. The demand on our columns is so great and the increasing interest that is being taken on this important subject, makes it impossible for us to accommodate all, and therefore we must leave it over for next week.

THE BANK.—Wm. Lucas & Co. have taken possession of the premises prepared for them in Hill Bros. new brick block, on the corner of Mill and Toronto streets. Parties wanting money will find it to their interest to pay them a visit, and those who are of a saving turn, can get 6 per cent. on all money entrusted to their care.

THE WEATHER.—We see by the Toronto dailies that the American oarsman, who are at present in England complain bitterly of the weather. If it is anything like what we have had here for the past two or three weeks we pity the "boys." In fact we have had no weather at all, or, as our Americans cousins would say, too much weather all to-gether.

THE Revere Hotel has changed hands, Mr. J. McCutcheon, the late proprietor retires from the business, having sold out to Mr. Thomas Sproule, formerly of the American Hotel, Owen Sound, Mr. Sproule was at one time Conductor on the T., G. & B. Railway, and has had considerable experience in hotel business, is both courteous and attentive to his customers and no doubt under his management the Revere will become a favorite with the travelling public.

BOGUS BILLS.—Bogus $10 bills are in circulation. The counterfeit consists in a change which is effected by neatly stretching or slitting away one half of the thickness of the bill; covering it and letting in (so to speak) with mucilage the words and figures, ten, from unless Consolidated or other Bank bills. This patchwork fraud can be detected by holding the bill up to the light and by the small imprint of the figure "five" or whatever the actual denomination of the bill may be, on various parts of the bill.

WE have made arrangements with the Globe Printing Company to club the Weekly Globe with the STANDARD. Persons wishing to obtain it save 75c. on the subscription price by calling on us as we will furnish the STANDARD and the Weekly Globe for $2.50, cash, to the end of 1881, subscribers will thereby receive both papers for the balance of this year FREE. Each subscriber will also receive, about the first of the year, gratis a fine steel engraving of the late Hon. Geo. Brown, 14x20 inches, got up in the very best style of modern art which alone is worth more than the subscription price.

H STOR
& So complete stock of Groceri
SHOES.
LASSWARE, E
PRICES cannot b try some of our TEA, 3lb. FOR WAYS ON HAN
rchasing elsewhere.
GGS TAKEN IN DS & SON.

Waggon
HALL, Dundalk

HALL.

Chemical
ICINES!
Combs, Tooth,
Surgical Appliance
sundries.
hool Books
TOBACCO
D OILS
scriptions
PERATION
ROULE, M
. BENSO
—THE—
Bifast House
...sible Pric
eries and Provis
QUORS of all kin
Two Books of st House, op. Hask
NO SECOND PRI
W. BENS
ONALD McL MAKER
NOTICE
Corner of dale, Oct. 28, 1880.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 12th, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

Look out for Doll's new advertisement next week.

There is a notice in this week's Standard interesting to contractors. Read it.

You can buy any pattern of Burrels ...ble steel axes at Haskett Bros for ...cents.

Marshall, of Dundalk says he has ...gies and waggons of all kinds for ... Give him a call.

John Welsh is building an addition ...his skating rink which when completed will be very commodious.

Persons desiring a change in advertisement will please hand it in not ...r than noon on Wednesday's.

Persons wishing to get a good week...ity paper should read the advertisement of the Hamilton Spectator in another column.

Notwithstanding the damp weather and bad roads grain is com... pretty freely and changing hands ...air prices.

Wilcox is bound to keep up with the times, and is now showing a fine ... of Engagement and Wedding ...gs. Young men don't you forget ...

Personal.—Letters address to A. ...Lellan, (formerly of Durham) will ...d to P. O. Box 903 Toronto, or, to ... residence corner of McCaul & College streets Toronto.

There is nothing half so cosy as a warm cup of tea, and you can have it by purchasing some of Reynolds & ...n's new seasoned japan tea. Three pounds for one dollar.

We notice the arrival at Haskett Bros of a large stock of axes, which they claim to have purchased very cheap for cash. Look out for bargains in that line.

We are pleased to be able to say, that A. McIntyre is doing a very fair business in the grocery line, he keeps fresh goods and sells at very reasonable prices, his teas are really good.

Every business man should have his name and address printed on the envelopes he uses. Call at the Standard office and you will be astonished how cheap we can do them.

There will be an extensive auction sale on the premises of John Devitt, Esq., lot 11, con. 3. Township of Holland, on Saturday Nov. 20th. Twelve months' credit on good paper.

Post Masters.—Where the Standard is not called for, the P. M's will please destribute the papers to whom they please, and not return them, but send a card with the names of those to whom they are addressed.

A credit sale of new Furniture, Machinery, &c., belonging to the estate of the late M. E. Merriam, of Flesherton, on the 24th inst. The House, Lot and Wareroom, will also be offered for sale at the same time.

Parties visiting Priceville should patronize the Commercial Hotel. They will find the proprietor both attentive and obliging, and ready to supply them with all the requisites necessary to comfort the inner man.

Wanted.—A Boy wanted at this office, from 14 to 16 years of age, to learn the Printing business. To one who is not afraid of work this is a good opportunity—must be able to read manuscript. One from the country prefered.

Thanksgiving Day, on the whole passed off pretty quietly. The places of business were closed, and services were held in the C. M. Church. The "Boys" consumed the usual quantity of "corn juice," and the result was a visit to Squire Brown and a contribution to the Township funds of some $18.

We are compelled to omit a communication from Mr. Meldrum this week touching railway matters. The demand on our columns is so great and the increasing interest that is being taken on this important subject, makes it impossible for us to accommodate all, and therefore we must leave it over for next week.

The Bank.—Wm. Lucas & Co. have taken possession of the premises prepared for them in Hill Bros. new brick block, on the corner of Mill and Toronto streets. Parties wanting money will find it to their interest to pay them a visit, and those who are of a saving turn, can get 6 per cent. on all money entrusted to their care.

The Weather.—We see by the Toronto dailies that the American oarsman, who are at present in England complain bitterly of the weather. If it is anything like what we have had here for the past two or three weeks we pity the "boys." In fact we have had no weather at all, or, as our Americans cousins would say, too much weather all to-gether.

The Revere Hotel has changed hands, Mr. J. McCutcheon, the late proprietor retires from the business, having sold out to Mr. Thomas Sproule, formerly of the American Hotel, Owen Sound. Mr. Sproule was at one time Conductor on the T., G. & B. Railway, and has had considerable experience in hotel business, is both corteous and attentive to his customers and no doubt under his management the Revere will become a favorite with the travelling public.

Bogus Bills.—Bogus $10 bills are in circulation. The counterfeit consists in a change which is effected by neatly stretching or slitting away one half of the thickness of the bill; covering it and letting in (so to speak) with mucilage the words and figures, ten, from unless Consolidated or other Bank bills. This patchwork fraud can be detected by holding the bill up to the light and by the small imprint of the figure "five" or whatever the actual denomination of the bill may be, on various parts of the bill.

We have made arrangements with the Globe Printing Company to club the Weekly Globe with the Standard. Persons wishing to obtain it save 75c. on the subscription price by calling on us as we will furnish the Standard and the Weekly Globe for $2.50, cash, to the end of 1881, subscribers will thereby receive both papers for the balance of this year free. Each subscriber will also receive, about the first of the year, gratis a fine steel engraving of the late Hon. Geo. Brown, 14x20 inches, got up in the very best style of modern art which alone is worth more than the subscription price.

The Fifth was celebrated ... nounced previously. The proceedings commenced with a procession about 12 o'clock; and considering that there was a steady down pour of rain and mud ankle deep, was pretty fair. After parading the streets they adjourned to the Orange Hall, where a sumptuous dinner was spread, and to which ample justice was done by a goodly crowd. The bazaar we believe was a success, as most of the articles were disposed of at fair prices. After the dinner a meeting was held at Dufferin Hall, at which addresses were delivered by Dr. Sproule and others of our leading citizens. The proceedings were brought to a close by a grand concert in the evening. The crowded state of our columns will not permit of an extended review of the performance. Besides we consider it invidious to particularize where all did so well. However we cannot refrain from mentioning two pieces which in our estimation were the pieces of the evening. The "Genteel cup of Tea, by Mr. W. McDougall elicited rounds of applause, Mac. is a whole team and a horse to spare in himself, and "Matrimonial Sweets" by Miss Ingram of Orangeville, and Mr. Cæsar of this place. The other performers, who were Misses Ford, Mulholland, McDougall, Hollingshead, Spragge and Mr. C. W. Speers contributed in no small measure to the evenings entertainment, and were duly appreciated. Mrs. Vick, assisted by Miss Mulholland and Miss Ford, played the accompaniments. In announcing this fact it is not necessary for us to say that it was well done. Total amount realized $210, to be applied to the English church building fund.

COUNTY ITEMS.

An election was held at Shelburne on Saturday, to elect a councilman. The contest was between R. W. Jeffry and Hugh Carson, and was fought on the ground of bonus or no bonus in aid of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, Carson, the railway man, was elected by 12 majority.

Fire.—On the morning of the 20th ult, while Mr. Alex. Johnston, of the 11th con. of Arthur, was attending to his cattle one of his horses kicked over the lantern quickly setting fire to the stable, which was, together with the barn and contents, entrely consumed. Loss $1.200. Insured in the London Mutual for $550.—Mount Forest Confederate.

Robbery.—On Saturday night burglars entered the house of Mr. Guy Leslie, of this town, and, going to his bedroom, carried off his pants and coat, which they rifled when they got outside. They took twenty-one dollars in cash from his pockets, also his watch and bunch of keys. They then went to the post office, and while endeavouring to effect an entrance they aroused the clerk who stops in the office, and when he spoke they made off. They have not as yet been arrested.—Orangeville Advertiser.

While Mr. Geo. Rutledge, of Melancthon, with his wife and child, was returning home on Wednesday evening last, the king-bolt of the waggon broke, opposite Lot 16, Con. 4 (old survey), the veichle being suddenly deprived of the support of the front wheels its occupants were thrown to the ground. Strange to say, however the child received no harm, and we are happy to say that Mr. Rutledge and his wife received only a few slight bruises.—Shelburne Free Press

How seldom do we hear of a murderer, who expiates his crime upon the gallows, dying without a "bright hope of a glorious immortality," and the Collingwood Messenger's remarks on the subject are both pithy and truthful. It says:

"In Saturday's issue or despatch recorded the hanging of a negro in North Carolina, and, as usual we are told he went galloping up to Heaven. This thing is growing monotonous, and for the sake of variety we would like to hear of a murderer taking a race across lots the other way occasionally. The prospect of singing praises forever at the right hand of the throne is too attractive a chromo altogether, to offer as a sure premium for murder, and the business should stop. It is singular that ministers and other sentimental and religious people make such herculean efforts to pre-empt the best locations in glory for bloody handed murderers, while these people—parsons included—will allow a poor girl who makes a mistake to go whooping to perdition."

MARRIED

At Maxwell, on the 6th inst, at the Methodist Parsonage, by the Rev. Mr. Snowden, Mr F. L. Tuck. of Maxwell, to Miss Annie Wright, of Priceville.

DIED.

In Markdale, on the 6th inst., Arthur P Bowes, youngest son of W. J. McFarland, aged 2 years and 8 months.

In Markdale, on the 6th inst, Elliott Mary, daughter of Mrs. S. Caswell, aged 3 years and 3 months.

In Scarboro, on the 10th inst., Arthur, only son of John Vanhorn, of this place, aged 4 years, 3 months, and 27 days.

In Markdale, on the 6th inst., Florence Ada, daughter of John and Annie Benson, aged 1 year, 8 months, and 23 days.

In Priceville, on the 5th inst, John Robert, infant son of Mr. Thos. Conkey.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKER,
MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 2-y

Public Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the new road open through lots 99, 100, and 101, on the 3rd concession W. T. & S. R., in the township of Glenelg, is not properly established.

The corporation of the township of Glenelg not having any title to the road through said lots, will not be responsible for any accident that may happen on said road.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk. FINLAY MacRAE, Reeve.

Township of Glenelg, Oct. 19, 1880. 6d.

NOTICE.

GEORGE NIXON,

Toronto House,
DUNDALK,

Have on hand a full stock, including

TEAS, SUGARS, AND GENERAL GROCERIES.

Crockery, Glassware and Lamps

In great variety and at prices to suit the people.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

The largest and best Stock in Town, at Lowest Prices.

DRY GOODS!

My Stock in this department is now complete, and contains the newest lines in Plain and Fancy Dress Goods, Winceys, Shirtings, Flannels, Blankets Clouds, Scarfs, and a choice selection of Tweeds.

READY-MADE CLOTHING.—Overcoats—a large Stock. Suits, Shirts, Drawers, Overalls, &c.

HATS, CAPS AND FURS.—A large assortment of A 1 Goods. Also everything else to be found in a First-Class General Store.

The above Goods have all been purchased in the best Markets, and will be sold at BOTTOM PRICES for CASH or PRODUCE.

Dundalk, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-4i

"Time and Tide Wait FOR NO MAN."
DON'T YOU WAIT!

They are selling fast, those justly celebrated Watches. You want one. Will give you special quotations for cash and show you a Large Stock to select from. Am showing some beautiful things in

SILVERWARE!

Being suitable for Wedding presents, &c. Some extra bargains in Parlor and Bedroom Clocks!

Large Weight Clocks at $3.50.

Diamond & Wedding Rings!

Very low. Also a comple stock of Gold Chains, Sets, Lockets, Necklets, Pins, Chains, &c., &c., all at the very lowest net cash prices. When in Flesherton give me a call.

☞ Watch repairing a specialty. All work is warranted.

Wm. F. DOLL, Watchmaker, &c.,
FLESHERTON AND DUNDALK,
6

MARKDALE.

WM. FOX,
Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!

GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,
Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!
in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!
promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

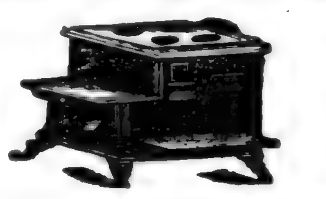
GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.



At the New Tinshop
MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.
ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!
made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil; JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-tf

Legacies! Pensions! Bounties!

Parties having any of the above claims to investigate will please communicate with me at once.

A. G. [illegible],
Claim Agent.
Dundalk P. O., County Grey.

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres
FOR SALE,
One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood. (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.
Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

Meat for All
AT
W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP
as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill sreott, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continnance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept, 17th 1880. 1

Money Lost!

By those who buy stoves before going to

J. GARDINER'S
Dundalk.

Best and Cheapest stock of

STOVES and TINWARE

North of Toronto. 6

FOR SALE.

20 CHARMS—Snowflake, Granite, Wedding, Marble, Basket, (comic china), Mottled Stone, Ashes of Roses, &c., Cards with name on all, 10 cents.

Address, J. A. BROLLEY, Box 79 Creemore P.O. Simcoe, Ont. 5-4,

STRAYED.

Came into the premises of the subscriber, near Berkeley, about the first of October, a yearling steer. The owner is requested to prove property pay expenses and take him away.

WALLACE DRING.

Nov. 1st, 1880. 8-3

THE CHURCH.

WHEREAS Graves have of late been dug in the Church Yard of Christ Church without the consent of the authorities.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That any person so offending in the future will be prosecuted for trespass.

(Signed) R. COLEMAN, THOS. ELLIOTT, Jr., Church-wardens.

Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-3

Samuel Morrow,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.

Sales attended at shortest notice in town or country. Charges moderate.

Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps furnished if required. Having had long experience in the business I can guarantee satisfaction.

Markdale, Sept. 14th, 1880. 3-1m.

"FACTS CANNA BE DENIED."

BUTTER & RAE

Thank the public and friends in general for the liberal support they have received since commencing business, and will still strive to do a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery spoken or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

The NOBBIEST CLOTHING!

In the County at

McFARLAND'.

See his $5.00 Overcoats.
See his $10 Ulsters.
See his $12 Suit.
See his $16 dress suit.
500 pairs of Boots

To choose from—Men, Women and Children's. Get your AXES at McFarland's. Those $2.50 MANTLES selling fast. New DRESS GOODS at McFarland's. New FLANNELS at McFarland's. New SHAWLS at McFarland's. New BONNETS and HATS at McFarland's. New TWEEDS at McFarland's. New CARPETS at McFarland's. New Fringes, Buttons, Silks, Laces, Flowers and Feathers. Prices never were lower or value better. A comparison solicited.

W. J. McFARLAND,
IMPORTER, Markdale.

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Water-proof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

—AT THE—

"TORONTO HOUSE,"
MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail Warehouse

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.,

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce.

☞ INSPECTION INVITED.

WM. HOGG,
Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880. 1

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the summer, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

—IN—

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!
CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistant with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER,

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mill.

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERALL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions,

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received.

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

☞ EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT. ☜

Markdale, October 1, 1880. 2-y

Removed! Removed.

HILL BROTHERS,

Would intimate to their numerous friends and the public generally, that they have removed to their new premises, and will be pleased to receive a call from our many friends and customers. Call and see us. We will GIVE YOU BARGAINS. WE MEAN BUSINESS.

SEE OUR

Cheap Dress Goods,
Lustres,
Wincies,
Laces,
And Fringes,

Gents, see our CLOTHING. They are Stylish, Good CHEAP.

SEE OUR TWEEDS!

You will find them right in Price and Quality.

Boots and Shoes a Specialty.

Call and get a sample of our Splendid TEAS.

Gentlemen we have a splendid SMOKING TOBACCO, at 40c per lb. Try it.

We again give a general invitation to inspect our Stock. Have not time to write long advertisements. Don't believe in them. Would rather have the Goods speak for themselves.

Thanking you for past favors, and trust to have a continuance of the same.

HILL BROS.

Markdale, Nov. 4, 1880. 1-y

Sea Music.

The tide rises, the tide falls,
The twilight darkens, the curfew calls;
Along the sea sands damp and brown
The traveller hastens toward the town,
And the tide rises, the tide falls.

Darkness settles on roofs and walls,
But the sea in the darkness calls and calls;
The little waves with their soft white hands
Efface the footprints in the sands,
And the tide rises, the tide falls.

The morning breaks: the steeds in their stalls
Stamp and neigh as the hostler calls;
The day returns, but nevermore
Returns the traveller to the shore,
And the tide rises, the tide falls.

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH CAREY.

We have been talking of Judith. Sir Martin Napine called on me this morning. The sight of him awakened painful memories, memories I would fain exorcise from my heart and brain. Judith has not been found. All endeavours have proved vain. She has disappeared, we know not where. She is not forgotten. Sir Martin still searches, although he almost despairs of finding her.

A curious life has Silas Thornton led since the night his wife left him. Plunging into dissipation, he has revealed himself in the true colours. Sometimes we cannot but be thankful that Judith escaped from him. If one half the rumours abroad concerning him are to be credited, he is verily a mauvais sujet—a man from whom a carefully-nurtured woman must shrink with intense loathing. Sir Martin has tried to stay him in his downward career; but no expostulations, entreaties, or warnings have availed. Steadily has he gone down hill for months past. Just now he is in London. Ellerslie is quiet, and sober folks are grateful; the orgies in that once decorous domain have been enough to cause its dead to tremble and awake.

Dale comes in, strides across the room, and kisses me.

"You look capital!" he declares. "Deb, it is a glorious day, warm as August; will you come for a drive?"

I glance at mamma. Mrs. Ord starts up and openly rubs her eyes—the dear old lady frankly confesses to a penchant for afternoon naps.

"Dale, do not be rash," she begins; but I assert that I am quite well, and should enjoy going out exceedingly. After some demur consent is won. Cosily cloaked, I am assisted to the carriage by my husband, mamma's last words being an injunction not to be too venturesome, and to get home ere the wind grows cool.

"Where shall we go?" Dale asks. "Little mother, it is jolly to have you to myself again. I am quite jealous. I seem to have lost you lately."

"Let us call on Will," I propose. "I want to see the Vicarage again."

Dale touches the horses lightly, and we skim rapidly along.

Will is at home. He welcomes us, and insists on our going in. A cup of tea, he says, will do me good; and his tea is ready. Dale carries me in his strong arms, puts me in the easy-chair, and removes my wraps with fingers deft as a woman's. While Will pours out tea I look about me. Everything is as it was when I was here. I smile at Will's handiness. He milks and sugars the tea with mathematical exactness. Dale brings me a cup. I am waited on by them assiduously, as though a being of inestimable value. We chat gaily; but my sight grows dim as I note the change in Will. Ah, Will, sorrow and anguish have pressed you sorely! Would that I could give you that which would recompense you for your great suffering!

Tea over, I insist on staying just ten minutes. It is so pleasant to sit by the fire while the red sun shines in at the windows. I am snug, and am reluctant to move; but at last I rise, for I know it is unwise to linger. I button my cloak, Will watching me; Dale has gone to see to the horses. Will is about to speak; his lips move, but I am not destined to hear his words. Truefit, the servant, enters hastily.

"A telegram for you, sir," she says, putting a yellow envelope into his hand.

He opens it carelessly and reads the lines; then his face changes.

"What is it?" I cry. I fear I know not what, so singular is the tremor that passes over him.

"It is from the house-surgeon at King's College Hospital. Silas Thornton is dying. They have sent for me."

"Dying!"

"Yes, thrown from his carriage. Read."

I do so; but I gather no more than he has told me. Silas is dying, and Will is wanted.

TOLD BY AN ONLOOKER.

William Carey travels by the express to London, arriving in town very late at night. Early morning finds him alert and anxious. He is at the hospital before the hour for visitors; but his card and a brief explanation gain him admittance. The house-surgeon comes to see him, and Will recognises in him an old schoolmate.

"Why, Merivale!" he cries, and for a moment Will's errand is forgotten while the men go over the history of the years during which they have lost sight of each other. It is so long since they were boys together, inseparable chums, that it is not astonishing they forget the present, and talk eagerly, boyishly, of the days that are no more. At last Will says, with a twinge of compunction, "I have come to see Mr. Thornton. You telegraphed for me?"

"To be sure, to be sure. And to think the Reverend William Carey and you are one!"

"How is he?" Will speaks hastily, afraid of drifting again into reminiscences. "How came you to send for me?"

"Your card was found on him. You will see him at once?"

"Yes. Is he very bad?"

"So bad that there is no chance of his being better. He is dying."

Will's face darkens. "How did it happen?"

"An accident—thrown from his victoria; horses became unmanageable; man-servant took fright jumped from his box. Mr. Thornton was flung out injured beyond cure. Come."

Will follows the Doctor. Silas Thornton lies where they first placed him. He is not in a private room. Had he been able to be moved he would have been; but, as he is, it is best to let him be. He is conscious; faint groans escape yet from the drawn mouth, his eyes are open, and their pupils a little dilated; he can speak, but only in a spasmodic gasping fashion. He is incapable of movement. Death is creeping upwards, the heart is failing and temperature sinking; a little longer, and all will be over. Will gazes at him with pitiful tender eyes; and observes, with indescribable compassion, the wild revolt against the fate which has so unexpectedly stricken him—the futile mad longing to live. The bed is as smooth and still as though life were thoroughly extinct. Will lays his hand on the coverlet, and Silas Thornton looks at him keenly.

"Ah!" he whispers.

Then his eyes rove elsewhere; Will's do likewise. A curious faintness comes over him; for one instant Will doubts his own sanity; the next he knows he is under no delusion. By Silas Thornton's bed is Judith. She does not move towards him, but her eyes meet his. Will says softly—

"You here?"

"Yes: I am a nurse. I was here when they brought him in. I have not left him. I am his wife." The dying man hears and understands.

"Judith," he cries; and she bends over him. "Forgive!"

She puts her fingers to his brow.

"Ay," she answers, "I forgive—and you?"

"If I could undo it I would. I did not know."

She does not weep; her face is very calm; only the trembling of her lips indicates pain. The Doctor glances away. He is used to scenes of anguish, but in this one there is an entirely new feature—husband and wife meeting after long separation, only to part finally. It matters not that on neither side does love exist; they are one. Judith realises the truth as she kneels beside him. A great regret distresses her. She cannot do aught for this man for whom she should do so much. Will watches her. He too kneels down.

"Let us pray," he says.

When he rises the fierce light has faded from Silas Thornton's eyes. Will fancies that he wishes to speak to him, and he draws nearer.

"I am going. Be kind to her—make up——"

His voice is weak; Will's promise reaches him, and then Will goes to Judith.

"I will leave you a while," he says. "I will come again soon. I shall find you here?"

"Yes. Will it be——"

She shrinks. Doctor Merrivale interposes. "It will not be long. You must have some nourishment."

When outside, Will hesitates. What has befallen him? He is as one in a trance. Judith is found; and, in spite of all the sadness, the gloom of the finding, he is glad—glad with a joy no words can convey.

Will hastens to the telegraph-office. He must send the tidings to those whose hearts are bound to the woman he has left. Two messages are sent, one to Sir Martin, the other to his sister Deborah.

"Silas Thornton is dying fast. Judith is with him."

Then he returns to the hospital, to wait until Doctor Merrivale comes to him. Will will not intrude on Judith. The Doctor's countenance is grave. Will comprehends before he says, "It is all over; he is dead!"

Judith, in her black dress, is close to her father, and he clasps her hands lovingly. A feverish flush is on her cheek, and her eyes are gleaming with great joy. She has heard the story of her mother's death—heard what drove her father into exile, how he refuted the charge brought against him of being guilty of his father's murder; and, as her last question is answered, she casts herself on Sir Martin's breast, her tears raining down.

"Oh, my father, you proved yourself stainless!" she cries.

"Yes."

He presses her to him; and for a time they are silent, Judith thinking what might have been, he absorbed in studying her sweet oval face. Presently he rouses himself and kisses her.

"My dear," he says; "what have you been doing since you left Ellerslie?"

His arm is about her, and he feels the tremor that runs through her. She replies concisely—

"I came to London, to my foster-mother, Dallas. She welcomed me kindly. I had not been with her many days when she sickened with fever, and I nursed her. The doctor who attended her told me I had all the qualifications of a good nurse. I enquired if he could get me employment, and he recommended me to the hospital. When Dallas was well I went there, and there remained until you took me away. My holidays have been spent with Dallas."

"Ay, you were very near while we searched for you! Oh, my child, how I longed to behold you! I had grown to fear that you were not living."

"I did not know," she says contritely.

"Why did you not write? You had friends—Deborah and Mr. Carey."

A blush dyes her cheek, and the white lids droop over the glistening eyes.

"I was best to be forgotten."

"Forgotten! Judith, Judith, who once loving you could forget you?"

The reproachful words sting her. She caresses him.

"Father, did I do very wrong in leaving Silas? I did not mean to do so; but, when he taunted me with my stained birth, when he avowed that he rued our marriage, how could I help fleeing from him? Should I have stayed in spite of all?"

Sir Martin scrutinizes her steadily. Her secret is his.

"You did not love him?" he murmurs.

"No."

She clings to him, and he kisses her again. She twines her arms round his neck despairingly, frantically—as though fearful that he will cast her off. She is not capable of deceit or disguise. He consoles her with a mother's solicitude.

"It was altogether a mistake," he says thoughtfully. "My daughter, his fault was of a darker shade than yours, and you forgave him." She sobs less brokenly; and he goes on, healing her wounds skilfully, bravely. "To err is human; and you, my darling, are but mortal. You have atoned as far as lay in your power; you must leave the past and its shadows, and be happy—be happy." He smooths her glossy hair. "Judith, I have not tasted happiness for many years. But, amid all my troubles, in all my wanderings, I have loved my motherless girl. Can you give me a little love?"

"My dear father"—she kisses him passionately—"we will be all in all to each other. I have no one but you to love."

"That is well," he says quaintly. "You might love me less had you a divided heart; and now I must go. I have an appointment with Mr. Carey."

If he imagines that the colour will surge to her face he is disappointed. She bows her head, and he quits her. Quiescent she remains, dreaming a strange involved dream in which our father and William Carey principally figure.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR.

By the Author of "A Strange Friendship," &c.

CHAPTER III.—CONTINUED.

I felt it a great relief when Mr. Vane shook hands with me—and a very cold and reluctant hand it was which I gave him—and wished me "Good-bye," and rode away.

But in a day or two he was back again, with some excuse or other for his intrusion; and my father, who had taken a certain fancy to him, somewhat encouraged his visits.

Cyril Vane was a well-educated man, with a mind by no means of a commonplace order. When he chose he could talk well and make himself very agreeable; but I did not like him, and Mrs. Holland's opinion coincided with mine.

"He is false, Miss Cathie," she said; "false, and heartless too. Do not you be taken in with him, my dear," she added, as an after-thought.

I laughed, and told her there was no danger. But his incessant attentions were very oppressive to me. I was exceedingly fond of riding, and much attached to my own horse "Gladiator." The name suited him. He was strong and swift rather than handsome. In fact, I fear many would have pronounced him too clumsily built for a lady's horse. Still, he had a well-shaped head, and beautiful gentle eyes. I have ridden him from dawn to dark on a long summer's day, and when we reached home at night he was not fatigued, nor was I. Every morning I paid him a visit, and he would come galloping across the paddock in a moment at the sound of the silver whistle I carried with me.

One day I set forth on a long ride and quite alone. In the Colonies one is less trammeled by ceremony and etiquette than in England, and one does not necessarily require an attendant when out riding.

I thought when I looked at myself in the glass before setting out that I appeared sober and sedate enough to be sure of attracting no attention during my expedition. My riding-habit was of black cloth. I had a black felt helmet-shaped hat, with a plain band of crape round it. My linen collar and cuffs were simply fastened with silver studs. But I was not to escape so easily, as it turned out.

At one very lonely part of the road I had the misfortune to break my stirrup-leather, and my stirrup dropped to the ground. I was a long way from home, and riding any distance without a support to the foot is fatiguing work for a lady.

I therefore dismounted, desired Gladiator to stand still, and I set to work to mend the broken strap with the aid of a penknife and some strong string, which I always carried with me in the pocket of my saddle ready for a similar emergency.

While I was thus occupied, who should appear riding round the bend of the road but Cyril Vane.

I knew the dark pale face and the bright black eyes well enough by this time. Of course he dismounted at once, and was all sympathy; and, taking the knife from my hand, he insisted on completing the task I was engaged on.

When the stirrup-leather was mended and he was once more in the saddle, he still rode on by my side. He declared that his business lay in the exact direction in which I was myself going; and, though I doubted the assertion, I had no means of disproving it.

But I was not to be taken captive so easily as he imagined, and I saw my way to a means of getting rid of him which he little dreamt of. There was a short cut across the paddock to my own home, and just past the next bend of the road was a gate, or rather one of the old-fashioned slip-panels, so much used in the early days of the colony. My father had often talked of having it replaced by a proper gate, but he had hitherto neglected to do so.

As we came down the road at a canter, I watched my opportunity, nodded "good-bye" to my companion, and put Gladiator at the bars. Cyril Vane looked aghast for a moment; but I knew my horse, and my horse understood me.

Before Mr. Vane had recovered from his amazement, Gladiator and I were galloping away down the paddock, and I did not check his speed until I came in sight of my own home.

CHAPTER IV.

After the rudeness of which I had been guilty towards Cyril Vane, I fully expected that he would take offence, and spare me the annoyance of his society for the future.

No such thing! The very next day he was back again, and in my father's house. Courtesy demanded that I should show some hospitality to his guest.

It was evening, and I was walking about the garden, thinking sadly of my lost sister Rose. It was just about this hour that I had last seen her in life. Cyril Vane was following me everywhere, speaking little, and sometimes moodily breaking off the head of a flower with the riding-whip he carried in his hand.

At last, as he switched off the head of a beautiful white carnation just as I was about to gather it, I could not help exclaiming—

"Oh, how provoking!" I threw an indignant glance at him over my shoulder as I spoke.

"Miss Cathie," he said suddenly, with a frown darkening his face, "why do you dislike me so much?"

I parried the question as well as I could, without telling an absolute untruth.

"Why should you suppose that I dislike you?" I asked in reply.

"I see it in every look you give me," he answered moodily. "In every word you speak to me I hear the same. You don't address your horse in the same tone you use to me."

"How could you expect it!" I said, laughing, with a touch of scorn in my mischievous answer. "Gladiator is my very dearest friend."

"I wish I were your horse, then, to have that title given to me," he said. And he tried to catch my eyes as he spoke.

I would not look at him. I thought that the conversation was going too far.

Yet his answer was not that of a lover, as I fancied it ought to be. There was a certain coldness in his admiration, which was nevertheless genuine, as I could instinctively feel.

I thought of Mrs. Holland's remark, "He is not a gentleman to love very warmly. I have seen some who were of a different make." And then my thoughts flew off—where?

To the only man I had ever seen who had aroused my interest for a moment, yet who had entirely disappeared from my range of vision, and had never, so far as I knew, taken the trouble even to inquire after me since. Need I say that it was Noel Beresford?

"Won't you look at me, Miss Cathie?" entreated Cyril quite humbly, in spite of my disdain.

"No," I said, plainly and firmly.

He frowned darkly.

"You will not escape me so easily as you think," he said. "I have made up my mind to win you, and I tell you so openly, in defiance of the displeasure which makes you look so unspeakably charming. But I can bide my time, as you will see."

Having fired this parting shot, he at last wished me "good evening," and went away.

The next day my father summoned me into the room he used as his especial sanctum, half library, half office, and desired me to sit down, as he had something of importance to say to me. I obeyed his request, and seated myself opposite to him.

The light from the long window behind me fell full upon his face, and I thought he was looking very ill, and he had aged greatly during the last few weeks. He had been intensely proud of my beautiful sister, and had taken her death much to heart.

The painful and mysterious manner in which her life had ended had affected his nerves, and I knew that the doctor who attended him had ordered him an entire change of air and scene as soon as possible. I was scarcely prepared, however, for what was to come.

"I have sent for you Cathie," said my father, "to speak to you concerning a matter in which you are greatly interested. You are aware that I am anxious to pay a visit home to the old country as soon as ever I can wind up my affairs here. But you are not aware of what I grieve to say is the case, that I cannot afford to take you with me. I am sorry to say that my affairs are in rather an embarrassed condition, and, without entering into details of business which you would not understand, it will be sufficient for me if I tell you that it is necessary for me shortly to sell this house and the estate around it. In these circumstances, the question is, what will best secure your happiness and insure you another comfortable home?"

He waited a few moments, and coughed rather nervously before he attempted to proceed.

I was feeling rather cold and frightened, and was wondering anxiously what was to come next. At last he resumed.

"Yesterday I received a request from Mr. Vane that I would allow of his visiting here, with a view to his gaining your esteem and affection. In short, he begged me to intercede with you that you would become his wife."

"Oh, no, no!" I cried impetuously, almost before he had finished speaking.

My father raised his hand as if to check my excitement; he was always too reserved, too dignified in manner for his daughters ever to feel quite at ease with him.

"Think it well over, Cathie," he said, before you attempt to decide either one way or the other. I have just warned you that you cannot expect to retain this house as your home much longer, and at this exact crisis in my affairs a respectable and tolerably wealthy man, of fairly good family, I believe, though I confess that of his relatives I know next to nothing, has come forward, and offered you a home and a position in every respect equal to your present one, and has promised besides to make a handsome settlement upon you. Which would you prefer—to marry Mr. Vane, or to go out as a governess? I confess that I see no alternative."

Ah, it was a cruel decision which he called upon me to make! Is there anything more terrible to a woman than to find that she is in danger of losing her home, and being turned out to seek the mercy of a cold and pitiless world?

I saw at once that my father had made up his mind that I should marry Cyril Vane, and, when he had once resolved upon carrying any point, his will was of iron.

There comes a time when children judge their parents with the eyes of grown-up men and women, and not with the old awe and reverence of childhood.

I can see now that my father, lenient and indulgent even to carelessness in trifling matters, was a good deal of a tyrant in concerns of greater importance.

I sat quite still and said nothing; I felt singularly hopeless. My father rose and dismissed me.

"Think it well over, my dear Cathie," he said. "Don't try to decide at once. Mr. Vane is willing to wait any reasonable time for an answer to this proposal. I need scarcely tell you what my opinion is concerning your true interests. You may never receive such an offer again, I beg you to remember. In the meantime I have given Mr. Vane permission to come here as often as he pleases."

I rose to leave the room, and my heart was sore within me, but it softened towards my father when the light fell strongly on his hair, fast turning white, and I noticed once again how ill and care-worn he looked.

Who should pay us a visit that very evening but Herbert Tempest! We had seen so little of him since my sister's death, that his arrival was a surprise to me.

I was seated at the piano, singing softly to myself in the gloaming, when he walked in unannounced, just as he used to do, and laid his hand upon the back of my chair.

"I congratulate you, Cathie," were his first words. "I heard a rumour that you were likely to change your name, and I have come to offer you my best wishes."

"Oh, Herbert," I said indignantly, "who could have told you such a falsehood?"

"Is it not true then?" he inquired, with some surprise. "I was told that your father had given his consent, and that the affair was to come off very shortly."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Gambler's Method of Winning.

A German baron, who had been playing heavily at "makao," at the Pesth National Casino, and had, during a few months, won $40,000, was discovered cheating recently in a very curious way. He always appeared anxious to "take the bank," by which means he of course always dealt. He kept down the pile of bank-notes in front of him with a polished silver tobacco-box. He dealt over this, and could thus see the cards he dealt his players reflected in the lid of the box! A certain general of the staff observed this, and begged for the loan of the box to roll a cigarette. This request he frequently repeated, and observed that when the box was away the baron had variable luck like the others. The lucky gambler, a well-known racing man and of excellent family, is to be prosecuted as a common swindler.

THE Earl of Cawdor and party, numbering six guns, recently succeeded in bagging the extraordinary number of 566 hares in one day. Gamekeepers and gillies were, of course, unable to carry them, and they were conveyed to the castle in carts.

Hon. Edward Blake.

(From the Toronto Truth.)

Some may think that it is rather too much for TRUTH at such an early stage of its career to meddle with the leader of Her Majesty's opposition, and to indicate what it thinks of Edward Blake's antecedents and prospects. TRUTH claims no "society" privileges. It has never played "peeping Tom" either to Mr. Blake or any other person. It knows nothing of "celebrities at home" and has never "interviewed" any one for purposes either of admiration or integrity. Edward Blake is to TRUTH an object of interest, simply as any man of the last century might be, and were he a mummy or mollusc could not be regarded with greater impartiality or spoken of with greater freedom and independence. In these days of strong party feeling it is thought only dutiful and right to speak of the leader of the particular "party" in terms of exaggerated eulogy, and of those "over the way" with a corresponding twist in the opposite direction. TRUTH has no party or personal ends to save, no axes to grind, no great man to propitiate, and can therefore speak the thing as it is without fear and without favor, whether Sir John's career is under the microscope or Edward Blake kindly gives a sitting for his photograph.

The mere historical facts in Mr. Blake's life, have had nothing about them of startling interest and importance. His course from birth onward has been eminently respectable; but the materials for history supplied by it have neither been many or exciting. It is vain to potter about his genealogical tree or try and connect him with the great and good of bye-gone centuries. No doubt, industrious antiquarians could trace his descent from the Irish Kings, and could prove to a demonstration that at the time of the flood his progenitor of the day had a yacht of his own. TRUTH leaves that congenial work to coming members of the great family of Dryasdust, and thinks it sufficient in the meantime to confess to as great an amount of ignorance in reference to the doings and sayings of the Humes and the Blakes in all their ramifications, septs and settlements, as those of the Poops and the Nincoms, who also had large branches in Ireland, some of whom emigrated to, and have taken firm and permanent root in this new land. The business is not with Mr. Blake's forefathers, but with himself, for he is not to be spoken of as if he were a potato, with by far the best part under the ground, and likely to remain there. He has no need to fall back upon his fore fathers to show his right to something like recognition and honour, and so let them pass. Decent respectable people, no doubt they were in their day, who duly transmitted some of the physical vigour, and mental and moral peculiarities to those who came after them, but were nothing in any way so remarkable but that after having served their day and generation, they do not rightfully fall asleep and remain undisturbed, by either professional biographers, or word painters, who can make commonplace, sublime, or colour respectability, heroic, at so much the column or the hour, or the yard as the case may be. If Edward Blake cannot make any great show genealogically, he can do something better, for he can claim an ancestry of modest goodness, and while his father made for himself a local reputation, as he did, he himself has no need, as some sons unfortunately have, to fall back upon, and live on its conditions as his only heritage, and his one exclusive merit. He is not exactly the Rodolph of his family, but he might as well have been, for he has neither risen nor does he continue to stand, because he is his father's son.

It would be difficult to wax eloquent over the stumps of Adelaide Township, or a descriptive sketch of the log cabin, in which Edward Blake first saw the light. All that, will come in due time, and has partly come already, and has even again been buried and forgotten. Sufficient to know, that almost from first to last, Mr. Blake has been a citizen of Toronto, and has gradually come to be both a celebrated and an honoured one. There was, so far as tradition goes, no special precocity about his early years. He grew up in propitious circumstances a vigorous healthy boy and lad, with nothing of the prodigy about him and with nobody, as far as can be seen or learned, dreaming dreams about his future greatness, or making him out as the "coming man," of a coming race. Healthy, happy, physically vigorous, mentally active, morally, pure, strong, exuberant even sometimes to the extent of being boisterous, with a touch of masterfulness about him, which never got the length of being offensive, and never tempted him to play the bully or the tyrant, he led his free young life, the very reverse of a prig, but also the antipodes of a mere idler. No slave to the midnight oil, yet with a large capacity for work, and for a time, at any rate, doing that work rather by spurts than by steady systematized application, he at last graduated with honours, but without any affluence of scholarship or any great weight of varied and curious learning. Living, henceforth, a busy professional and public life, he has not been in a position to add greatly to his early stores of scholastic acquirement, and is now to be spoken of not as a ripe scholar, but as a scholarly lawyer, a clear thinker, an eloquent speaker, an eminent statesman, and a generally accomplished man.

Professionally, Mr. Blake's career has been one of unbroken and remarkable success. He came to the front rank among his legal brethren almost from the very first, and in his own special department has now for a long time and universally, been recognized as facile princeps among the gentlemen of the Dominion learned in the law.

That in certain respects he has been as successful politically will also be generally acknowledged, but still in this his triumphs have not been so conspicuous, and his future is neither so brilliant nor so secure. To a greater or less extent he has been in public life for rather more than thirteen years, and during all that time has occupied a very prominent place in the general politics of Canada, as well as in the more local discussions of his own Province. That he has done good and fruitful work during all that time is beyond anything like reasonable dispute. As leader of the Reform Opposition in the Local House, and for a season first Minister of the Crown in Ontario, he made his mark, and the record he has left is both a fair and an honourable one. As a member of the House of Commons, and one of the Reform Dominion Government, it has not been Mr. Blake's lot to play so conspicuous or influential a part. His reputation in that position, as a debater, has remained undimmed, and his faculty for departmental work has also been equally conspicuous, but the state of his health for a long portion of the time has been unsatisfactory, and may have helped to give an unsettled and generally a somewhat disappointing character to his proceedings. It may be said that his position was somewhat anomalous, but in what respects it was so to any greater extent than that of any of his associates does not very easily appear. That he was in the highest degree loyal to Mr. Mackenzie his political leader, will not be questioned by any one sufficiently acquainted with the facts to be justified in expressing an opinion on the subject. But at the same time it is undeniable that the Mackenzie Government did not receive that amount of strength and encouragement which might have been reckoned on from Mr. Blake's presence and reputation. Perhaps it is after all a fact that politics have not any very special charms for a man of Mr. Blake's temperament and tastes. He can go into the work and do the very best service possible when he is at it. But it is doubtful if he is ever fairly at home in its details and if he does not always turn with pleasure and a sense of relief from its necessary drudgeries. He is not a master in the small arts necessary to secure a certain kind of very useful popularity. He can never be hail good fellow well met to every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the political wigwam, and has no faculty for persuading even the feeblest of the lot that he is individually perfectly indispensable. In reality he is not cold, but unfortunately he has a good deal of a cold exterior, and while his seeming hauteur is more to be set down to shyness than supercilious contempt, the great mass of those whom it is a political leader's interests to conciliate, will never be able to comprehend how such a man as Edward Blake can be bashful, and will therefore persist in the belief that he is proud, if not positively insolent. It is a misfortune that he is short-sighted, and even his reputation as a master of sarcasm makes his friends sometimes nervous to as great an extent as it makes his opponents positively timid. He is now in name, as well as in fact, leader of the Reform party, and it remains to be seen whether he can remarshal its somewhat broken ranks, and lead the reorganized battalions again to victory. His friends have great hopes. It is but the simple fact that his opponents have not any great fears about the issue. A political leader to be successful must be nothing else. It will take all his time and tax all his energies to master all the details of the situation, to study individual characters, to watch and guide the several currents of thought and action, to keep himself fully en rapport with the leaders of his party, and carefully to master and counter work the tactics of his opponents.—He can't afford to take everything or much at second-hand, and while he sees with others' eyes and hears with others' ears, he must at any rate know all about the eyes and ears on which he depends, and be able to show that he is not dependent on them after all. But Mr. Blake is not doing this, and more than that he has never done it. Law has been and is his honoured lawful wedded wife, and he has treated her with all the courtesy, attention, and devotion which such an one will have. Politics, if he will excuse the reference even though for a moment, and allow it to pass in the most Pickwickian of senses, has been at best scarcely more than a casual mistress with whom he might be pleased to flirt for an idle hour; but from whose company he ever turns with a feeling of relief to the staid and more congenial society of his honoured and wedded spouse. As it has been in the past so is it to-day. Politics have not been, are not now, and we more than doubt if they ever will become, Mr. Blake's business, his thought by day, his dream by night, that for which he is ready to cast law with all its attractions and all its fees to the winds, and be, and do, and live for it alone. Ready on this account to flatter the vain, to cultivate the vulgar, and to bear even with the foolish and the presumptuous. If Mr. Blake could bring himself to do this, there is nothing in the way of practical and even theoretic statesmanship, which he might not hope to achieve. But will he? Can he? That is the question! that's the difficulty. Never had a man a larger, or more earnest body of the youth, aye, and of the old too, of the land, willing to be led, anxious that he should be the leader. But will he do it? Are his habits, his peculiarities, his very excellencies such that he can do so, even though he wished? The time for answering that momentous question in any way but one, is quickly slipping past. While he dallies with law, and lets politics drift, the fine edge of hope is being dulled; enthusiasm subsides; more or less disappointment supervenes. And the party is still a chaos, more or less comforting itself with a Macawber policy, of waiting for the something to turn up, if with any at all. What is to be the issue? Who shall say? In the meantime, even Edward Blake cannot be a great lawyer and a great politician at the same time. To attempt this, is to fail, and for him to fail now, is to fail for ever.

A Benevolent "Old Salt."

On a certain winter's day, not many years since, an uncommonly cold northwestern blistered the Atlantic coast. Over toward the sand-dunes which protect a particular bay from the sea a man is fighting his way across the frozen surface in the face of the bitter gale. His objective is a house on the midland near the shore. The contrast between the luxurious warmth and coziness of the interior of this house and the cold desolation which prevails without would furnish ample material for the modern artistic "symphony" in color. After a hard struggle the man reaches the shore; under his arm flutters a paper parcel.

He enters the kitchen of this particular house, and with merely a nod to the cook seats himself in silence by the fire. He is perhaps sixty years of age—an ancient mariner whom many battles with the elements have rendered uncommonly reticent and uncommunicative. His head is bald, but an enormous tuft upon the chin makes amends for this deficiency, and adds to the grim solemnity of his appearance. At a recent revival, after fifty years' practical contemplation of life in various portions of the globe, he experienced religion. Friends and his dead wife's mother had hoped that under this soothing influence he might develop more genial methods of expression; but he was a man, as we have said, in whom experience had confirmed a natural reticence. When the moment arrived in which by some sign or word of mouth he was, before the assembled multitude, to show his ripeness for grace, a great silence fell on the congregation. With no change of countenance he arose in his place, faced to the northeast, the point from which he had always encountered the hardest gales, and roared out, as if addressing a man at the mast-head, "Look a here! I want religion, and I'm bound to have it!" This said, he dropped back into seat, silent, and grim. No change was observed in his deportment; he had satisfied the exigencies of the conventional village life. Under no influence could he be induced to alter or soften the angles of his brief but emphatic vocabulary. On the particularly cold day which I have mentioned he was moved by another sentiment, for snugly tucked in blankets on the upper floor of the house in which he was then seated, a newly born infant lay sleeping. From the mother, surrounded by every attainable luxury and comfort, this ancient mariner had once accepted a signal service, for which, up to this time, he had never given any sign of appreciative recognition. On this occasion for twenty minutes or more he sat by the fire grimly ruminating. Finally he started up, and taking from under his arm the package which he had thus jealously guarded during the entire session, he advanced and placed it on the table.

"Look a here," he said to the cook, "I understand Y——'s woman" (Anglice wife) "is hove to with a baby"—here he paused, and nodded assent to his own statement, in the direction of the northeast. "Look a here" (confidentially), "wimmin is mighty onsartain at them times, so I fetched this 'ere off the beach, a-thinkin' she might like suthin' sorter tasty." This said, he reseated himself in solemn silence by the fire. An examination of the "suthin' sorter tasty," which was enveloped in a thoroughly thumbed copy of the county paper, revealed a well-sanded salt mackerel—a waif washed on the beach from a recent wreck off the coast.

The Czar's Bride.

The Emperor Alexander had been in love with the princess Dolgorouki for more than twelve years. He first met her at the residence of her sister-in-law, the princess Dolgorouki-Vulcano, a most honorable Neapolitan. Struck with the grace of the princess Catharine, a blonde of charming simplicity and great beauty, the emperor declared his love, and the affair soon became the talk of St. Petersburg. He established her in apartments on the English quay, and here he has visited almost daily for the past ten years to seek solace in her society from the cares and worries of state affairs. The princess Dolgorouki has given birth to several children, all of them being authorized by imperial ukase to bear the titles of Count and Countess de Gourine, the name of the extinct branch of the Romanoffs. The princess followed the emperor to the banks of the Danube under the name of Mme. Rilejer during the late war with Turkey. Of course the empress knew all about it, but her malady and the coldness of her nature caused her to shut her eyes to the real state of the case. But when the czar desired to legitimatize the princess' children, the empress, the czarewitch, and the grand duke declined to accede. The Czarina determined to leave Russia and find at Cannes a refuge from the insult offered her. The czarewitch avoided the winter palace as much as possible. The influence of the Princess Dolgorouki grew daily stronger in the czar's household. The emperor yielded so completely to its fascinations, that he even showed anxiety to obtain a divorce from the empress and to marry the princess. Now that the marriage is accomplished, it is almost certainly of the kind known as "morganatic," in which the bride stipulates that she and her children will neither assume the rank nor inherit the possessions of the husband. These alliances are not over frequent, but the Europe Diplomatique occasionally furnishes us with a list of such marriages entered into by the princes of the royal house of Europe. Besides Victor Emmanuel, Leopold I., of Belgium, and Frederick VII., of Denmark, the latest list embraces some fifteen princes' names, a large majority of whom belong to the reigning house of Germany and Austria.

MR. LONGMAN, the well known publisher of London has sold his estate at Farnborough Hill to the ex Empress EUGENIE for $250,000. It consists of 257 acres and a picturesque mansion. The ex-Empress intends to build on the property a memorial chapel to receive the bodies of the ex-Emperor and the late Prince Imperial.

IT is a curious fact that no new actors or actresses appear to be coming forward in Paris this season. Got and the elder Coquelin, Landrol and St. Germain, Worms and Dieudonne, Dupuis and Judic, and Celine Chaumont have all become familiar names, but they have no successors visible. The first appearances last year were all failures.

JOHN BUTLER, a tramp, had seen better days. Finding himself hungry and destitute in St. Clair County, Ohio, he resolved to revenge himself upon those prosperous farmers who had since morning refused to feed him. Stealing a horse from a stable, and some matches from a barroom, he rode away to perform his strange task. During a ride of two miles he set fire to seven barns all of which were destroyed. The line of incendiarism would doubtless have been extended much further, had he not been promptly pursued. He was caught while kindling the eighth fire.

ART AND DRAMATIC NOTES.

OLE BULL begged that Mozart's Requiem might be played while he was dying, and it was the last music that he heard.

MR. TENNYSON'S new play is a tragedy in two acts, of which Mr. Irving assumes the hero's role, and Miss Ellen Terry that of the heroine.

It is said that Mr. Compton can no longer play Romeo, and feels compelled to abandon all the roles that he played in connection with Adelaide Neilson.

APROPOS of a discussion lately going on in the London papers concerning the manner in which Charlotte Corday was dressed when she stabbed Marat, one of our own wits on this side remarks that she was undoubtedly "dressed to kill."

NINA BOUCICAULT, the youngest daughter of Agnes Robertson, is said to be predestined for an irresistible soubrette actress. She is receiving her education to that end in France and Germany, is small in stature, small-featured, has a nez retrousse, and fine hazel eyes.

MISS MINNIE HAUK has been spending her vacation in the south of France, Switzerland, and the Black Forest. She is now to sing through the principal Continental cities, after which she contemplates a season of concerts in London and the Provinces, as other English towns are styled.

AN extravaganza company advertised in Pittsburg that they would pay a reward to anybody who could find the shadow of a plot in "The Flock of Geese," the play which they performed. So few persons went to the theatre to search that the company disbanded, and the manager pawned a diamond pin to pay their fares to this city.

ENGLISH actresses are said to dress so faultlessly as to give lessons in fashion to the audience; Miss Ellen Terry, Mrs. Kendal, Mrs. Bancroft, Miss Gerard, and Miss Genevieve Ward exhibiting harmony of colour and beauty of outline in their dresses to such perfection that great ladies send maids to see them, and get ideas for their own wardrobes.

"WHAT is the use," asks the San Francisco Post, "of talking about art culture in San Francisco, when it is an open secret that a certain rich mining man recently sent to Florence for a copy of the Venus of Milo, and when the statue was delivered actually sued the Central Pacific Railroad Company for mutilating a work of art, and, what is more, recovered damages?"

OFFENBACH was often as witty as he was musical. In an interview he once had with the Emperor William at Ems, the Emperor said, "We, too, have a right to be proud of you, Herr Offenbach, for you were born, I am informed, at Bonn." "No, your Majesty," was Offenbach's answer; "the other man was born at Bonn; I am a native of Cologne." The other man was Beethoven.

A REVIVAL of the ancient Greek drama, similar to the one at Oxford last year, will be attempted at Harvard College next spring. The play to be presented is the "Œdipus Tyrannus" of Sophocles. Mr. Geo. Riddle, a graduate of Harvard, will assume the principal part and have entire direction of the work. It will be performed at Sanders Theatre, where the regular commencement exercises are given.

THE apparent cause of the downfall of John A. Woodward, who has absconded with $82,000 from the Boston city treasury, was an actress known as Imogene. Her maiden name was Amy Louise Knowlton. He fell in love with her, married her, maintained her in a costly home when she stayed in Boston, and paid the heavy losses of her unsuccessful tour as a star. The Boston Herald says that some of the bills which Woodward had to meet were for breakage in hotels when his wife got drunk.

MR. RUSKIN will soon find himself unable to visit Venice, as well as America, for æsthetic reasons, as they propose to put steam-launches on the canals there. But he may be well content to stay at his beautiful home; it is called Brantwood, and is situated among the waters and mountains of the English lake country. His house is full of treasures, valuable manuscripts, among them that of Scott's Peveril of the Peak, ancient missals exquisitely ornamented, paintings by Titian and by Meissonier, Sir Joshua Reynold's Portrait of Angelica Kaufman, and a unique collection of Turners.

ANTONY—"You all do know this mantle. Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through; see what a rent the envious Casca made. Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabbed." Brutus (aside)—"He's a liar by the watch. That's the hole great Cæsar used to put his head through, and is the hole through which the well-beloved tailor stabbed when he made it!" Antony—"And when he plucked his cursed steel away, mark how the blood of Cæsar followed it!" Brutus (aside)—"It's no such thing. That's red paint. I saw a boy daub it on back of the scenes not two minutes ago. I'm up to this little game!" First Pleb.—"Oh, piteous spectacle!" Brutus (aside)—"Oh, piteous spectacle your grandmother's gray cat!"

WRITERS about the Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau usually neglect to describe the acting; but Mary J. Holmes, in a letter to the Rochester Democrat, touches on that point. The Christus of Joseph Maier, she says, was an excellent performance. "Not a trace of self-consciousness is ever perceptible in his manner, which is always dignified and self-possessed, like one who feels himself the master. His voice is clear and full and rich, and you find yourself constantly looking for it, especially toward the last, when the musical tones are full of anguish or tender expostulation and disappointment as he says to his sleeping disciples, 'Could ye not watch with me one hour?'" Judas was even better acted. Of him she says:—"I can see him now so plainly as he walked the stage ringing his hands in his despair, and catching at his long gray hair he lamented his folly and with bitter cries moaned for the dear friend he had betrayed." Peter was only fair, John was tame, and Magdalen was an utter failure, betraying at every point the amateurishness of the actress. "The Madonna, on the contrary, was excellent, with a fair, sweet face, which would lead us to question the propriety of selecting so young a person for the mother of Christ, if we did not know the Bavarian peasantry believe in the perpetual youth and beauty of the Virgin Mary." On the whole, Mrs. Holmes thinks that the performance, while far below a respectable professional standard, was remarkable for amateurs.

The Grotto Under Mount Rossi, Sicily.

The eruption of Mount Etna in 1669, says La Nature, was the most formidable of historic times. The side of the mountain opened for a length of about four miles, and there issued from it a torrent of lava four miles broad, which, after destroying several villages, and half of the city of Catane, flowed into the sea and formed a promontory two miles long by half a mile wide and sixty feet high. At the same time the scoria and sand thrown out by the craters formed a mountain with a double crest, that was at first called Monti della Rovina, and later Monti Rossi, on account of the reddish color that the scoria from the two crests assumed through the oxidation of the iron contained in it. The higher of the two crests is about 800 feet above Etna, and about 3,000 feet above the sea. In the interior of the cone of Mount Rossi there are two immense extinct craters, exhibiting the characteristic funnel-shape, and the sides of which are formed of scoria in a decomposing state. Up to 1823 no one had had the curiosity to descend to the bottom of these craters; but at this period the intelligent observer, Mario Gemellaro, undertook their exploration. He saw with some surprise a horizontal aperture at the bottom of one of the cavities, and entering it with a torch, he found, after traversing a suite of corridors resembling the galleries of a mine, a large well, into which he caused himself to be lowered by means of ropes. At some feet from the bottom of this well he found a vast rectangular room, at the further end of which there was a passage which grew smaller and smaller, and at last became impassable. This remarkable grotto, which was named Grotto della Palombe, is situated exactly in the centre of Monti Rossi. It has now been open to travellers, the decent being facilitated by a stairway, and the cavern being illuminated by magnesium light instead of the former resinous torches.

AN important piece of patronage is likely to fall this year into the hands of the Emperor of China. The Grand Lama of Thibet, the personified god of the country, is dangerously ill, and the priests have addressed a memorial to the Emperor of China praying him to elect a successor to whom the dying Lama can impart his divine attributes, or rather his soul, which is supposed to be that of Tson Jappa, the founder of this branch of Buddhism. The nomination of a successor remains with the Emperor of China as suzerain of Thibet, and the appointment, if it may be so called, is a valuable one, the income of the Lama been over $2,000,000. The Lama lives in a magnificent palace, the roof of which is covered with gold, and in it there are several hundred idols of the same metal.

HIGH WAYS AND BYE WAYS OF TORONTO.

HIGH WAYS AND BYE WAYS

What high ways are there in Toronto? Is the phrase literal, or is it figurative? Is it material, or spiritual? Is it human, or divine? Every one may just answer for himself. Sometimes it may be the one. Sometimes the other. Sometimes neither. Sometimes both, or all. It is a nice thing to have ample room and verge enough; to range from grave to gay, from lively to severe; to trot down Yonge street and call it a highway, to poke one's nose into the old Post-office lane, and as this, and that one, may beseem significantly wiping their mouths to put this and that together, and call it a "bye." It is, by the way, good liquor that is used up in those regions, fit for a prince or a priest, or even for a Protestant parson who likes a toothful now and then, when a feeling of "goneness" comes over his stomach, and he is fain, like Timothy, to take a little in order to fortify the inner man. How I like to see good honest souls getting merry over their cups, of course, in all moderation! How the eye begins to glance and brighten, the cheek to flush, and the tongue to loosen. The dull get excited; the silent eloquent; the stupid wise.

"Care, mad to see the men sae happy,
Just drouns itself amang the nappy."

I have always had the idea that freedom and religion came in with whisky, and if I am to believe certain recent clerical teaching, both these excellent things will disappear when our rising youth are either unable or unwilling to take off their "good liquor like men." Many an old codger fast hastening to be tipped with purple, I have heard endorsing the statements of the minister of St. Andrew's on the subject of good and bad liquor, and saying, with an emphatic tramp of the foot, "Them's my sentiments to a dot." I like good liquor myself, I don't deny it, and hope I shall never be ashamed of the fact. In my own circle there are more that get drunk on champagne than on whisky, and wherefore not? It's a good decent gentlemanly liquor is champagne, and one always knows that if he gets drunk on that, he sins in good company, aye, in some of the best, and most religious of Toronto.

WITH A NOSE ROSY RED

I took a long delightful walk the other day, away round by Yorkville, down the Queen's Park, looking into the University classes as I passed and marking how things were managed in that

RAPIDLY GETTING VENERABLE INSTITUTION.

I won't tell you what I saw or what I heard there, at least not now. Only this and nothing more. Every body is on the edge of his foot in that establishment at present. The new arrivals are bound to show that they are gentlemen, not cads, and actual hard working teachers not mere tricked out ornaments; while the older habitants of the place are determined to prove that they are not a whit behind Oxford in its latest phase, in all that concerns the higher walks of either literature or science. So be it in secula seculorum. I tell you some of these fellows needed stirring up badly and the students ditto. With what a jaunty air would some in days gone by, refuse to take the hurdle and smile complacently as they said "not prepared!" Some how they are not managing the matter of "not doing" so successfully this year. And then the miserable make-believes of teachers that came into their class rooms half an hour after the right time and pretended to teach one quarter of an hour instead of four. Why, man alive, it is fun to observe how they skip! Their watches have been set agoing and intellectually they ring with a vengeance

"Row brothers row for the pride of the Highlands, Stretch to your oars for the ever green pine."

It's fun, aye, and fine to. Like tolerably old spavined horses it has taken a good deal of coaxing and castigating to start some of these learned Thebans into a spasmodic apology for a trot. Now when their joints are a little suppled and they are getting warmed up to the work, let them keep at it till the long vacation comes and then they will enjoy their holidays as they have not been doing for years, by having the consciousness of having earned them by faithful, earnest honest toil.

I once thought when I was in that locality at any rate that I might

LOOK INTO KNOX COLLEGE

in the by going. But I did not. I heard that the place was perfectly filled with young incipient Presbyterian ministers in all stages of development from the raw protoplasm upward, but I was told the process of manufacture was not interesting, the lectures being dictated sentence by sentence and copied down verbatim to the great fatigue of the fingers and the great weariness of the soul, to say nothing of the intellect. I don't know, I only mention what I heard, and hope it is not so. I was bound though to see

THE LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Nobody has any business to know whether or not I was ever there as a patient and I shall not commit myself so far as to say definitely whether or not I ever was. This I may say with all safety that I know pretty well about all the outs and ins of that institution, and that as sadder, more melancholy inspiring place there is not in this city. Why is it that so many go wrong in the upper story? One can scarcely say. Evidently the wear and worry of life are to be credited with the wreck in some cases. Vice in others. Wine has its victims. So has women. Who shall say, with every life a tragedy and all the darker, the more the light hearted wretch is unconscious of the fact? I have gone among them but not as to a show of wild beasts. Oh my poor brothers and sisters with your nerves unstrung and all your mental machinery out of gear,—no, no, three and four times no! I can go and weep with you, and pity you, and bless God that I am not one of you in the meantime, at any rate. But to stare at you, to laugh at your vagaries, to hear your piteous tales, and listen to your vacant imaginings, only to lay up material for fun, and to retail it all by and bye as things to jest about,—never! Sooner than that, may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth and my right hand forget its cunning. It is too bad that when reason is dethroned, and when the poor, disordered ones move about all helpless and purposeless, they should be made even in one case material for a bumpkin's holiday. I sympathize with Dr. Clarke in this matter so far, at any rate, as gaping yokels that come to see the show are concerned whether they are clad in the plainest homespun or in the finest broad cloth.

IS LUNACY A PECULIARITY?

Scarcely. But yet it seems to spread and intensify as civilization advances. Why? The pace seems too great, and yet lots that are mad have evidently never been bothered with many brains, and have never kept them in a ferment of activity. Poor overtoiled or disappointed women and here and there a rather clever intellectually over driven man. But the great mass, what of them! Alas! alas! Let us get and ask how the sane folk in that classic suburb are getting on. Level headed folks they. Was it not all originally a speculation of Smith and Close, those two delightful twins and quondam bosom chums? It does not matter. There are quite a number of nice houses, and the locality is a pleasant one. Of course, it is all nonsense, that it, and the surrounding suburbs, should not be united municipally with Toronto. It would be better for all, and will eventually come, but to try to force matters, would only delay instead of hastening, what really all sensible people would prefer. I must acknowledge, Toronto has of late, not been very happy in its representatives, and the state of the streets, as well as the funds, has often not been very encouraging. But matters will mend, and the sooner all these outsiders come in, the sooner will the improvement commence, and the more rapid will be its progress.

AWAY TO PARKDALE

I did look into the Exhibition grounds, but everything was cold, dead, and wintry looking, that the contrast between what it was when summer days were fine, and the exhibition in full blast, sent me forthwith into the megrims, and I was fain to escape from myself, by getting back to King street once more. I had had plenty of walking for the day, but I took my constitutional all the same, and saw, and was seen, just as in days gone by. I am sorry to think how the

OLD FAMILIAR FACES ARE DISAPPEARING.

One thought at one time, that King street would not be King street without certain figures moving along it at certain times, every day. And yet there it is, and George Brown is already but a vague tradition, and Hillyard Cameron is thought of no more. Who even calls to mind the strange cynical face and slender figure of Sandfield? And the beauties of other days where are they? The survivors eat their lunch at Coleman's, and are comforted; and even Lord Dufferin with all his blarney and bon homie, might as well be as dead as Julius Cæsar, for ought that any one cares. Old Cawthra too, has gone over to the majority, and the one question even before he is well cold in his grave is, How will he [illegible]? I don't know. I am not sure. I hope not, but it is possible that the great majority of Torontonians cease to remember even [illegible]

JACOB FAITHFUL.

Pecuniary Independence.

We talk a great deal about our political, intellectual, moral, and social independence; all the world has heard us talk about it. We do not enjoy them as much, perhaps as we think. How much independence of thought has the journalist, for instance, who must bid for an audience, the author whose thought must be never too unpleasant, the orator who must repeat the stock notions of his hearers, the professor who has to reconcile evolution with theology; how much liberty of action has the voter who depends upon a government salary, or who is in a political employ? We can not very seriously blame these people, to whom independence means starvation. What I want to bring to clear light is this: that independence of action and thought depends, more than we like to believe, upon pecuniary independence, which is not to be had by wishing merely. Individuals there are, and always will be, who suffer for their moral or intellectual independence; but communities will be as circumstances make them. This again I want to set in clear light: that we are as a community, deficient, in spite of all our national wealth, and unnecessarily deficient in the best part of independence—the power to enjoy our lives. In this respect we are behind our friends in France, with their two millions of people living upon their incomes.

These two millions of people are not, for the most part, either idle, or frivolous, or wealthy people. Many of them live in the cities, but more of them are quiet people living on their modest properties in the country, and enjoying their competence in a rational way—enjoying friendships, social pleasures, family affections, and all the kindly observances of home life in a way that we have little idea of—in a way that the tourist of Paris sees nothing of. We have much to learn from the French, and among the things that we have to learn are some that may surprise us. One of these things is the comfort, the unity, and the permanence of French homes. The French home and family, their happiness, their unity, their permanence, these have been developed by the combined industry, thrift, and domestic sentiment of the most intelligent people in Europe, and especially by its great middle class. We have the significant testimony of Prince Bismarck "that the French nation has a solidity such as no other nation of Europe enjoys," and Mr. Matthew Arnold, from whose Mixed Essays I quote, adds: "This can only come from the broad basis of well-being, and of cause for satisfaction with life, which in France more than in other countries, exists." If we had two millions of people, or one million, who were enjoying a competence, earned or inherited, can it be doubted that we should be a happier people, and a better one, than we are? France and the United States have this important feature in common—in each country nearly one-half of the people live directly by agriculture; but our country homes and families have not attained to the comfort or the permanence of these.—T. M. COAN, in Harper's Magazine for November.

Less Anxious to Fight a Duel

(From the New York Times.)

The lie passed between Wolf von Scheirbrand, one of the reporters, and Gallus Toman, the assistant editor of the Freie Presse, of Brooklyn, and the former sent the latter a challenge to mortal combat. Von Scheirbrand was once in Kaiser Wilhelm's army, and is said to be of noble lineage. Toman is a Greek; he speaks five languages with ease, saw service in the union army during the rebellion, and is said to be an adept with pistols. The law reporter of the same journal, Sigismund Kanzler, was called to be second to Mr. Toman, and he conveyed to the German his principal's acceptance of the challenge. The terms of the match, as fixed upon by the challenged party, were pistols, three shots, the first at fifteen paces, the second at ten, and the third at five, the man who retreated before the programme was carried out to be posted as a coward. Von Scheirbrand jumped at these terms and wanted to fight forthwith. He purchased a pistol, sent his wife to Pennsylvania, and settled his affairs. A hitch occurred. Mr. Toman's second insisted on delaying the duel until some convenient spot might be found where the principals might have their fun without interference. The German swore Toman was a coward, and refused to delay an hour. Thus the matter stands. Scheirbrand's pistol is loaded, primed, and ready, like its owner, for immediate action. Toman has not yet found the convenient spot, disinterested persons, he has not yet neglected his editorial duty in the search. Chief of Police Campbell does not place so much confidence in the determination of either of the gentlemen to fight to consult council as to whether he is empowered to act in the matter.

GENERAL.

LONDON has a police force of 10,911 men, and furnishes a large field for their work. During the past ten years 190 persons have been killed by light wagons, and 7,362 wounded; 474 killed and 4,144 injured by heavy carts; and omnibuses and street cars have killed 151 and injured 1,655. Each year there are nearly 10,000 children and more than 3,000 adults reported to the police as lost or missing. Last year about two thirds of the children and one-fifth of the adults were found and restored to their friends by the police; the remainder returned home, or were found, dead or alive, with the exception of 141 adults and 25 children, of whose whereabouts no intelligence has ever been received. Last year 259 persons committed suicide, and 404 others attempted self-destruction, but were prevented from so doing.

THE last survivor of the Medusa has just died at Bordeaux. Cæsar Alphonse Henry was born at Paris in 1813, and three years afterward his father embarked in the Medusa with his whole family of eight persons. Every one knows the fate of the Medusa. Of its living freight of 450 souls, 175 were put on the raft which Gericault has rendered memorable in his picture, 16 remained on board, and 260 took to the boats and gained the African coast, nearly 100 miles from the French settlement at St. Louis. The Henry family were among these last. The three-year-old child walked part of the way across the burning, waterless sands; part of the way he was carried by the sailors. The little caravan strewed its route with corpses, but the survivors arrived safely at St. Louis, and among them was the Henry family, safe and well from the eldest to the youngest—a result mainly due to the remarkable energy of the father.

THE Electrician tells this story: A number of gentlemen were the other day about to dine, and one of the covered dishes was especially cared for, containing, as it was seriously averred, a gymnotus, fresh from the rivers of South America, which was to form part of the repast. Usually, electricians scrupulously observe decorum, but the Chairman, instead of pronouncing the benediction, turned to the dish containing the eel and solemnly requested grace, when, with a sweet cadence, as if from a mermaid in cavernous regions, was heard all over the place: "Be present at our table, Lord," &c. The cover was then raised and the anticipated electric eel turned out to be a telephone, which had been ingeniously connected to a distant room, and which, being a religious good telephone, not only produced a pleasing sensation to all present, but afterward returned thanks in a powerful but well-known voice to the admiring listeners.

A LION tamer in a menagerie at San Francisco gave a Chronicle reporter some cruel facts about the training of beasts. He said there was real danger in the business. He had seen two men killed, and was badly bitten once himself; but he charged these mishaps to carelessness and too much mercy. "You learn to tell," he explained, "what kind of a temper the beasts are in, and conduct yourself accordingly. It ain't hard to dodge them. If they spring straight at you all you've got to do is to jump a little on one side, and if they dive high for your throat you dive under 'em. There's never more than one goes for you at a time, and that don't occur often. The wild ones are better and safer. This is because a lion used to a cage and to being poked and teased is less afraid of you. I'd sooner handle ten lions just from the jungles than one that's used to the public. When I first got into a cage of untamed ones I'd have a fire near by, with three or four iron rods in it, red hot. If the beasts go for me, the men stand ready to jab the irons into their mouths and make 'em let go." He scouted the idea that lions could be governed except by fear, excited by inhuman treatment. He tried never to err on the side of gentleness, and had recently killed a lion by striking it a little too hard on the head.

THE [MARKDALE] STANDARD IS PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING in time to meet the early mails, [illegible] the latest Foreign and Provincial [illegible] Local Intelligence, County Business [illegible] Matters and an [illegible]

[illegible] advance, $1 50 in three months, [illegible] till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, [illegible] parties refusing papers without paying [illegible] will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

[illegible] column, one year		$50 00
[illegible]	do	30 00
[illegible] quarter do	do	18 00
[illegible]	do	10 00
[illegible]	do	4 60
[illegible]	do	50
Six lines and under, first insertion		15
Each subsequent insertion		75
[illegible] to ten lines, first insertion		25
Each subsequent insertion		8
Over ten lines, first insertion per line		2
Each subsequent insertion

The number of lines to be reckoned by a scale of [illegible] space occupied measured by a scale of solid brevier. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

DR. PURDY,
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, ACCOUCHEUR, EUGENIA P. O. 6-tf.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound
OFFICE.—Miller's building, over [illegible]son's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost.
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-at-Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have removed [illegible] Flesherton, Office open every Thursday as heretofore.
[illegible] FROST, J. W. FROST [illegible]
County Crown Attorney.

James Masson,
BARRISTER and ATTORNEY AT LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon.
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c. Money loaned at lowest rates of [illegible] real estate. Land bought and [illegible] buyer and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880.

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, a Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate [illegible]ity.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1

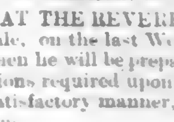
W. L. Smith.
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Alexander Brown.
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent, Com. in B. R. &c. Conveyancer [illegible] Auctioneer for the County of [illegible] [illegible] and Land Sales, [illegible] attended to and charges made [illegible]
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880.

George Corbet, Jr.,
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest [illegible] in instalments.
☞A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1

J. G. Sing.
DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, [illegible]ford and Markdale. Having purchased [illegible] Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin, [illegible] entire stock of original Field Notes, [illegible] Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys made within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates [illegible] Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications [illegible] Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Letters by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Dentistry.



Mr. James J. White,
Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday of each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the teeth in the most satisfactory manner, and on reasonable terms. 1

Hotels.

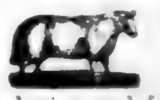
MANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor.
Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, ONT.
[illegible] J. McGIRR, [illegible]
Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the choicest Wines and Liquors [illegible] brands of Cigars.
'Bus to and from [illegible]
[illegible] 17, 1880.

GEORGE WILSON,

BUTCHER
[illegible] St., Markdale, next door to Exposition Office.
☞Meat delivered at any house in town.
[illegible] 17, 1880. 1-y

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at McCutcheon's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices.
W. & A. SPEERS.
Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

COMMERCIAL HOTEL,
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms: Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larder well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's.
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.
October 21st, 1880. 3

Markdale Standard.

VOL. I.—NO. 10. MARKDALE, ONT, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1880. WHOLE NO. 0

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

[EVE]RY FRIDAY MORNING

In time to meet the early mails.

...s h lts F i n a Provincial ... Local Intelligence, County Business, General Matters and an Instructive ...

[In a]dvance, $1 50 ; in three months, ... till end of the year. No pa[per dis]continued until all arrearages are [paid] except at the option of the publisher, [P]arties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

Column, one year		$50 00
do	do	30 00
do	do	18 00
do	do	10 00
do	do	4 60
		50
... and under, first insertion		15
Each subsequent insertion		75
... ten lines, first insertion		25
Each subsequent insertion per line		5
... ten lines, first insertion per line
Each subsequent insertion		2

[The] number of lines to be reckoned by [the s]pace occupied measured by a scale of brevier. Advertisements without [th]e directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory [adverti]sements must be in the office of pub[lication b]y 11 o'clock on the Thursday [mor]ning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

DR. PURDY,
PHYSICIAN SURGEON, ACCOUCH-[EUR,] E[ugenia] P. O. 6-tf.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,
Physicians Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.
OFFICE – Medical Hall; residence at ... House.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,
[Barr]ister at Law, – Owen Sound.
[OFFIC]E—Miller's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost.
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at [Fl]esherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
[A.] FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

James Masson,
[B]ARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound.
...17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon,
[A]TTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c.
[M]oney loaned at lowest rates on personal real estate. Lands bought and sold. ...and seller introduced free of commission.
DUNDALK.
September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown,
[IS]SUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly and carefully executed.
B. Money to Lend on Real Estate security.
Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

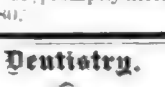
W. L. Smith,
GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station.
...17, 1880. 1

Alexander Brown,
[IS]SUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, ... and Land Sales. Punctually attended to. ...charges made very moderate.
...Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr.,
[LA]ND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments.
A number of desirable Improved Farms [for sale.] 1-y

J. G. Sing,
[D]OMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, ... Markdale. Having purchased ...al Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys ...the last fifty-five years, I am [prepared] to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates ...ing Hills, Plans and Specifications [for bu]ilding Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. [Orders] by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, ...dale, will be promptly attended to.
...7, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.



Mr. James J. White,
[As]sistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound,
[W]ILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in [each] month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth [in th]e most satisfactory manner, and upon [reaso]nable terms. 1-y

Hotels.

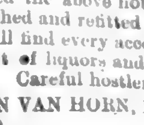
[M]ANSION HOUSE
MARKDALE.
[H]aving leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. ...the best of liquors and cigars kept. [Good s]tabling. Careful hostler.
JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor
...t 17, 1880. 1-y

[R]OYAL HOTEL,
MEAFORD, Ont.
J. McGIRR, - - PROPRIETORS.
[Ev]ery accommodation for the travelling [public.] The bar is well stocked with the [be]st Wines and Liquors and the best [brands] of Cigars.
[Free] 'bus to and from all trains.
...17, 1880. 1-y

[G]EORGE WILSON,

[B]UTCHER
...St., Markdale, next door to Expositor
Meat delivered at any house in town.
[Se]pt. 17, 1880. 1-y

[S]heep and Cattle.



[FA]RMERS having good fat Sheep or [C]attle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave their names and address at Mc...on's H..., Revere House, Markdale, ...undersigned are still on the war path, [an]d positively pay the highest prices.
...W. & A. SPEERS.
[Se]pt. 17th, 1880. 1-y

[C]OMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
[La]rge and commodious Sample Rooms; Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larder supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's.
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.
[Oct]ober 21st, 1880. 8

DYSPEPSIA — DR. CLARK — LIVER DISEASE
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City
LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870

9,000,000 Bottles.

This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, - $1.00
PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, - .50

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used.

MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont.

Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed any phy[si]cian. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life.

MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS.

Burford, Brant Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone.

ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS.

Mt. Forest,
Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me.

MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted.

MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach.

W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH.

Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves.

NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS.

Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont.

DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy.

MRS. HENRY HUFF.

DYSPEPSIA AND KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

Westport, Jan. 29, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been suffering for years with Dyspepsia and Indigestion and Kidney Complaint, and have tried a great many remedies, but without effect. I became very bad and could not leave my bed. I sent to your Agent, William Dier, for a bottle of your Indian Blood Syrup, and I do not hesitate to say that it saved my life. I am completely cured and feel like a new man. Last week my son was taken sick with severe Headache, and a few doses of your valuable medicine cured him.

DAVID BLACK.

CURES DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

Westport, Ont., Jan. 26, 1879.

DEAR SIR:—I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia for about nine years, and your Indian Blood Syrup is the only medicine that ever helped me. I would say to all suffering from this disease to give your medicine a fair trial.

W. H. ROBISON.

"Sole General Agents for Canada, Northop and Lyman, No. 21, Toronto St. West, Toronto. Also Agents for Mother Noble's Healing Syrup, an English Discovery which is well known as a valuable and effective Blood Purifier throughout the World."

A PARTY of Bulgarians threw mud on the coat-of-arms of the French consulate at Varna, and the French Ambassador ordered a gunboat thither.

THE world of journalism has received an addition in the person of Vera Sassulitsch, whose admirers claim that she handles the pen and the sword or the pistol with equal dexterity. She is now one of the contributors to M. Pyat's Commune.

EMINENT PEOPLE.

BOTH Sir Garnet Wolseley and General Roberts are pronounced total abstinence men.

MR. ASHMEAD BARTLETT paid six hundred and ninety guineas for a horse at the last Belhus sale.

LORD GEORGE and Lady Campbell are coming to Canada to spend the winter with the Governor General.

THE Sultan of Turkey has conferred the decoration of the third class of the Order of the Medjidie on his tailor. Said Pasha and Baker Pasha (Colonel Valentine Baker) have received the first and second class.

AT a recent ball given by Lord Ardilaun (Sir Arthur Guinness), constabulary escorted the guests, the house was patrolled, sentinels paced under the windows, and weapons were stacked in the hall.

IT is reported that the Earl of Beaconsfield is revising his literary productions, and writing a new novel, the title of which is Endymion. An edition de luxe of his works is to be published next year, and will include, for the first time, the famous "Letters of Runnymede."

"EITHER I or that bookmaker must leave your stable," angrily remarked Lord Vivian to the venerable Peter Price, after Sunburn's success in the First Welter Handicap at Newmarket. "Very well, my lord: you had better go," was the imperturbable Peter's reply. Accordingly Lord Vivian's horses will hereafter be trained by Ryan, the trainer of Springfield, and "that bookmaker," Mr. C. Hibbert, of Nottingham, who has a much larger string, remains at Phantom Cottage.

LORD BEACONSFIELD's acceptance of invitations to visit the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Lothian is considered to put the finishing touch to his union with the nobility. A dozen years ago he told the Scotch nobles, in Lothair, that their entertainments were like the festivities of the "Picts and Scots: rude, plenty and coarse splendour, with noise instead of conversation, and a tumult of obstructive dependants who impede, by their want of skill, the very convenience which they propose to facilitate."

THE Empress Eugenie has decided to leave Chiselhurst, and has purchased Farnborough Hill—a charming estate near the confines of Surrey and Hants, with a handsome and spacious mansion in the Italian style. It is in the neighbourhood of the South Camp, where her son learned his lessons in the game of war. Eversley, where Canon Kingsley preached, Strathfieldsaye, belonging to the Duke of Wellington, and Bagshot Park, the seat of the Duke of Connaught, are all quite near, and it is connected by rail with Windsor.

THE Empress of Austria introduced the fashion of wearing the tiny gold pig, it being considered good luck in Austria to run across a pig. A prettier charm or amulet has been worn of late in the shape of some symbol of one's taste or profession, an artist wearing a small gold palette, with rubies, emeralds, sapphires, and pearls for the paints, like one given Mlle. Jacquemart by M. Thiers some time since. Sara Bernhardt has worn thus a tiny golden mask, Madame Viardot a jeweled lyre, and Elise, the circus-rider, a golden whip. The latest caprice of this kind is the lamb of the Order of the Golden Fleece, which is reputed to bring good fortune to the wearer.

LORD A. CECIL, a brother of the Marquis of Salisbury, has recently bean appointed locomotive superintendent of the Great Eastern Railway of England, after having been in its engineering department for several years. These young patricians are learning to fight their way in the world like ordinary folk. It is only five or six years since young Lord Walter Campbell, a son of the Duke of Argyll, and brother-in-law to the Queen's daughter, was doing regular work as a clerk in the highly respectable and influential firm of Busk & Jevons, of this city, and since his marriage with the daughter of a rich Lancashire manufacturer has joined a firm of prosperous stock-brokers in London. Mr. Jevons comes of a family distinguished in finance, literature, and science. He is a grandson of William Roscoe, of Liverpool, the eminent financier, historian, and poet, who had four sons also distinguished in literature. His brother, Wm. Stanley Jevons, was for some years Professor of Logic and Mental and Moral Philosophy in Owens College, Manchester, and is now Professor of Political Economy in University College, London.

Death's Wrath.

Do you know what it is to be at sea with a gale blowing eighty miles an hour? You may read of the wrecks which to-day strew the shores of every lake; you may read of the rigid bodies cast up on the sands; you may cast your eyes over hulk and spar and battered plank, but yet you cannot realize the fury of that awful gale of Saturday. Vessels on Lake Michigan were bowling along before a topsail breeze, when, almost in a moment the gale came howling down from another quarter, bringing a terrible sea with it. Sails were split into ribbons before a rope could be loosened, and masts went overboard like broken sticks. No man living ever saw such waves on our lakes before. In an hour after the gale set in they were running twenty-five feet high. In three hours they could go no higher. Off Frankfort they were fully forty feet high, and they ran with the speed of a race horse.

The gale caught them as they reared up, and tons of foamy water were broken off and hurried down into the trough, to mingle with the base of the next wave. One of the largest propellers on the lakes, standing twenty feet out of water, had to put about before the gale was an hour old, and even while running before it at full speed the waves swept over her entire decks. Seamanship availed but little. Schooners were almost picked up bodily by the wind and flung ahead, and the biggest barks were knocked about like chips.

When day broke Saturday morning those out at sea must have realized the wrath of death. Every plunge of an ordinary schooner rolled floods of water over her decks, to pour from the scuppers as she climbed at an angle of forty-five degrees. Men had all they could do to save life without moving a finger towards navigating their crafts. The loudest shout could not be heard two feet away, and the roar of the sea was awful to hear. The passengers on the Alpena were roused from sleep when the gale reached her. It brought such a sea that no one could have slept longer. When the fourscore souls aboard were told that death was near they looked out on that howling, roaring, hungry sea without a shadow of hope that one of them would ever see land again. Rafts and boats would have been blown about like feathers. Life-preservers buoyed up corpses until they were cast ashore to be identified. Those who put them on in the final grasp for life could not have lived an hour in the keen wind and icy water.

Men who lived out the gale still speak of it with terror. Only once again will the door of death open wider to them. Spars and hulks are beating to splinters on the rocky shores, and beaten and disfigured corpses are thrown upon the sandy beach, to be wept over and buried. It was the Wrath of Death turned loose upon wide wastes, and that a single vessel escaped destruction seems almost a miracle.

Pianos and Organs.

J. A. CRAWFORD

DEALER IN

PIANOS AND ORGANS!

OF THE

Uxbridge Manufacture.

Having a thorough knowledge of Musical Instruments I would invite those desirous of purchasing an instrument to

GIVE ME A TRIAL!

I can furnish good testimonials from parties to whom I have sold that they will be dealt honorably with in all cases. By corresponding with me I will convince parties that I will sell cheaper than they can buy elsewhere.

Monthly or quarterly instalments would be accepted, with a small payment down.

All Instruments warranted for Six Years.

ADDRESS,

J. A. CRAWFORD,

LOCK BOX 72,

Uxbridge, Ont.

8

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Fashion Notes.

SILK mufflers continue fashionable.

BEADED gimps and fringes are the rule.

THE latest bonbonniere is a baby elephant.

ALL black is much worn for handsome dresses.

STOCKINGS for children's wear have the sensible English double knees.

GAY stripes in silk and woolen for skating costumes are among the novelties.

THE new glove is the Sarah Bernhardt, which fastens only at the wrist, and above it is closed like a stocking and wrinkled stylishly on the arm.

BLACK lace scarfs wound round and round the throat and fastened at the left side with a single brooch appear to be more fashionable than ever.

IMPORTED surtouts are not so long as those made here, and more nearly resemble basques than the polonaises, for which surtouts have been considered a substitute.

HEAVY cloaking materials nearly all have fur backs, and so require no lining. Handsomest among these are the silk-faced cloths and the plush cloth with fleece on both sides.

PERFECTLY chic are the new jet bonnets for full dress. They are very small, and the trimming is a beaded kerchief scarf, which covers the crown and forms the strings. A coronet of large jet balls completes the garniture.

A GREAT fancy prevails at present for the Marie Antoinette fichu, so well known under that name, and depicted in the picture by Paul Delaroche. It is made of Indian muslin and very fine lace, Breton or Mechlin being most in character.

THE new black woollen stockings have very tiny ribbings, and much embroidery, in black only, is used on black silk stockings for the evening. As a rule the winter stockings will match the dress in color, and the new shoes seem more pointed in the toes than ever.

NEW ribbons are in colors and designs to match the new dress materials—plush-figured velvets, brocades, tinsel tissues, plaids, and soft ottoman ribbons. Prominent among low-priced ribbons are stripes in monotone satin and silk in widths for sashes, bows, and bonnet ribbons.

SOME novel shapes are shown in fur-lined mantles. One of these is a visite fitted in the back, and with the graceful Medicis sleeve. Another is a circular fitted to the figure by long seams down the sides, back and front. Both garments are of heavy silk with wide fur borders.

SOME recent arrivals from Paris have brought another fichu from the costume of Richardson's Clarissa Harlowe. It is larger than the other, and crossing on the chest ties behind in a knot, exactly as the heroine is represented in the frontispiece of the earliest edition of the book.

AN elegant evening bonnet is of white plush, covered by a white Spanish lace scarf very long and wide. Gold bangles, with the fashionable pig attached hold the scarf to the sides of the bonnet and another confines, scarfwise. A bird of paradise completes the trimming.

THE popularity of plush is unbounded, and plush jackets and basques added to them are used with cashmere skirts of every color to match. The sole trimming consists of large and handsome buttons, which are very fashionable indeed. The Tam O'Shanter hat or the drawn bonnet matches the plush.

CLOAKS shown for children are of plaid and plain cloths, with trimmings of plush, velvet, or braid. The shapes are half-fitting, and hoods or Havelock capes, or both, are on many of the more expensive wraps. Duplicates of imported cloaks are so perfect that except from the ticket it is often impossible to distinguish them from the model.

THE new caps are wreaths of flowers or ribbon loops, which are placed on the head in the manner of a cap, and have no lace borders whatever; the sole thing to show that it is a cap and not a wreath is a little lace and muslin scarf, which is tacked into the top of the wreath and falls over the top of the flowers, leaving the top open and crownless.

Waifs.

A CHINESE adage—Love'oo little, love oolong.

"AUNTY, vat makes the little baby cry so? Do it want its mudder?" "Yes dear, and its fodder, too!"

"What does a woman want to put on gloves in hot weather for?" asks a male subscriber. Why, to keep her hand in, stupid.

THE Tam o'Shanter hat is worn a great deal in Paris and on the Continent, and it is remarked that England is leading the fashions in feminine dress generally.

IT all came from educating his daughter at a seminary. She reproved her father for wiping his mouth on the table-cloth, and he went to the barn and hung himself.

AN Ohio girl sued a man for breach of promise, and proved him such a mean scoundrel that the jury decided that she ought to pay him something for not marrying her.

THE word love in one of the Italian dialects is chemlendamonghkunagogager. Fancy a sweet forest maiden telling her copper-coloured brave that she chemlendamoughkunagogagers him.

OLD Peter Goeley, it is said, although the owner of millions, never carried any money about him, but drew every day the sum necessary for that day's expenses, whether it amounted to one dollar or less.

TWO quaker girls were ironing on the same table. One asked the other which she would take—the right or the left. She answered promptly: "It will be right for me to take the left, and then it will be left for thee to take the right."

"Darling, Kiss Me Sweet Good Night" is the latest song. One young man sang in the presence of his girl, the other evening, and just as she was about to act in accordance with the words of the song her dear papa put in an appearance and filled the youth's coat-tail full of boots.

THE Princess of Wales when at Sandringham, has little tea parties for which she herself makes the butter in a silver churn, and she spreads it on slices of bread which she cuts with her own hands. While she is at her work she wears a chintz dress, and a little white apron.

MR. STREETER, a competent London jeweler, publishes a statement that the diamonds from the Cape of Good Hope are not yellowish or inferior, but that some of them are of the finest known, and of greater specific gravity than the Brazilian stones.

QUEEN VICTORIA has been in the habit of sending the sum of three pounds to every mother of triplets in her dominions. When Mrs. Thomas Collyer applied the second time for this gratuity, the Queen had her informed that once was enough, and she had been paid once for all.

AMONG the gifts displayed at a San Francisco wedding was the bride's father's check for $100,000. The cashier of the bank on which the check was drawn was a guest. It was observed that he looked queerly at the document, then turned up his nose, and remarked: "Why, he hasn't $500 to his credit in our bank."

"I suppose I am a great bore, papa," said a fond daughter, after she had teased her father half an hour for a new fall bonnet. "You may not be a great bore exactly," said her parent, "but you certainly artes an well." His little joke made papa feel so good that he came down with the necessary check right away.

"WHY, Bridget," said her mistress, who wished to rally the girl, for the amusement of her company, upon the fantastic ornamenting of a plate of butter. "Why, Bridget, did you do this? You're quite an artist; how did you do it?" "Indade, mum, it was myself that did it," replied Bridget. "Isn't it pritty, mum? I did it with your fine-tooth-comb mum."

THE cradle of the baby Princess Mercedes is a shell of ebony and silver surmounted by a silver-gilt crown, the work of a famous goldsmith. The shell is lined with marabout feathers, and its curtains are of silver gauze enamelled with floral designs in white velvet; the arms of Spain are embroidered in scarlet and yellow on the white-satin coverlet. The wife of a grandee of Spain watches the royal slumbers at the foot of the cradle, and another keeps off the flies with a fan of white ostrich plumes.

"LOOK here Matilda," said Georgia lady to the coloured cook, "you sleep right close to the chicken house, and you must have heard those thieves stealing the chickens." "Yes, ma'am, I heerd de chickens holler, and heerd de woices ob de men." "Why didn't you get out then?" "Case, ma'am (bursting into tears), case, ma'am, I knowed my old fadder was out dar, and I wouldn't have him know I'se lost confidence in him foah all de chickens in de world. If I had gone out dar and kotched him it would hab broke his ole heart, and he would hab made me tote de chickens home foah him besides. He done tole me de day before dat he's gwine to pull dem chickens dat night."

GRIEF can be assuaged in a variety of ways, but in this cold and somewhat calculating world nothing can be more safely relied upon to produce resignation at your departure than an ample fortune. Properly distributed among your impecunious relatives they soon learn to bless you for having been successful in life and to praise you for dying at just the right time. If the poet speaks truth even those who are nearer, than "his sisters, his cousins and his aunts" find it more easy to hear your loss if you are able to leave them with an unencumbered estate. He says:—

When dear papa went up to heaven
What grief mamma endured!
And yet that grief was softened, for Papa he was insured.

She Wouldn't Promise to Obey.

A young lady, well known in Liverpool on account of her beauty, was married last week. When the Canon who was officiating read the words, "love, honour, and obey," the young lady declined to repeat the last. Three times the Canon paused for an oath, and paused in vain. Then he went on with the service. But is this young lady married or not? What—should her disobedience lead to an interview with Sir James Hannen—will that eminent judge rule on the subject?

Hints.

To remove grass stains, wash the stained places in clean, cold, soft water, without soap, before the garment is otherwise wet.

THE fine siftings of coal ashes are excellent to scour knives with.

To darken hair—apply strong, cold black tea every morning.

To clean kid gloves—wash in deodorized benzine. Dry on the hand; rub with a clean cloth while drying.

To cure an ingrowing toe nail—keep a notch cut in the middle of the nail at the top. Always cut the nail straight across, instead of in at the corners.

In Royal Life.

The Emperor and Empress of Germany see each other as little as possible. It is somewhat curious how few monarchs do get on with their wives and the wives with their husbands, for they seldom adore each other.

The Empress of Austria is seldom seen in society, and when out riding or driving carries a fan before her face, even when returning the greetings of her royal admirers. She seldom attends the theatre or opera, but when the circus comes to town is then seen in her box every night. She knows only one passion, and that is her love of horses and equestrianship. She has her own especial riding establishment, and here she reigns supreme. She will drive a tandem team before her at a relentless pace around the ring, having fresh relays of horses every few minutes. She has a place fitted up in the stable of her favourite charger where she can sleep if she feels so disposed, and where she frequently dictates her letters to her private secretary, while her favourite horse looks over from his stall and is patted fondly by his imperial mistress.

She Changed Her Mind.

A big good-natured doctor was desperately in love with, and had been twice refused, by, a fair-haired little woman. But instead of the disappointment curing his love, it only made the passion grow more intense. After the last refusal, he told her that if ever she changed her mind, to let him know, as his love for her was unchangeable, and he would be proud to be her husband. Some months later he was driving home from seeing a patient, when he saw his lady-love riding in his direction. Supposing she would merely bow and pass on, as she had often done before, he did not pull up his horse. But the moment Miss Dixon came up to him, she reined in her horse, stopped, and called out:

"Won't you stop, Dr. Hill?"

He raised his hat, and replied, "I shall be happy to do so," then waited for her to speak.

She was gazing at the ground and blushing deeply, but, quickly looking up, she filled the doctor's honest heart with surprise and gladness by saying:

"Dr. Hill, I have been closely watching you lately, and seeing nothing but goodness and noble-mindedness in your character, and believing you will make an excellent husband, I am willing to marry you."

The Hygiene of the Face and Eyes.

It is a mistake to believe that a good complexion depends upon the use of such and such cosmetics. It really depends upon digestion, which itself depends upon our mode of life. Persons who rise early and go to bed at ten, who take plenty of air and exercise, eat with moderation at regular hours, having their meals at intervals long enough for the digestion of one to be thoroughly accomplished before they begin the next—these persons are sure to digest well, and in consequence have clear, healthy complexions, which will require no other cosmetics but plenty of soft water and good toilet soap.

The hygiene of the eyes is very simple. For them, as well as for the complexion, good digestion is equally necessary; more so, for no cosmetic could attenuate the yellow tinge which biliousness imparts to them; and if some mysterious pencils can supply the the insufficient shadow of rare eyelashes, good health alone can give them that brightness which is their principal beauty.

Never read in bed or in a reclining attitude; it provokes a tension of the optic nerve very fatiguing to the sight.

Bathe your eyes daily in salt water; not salt enough, though, to cause a smarting sensation. Nothing is more strengthening, and we have known several persons, who after using this simple tonic for a few weeks, had put aside the spectacles they have used for years, and did not resume them, continuing of course, the oft repeated daily use of salt water. Never force your eyesight to read or work in insufficient or too broad light. Reading with the sun upon one's book is mortally injurious to the eyes.

How to Sweep and Dust.

To sweep and dust a room properly is an art, and like all fine arts has a right method. Well done, it renovates the entire room, and the occupant takes possession feeling that "all things have become new."

It is not merely a performance to be done by the hand, but a work into which taste and judgment—in other words, brain—must enter. Are those closets opening into a room to be swept? Arrange the shelves, drawers or clothing, preparatory to sweeping day, then let this be the first to be swept. Cover the bed with soiled sheets, as also all heavy articles that cannot be removed, first, however, having carefully dusted and brushed them. Remove all the furniture that can easily be set in the hall or adjoining room, having first dusted it; then take a step-ladder, begin to sweep or brush, or wipe the cornice and picture cords and pictures. Draw the shades to the top of the window, or, if there are inside blinds, dust them carefully. Open the windows. All the dust left in the room now is in the carpet or air, and the windows will soon settle it.

Now begin to sweep, not toward a door or corner, but from the outer edge of the room toward the center, where the dust will be taken up with a small brush and dust-pan. Go over the room once more; this time with a dampened broom; that removes the bit of dust and gives the carpet a new, bright appearance. Replace the articles of furniture as soon as the air is entirely free from dust, uncover the rest, and the room is new and clean. All this seems an easy thing to do, but there is not one in a hundred who will follow out the detail. Some will sweep the dust into the hall or from one room to another, and then wonder why their house is so dirty again. Others forget cornice and pictures, and thus leave a seed of future annoyance; while a third class will do all but using the damp broom, which is as the finishing touches to a picture.

How She Cooked his Rice.

Sakti Kumara, the hero of a curious Hindustani story, preferred testing a damsel's capability before tying the knot. Master of a prosperous and profitable business, he came to the conclusion that a wife was wanted, to complete his happiness, and determined to go in search of one. Adopting the guise of a fortune-teller, and carrying some rice bound up in his cloth, he started on his travels. Whenever he encountered a girl that pleased his eye, he asked her to cook his rice for him. Some laughed at him, some reviled him, none seemed to comply with his modest demand, and it seemed as if he would have to take his rice home uncooked. At last he reached Swira, where he beheld a beautiful girl, who, instead of abusing or ridiculing the strange traveller, relieved him of the rice, and bade him be rested. Then the kindly maiden set about preparing the rice. First she steeped it in water, then dried it in the sun, and that accomplished, rubbed the grains gently on the ground, removing the awn without breaking the rice. Calling her nurse, she despatched that worthy to sell the bran, and with the proceeds purchase an earthen boiler, two platters, and some fuel. By the time this commission was executed the rice had been brayed in a mortar, winnowed, and washed, and was ready to be put in the boiler with five times its bulk of water. As soon as it had swollen sufficiently, the boiler was taken from the fire, the water cleared of the scum, and the boiler put back, and the rice constantly stirred by the pretty cook until she was satisfied it was properly done. By turning the boiler mouth downward she extinguished the fire, and, collecting the unconsumed fuel, dispatched the old woman to convert it into butter, curds, oil, and tamarinds. This achieved, she told the enraptured Sakti Kumara to go and bathe, and not to omit rubbing himself with oil. Having obeyed orders, the wife-seeker was directed to seat himself upon a plank on a well-swept floor, on which were already laid a plantain leaf and two platters. His charming hostess than brought him water in a perfumed jug, and administered two spoonfuls of well-seasoned rice and ghee, preparatory to serving up the remainder of the rice mixed with spices, curds, butter, and milk, of which Sakti Kumara ate his fill, and then indulged in a siesta, with a mind at ease, knowing that his quest was ended. As soon as he woke he asked the girl to become his wife, and she, being willing, the necessary ceremony was gone through without delay; and the supposed fortune-teller took his bride home, to astonish her as the Lord of Burleigh astonished his rustic love; but the Hindu lass was luckier than Tennyson's heroine, for we are assured that she lived long to worship her husband as a god, to pay the most assiduous attention to his household affairs, to superintend the regulation of the family coming in due course, and made her house such an abode of bliss that Sakti Kúmara was well repaid for the trouble he had taken to get a good wife, and tasted, in his well-ordered home, the joys of Paradise.

Lovely Philosophy.

A few days ago a Boston girl who had been attending the School of Philosophy at Concord arrived in Brooklyn, says The Eagle, on a visit to a seminary chum. After canvassing thoroughly the fun and gum-drops that made up their education at the seat of learning at which their early scholastic efforts were made, the Brooklyn girl began to inquire into the nature of the Concord entertainment.

"And so you are taking lessons in philophy. How do you like it?"

"Oh! it's perfectly lovely. It's about science, you know, and we just dote on science."

"It must be nice. What is it about?"

"It's about molecules as much as anything else, and molecules are just too awfully nice for anything. If there's anything I really enjoy, it's molecules."

"Tell me about them, my dear. What are molecules?"

"Oh! molecules. They are little wee things and it takes ever so many of them. They are splendid things! Do you know, there ain't anything but what's got molecules in it. And Mr. Cook is just as sweet as he can be, and Mr. Emerson, too. They explain everything so beautifully."

"How I'd like to go there!" said the Brooklyn girl, enviously.

"You'd enjoy it ever so much. They teach protoplasm, too, and if there is one thing perfectly heavenly it's protoplasm or molecules."

"Tell me about protoplasm; I know I should adore it."

"'Deed you would. It's just too sweet to live. You know it's about how things get started, or something of that kind. You ought to hear Mr. Emerson tell about it. It would stir your very soul. The first time he explained about protoplasm there wasn't a dry eye in the house. We named our hats after him. This is an Emerson hat. You see the ribbon is drawn over the crown and caught with a buckle and a bunch of flowers. Then you turn up the side with a spray of forget-me-nots. Ain't it just too sweet? All the girls in the school have them."

"How exquisitively lovely! Tell me some more science."

"Oh! I almost forgot about differentiation. I am really and truly positively in love with differentiation. It's different from molecules and protoplasm, but it's every bit as nice. And Mr. Cook! You should hear him go on about it! I really believe he's perfectly bound up in it! This scarf is the Cook scarf. All the girls wear them and we named them after him just on account of the interest he takes in differentiation."

"What is it, anyway?"

"This is mull trimmed in Languedoc lace——"

"I don't mean that—the other."

"Oh! differentiation! ain't it sweet? It's got something to do with species. It's the way you tell one hat from another, so you'll know which is becoming. And we learn all about ascidians, too. They are the divinest things. I am absolutely enraptured with ascidians. If I only had an ascidian of my own, I wouldn't ask anything else in the world."

"What do they look like, dear? Did you ever see one?" asked the Brooklyn girl, deeply interested.

Oh! no; nobody ever saw one except Mr. Cook and Mr. Emerson, but they are something like an oyster with a reticule hung on its belt."

"Do you learn anything else besides all these?"

"Oh, yes. We learn all about common philosophy and logic and those common things like metaphysics, but the girls don't care anything about those. We are just in ecstacies over differentiation and molecules, and Mr. Cook and protoplasms and ascidians and Mr. Emerson, and I really don't see why they put in these vulgar branches. If anybody besides Mr. Cook and Mr. Emerson had done it we should have told him to his face that he was too terribly, awfully mean."

And the Brooklyn girl went to bed that night in the dumps because fortune had not vouchsafed her the advantages enjoyed by her friend, while the Boston girl dreamed of seeing an ascidian chasing a molecule over a differentiated back fence with a club, for telling a protoplasm that his youngest sister had so many freckles on her nose that they made her cockeyed.

News of the Long-Lost Tribes.

THE REPORT THAT A PORTION OF THE TEN TRIBES HAS BEEN FOUND.

[From the Independent.]

Prof. Sachau, who has lately returned from the East, brings news of a discovery that cannot fail to prove interesting to all Bible students. In II. Kings, xvii., 6, we read that "the King of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah, and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes." In the 18th Chapter and 11th verse this is repeated. From the context in both places one gathers that Shalmaneser carried the Israelites away; although he did in reality die during the three years of the siege, which was brought to a successful conclusion by his successor, Sargon, in 720. In I. Chronicles, v. 26, the deportation of the Israelites is ascribed to Pul, and to Tiglath-Pileser—both, probably, names for the same person, the predecessor of Shalmaneser. The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh are mentioned as those whom he deported, and Hara is added to the places mentioned in Kings. It may be well to recall, in passing, that Tiglath-Pileser actually did wrest the trans-Jordanic territory from the King of Israel. In the apocryphal Book of Tobit we find the Israelites spoken of as dwelling in the cities of the Medes, and a city, Rages, is mentioned, a place in the neighbourhood of the modern Teheran, south of the Caspian Sea. Shortly after, or about the time of the capture of Samaria, Sargon conducted some campaigns in Babylonia and Elam, on the Persian Gulf, and from these regions he brought inhabitants to supply the vacancy caused by the deportation of the Israelites.

Halah was a portion of the city of Nineveh, the capital of the capital, which had apparently, at the time of Sargon's accession, been somewhat depopulated by civil strife. The cities of the Medes were southeast of the Sea of Urmia and south of the Caspian. But where was "Habor, a river of Gozan?" Both names appear twice. Habor appears as a tributary of the Euphrates, and Gozan as part of Mesopotamia. For a long time this was supposed to be the region meant. There had, however, been no wars or disturbances of any sort to cause the depopulation of this part of Mesopotamia, and it is difficult to see why Sargon should have made room for them there. Further, to settle them in a place from which they could so readily return to their home would have been contrary to the Assyrian policy. There was also a scarcely known Habor and Gozan in the neighbourhood of the Sea of Urmia, and there is yet a valley of Habor west of that sea. The expeditions of Tiglath Pileser and Shalmaneser against Media, against Namri, about the Sea of Urmia, and against a land that is unkonwn, because the inscription is defective, but which lay apparently in the same northeasterly direction from Nineveh, would have made room for the importation of people from Samaria; and we find, in point of fact, "the cities of the Medes" mentioned as a place into which the Israelites were settled. This locality would have been far enough removed from Samaria to preclude the possibility of return. It satisfies, further, the close connection in the Bible narrative between Gozan and Media.

West of the Sea of Urmia, among the mountains, dwells the small remnant that still speaks Aramaeic. While travelling in this region, Prof. Sachau heard of some valleys inhabited by Jews. After some difficulty, he succeeded in visiting them. He found a people speaking the Turkish tongue, but retaining the Jewish religion. They had a tradition that they belonged to the ten tribes of Israel and that they had been brought thither by the Assyrians. There seems no reason to doubt the truth of their tradition. The Israelites in Nineveh and in the cities of the Medes naturally were lost in the population about them; but these Israelites, so isolated among the mountain valleys, would just as naturally have preserved their identity, in the same way that the Aramaeans have preserved their language. Hebrews they certainly are. They could not have come out of Babylon, unless a body of commercial Jews suffered an impossible metamorphosis into agricultural Israelites. Unless you derive them from the ten tribes of Israel, they remain unexplained.

It is a pity that Prof. Sachau, not being an Old Testament scholar, did not interest himself as to the Hebrew text they used, nor as to any now in use among the Jews. It is, of course, probable that they came under the influence of the ubiquitous mercantile Jews, accepted their texts, and were rabbinized; but it is, nevertheless, possible that a search among them might be richly rewarded.

It is interesting to trace the fate of the different tribes. A part of Simeon was absorbed in Judah. A part, as we learn from I. Chronicles, iv., 42, migrated to Mount Seir, and ultimately were lost among the Arabs. The Rechabites seem to have taken the same direction, namely, toward Arabia. Reuben appears to have lost itself in Moab. Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh were absorbed in other peoples. Of Ephraim, probably Issachar, and the other half of Manasseh the well-to-do people were deported by Sargon; the poorer classes, with settlers from Babylonia and Elam, formed the Samaritans, so hated by the Jews. Asher, Naphtali, Zebulon, and the greater part of Dan, so far as they were not lost in the neighbouring Phoenician and Aramaic population, formed, with some admixture from the Jews proper, the despised Galileans. Judah, Levi, Benjamin, a part of Simeon, and a part of Dan, with stray families from other tribes, are the modern Jews.

Among the Jews of Habor, or some of the Jewish tribes of Arabia, it is not impossible that valuable discoveries may yet be made.

Feminine Forces.

A girl's mind develops very rapidly, much more rapidly than an average boy's; and when an intelligent girl shows any special ability in one direction, she improves in that especial direction so quickly that one is deceived into thinking she has a genius for it; she herself becomes fired with ambition, works hard—and many girls can work in a way that would shame some boys—builds castles in the air of future fame and greatness; gives up other interests and hopes for the one aim, which, alas, is so often disappointed. Nineteen out of every twenty—might we not say ninety-nine out of every hundred?—girls stop when you think they are going to do something worth doing, and never get any further. They have talent, which education has brought out, and deceived them into mistaking for genius. There is, however, one very great advantage in the present age for classes of all kinds, and in the facilities for study in all directions; it gives many girls an object in life, even if they do not do anything very great for the benefit of the nation. In our grandmothers' and great-grand-mothers' times girls did fancy-work, made all the antimacassars—which, now that you can buy them for 6½d. or 1s. 0½d., it is hardly worth their while to do; or they used to stitch their male relatives' shirts and collars exquisitely—but that can be much better done in a quarter the time by the modern sewing machine; further back still, their employment was to make cowslip and gooseberry wine—to which, however, most people nowadays prefer shilling claret—or to spin the household linen—which can in our time be bought ready for use, at less cost. There is nothing left for girls but tennis and art. A great many prefer the latter. I went the other afternoon to pay a call, and after a few minutes' talk with the mistress of the house, the door opened, and the eldest girl, who is a would-be artist entered. Her head was a wild tousle of red fuzz, as if she had been indulging in a hay-fight; she was dressed in a black satin frock, with very short sleeves and very low neck, and over that she had a long pink cotton pinafore, such as a child might wear, decorated like an ancient Briton, with patches of various colored paints, with which her hands too, were freely smeared. She seemed to enjoy art. I do not think the world has ever heard of her or ever will; still, it fills her life.—Tinsley's Magazine.

AMONG the Nihilists soon to be brought to trial are those charged with the explosions on the Moscow railway and at the Winter palace, those who attended the congress of assassins, and a man who is said to have given his large fortunes to the Nihilist committee.

THE Madras Mail asserts that Golconda has obtained its fame vicariously, inasmuch as the diamonds cut and polished there are usually brought from Parteal, in the Ganjam district, the wealth of which, there is fair reason to believe, has not been exhausted. It is thought that scientific investigation and first-rate machinery may yet bring to light many treasurers. A rumor is prevalent that a scheme is now afloat for redeveloping the resources of this district. Most of the world-famous diamonds hail from this locality, including the Pitt, or Regent diamond, and the Koh-i-Noor.

Toronto, Grey & Bruce R'y.

Change of Time.

On and after MONDAY, 3rd NOV. trains will run as follows:—

GOING NORTH.

Toronto,—Union Station,

Dep.	7:30 a.m.	12:20 p.m.	5:00 p.m.
Carlton	7.52 a.m.	12.45 p.m.	5.20 p.m.
Weston	8.05 a.m.	1.00 p.m.	5.30 p.m.
Humber Sum't	8.30 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	5.50 p.m.
Woodbridge	8.45 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	2.13 p.m.	6.24 p.m.
Bolton	9.25 a.m.	2.37 p.m.	6.43 p.m.
Mono Road	9.50 a.m.	3.05 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Charleston	10.35 a.m.	3.50 p.m.	7.50 p.m.
Alton	10.50 a.m.	4.05 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arrive	11.10 a.m.	4.25 p.m.	8.20 p.m.
Depart	11.30 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Orangevil'e Junction	11.45 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
Laurel	11.59 a.m.	5.20 p.m.
Shelburne	12.30 p.m.	6.00 p.m.
Dundalk	1.15 p.m.	6.50 p.m.
Proton	1.35 p.m.	7.11 p.m.
Flesherton & Pricev'e	1.55 p.m.	7.35 p.m.
Markdale	2.15 p.m.	8.05 p.m.
Berkly	2.35 p.m.	8.28 p.m.
Williamsford	2.50 p.m.	8.46 p.m.
Arnott	3.05 p.m.	9.06 p.m.
Chatsworth	3.15 p.m.	9.16 p.m.
Rockford	3.38 p.m.	9.36 p.m.
Owen Sound	4.00 p.m.	10.10 p.m.

GOING SOUTH.

Owen Sound, depart	6.30 a.m.	12.00 noon.
Rockford	7.00 a.m.	12.30 p.m.
Chatsworth	7.20 a.m.	12.55 p.m.
Arnott	7.30 a.m.	1.06 p.m.
Williamsford	7.48 a.m.	1.28 p.m.
Berkly	8.05 a.m.	1.48 p.m.
Markdale	8.30 a.m.	2.15 p.m.
Flesherton & Priceville	8.55 a.m.	2.45 p.m.
Proton	9.15 a.m.	3.10 p.m.
Dundalk	9.35 a.m.	3.30 p.m.
Shelburne	10.15 a.m.	4.15 p.m.
Laurel	10.47 a.m.	4.50 p.m.
Orangeville Junction	11.00 a.m.	5.05 p.m.
ORANGEVILLE—
Arr.	11:15 a.m.	5:20 p.m.
Dep.	7.15 a.m.	11.35 a.m.	5.40 p.m.
Alton	7.35 a.m.	11.55 a.m.	6.00 p.m.
Charleston	7.50 a.m.	12.10 p.m.	6.18 p.m.
Mono Road	8.25 a.m.	12.47 p.m.	7.05 p.m.
Bolton	8.45 a.m.	1.10 p.m.	7.33 p.m.
Kleinburg	9.05 a.m.	1.30 p.m.	7.55 p.m.
Woodbridge	9.25 a.m.	1.50 p.m.	8.17 p.m.
Humber Sum't	9.40 a.m.	2.05 p.m.	8.33 p.m.
Weston	10.00 a.m.	2.27 p.m.	9.00 p.m.
Carlton	10.10 a.m.	2.39 p.m.	9.15 p.m.
TORONTO,—Union Station,
Arrive	10.30 a.m.	3.00 p.m.	9.40 p.m.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 19th, 1880.

NOTICE,

THE Canada Advertising Agency, No. 29 King Street West, Toronto, W. W. BUTCHER, Manager, Is authorized to receive advertisements for this paper.

THE Reeve of Artemesia again positively asserts that we accused him of dishonesty in our article criticising the action of the Council in throwing out the bonus by-law. We again as possitively deny having done so.—Now by emphasizing the word honest by putting it in italics, (as the Reeve has done in re-producing the sentence in his communication, and which we did not do) thereby drawing particular attention to that word, it might be inferred that such was the idea we wished to convey; but to an unprejudiced mind no such meaning would appear. He also sticks to it, that we advised the petitioners to remember the Council for evil. We last week asked the Reeve to prove it; but he has failed to do so, and instead merely reiterates his former charge. We presume this is the sentence he has reference to. "The 150 influential and respectable ratepayers who signed the petition will certainly not soon forget the insult." Where does the advice come in, Doctor? Point it out. The Doctor wants to know why the STANDARD has got its "back up," and then goes on to tell us it was very naughty for us to do so, after the council had "taken us by the hand," and given us its "patronage freely." The STANDARD has not got its "back up," it bears the doctor no ill will, it has not attacked his private character, but merely exercised its prerogative to criticise or comment on the public acts of a man occupying a public position. For this we have been threatened with retaliation, and are told that there are other weapons to be used against us, which it would be wise for us to regard. Now, Doctor, we may as well tell you right here, that we consider such a course neither manly nor honorable, and will have no effect on us, as we "don't scare worth a cent."—As to the Council "taking us by the hand, &c.," here are the facts: Shortly after we purchased the late Expositor plant, we attended a meeting of the Council and solicited the Township printing. We were informed we could have it provided we did it as cheaply and satisfactorily as they could get it done elsewhere, and a motion was made and carried to that effect. Since then the "patronage that has been so freely" bestowed upon us, has amounted to the very large sum of eight dollars being one dollar less than the same work cost them for 1879. From the manner she flaunts it in our face, one would imagine that we got the printing without any conditions, and the amount paid us was something considerable

The Reeve is also kind enough to inform us that he is sorry to find that through the influence of a clique, the influence of the STANDARD is being demolished. We beg to assure him the STANDARD is advised by no one, nor will it be as long as it remains under our control, neither shall we rush in the ruts of any one. We announced the course we proposed to persue in our first issue. From that course we have not, nor will we swerve, but go on in even tenor of our way, and as long as we persue a straightforward and manly course, we have no fear but that those whose interests we advocate will appreciate our efforts in their behalf, and reward us accordingly with their full confidence and patronage.

The Reeve is barking up the wrong tree when he insinuates that we employ an Editor for special occasions. We feel quite capable of writing our own editorials without any outside assistance.

In refering to the action of the Council in refusing to submit the by-law, he says they only exercised their prerogative in postponing consideration, and that Holland Council did the same. We do not consider they are paralel cases. In Artemesia the matter has been discussed from nearly every standpoint for weeks past, in Holland there has been little or no discussion. In Artemesia the petition was signed by nearly triple the number required by law, in Holland the surplus amounted, we believe, to only three. In Holland there was a strong counter petition, in Artemesia there was none, and as we before said they are not analogus.

He re-asserts the widening of the gauge would confer no benefit to the ratepayers, and says the remarks we made relative thereto are fanciful and delusive. We would respectfully submit the following little epistle from the firm of W. P. Howland & Co., to the calm consideration of the rate payers of Artemesia, Glenelg, or any other section of country through which the T., G. & B. Railway passes:

TORONTO, Oct. 5, 1880.

Messrs. McLean Bros., Owen Sound,—Gentlemen—Your favor of the 3rd received; contents noted. We cannot at present buy spring wheat at prices going, and fall wheat is also at a disadvantage up there. We can buy fall wheat equal quality to yours to better advantage, so far as freight is concered, outside on either of the other lines of railway for shipment via Boston and New York, as their is no transhipment. The wheat at 96 cents in Owen Sound would stand us about 4c per bushel more than outside wheat. This throws us out of the market for a time as there is no local inquiry.

Yours truly, W. P. HOWLAND & CO.

This, putting the average amount of wheat which each farmer has to dispose of at 100 bushels, and the loss on the grain at 3c, being one cent lower than the Messrs. Howland placed it, and we have an annual loss to the farmer on the item of wheat alone of $3, and when we consider that this is only a small portion of what farmers have to ship, and on which losses to a greater or lesser amount must necessarily occur, the drain on their pockets would be threefold greater than by granting a bonus. Yet in the face of these plain facts, he says it would be better to plod along in the old way, and that the misserable abortion we have now is quite sufficient for our wants for years to come.

The Reeve also belittles the influence the railway has had in increasing the value of land. We ask him how many of the farms that are now placed at from $3,000 upwards, could have been sold for that sum before the advent of the railway, or could now be sold at any price were there no road?

When we spoke of the villages that had sprung up, we spoke of the road as a whole, and any body but the Reeve of Artemesia would so read our remarks.

Objection is taken to our participating in the discussion because we are not a resident or ratepayer in the Township. Did the matter affect Artemesia alone, we should not have interfered; but it not only affects Artemesia, but every township through which the road passes. Should she reject the by law, other townships will naturally ask why they should put their hands in their pockets to help a township that won't help herself.—We maintain, therefore, we would be neglecting our duty as a public journalist did we not point out to her that in our estimation, in opposing the by-law she is persuing a suicidal policy.

We assure Dr. Christoe as a private citizen we hold him in high esteem, and regret being compelled to differ with him on this question. We also regret to say, and we do it in sorrow, not in anger, that should he persit in following his present course and succeed in defeating the by-law, we very much fear that he will live to regret it in the years to come.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—I have been noticing your editorials for some time past, and feel confident that your are in the wrong channel. You say the Council, at the dictation of the Reeve, opposed the by-law, now, sir, I wish you to understand that the Council, with the exception of Mr. Elliott, bear full share of the responsibility of the course they have taken, and we also understand that we are responsible to the ratepayers of Artemesia, who, no doubt, will pass their verdict in due time. No doubt your editorials will make a marked impression on the ratepayers, when they consider that if the by-law had been submitted you would have $45 for publishing it, whether won or lost; this, of course, is quite an item to a ratepayer of Glenelg. Now, sir, you would oblige me, as well as the majority of the ratepayers of this township, by turning your bellows around and blowing your own Township for awhile. By giving the above an insertion in your paper, you will oblige

THORP WRIGHT.

And "the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse." Mr. Thorp Wright, after taking nearly three weeks to consider the matter informs us that he has been noticing our editorials for some time past, and "feels confident that we are in the wrong channel." Well, Mr. Wright, we are quite willing to permit you to think as you please. We have no wish to cram our opinions down any man's throat, and all we ask is to be permitted to enjoy the same privilege, without having sordid motives hurled at us. The insuation that we were influenced to take the course we have from the fact that we lost the publication of the by-law, through the action of the Council is worthy the source from whence it sprung. Had we been actuated by any such motives we would have kept mum, as the By-law will have to be submitted sooner or later. The last piece of advice given by Mr. Thorp Wright will be followed, he may rest assured, when our Township needs it. At present we see no occasion, for we do not believe that a corporal's guard can be found in Glenelg who are foolish enough to oppose the granting of a bonus.

THE GREAT BOAT RACE.

The boat race is over and Canada's boy has again proved victorious. From the accounts that have been published from day to day in the Toronto papers we began to tremble for our representative, but the result has proved that our fears were groundless We must say we have been disappointed, we fully expected an exciting race, but instead it turned out like most of the others, a mere walk over the course. The amount of money that has been staked on this event is something enormous; the full amount will never be known, as there were numerous private bets of which no accurate estimate can be arrived at. Altogether the amount of money that changed hands will be close on a million dollars. The betting in Markdale did not reach a very large amount for the simple reason that all wanted to bet the one way. The news of the victory was received with unqualified pleasure and in the evening the boys celebrated the event by an immense bonfire.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From a Correspondent.

Sneak thieves have put in an appearance here as well as in other parts. Their vists so far have been to hen roosts and potato pits. Several parties complain about nocturnal visits having been paid to their turkey and chicken roosts. It is a pity that some of these gentry could not be caught, and made an example of.

LEFT FOR PARTS UNKNOWN.—M. D. Johnson of this place, together with his family, some time since, took a moonlight flit from here, leaving a large number of sorrowing friends.—It has since been reported that they has gone to Davy Jones' Locker.

ACCIDENTS.—Joseph Coon, while playing with a gun cartridge, in some way exploded it, resulting in a piece of the shell entering one of his eyes, completely destroying the sight. This is another warning to beware of playing with gunpowder. As two sons of Mr. Brodie were going along the Meaford Road with an ox team and stone boat, the oxen made a sudden dash for some water on the side of the road, throwing the youngest boy off and breaking his left arm just above the elbow.

Mr. G. Graham is about leaving here. He has purchased the Gilray steam saw mill, and is going to rent or sell his blacksmiths' stand here. We wish him success in his new enterprise.

Railroad matters are quiet here at present, our Council having seen fit in their wisdom to give the petition of the ratepayers its quietus for the present.

T., G. & B. R. R.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I must feel highly flattered at the considerations paid me, and you must feel pleased for so many to join you against a public officer. Why the STANDARD should get its back so dreadfully up against the Council of Artemesia, and myself in particular, I cannot devine. It has no interest in Artemesia, pays, so far as I know, none of its rates, and, therefore, is what one calls an outsider. The Council took it by the hand, gave it patronage freely, and certainly expected fair dealing at its hands. Personally I was anxious the STANDARD should be a success, intellectually, morally, and financially, instead I find the influence of a clique early demolishing its influence, rushing into the same rut of its predecessor, whose glory soon culminated and vanished. I admit the privilege to it of criticism, but let it be gentlemanly—let it be fair.

Now sir I hold, to charge me with "dishonesty" and recharge me with "falsehood" for asserting it, is neither gentlemanly or fair. At the expense sir, of showing, either wanton wrecklessness, of consummate ignorance of the construction of a sentence, let me quote your passage again. "Had the Reeve honestly, through ignorance misinterpreted the act the purport of the law in question, their might be some excuse; but the Doctor is not an ignorant man and can claim no indulgence on this score, hence his culpability is the greater." ask your village school master or any average boy, what the inference of this sentence is—he would reply, that the Doctor was, culpably dishonest, and it would be unstr ined at that, and so in like manner your other remarks, bear the same analysis—instead of stating calmly you intendended nothing of the kind—you carry the same spirit, and charge me with false statements in a kind of bravado style, and use the term obnoxiously throughout your article, to fasten the idea of "dishonesty" upon me regarding this railroad question. Now sir, the man who takes on himself the role of an editor, who fails to construe an English sentence so plainly stated, or who frames one so loosely as to mislead, is to be pittied. The Council or Artemesia asks no favors, it exercised its prerogative, it did what is often done—postponed consideration. Holland council did the same. It was no want of courtesy—and whatever meaning you put on your editorial, one thing is clear, it was unnecessarily severe and infortunate. I shall not bandy words with you further, with an Editor any man is heavily handicapped, especially one used for an occasion who is rash and windy. We have other weapons, which a thoughtful man would legard. I regret having to trouble you with other remarks, upon Mr. Brown and Robertson's communications. The latter was grossly personal in his first article. I pricked him a bit, an ho! an avalanche has tumbled about my ears. Well sir, I must say, that I hold Mr. R. in great respect. I believe him to be a gentleman of unsullied integrity. And I sincerely regret, that he should have so offended by personal allusions, to draw my lance. Defeat sir is not often my lot—in this instance my friend must submit to a little more physic and I promise him a more drastic dose the next time, poor man! He shall have it without charge too! to his heart's content. But hold!! I can't see Robert Robertson in the article at all, at all. Did you ever read the fable of the "Ass" in the "Lion's" skin? Well sir, the article signed "Robert Robertson" reminds me of it—and the "Lion" in this case is not a very wonderful animal he is an abortion, what people, generally call a sneak! but then, he has sufficient skill to make poor Robinson his Jackall, and I suppose that is enough. Mr. R. boasts of having means employed in his business. I am glad of it—but that don't pay the taxes, you see! If such be the case and he derives an income therefrom—why does he not as a good patriot, report the circumstances to the assessor, and be rated accordingly. But I very much question, if he conducts his business differently to most others in the same line—a mode well understood. I was careful to avoid all personalities in the first articles published—for I believe with Mr. Brown, that every man has a right to speak or write too, if he choose to do so who has the interest of the Township at heart—whether his assessment be large or small—whether it be Robertson's, ninety cents or Christoe's, fourteen dollars R. R. Tax, on property actually owned. But I do contend, that a Rich man, like Mr. R. to prate and scold and write, to fix an increased tax, on a majority of our poorer class of ratepayers, is too much. It is of the cockney pseudo style and carries on its face, a willing tool of the management—it is demeaning—poor—case, but he roosts [illegible] and [illegible] crumbs upon [illegible] for straws [illegible]—I certainly would [illegible] again to do so, [illegible] reserve to himself the [illegible] gentlemanly [illegible] pleasure, and were [illegible] nothing personal would have been mentioned in reply. Will you allow me now sir, to state—I have been moved to my present opposition to this, as well as to the last scheme, honestly, sincerely. Because since I have been Reeve of Artemesia, efforts have been constantly made to reduce if possible the taxes, and a certain kind of dread has existed, lest the tax should take a sudden bound upward—hence caution in this direction has been uppermost. Because it was ascertained, that a very strong feeling existed in the Township against any scheme, so much so, that, a resolution was passed, to satisfy the Ratepayers—that the Reeve and Deputy should not foster any such scheme—and I find no change in circumstances, excepting the Ex-deputy, who at the time did object. Because the President of the road convinced me, that the absolute necessity for change of guage did not exist, that he was more solicitous to have the road put in good repair; for said he, the road is ample for purposes of freight for years to come. See his Orangeville speech as published. Because the Managemt of the Road, has not been frank, and is not so, with the Municipalities. All admit the first scheme to have been bogus, a miserable picture, not to be entertained and it was abandoned. Yet what was the the action of the Management, but to hoist scare-crows to frighten the ratepayers to grant a Bonus? The employees were to quit: the road was to stop, and all for one purpose! but by the calm, thoughtful ratepayers,—characterized, it is true, as a lot of ignoramuses, the scheme collapsed, and the Township saved. Is the present scheme any better? To me it seems, not much. It is asserted that the success of the scheme depends on the municipalities granting a sum of $300,000. This sum was to be distributed over the Municipalities interested—Artemesia was down for $12,000, we will suppose it to be correct. Now if as alledged the scheme depend on the conditions named; how does it happen, that $3,000 can be dropped off Derby; $2,000 off Melancthon $2,000 off Proton and so on ad libitum?—Does it not appear, that the scheme, is not as represented to us, that there is not the danger of failure; this vascillation on the part of the Company, proves a fatality to it, unsurmountable. At one time it will cost so much; at another time less and at another more than ever. See pamphlets issued by Company. Then, one bonus is required, now another. At one time, the unfortunate Bondholders are requested to step behind, to the tune of $350,000 and now to $1,000,000 I confess to me there appears to be a screw loose here—either more was laid on the Townships, than required, or else the scheme does not depend on the $300,000 Bonuses at all. Which is it? The latter certainly. Why the 28 Townships and 7 Villages, if I am correct, at proportionate rates to us couldn't possibly make it—and yet this sine qua non is, that unless the sum be raised—the scheme falls to the ground. I demur against it, the Management do not intend to do so—but will get yours if they can. It only surprise me, that, closer observation is not made in this matter—that people receive the mere ipse dixit of the Management or newspaper scribling partizans. If the repairs could have been made, with an assistance of four hundred thousand dollars from the Municipalities and $350,000 as above; surely the same repairs can be made with $1,000,000. At this very moment the Management are very accommodating—they are willing to take anything—of course they are! As to the increased benifits derived, or to be derived and the Villages which have sprung up—so far as Artemesia is concerned I fail to see it—better proof, than a mere assertion would be thankfully received—begin with the Villages Where are they? The worth of property was pretty fully discussed pro and con. Those for the Bonus extremists said they were largely benefited—those against it directly opposite. The truth I dare say lies between. Now a different gauge, by the very nature of things cannot materially change it. Also while any company, has the power to discriminate rates, the ratepayers need not expect the benefits, from through freight and other fanciful illusions presented. I am asked will not the Merchants be enabled to give more? How in the nature of things can they? when at this moment the Bye-Stations have to make up for competing points like Owen Sound. I am told freight is carried as cheaply from Owen Sound as from Flesherton Station—to Toronto! But worse still Artemesia is asked to give a Bonus of $10,000 to one company—the old Company—in the face of an agreement—assigning over all power, to, fix your tariff to a company, you know not—you can have no conditions, whatever in your By-Law—and it may be barely possible, that we are stepping out of the fryingpan into the fire. Like a pedlar, who tells you a good yarn—induces you to buy—gets your note—articles not as represented—another person presents your note—you seek for conditions—number two, doesn't know anything about it—you are sued. The Judge tells you, you shouldn't have given the note—and so precisely with this Bonus—you give it and it is transferre—the Grand Trunk will say, we don't known anything about your Bonus—that is your business the R. R. is ours. These are simple facts and possibilities. And although gentle from Markdale and Flesherton Station rage and bespatter me tenfold more, it will not alter my statements. The promises regarding the present Road are to recent to venture so soon again—but I say now, if the majority of property owners, under the new act vote for it I shall say amen to it—and pay my quota, without a murmur. To conclude then, let many say as often before—that it is a public question, a question fairly to be considered from more than one stand point—stick to your point friend, only don't stick to me, there is danger of conflict if you do. Feeling obliged for the space afforded, I am yours,

DR. CHRISTOE.

CHURCH DIRECTORY.

CHRIST CHURCH.

Services—Sept. 26, 10:30 a. m.; Oct. 3rd, 6:30 p. m.; 10th, 10:30 a. m.; 17th, 10:30 a. m.; 24th, 6:30 p. m.; 31st, 6:30 p. m.; Nov. 7th 10:30 a. m.; 14th, 10:30 a. m.; 21st, 10:30 a. m.; 28th, 6.30 p. m.; Dec. 5th, 6:30 p. m.; 12th, 10:30 a. m.; 19th, 10:30 a. m.; 27th, 6:30 p. m, Sabbath School, 2:30 p. m. Rev. James Ward, Incumbent.

CANADA METHODIST CHURCH.

Services every Sabbath at 10:30 a.m., and 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. G. S. Bowes, Superintendent. Prayer Meeting, Thursday Evenings at 7:30. Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Pastor.

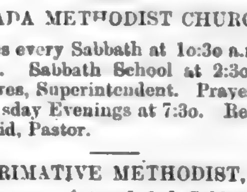
PRIMATIVE METHODIST.

Services every 1st and 3rd Sabbath at 3 o'clock p. m. Every 2nd & 4th Sabbath at 10:30 a. m., in the Orange Hall. C. C. Garnett, Pastor.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Services in Dufferin Hall every alternate Sabbath at 11 a. m., and intervening Sabbaths at 6:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 2:30 p. m. Bible Class and Prayer Meeting on Fridays at 7:30 p. m.

THOS. MATHEWS,



WISHES to tender to his numerous customers his sincere thanks for their very liberal patronage during the 15 years he has been in the Harness Business, in Markdale, an would respectfully solicit a continuance of the same, feeling confident that he can give Entire Satisfaction. Everything usually kept in a

FIRST-CLASS
HARNESS ESTABLISHMENT,

always on hand, and sold at moderate rates. None but good workman employed and the best of materials used.

Markdale, Nov. 18, 1880. 1a

JOB WORK done neat and prompt at the STANDARD Office.

THE MARKETS.

MARKDALE.

[illegible], Nov. 18th, 1880.

Flour	[illegible]		[illegible]
Spring Wheat per bush.	1.02		1.0[illegible]
Fall do. do.	1.00		1.00
Barley	0.60		0.7[illegible]
Oats	[illegible]		[illegible]
Peas	[illegible]		0.6[illegible]
Potatoes	[illegible]		[illegible]
Butter, per lb.	0.18		0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed	5.50	"	6.00
Beef	5.00	"	5.00
Geese per lb.	[illegible]		[illegible]
Ducks, per pair	0.40	"	0.45
Fowls, per pair	0.25	"	0.25
Turkeys, per lb.	0.07	"	0.07
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.00
Hides	5.00	"	5.00
Grass seed	2.00	"	2.25
Hay	6.50	"	[illegible]
Timothy seed	2.25	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Green Apples, per bushel	0.40	"	0.50
Lard	0.10	"	0.10
Tallow	0.06	"	0.07
Dry Cord Wood	1.75	"	1.75

ANGUS McINTYRE.

I again call your attention to my new and select stock of GROCERIES, LIQUORS, PROVISIONS, FRUITS, CONFECTIONERY and OYSTERS—always FRESH. Don't forget to give me a call. You always need something new in the Grocery line—Nothing but first-class goods kept. I send all my customers home satisfied that they get good value for their money, and they always come again. I thank my old customers for their patronage, and they don't forget me either. This is encouraging for me to go ahead in our Town of Markdale, where I am sure of friends who never forget me. ANGUS McINTYRE.

Markdale, Nov. 11, 1880. 9-21

FLESHERTON.

(Corrected weekly for the Standard by R. J. Sproule, Flesherton.)

THURSDAY, Nov. 18th, 1880.

Flour, per bbl.	$5.00	to	$5.50
Spring Wheat per bush.,	1.02	to	1.06
Fall do. do. do.	0.95	"	1.00
Barley	0.60	"	0.73
Oats	0.00	"	0.28
Peas	0.50	"	0.60
Potatoes	0.30	"	0.30
Butter, per lb.	0.17	"	0.20
Eggs, per doz.	0.14	"	0.15
Pork, dressed.	5.50	"	5.00
Beef	5.00	"	0.00
Sheepskins	0.60	"	1.25
Hides	7.50	"	8.00
Hay	6.00	"	7.00
Timothy seed,	2.00	"	2.50
Wool	0.25	"	0.30
Lard	0.10	"	0.12
Tallow	0.05	"	0.07

TORONTO.

(Special to the Standard.)

TORONTO, Nov. 18, 1880.

Wheat, fall, per bush	$1 06	to	$1 08
Wheat, spring, do.	1 10	to	1 16
Barley, do.	0 70	to	0 90
Oats, do.	0 34	to	0 35
Peas, do.	0 63	to	0 68
Rye, do.	0 87	to	0 88
Clover Seed do.	0 00	to	0 00
Dressed hogs, per 100 lbs.	6 00	to	6 50
Beef, hind quarters	5 50	to	7 00
Beef, fore quarters	3 00	to	4 00
Chickens, per pair	30	to	0 45
Fowls, do.	40	to	0 40
Ducks, per brace	50	to	0 60
Geese, each	50	to	0 60
Turkeys	75	to	1 25
Butter, large rolls	12	to	0 15
Butter, tub dairy	20	to	0 22
Butter, store-packed	18	to	0 20
Eggs, fresh, per doz	0 18	to	0 00
Eggs, packed	0 00	to	0 00
Apples, per brl	1 00	to	1 10
Potatoes, per bag	0 50	to	0 25
Onions, per bag	0 00	to	1 55
Hay	8 50	to	12 25

STRAYED.

CAME into the enclosure of the subscriber Lot 72, East Toronto and Sydenham Road, Township of Holland, some time in September, one Ewe. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

WM. JACKSON.

Holland, Nov. 17, 1880. 1o-3i*

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the undersigned, on the 15th inst., a Steer rising three years The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take him away,

SAMUEL MILLER.

Markdale, Nov. 18, 1880. 1o-3i

NOTICE.

IF THE gentleman who witnessed the breaking of the School House windows last Sunday night, will call and inform the undersigned who the perpetrators were, he will be suitably rewarded.

WM. BROWN.

Nov. 16, 1880 1o-1i.

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the subscriber, Lot 20, Con. 12 township of Holland, in July, a red Steer, 2 years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take him away,

J. S. LYONS.

Holland, Nov. 12, 1880. 1o 3i*

STRAYED

INTO the premises of the subscriber, Lot 8, Con. 14, township of Glenelg, on or about the 1st of September, a Heifer, one year old, spotted red and white. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

GEORGE LAMB.

Glenelg, Nov. 13, 1880. 1o-3i*

New Furniture Store! In Dundalk.

C. HUMPHRIES,

Late of Shelburne, has now in stock a large and select stock of

COMMON AND HAIR-CLOTH

Furniture,

Which he will sell very Cheap for Cash.

Coffins and Shrouds always on hand,

Also agent for Doherty's Organs, and Raymond & Ashburn's Sewing Machines. Call and examine our Organs and Machines before [illegible]

Dundalk, Nov. 17, 1880. 1o-2i

MONTHLY CATTLE FAIRS.

Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.

Priceville—Monday before Durham.

[illegible]

Fair.

Drayton—Saturday before Guelph.

Elora—The day before Guelph.

Douglas—Monday before Elora Fair.

Hamilton—Cyrstal Palace Grounds, the day after Guelph.

Berlin—First Thursday in each month.

Brampton—First Thursday in each month.

Listowel—First Friday in each month.

Fergus—Thursday following Mount Forest.

Rosemont—Fifteenth of February, April, June, August, October and December.

Primrose—Wednesday preceding the Orangeville Fair.

Orangeville—The 2nd Thursday in each month.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.

Marshville—Second Wednesday in each month.

Walkerton—The last Wednesday in each month.

Mildmay—Last Wednesday of each month.

NOTICE.

PARTIES delivering logs at the Steam Saw Mill, Markdale, will please call and leave their names and get a number to stamp on their logs, otherwise the proprietor will not hold himself responsible for logs which may be delivered.

Lumber, after being sawed three days and not piled, the "Mill Proprietor" will proceed to pile out of his way, and charge owner for time for doing so, and for space occupied.

The Highest Price in Cash Paid for Butternut, Cherry and Large Birch.

JAMES CHAPMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Markdale, Nov. 18, 1880. 1o-2i

J. MONTGOMERY, BAKER,

THE Subscriber, in returning thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage during the past eight years, begs to intimate to them he is now prepared to supply the Public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUM CAKES, either plain, or Iced and Ornamented, and a large Variety of Other Cakes. always on hand, Also, BISCUIT!

of every description, from the best manufacturers in Ontario. Also, a large and varied assortment of the CHOICEST CONFECTIONERY!

BRIDES' CAKES!

supplied on the shortest notice, and got up in the best style that be done this side of Toronto.

Tea Meetings, Socials, AND OTHER PARTIES, supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

JOHN MONTGOMERY.

Markdale, Nov. 18, st, 1880. 1o-ly

NEW DRUG STORE, DUNDALK.

R. PHILLIPS, M.C.P., PROPRIETOR.

MR. PHILLIPS begs to inform the inhabitants of Dundalk and the adjacent country, that he has opened a Drug Business in the stand lately occupied by Mr. Carter. Having laid in a large stock of DRUGS, CHEMICALS, STATIONERY, FANCY GOODS, BOOKS, &c., &c.

Parties desirous of procuring anything in any of those lines, will find it to their advantage to visit the Dundalk Drug Store, before going elsewhere.

CHRISTMAS —AND— NEW YEAR'S

Tops, Gift Books, FANCY PRESENTS, ETC., In endless variety.

R. PHILLIPS.

Dundalk, Nov. 18, 1880. 1o-2i

ESTABLISHED 35 YEARS.

WEEKLY SPECTATOR

A LARGE EIGHT-PAGE PAPER —ONLY— Per Year. ($1) Per Year.

One of the Largest and best Weeklies in Canada.

BALLANCE OF 1880 FREE.

Agents receive 25 Cents for every yearly subscriber. Any party sending us three subscribers will receive a copy, post-paid, of the Farmer's Account Book, worth one dollar, in place of the usual commission. Send a post card for Sample Copy of our Weekly, which is sent free. The only paper in Canada that publishes a Draught Column. Address

SPECTATOR PRINTING COMPANY, Hamilton, Ont.

Nov. 17, 1880.

Subscribe for the Standard. We will give it from now till the First of January, 1882, for one year's subscription.

CHEAP CASH STORE

Reynolds & Son

[illegible] to the front with a complete stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries

BOOTS AND SHOES,

HARDWARE, CROCKERY, GLASSWARE, ETC.

Which for QUALITY and LOW PRICES cannot be passed. Give us a call and try some of our

NEW SEASONED JAPAN TEA, 3lb. FOR

PURE GOLDEN SYRUP ALWAYS ON HAND

Please give us a call before purchasing elsewhere.

BUTTER, POULTRY AND EGGS TAKEN IN CHANGE FOR GOODS.

REYNOLDS & SON.

Markdale, Nov. 11, 1880.

MEDICAL HALL.

Pure Drugs and Chemicals

PATENT MEDICINES!

Dye Stuffs, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Combs, Tooth, and Hair Brushes, Trusses and Surgical Appliances and general Druggists sundries.

Stationery and School Books! IN GREAT VARIETY.

FRESH TEAS AND TOBACCOS TOGETHER WITH

PAINTS AND OILS.

Physicians' Prescriptions AND VETERINARY PREPERATIONS CAREFULLY COMPOUNDED.

Montreal Telegraph Office.

T. S. SPROULE, M.

MILL STREET, MARKDALE, Sep. 17, 1880.

Read This.

MONEY LOANED at 7 per cent. Simple Interest, and nyt in advance. The Borrower can have his own terms as to the TIME and the WAY he REPAYS it. Loans put through with the LEAST possible DELAY.

See the Undersigned before applying Elsewhere.

Offices in Shelburne and Dunkalk.

Always in the Shelburne Office on MONDAYS and TUESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on WEDNESDAYS, from 8.30 a. m. to 2 p. m.

In the Dundalk Office on THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS. On Thursdays, from 30 to 6 p. m., and on Fridays, from 9 a.m. to 4 p. m.

I would like all my friends to make it their business to see me on Fridays in Dundalk, rather than Thursday Evenings, if possible.

GEO. RUTHERFORD, Estate and General Agent.

FARMS SOLD AND RENTED

By sending number of Lot, Concession, Price, Terms, &c., for very moderate charges.

CONVEYANCING A SPECIALTY.

All Kinds of Writings Executed.

INSURANCES Effected in the best Stock Companies.

GREAT BARGAINS

Given in the Best and Hardiest Canadian

FRUIT & ORNAMENTAL TREES.

IRON FORCE PUMPS! —FOR— WELLS and CISTERNS, Sold Very Cheap.

Every Farmer ought to get one.

GEO. RUTHERFORD, Estate and General Agent.

SHELBURNE AND DUNDALK.

October 21, 1880. 6

Wm. Lucas & Co., BANKER, MARKDALE.

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT. Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on all points, at lowest rates.

WM. LUCAS & Co.

September, 1880. 2-y

Public Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the new road open through lots 99, 100, and 101, on the 3rd concession W. T. & S. R., in the township of Glenelg, is not properly established.

The corporation of the township of Glenelg not having any title to the road through said lots, will not be responsible for any accident that may happen on said road.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk. FINLAY MACRAE, Reeve.

Township of Glenelg, Oct. 19, 1880. 6tf.

W. BENSO[illegible]

—OF THE—

"Blefast House,

Begs to announce that he is fully [illegible] to dispose of all articles usual to a Grocery and Provision Establish[illegible]

Lowest [illegible]ossible Pr[illegible]

The stock consists of Groceries and Provisio[illegible]

together with

LIQUORS of all kin[illegible] such as SCOTCH, IRISH and CANADIAN best brands. I have no desire to [illegible] misrepresent the performance of im[illegible] ties, but I may say in response to a [illegible] retailer who offers a book worth [illegible] every purchaser of 3 lbs. of tea, that [illegible] Give Two Books of sup[illegible] value to those mentioned to all [illegible] a like quantity. My house is [illegible]

Belfast House, op. Haskett.

NO SECOND PRICE

W. BEN[illegible]

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880.

DONALD McLE[illegible]

MAKER

BEGS to return his sincere thanks to the public for their very liberal p[illegible] in the past, and hopes by honorable FIRST-CLASS WORK, and close atte[illegible] business, to merit a continuance of the [illegible]

THE BEST OF MATER[illegible] Used, and none but First-Class [illegible] employed.

Special attention paid to Repairi[illegible] will be done promptly.

Sewed work a Special[illegible]

NOTICE.

All over due accounts must be pa[illegible] delay or I shall have to resort to [illegible] ly means for collection.

D. McLEOD.

Corner of Queen and Mill [illegible]

Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880.

VETERINAR[illegible]

J. [illegible] BLOOMFIEL[illegible] Veterinary

HAS commenced the practice of [illegible] fession in Markdale, and from experience and extensive practice in [illegible] and this country, is enabled to [illegible] satisfaction. Regulating Powders [illegible] miration of thousands that have use[illegible] warranted to purify the blood by re[illegible] diseases lurking in the system of [illegible] cattle, always on hand. Medicines procured at his office over Dr. S[illegible] Drug Store, Markdale.

Samuel Mor[illegible]w,

LICENSED AUCTI[illegible]ER FOR County of Grey.

Sales attended at short notice [illegible] or country. Charges m[illegible] ate. Sale Bills, Notes and Stamps [illegible] if required. Having had long exp[illegible] the business I can guarantee satisf[illegible]

Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880.

THE STANDARD.

[illegible]day, Nov. 19th, 1880.

[illegible] & OTHER NOTICES

[illegible] weather.

[illegible] getting good.

[illegible] Council meets to-day.

[illegible] O'Shanter caps are all the go.

[illegible] McFarland shipped over a ton [illegible] poultry on Wednesday last.

CALL and see our 25 cent package[illegible] of stationery, &c. The cheapest i[illegible] Town.

[illegible] C. W. & A. Speers shipp[illegible] [illegible] this place last week, over [illegible] cattle for the English Marke[illegible]

PERSONS desiring a change in ad[illegible] vertisement will please hand it in [illegible] later than noon on Wednesday's.

The Wingham by-law for a bon[illegible] of $12,500 in aid of the T. G. & B. [illegible] extension was carried by a majorit[illegible] of 136.

JOHN Fair P. L. S. will be at Mar[illegible] dale on Monday next, any person re[illegible] quiring his services will find him [illegible] John Reid's.

PERSONS wishing to get a good week[illegible] ly any paper should read the adver[illegible] tisement of the Hamilton Spectator [illegible] another column.

IF you have lost, found, or wa[illegible] anything announce it through t[illegible] columns of the STANDARD. It is [illegible] best medium in the county.

A SPECIAL meeting of L. O. L. [illegible] will be held in the Orange H[illegible] Markdale, on Wednesday the [illegible] December; for the purpose of c[illegible] ferring the Royal Arch degree.

SPECIAL.—Next Sabbath [illegible] C. Garnett will (D. V.) preach [illegible] the Orange Hall at 10:30; subj[illegible] "epidemics their cause and cure fr[illegible] a Bible stand point."

PERSONS requiring the [illegible] Mr. J. J. White, Dentist, wil[illegible] remember he will be at the [illegible] Hotel, Markdale, on Wedne[illegible] [illegible] inst.

EVERY business man sh[illegible] his name and address print[illegible] envelopes he uses. Call at [illegible] STANDARD office and you will see [illegible] how cheap we can do them.

ON the 9th inst. the re[illegible] Hugh Rutledge, who died in the [illegible] 1862 being the first death that [illegible] in this locality after it was [illegible] settled, were removed from their [illegible] resting place to the [illegible]

POST MASTERS,—When the S[illegible] is not called for the P. M. will [illegible] distribute the papers to whom [illegible] please, and not return them [illegible] a card with the names of [illegible] whom they are addressed.

COAL OIL is used [illegible] some of those [illegible] Watches, that you can [illegible] without a light of any [illegible] as dark as the face of a [illegible] improved mother-in-law [illegible] get to see them! [illegible] Watches.)

VENNOR's summer weather for [illegible] month is a myth. We have [illegible] several inches of snow, and the [illegible] jingle of the sleigh bells is [illegible] instead of the rumble of the [illegible] Vennor had better [illegible] prophesying "biz" and [illegible] else try [illegible]

SENSIBLE.—A sensible [illegible] says:—"Fence board [illegible] are well enough, but if you [illegible] purchase an article it is [illegible] venient to look through the [illegible] of a newspaper to see who [illegible] sale, than it is to knock do[illegible] and drive around the country [illegible] encouraging [illegible]

WE beg to inform those [illegible] whom the STANDARD has been [illegible] the past four weeks in [illegible] Mainanctio[illegible], that the time [illegible] next issue. If any wish to [illegible] the paper they will please [illegible] their names next week. By [illegible] ing now you get the balance [illegible] year free. To clubs of five we [illegible] we will give the paper for $1 [illegible] cash in advance.

CHANGES in the advertisement[illegible] been handed in by Messrs. [illegible] Flesherton Station, Doll of [illegible] ton, and McIntyre and Bens[illegible] dale. Pressure of other [illegible] the late hour at which we [illegible] them will prevent their app[illegible] this week. They will appear [illegible] next; look out for them, [illegible] worth reading.

WE have been informed th[illegible] the social in Dufferin Hall [illegible] evening, some miscreants [illegible] staple off the door and with [illegible] helped themselves to the [illegible] left in the hall, and not [illegible] that, committed other dep[illegible] about the premises. Now [illegible] a word of advice, it is a long [illegible] has no turn, and the turn [illegible] come, so you had bette[illegible] good nature is almost [illegible] a visit to the J. P. will be [illegible]

WE have made arrangem[illegible] the Globe Printing Company [illegible] the Weekly Globe with the S[illegible] Persons wishing to obtain it [illegible] on the subscription price by [illegible] us as we shall furnish the STAN[illegible] the Weekly Globe for $2 50, [illegible] the end of 1881, or subscrib[illegible] thereby receive [illegible] balance of this year [illegible] scriber will also receive [illegible] first of the year, a [illegible] graving of the late [illegible] 14x20 inches, got up in the [illegible] style of modern art which [illegible] worth more than the [illegible] price.

EVERY family, without [illegible] in City, Village, and [illegible] find it very useful to cons[illegible] the American Agriculturist [illegible] in plain, practical, reliable in[illegible] most valuable for in-door [illegible] out-door work and pleasure [illegible] 800 to 1,000 original engr[illegible] every volume are both plea[illegible] instructive. In this respect [illegible] eminent and stands alone [illegible] should have a place in eve[illegible] hold, no matter how ma[illegible] journals are taken. Its [illegible] Department for youth and [illegible] contains much information [illegible] amusement. Its humbug [illegible] are invaluable to every [illegible] cost is very low, only $1.50 [illegible] to the end of 1881, or four [illegible] $5. Single numbers, 15 c[illegible] specimen, 6 cents. Take [illegible] and subscribe now for w[illegible] (1882). Orange Judd [illegible] Publishers, 245 Broadway, [illegible]

SH STO

s & So

ith a complete stock of Groceri

D SHOES.

, GLASSWARE, ET

OW PRICES cannot b
l and try some of our

AN TEA, 3lb. FOR

ALWAYS ON HAND
re purchasing elsewhere
EGGS TAKEN, I

OLDS & SON.

L HALL.

nd Chemicals
EDICINES!
fumery, Combs, Tooth and Surgical Appliances, uggists sundries.

School Books!
VARIETY.

D TOBACCOS WITH ND OILS.

Prescriptions

REPERATIONS OMPOUNDED.

PROULE, M.

W. BENSON
OF THE—
"Blefast House,"

Lowest Possible Price

The stock consists of Groceries and Provisio

together with
LIQUORS of all kinds

ive Two Books of supe

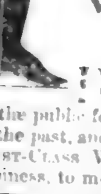
Belfast House, op. Haskett B

NO SECOND PRICE.

W. BENS

Markdale, Oct. 14th, 1880.

DONALD McLEOD
MAKER



BEGS to return sincere thanks to the public for their very liberal patronage, and hopes by honorable ... continuance of the same.

THE BEST OF MATER...

Special attention paid to Repairing ... be done promptly.

Sewed work a Specialty.

NOTICE.

All over due accounts must be ... I shall have to resort to ... means for collection.

D. McLEOD.
Corner of Queen and Mill ...
Markdale, Oct. 28, 1880.

VETERINAR...
J. ... BLOOMFIELD, Veterinary ...

HAS commenced the practice of ... in Markdale and extensive practice in ... of this country, is enabled to ... Medicines always on hand ... Drug Store, Markdale.

Samuel Mor...
LICENSED AUCTI... County of Grey. Sales attended at short ... Charges ... Sale Bills, Notes ... Markdale, Sept. 24th, 1880.

THE STANDARD.

Friday, Nov. 19th, 1880.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES.

STORMY weather.

SLEIGHING getting good.

GLENELG Council meets to-day.

TAM O'Shanter caps are all the go.

MR. McFarland shipped over a ton poultry on Wednesday last.

CALL and see our 25 cent packages stationery, &c. The cheapest in town.

MESSRS. C. W. & A. Speers shipped from this place last week, over 60 head of cattle for the English Markets.

PERSONS desiring a change in advertisement will please hand it in not later than noon on Wednesday's.

The Wingham by-law for a bonus $12,500 in aid of the T. G. & B. R. extension was carried by a majority 116.

JOHN Fair P. L. S. will be at Markdale on Monday next, any person requiring his services will find him at John Reid's.

PERSONS wishing to get a good weekly city paper should read the advertisement of the Hamilton Spectator in another column.

IF you have lost, found, or want anything announce it through the columns of the STANDARD. It is the best medium in the county.

A SPECIAL meeting of L. O. L. No. 1045 will be held in the Orange Hall, Markdale, on Wednesday the 1st of December; for the purpose of conferring the Royal Arch degree.

SERVICE.—Next Sabbath the Rev. C. C. Garnett will (D. V.) preach in the Orange Hall at 10:30; subject "epidemics their cause and cure from a Bible stand point."

PERSON's requiring the services of Mr. J. J. White, Dentist, will please remember he will be at the Revere Hotel, Markdale, on Wednesday next 24th inst.

EVERY business man should have his name and address printed on the envelopes he uses. Call at the STANDARD office and you will be astonished how cheap we can do them.

ON the 9th inst. the remains of Hugh Rutledge, who died in the year 1862 being the first death that occurred in this locality after it was first settled, were removed from their late resting place to the C. M. Cemetry.

POSTMASTERS.—Where the STANDARD is not called for, the P. M's will please destribute the papers to whom they please, and not return them, but send us a card with the names of those to whom they are addressed.

COAL OIL IS UP!—But Wilcox has some of those Illuminated Dial Watches, that you can see the time on without a light of any kind—if it is as dark as the face of a most modern improved mother-in-law. Don't forget to see them! (We mean the Watches.)

VENNOR's summer weather for this month is a myth. We have instead several inches of snow, and the merry gingle of the sleigh bells is heard instead of the rumble of the waggon. Vennor had better "let up" on the prophesying "biz" and let some one else try his hand at it.

SENSIBLE.—A sensible exchange says:—"Fence board advertisements are well enough, but if you want to purchase an article it is more convenient to look through the columns of a newspaper to see who has it for sale, than it is to 'hook up' a team and drive around the country reading fence signs."

WE beg to inform those parties to whom the STANDARD has been sent free the past four weeks in Proton and Melancthon, that the time expires next issue. If any wish to continue the paper they will please send in their names next week. By subscribing now you get the balance of this year free. To clubs of five and over we will give the paper for $1 each, cash in advance.

CHANGES in the advertisements have been handed in by Messrs. Hogg of Flesherton Station, Doll of Flesherton, and McItyre and Benson of Markdale. Pressure of other business and the late hour at which we received them will prevent their appearance this week. They will appear in our next; look out for them, they are worth reading.

WE have been informed that after the social in Dufferin Hall the other evening, some miscreants took the staple off the door and went in and helped themselves to the good things left in the hall, and not content with that, committed other depredations about the premises. Now boys just a word of advice, it is a long lane that has no turn, and the turn will soon come, so you had better stop for good nature is almost exhausted and a visit to the J. P. will be unpleasant.

WE have made arrangements with the Globe Printing Company to club the Weekly Globe with the STANDARD. Persons wishing to obtain it save 75c. on the subscription price by calling on us as we will furnish the STANDARD and the Weekly Globe for $2.50, cash, to the end of 1881, subscribers will thereby receive both papers for the balance of this year FREE. Each subscriber will also receive, about the first of the year, gratis a fine steel engraving of the late Hon. Geo. Brown, 14x20 inches, got up in the very best style of modern art which alone is worth more than the subscription price.

EVERY family, without exception, in City, Village, and Country, will find it highly useful to constantly read the American Agriculturist. It abounds in plain, practical, reliable information, most valuable for in-door as well as out-door work and comfort, and its 800 to 1,000 original engravings in every volume are both pleasing and instructive. In this respect it is preeminent and stands alone, and it should have a place in every household, no matter how many other journals are taken. Its illustrated Department for youth and children contains much information as well as amusement. Its humbug exposures are invaluable to all classes. The cost is very low, only $1.50 from now to the end of 1881, or four copies for $5. Single numbers, 15 cents. One specimen, 6 cents. Take our advice and subscribe now for volume 40 (1881). Orange Judd Company, Publishers, 245 Broadway, New York.

PRICEVILLE ... for this issue.

THE largest and most ... assortment of confectionery ... Markdale, at Montgomery's ...

MR. Phillips, late of Blyth, has opened a drug store in the village of Dundalk. Read his advertisement.

A supply of the ... Revision, Canada Methodist Hymn Book, for sale at the Medical Hall.

IF you want a cosy pair of ... go to D. McLeod's. His boots are partly for handsome, they are also great for strong.

PARTIES who have missed any cattle or sheep should look carefully over the columns of the STANDARD. Quite a number are advertised this week.

WE would call the attention of those interested to the alteration in Mr. G. Rutherford's advertisement. Dundalk people should read it over.

MR. C. Humphries, of Dundalk has something in this issue that is of interest to the people of that village. Those wanting a nice organ or sewing machine should give him a call.

A meeting will be held at the Revevere Hotel this (Friday) evining, at eight o'clock, sharp, to take into consideration an offer to establish a Foundry in this place.

THOMAS MATHEWS is still in the Harness business. Parties requiring anything in his line can depend on genuine material, first-class workmanship, and honorable dealing by giving him their patronage.

NO business man should fail to have the business he follows printed on his envelopes and note paper. We can furnish you with both articles neatly printed, at city prices, at the STANDARD office.

CHANGED HANDS.—The Mt. Forest Examiner has been purchased by the proprietor of the Confederate, and both papers have been amalgamated and will be published under the name of Confederate-Examiner. It makes its appearance this week as a semi-weekly. We wish our brother of the quil every success.

TIME is money, you can save both by buying one of Disson's Champion Cross Cut Saws. Any boy can keep them in repair. Will cut faster, and are 25 per cent. cheaper than any other saw of same quality in the market. Be sure you get Disson's. No other saw will do the same amount of work. Call at Haskett Bros. and take one home.

JUST as we were going to press, we learn, through our Priceville correspondent, of the sudden death of Mr. Charles Hale, who lived on the old Durham Road, about five miles from Priceville. He died in about twenty minutes after being taken ill, on Sunday morning last—cause said to be appoplexy. Particulars next week.

SOME of our subscribers at Pomona are complaining that they do not get the paper until the week after it is published. It is mailed here early on Friday morning and should be received the same day. We shall look into the matter and if we can find the delinquent, we shall bring the matter to the notice of the Post Master General.

SAD.—We regret to have to announce the death of the two remaining children of Mr, D. Campbell, of Glenelg. He lost a son about a year ago, with scarlet fever, and this week, the other two, (his entire family,) have followed their brother to that land where trouble ceaseth and the weary are at rest. We assure Mr. and Mrs. C. they have our sincere sympathy in their sad bereavement.

A MEETING was held by the trustees of the C. M. Church of this place last evening, it was decided to introduce the new hymn book on the 1st of January 1881. Mr. McDiarmid has ordered samples, and any persons wishing to obtain a hymn book can see them and leave their order at the Parsonage. The above is a new edition containing all the best hymns of the old book and upwards of two hundred new ones.

WE have made arrangements with the following papers to furnish them to parties who wish to take them in connection with the STANDARD, at greatly reduced rates. The American Agriculturist $1.00; Canadian Farmer 75c.; Scientific American $2.60; Toronto Weekly Globe $1.25. We hope to be able to give the price of Mail and several others next week. The above prices are only adhered to when the the papers are taken in connection with the STANDARD.

DUNDALK.

From our Correspondent.

WEATHER cold and snowing, a few sleighs coming in but roads rough. Mr. J. C. Atkinson, tailor, that left our town a few months ago and went to the village of Holstien, has returned again. No place like Dundalk for tailors; he opens out in W. Chittick's old shop. Mr. Chas. McConnell brought in three fine deer on Monday. Good for you Charley.

BIRTHS.

In Markdale, on the 7th inst., the wife of R. Askin, merchant, of a daughter.

MARRIED

On the 11th inst., at the residence of the brid's father, by the Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, Mr. Seneca Palmer, to Hannah, oldest daughter of Mr. Mark Richardson, all of Markdale.

DIED.

In Glenelg, on the 14th inst., David Carradice eldest son of D. Campbell, aged 8 yrs., 11 months and 6 days.

In Glenelg, on the 17th inst., William James, youngest son D. Campbell, aged 1 year, 10 months and 23 day's.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

THE Undersigned will be at Lot 6, 2nd 3rd Concession, N. D. R., Glenelg, on Saturday, Nov. 20, 1880, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of letting contract of building New Bridge across Saugeen River. Plans and Specifications to be seen at the house of Thomas Davis, Lot 3, 3rd Concession, N. D. R.

F. MACRAE,
G. BINNIE,
T. DAVIS,

Glenelg, Nov. 5, 1880.

General Advertisements.

J. N. Webster,

LICENSED AUCTIONEER FOR THE County of Grey.

☞ LOAN AND LAND AGENT,

Money to loan at lowest rates of interest, in sums to suit borrowers. Agent for Farmers Loan and Saving Co. All business matters strictly private, and treated as such.

EUGENIA P. O.

Sept. 17th 1880.

NOTICE

GEORGE NIXON

Toronto House,

DUNDALK,

Have on hand a full stock, including

TEAS, SUGARS, AND GENERAL GROCERIES.

Crockery, Glassware and Lamps

In great variety and at prices to suit the people.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

The largest and best Stock in Town, at Lowest Prices.

DRY GOODS!

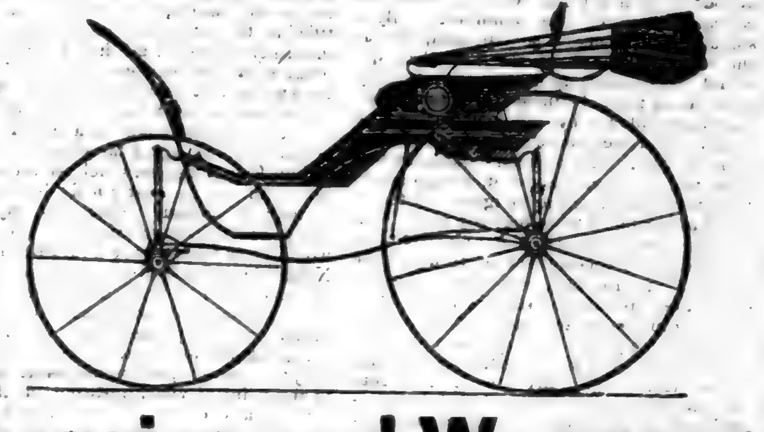
My Stock in this department is now complete, and contains the newest lines in Plain and Fancy Dress Goods, Winceys, Shirtings, Flannels, Blankets Clouds, Scarfs, and a choice selection of Tweeds.

READY-MADE CLOTHING.—Overcoats—a large Stock. Suits, Shirts, Drawers, Overalls, &c.

HATS, CAPS AND FURS.—A large assortment of A 1 Goods. Also everything else to be found in a First-Class General Store.

The above Goods have all been purchased in the best Markets, and will be sold at BOTTOM PRICES for CASH or PRODUCE.

Dundalk, Oct. 28, 1880. 7-4i



Buggies and Waggons

OF ALL KINDS, SOLD BY

W. L. MARSHALL, Dundalk.

Dundalk, Nov. 11, 1880. 9-3w

MARKDALE.

WM. FOX,

Plain & Ornamental Plasterer

Estimates for stone and brickwork on application. Satisfaction Guranteed. Residence—Queen Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Selling Off. Selling Off.

GREAT

Clearing Out Sale!

GRANT & CHELLEW

will offer for the

NEXT 60 DAYS!

Bargains unprecedented in the County of Grey.

SIDEBOARDS,
BUREAUS,
CUPBOARDS,
WASHSTANDS, open and enclosed,
BEADSTEADS,
SPRING BEDS,
MATTRASSES,
CRADLES,
CENTRE TABLES,
EXTENSION TABLES,

Fall-Leaf Tables, and Chairs of every variety to be

SOLD AT COST!

Pictures and Picture Framing!

in all its branches.

Upholstering and Repairing!

promptly attended to.

☞ Produce and Dry Lumber taken at market price.

GRANT & CHELLEW.

Markdale, Sept., 1880. 1

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves.

At the New Tinshop

MARKDALE.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT to select from of the latest and most approved designs, including

PARLOR, COOKING AND BOX

STOVES, extra heavy castings, with silver-plated trimmings,

THE BEST STOVE IN MARKET.

If you want to have comfort the rest of your days, buy a stove from W. R. Walker, that will last you your lifetime,

AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES.

No puffing here—the real "Simon Pure."

TINWARE!

A LARGE STOCK ALWAYS ON HAND.

ALL KINDS OF

Tin & Copperwork!

made to order on the shortest notice.

EAVETROUGHING A SPECIALITY.

Stove Ovens lined, Hand-Irons Silver-Plated, at very low prices; Stove Polish; Dome Lead, the Challenge, the Rising Sun, Coal Oil. JOB WORK particularly attended to.

You can save money by giving me a call before purchasing elsewhere. Old metal, Hides, Sheep Pelts, Wool-pickings taken in exchange. ☞ Remember the place, next the "Markdale House."

W. R. WALKER.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-4f

Legacies!
Pensions!
Bounties!

Parties having any of the above claims to investigate will please communicate with me at once.

A. C. HUNTER,
Claim Agent.

Dundalk P. O., County Grey.

A Choice Farm of 150 Acres

FOR SALE,

One Mile from the Village of Markdale.

There are about 100 acres cleared, the most of which is in a high state of cultivation and fit for a Reaper or Mower to work on. There are on the premises a Frame House bricked inside; a Milk House bricked inside; a Frame Stable and Driving House, and Log Barn; a Young Orchard commencing to bear; a good Well, beside the house; a never-failing Stream runs across the farm; Cedar sufficient for fencing, balance of bush hardwood. (a First-class Maple Sugar Bush of some 400 trees). The farm is well fenced, in a good state of repair, and in a choice locality, being within a mile of good market, churches, school houses, and all necessary conveniences.

C. W. RUTLEDGE,
Proprietor.

Maple Leaf Farm, Markdale P.O.

Meat for All

AT

W. B. Sarjent's.

The subscriber returns thanks to the inhabitants of

MARKDALE

and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past five years, and begs to remind them that he is prepared to supply their wants in his line as

CHEAP

as any one north of Toronto.

Fresh and Corned Meats

delivered promptly on receipt of orders.

SAUSAGE & POULTRY

always kept in their Season.

Special inducements to large Purchasers

☞ Shop on Mill sreett, opposite the "Revere Hotel."

☞ Cash paid for Fat Cattle and Sheep

Again thanking you for past favors he trusts by faithful attention to your wants to merit a continnance of your support.

W. B. SARJEANT.

Markdale, Sept. 17th 1880. 1

Money Lost!

By those who buy stoves before going to

J. GARDINER'S

Dundalk.

Best and Cheapest stock of

STOVES and TINWARE

North of Toronto. 6

China TEA Store

R. ASKIN

General dealer in

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

Next to Haskett's Hardware Store.

Keeps constantly on hand everything usual to such an establishment.

He would draw special attention to his

Teas,
Tobaccos &
Sugars,

Which for quality and Lowness of Price

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

As puffing is no part of my desire, I merely ask intending purchasers to give me a call and be convinced that

I MEAN BUSINESS,

and will

Sell Lower than the Lowest,

as I have purchased for cash, and have had a good discount allowed, I am in a position to let my customers have the benefit of my ...

☞ Remember the place, next to Haskett Bros.

Markdale, Oct. 7, 1880.

BUTTER & RAE

... thank the public and friends ... for the ... commencing business, and will still stick to the rule of doing a straightforward business with all customers. No flattery used or baits given to gull the public. Every article sold on its own merits, and by keeping their stock well assorted and fresh in all the lines, they will always give their customers good value for their money.

DRY GOODS in all the lines.

ORDERED CLOTHING a specialty.

HATS and CAPS, new and stylish.

BOOTS and SHOES, Cooper & Smith's celebrated make that has stood the test against all comers in all styles and newness.

GLASSWARE and CROCKERY all paterns

GROCERIES, cheap and fresh.

Keep your Eye on the Place!

WHEN YOU VISIT MARKDALE.

Douglas' Brick Block opposite the Drug Store.

BUTTER & RAE.

September 21st, 1880. 1

The NOBBIEST CLOTHING!

In the County at

McFARLAND'.

See his $5.00 Overcoats.
See his $10 Ulsters.
See his $12 Suit.
See his $16 dress suit.
500 pairs of Boots

To choose from—Men, Women and Children's. Get your AXES at McFARLAND's. Those $2.50 MANTLES selling fast. New DRESS GOODS at McFarland's. New FLANNELS at McFarland's. New SHAWLS at McFarland's. New BONNETS and HATS at McFarland's. New TWEEDS at McFarland's. New CARPETS at McFarland's. New Fringes, Buttons, Silks, Laces, Flowers and Feathers.

Prices never were lower or value better. A comparison solicited.

W. J. McFARLAND,
IMPORTER. Markdale.

BOOTS and SHOES!

FOR THE MILLION.

A NOVELTY in these Goods!

The Indestructible Riveted and Cemented and Waterproof Seam.

Call and Examine Stock and Prices!

before purchasing "slop" goods elsewhere.

FULL LINES IN

Groceries, Staple and Fancy Dry Goods, Clothing,

(Ready-made,) Crockery and Glassware!

AT THE

"TORONTO HOUSE"

MARKDALE.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Sept. 17th, 1880.

Artemesia Wholesale and Retail ...

ALWAYS ON HAND A FULL STOCK OF

DRY GOODS, HARDWARE, CROCKERY,

Groceries, Provisions, &c.

For Sale Cheap for Cash or Produce!

INSPECTION INVITED!

WM. HOGG,

Flesherton Station and Eugenia.

September 21st, 1880.

H. & R. HOOPER

RESPECTFULLY invite every Man and Woman in the country to visit their Factory and Warerooms and inspect their stock of furniture, manufactured during the busy season, for fall trade. Our stock is now the largest and most complete yet held by us, and we have been successful in introducing a great many

NEW AND TASTY DESIGNS!

IN

BED-ROOM SETS, COUCHES,

SIDEBOARDS, EXTENSION TABLES, CENTRE TABLES, DRESSING BUREAUS, BEDSTEADS, SOFAS, WHATNOTS, HAT-RACKS, HALL TABLES, &c., &c., &c.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY IN

New Styles of WOOD SEAT CHAIRS!

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

—OUR—

UNDERTAKING DEPARTM'NT

Fully supplied with COFFINS, SHROUDS, &c., and special sizes made on the very shortest notice.

ALL KINDS OF

Fancy Turning, Scroll Work, Fence Pickets & Mouldings

made to order. Also SASH, DOORS, PLANING, &c.

With our present experience we feel justified in asking a continuance of the patronage so liberally bestowed on us in the past. Our prices will be found as low as any, and as much so as is consistant with good work and finish. If you are in need of anything in our line we feel confident we can suit you in quantity and quality to select from and also in terms.

H. & R. HOOPER.

1 Flesherton Steam Furniture Factory and Planing Mill

ANGUS McINTYRE,

GENERALL DEALER IN

Groceries, Provisions,

—AND—

LIQUORS!

A Fresh Supply of the Most Choice just Received.

CALL AND BE SATISFIED AS TO PRICES AND QUALITY.

☞ EMPTY BOTTLES BOUGHT. ☜

Markdale, October 1, 1880. 2-y

Removed!

Removed.

HILL BROTHERS,

Would intimate to their numerous friends and the public generally, that they have removed to their new premises, and will be pleased to receive a call from our many friends and customers. Call and see us. We will GIVE YOU BARGAINS. WE MEAN BUSINESS.

SEE OUR

Cheap Dress Goods,
Lustres,
Wincies,
Laces,
And Fringes.

Gents, see our CLOTHING. They are Stylish, Good CHEAP.

SEE OUR TWEEDS!

You will find them right in Price and Quality.

Boots and Shoes a Specialty.

Call and get a sample of our Splendid TEAS.

Gentlemen we have a splendid SMOKING TOBACCO, at 40c per lb. Try it.

We again give a general invitation to inspect our Stock. Have not time to write long advertisements. Don't believe in them. Would rather have the Goods speak for themselves.

Thanking you for past favors, and trust to have a continuance of the same.

HILL BROS.

Markdale, Nov. 4, 1880. 1-y

STAINLESS.

By the Author of "Sweet Dorothy Capel," "Lettice," &c.

TOLD BY DEBORAH ORD.

I am cross, dissatisfied, vexed. Just when I laughed at the way to be cheery and comfortable, everything has gone contrary, awry. Judith is with us, looking brighter, younger, more sonsie than ever. Sir Martin is happy, almost gay, and Napine is crowded with visitors. Judith reigns in queenly style, mistress of the grand old place. She and her father returned home, a long time ago, to celebrate Christmas with us. Their journeyings have done them good. It is pleasant to observe them together, for they are indeed as a father and daughter should be. Whenever Sir Martin's eye falls on his child, his whole face lights up with a blissful radiance, while her beauty is never so bewitching as when she is near him. Every one talks of their wonderful devotion. Wise folks wonder how Sir Martin will like the separation that must come some day. That Judith will marry again, and marry well, nobody doubts.

We are at Napine, Dale. Snow is everywhere. The landscape is shrouded in white, and the clouds are gray and sullen. The gentlemen warn us against walking far. There will be more snow, they say—a heavy fall presently.

Breakfast is cleared. The men have vanished, some to play billiards, some to the stables, some to the library. The ladies in the cedar drawing-room gossip idly, study the weather, read, work, and muse. Dulness prevails. They miss their cavaliers, and find time hard to kill. I escape to the room Judith has allotted to baby Will. It is a charming apartment, large, lofty, and prettily furnished. I take my boy from nurse and dismiss her. He looks so handsome in his velvet frock and smart ribbons. I toss him up, and he laughs and crows delightedly. I wish Dale could see him; but Dale has gone with Sir Martin to the kennels. There is no one but "mother" to feast her eyes on the tiny face, the fat chubby hands, and sturdy figure. I sing merrily, and whisper blandishments and nonsense stories. Presently the door is pushed open gently, and Judith appears.

In her black dress, relieved by filmy lace, she is superb, beautiful as a poet's vision. She gazes at me, and I fancy that there is a longing in her eyes. Superstitively observed through me, she yet lacks that which crowns and blesses my life. I kiss her, and put baby into her arms. Her pale face is hidden by the rosy one. When she raises her head Will's cheeks are wet, and she wipes away the tear-drops nervously. I leave my seat and lean over her.

"What is it, Judith?" I ask. "Is anything amiss? You seem joyous, merry. Is your mirth feigned?"

She looks at me vacantly.

"Why should I not be happy?" she says. "Why indeed! She has her father, wealth, health, and beauty. I sigh uneasily, and am still. She muses as the coals burn brightly on the hearth and the flames flicker—muses, and she says abruptly—

"Deborah, have we done anything to offend your brother? He never comes to Napine."

Ah, that is it! I am slow to reply, not knowing what answer to make.

Why, indeed, should Will be shy of Napine? They have persistently avoided each other. I have watched Will and Judith lately. They have persistently avoided each other. Will, who thinks it right that Judith, heiress of Napine and Ellerslie, shall not be driven by old recollections into an engagement with him, is perfectly cold and haughty to her. She, deeming that his manner implies that he has ceased to care for her, is careful not to speak to him. They are drifting apart, scarcely knowing wherefore. In a little while the breach, now narrow, will have widened considerably. Judith toys with my curls.

"He is proud, is he not?" she murmurs. "Does he despise me for what I did?"

"What was that?" I cry bewildered.

"I left my home and my husband," she stammers. "I was rash, foolish."

"Oh, Judith, Judith, you silly child! Will will never despise you. Does he not love you?"

She, then, before I can deny her assertion, she exclaims vehemently, "I love him! Would that I did not!"

She places baby Will in my arms, and flies. I smile as I repeat her confession to myself, and then shake off abstracted musings. I will see Will, and go to the Vicarage at once. Here are two people, lovers, whose lives, but for assuming indifference, would be sad. It is an unwise pastime. I will open Will's eyes to his folly. The clouds are gray, and threaten; enough to daunt me; but I am over-ready. I will go to the Vicarage by luncheon time. As quick as I had done it; by luncheon-time I shall be at the Vicarage. My maid wraps me up warmly, and I start, glowing with zeal. It is a stinging cold—and arrive at the Vicarage sooner than I anticipated, only because so pleasant a thing is to be done. Will is out. It is not expected in till night; therefore it is useless my waiting to see him. Will is snowed up! I wend my way back wild-snow-spirit, not dreaming that, while away, he has come to pass which I would be. I learned had Judith sits all when it is quite at my feet, her sweet face blushing with supreme content.

"Ashamed of the avowal to you of my love for Will I ran from the nursery to my own room," she says. "I gave way to tears, until I remembered that I must speedily face my guests. I dried my eyes, and thought that I would go for a stroll, for my head ached; it was a walk to clear my own memories. I stole from the house, not wishing to be seen. I wanted solitude, and if I were observed I should lose all chance of it. Taking the high road, I wandered heedlessly along. By-and-by I found myself by the brook where Will once saved my life. It was summer-time then, winter now. Then the fields were in bloom, and the skies were blue and sunny; now sunshine was but a memory. The very brook, then rippling and flowing, was still, covered with ice. I thought of many things as I walked up and down the bank; the piercing cold did not reach me, for glad and sorrowful images of the past were present with me. At last I gazed out to the spot where he had loved me when he drew me from the water. 'Oh, that which might have been, but might not be.' My life, which should be a glad round of days, was dreary, empty, sad. I was very miserable. I was alone, and no prying eyes could behold me. At Napine I must be jocund, blithe; here I could wail forth my woe. Stern Nature would neither rebuke nor cheer me, and I was free to say and do what I chose. It caused my heart to rid it of the perilous stuff weighing on it. So to the wintry winds, to the leaden-gray sky, I told my story. I told how I loved Will—told how, when it was unlawful for me to love him, I had refrained from thinking of him; that now I might, and he did not care. He thinks me bold, I said, because I fled from him once, perforce, withheld my hand. I was powerless to resist the torrent of love sweeping over me. I whispered it all in my own ears. I cared not that a sudden overpowering love for Will; but I asked not that he might reawaken. I crouched in my strangest, thanking Heaven, when the bare me back, that I who was not unworthy of my love. Gradually my emotion spent itself, and I grew calm. I tried to brace myself with the assurance that not always would my poor heart be so sad. Perhaps some day I should be able to think of my anguish without sorrow as one that day and wonder whether my sorrow was so overwhelming. But such consolation was drearily cold. What did the some day that might or might not come matter now—that I was so utterly downcast?

"I opened the locket I wore at my neck, and looked at the likeness it contained—Will's! A noble princely face his—a face that no woman need fear to revere. Though my love for him had cost me dear, I loved him not I had not loved him. Better to have lost her never have known him. Neither time nor pain could alter my affection. I looked at the photograph with tearful eyes, and then suddenly started, electrified. A voice behind me—

"What are you looking at, Judith?"

"It was Will. I was speechless. He stared into my face, holding my hands in his resisting hand, and gazed on his portrait.

"Come to me, Judith," he cried in a rough tone.

"I glanced from him. All around was white and chill; the blast numbed me, and I trembled. He repeated his words, this time in a kinder tone.

"Deborah gave it to me," I muttered.

"When?"—"Before I left Ellerslie."

"Where did you get it? you have kept it for our acquaintance' sake?"

"I did not respond. I could not. He was cruel—very cruel to torture me. He walked on a few paces, and then came back to my side.

"Do you recollect what happened here?" he asked.

"Yes, and I cried, in my tremulous fulness of my tribulation—

"Yes, you saved my life. You would have done me a greater service had you let me die."

"'Judith!'

"I was reckless; my spirit was stirred to its very depths.

"'Ay,' I affirmed, 'if I had only died it was when you rescued me, ill for me it is that I live! What is life that we esteem it so?'

"'Judith—your father.'

"'He loves me! For his sake I must hide my heart and smile; but—'

"'Will cannot be sad,' he said.

"'Judith, hush! You have all that makes existence bright; you should be happy.'

"'I am.'

"'And yet you talk thus wildly, rebelliously.'

"My face tingled.

"'Be good enough to forget my words,' I said. 'I am not very well; looking at the past distracted me.'

"He stared at me, and bowed assentingly. I turned towards Napine, and he walked with me. Very subdued and humiliated was I. I almost forgot his presence; but he remained at my side.

"'Judith,' he commenced diffidently, and then ceased abruptly.

"'Of what was he thinking? Ere I could guess, he hurried on.

"'Right or wrong, I must speak. Do you know that I love you? I love you, Judith; and you—Ah me! that I should see you to listen to my presumptuous tale! Has my behaviour caused you to think my friendship dead? Friendship! It was never friendship that I felt for you. I always loved you. I love you still. Will you therefore think of me kindly, and not hurt that I avoid you? To see you and to be on the brink of quarreling hurt me. I dared not hear it. Judith, you pardon me, and I will go away. Do not grieve about me. Mine is a common fate.' He would have gone, but I went to him.

"Will!"

"One word I utter, his name. What more was needed? He looked at me incredulously. I laid my head on his shoulder, he clasped me closely.

"'Is it real?' he said. 'Do you love me, Judith?'

"'Oh, yes! You must not leave me, or not me heart, but we will break it!'

There is a joy with which no tongue must meddle. Judith never told his answer to me. And she never repeated what was passed.

One more picture, and I have done. A May morning, with just sufficient keenness in the air to make the woodfire acceptable. Judith sits by it, holding a golden-haired little one. I watch her admiringly, and think the matronly dignity in her face becomes her; her beauty is something looks ineffably beautiful. Will, approaching, is struck anew by her tender loveliness. He kisses her with courtly obeisance, and then she gazes at him with a tender smile.

"I is she not exquisite," she says—"little Cicely?"

He nods. But he is thinking his wife is far more lovely than his daughter. Judith continues, not perceiving this.

"It all comes to me as I look at her. Will, I prayed once that I might be the last of my line; and now I have here another Cicely Napine, and I am glad." I echo softly—"Cicely Napine."

Will has added, by Sir Martin's wish, the name of Napine to his. Judith's voice is as sweet as ever.

"My mother—her grandmother—knew how proud we are to be; but Will, I know, is all that thing. There is no wrong that works not some evil. I understand why my mother died. I should have died had I given my babe a tarnished name. Poor mother!"

"Poorly," he rejoined.

I steal off. My heart is blithe. Storm and tempest are over, the sweet—even as for them—there are sunshine and joy—sunshine and joy that shall never be darkened, let them bring what they will. Loving and loved, we can trust and not be afraid, each rejoicing.

"'Tis enough for me and my darling
That we know that we love!"

ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR.

By the Author of "A Strange Friendship," &c.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

"Not with my consent!" I cried, my cheeks hot with anger; "and I beg you will contradict the report a little whenever you hear it spoken of."

"With all my heart," and he patted me on the shoulder with the fraternal air he used to assume in poor Rose's lifetime—"don't excuse me, though, for it isn't my fault; it isn't true, because I thought it was, Cathie. It is not true that so many people to say that you might be fond of Cyril—"

"Herbert," I said, suddenly carrying the war into the enemy's country, "I have heard a similar report of you. Is it true that you are going to be married?"

He coloured scarlet in his turn.

"Who could have told you that?" he asked.

"Then it is true?" I persisted, and I saw by his face that it was.

I was quite silent after this; I felt unspeakably contemptible for him, to think that he should have forgotten my beautiful Rose so soon. He was a thin fair man, slightly bald and a little bit foppish, and outwardly my idea of a hero in any way. For myself I preferred brown-bearded, broad-shouldered men, like the one I had once met; but this, of course, was a mere matter of taste, and Rose, had she liked him, of course, would probably not have agreed with me in the least.

Herbert took a photographic album off the table and began playing with it nervously.

"You are offended with me, Cathie?" he said. "Why should you be? I cannot bring your sister back to life again. If the case had been reversed, and you, I have no doubt Rose would have married again. And, after all, is it, I have my doubts, Cathie"—and here he lowered his voice to a mysterious whisper—"I do not suppose she would have cared what had become of me."

I started to my feet in a moment, intensely interested as the more ominous subject of this subject, but he did not give me time to speak; he went on—

"She did not give it to me, anyhow"—he said, and whispered, "I told her to enquire, I was never sure how she had half forgotten me. But," "Half the fellows in town were in love with Rose; and one the days of a jealousy; I know all that of her I don't know in her. Belive there was more than one of the names of that. She never cared. My belief is she went out that afternoon to meet one of her lovers. You never will find out! I always thought so, though I said nothing about it before. 'Yes, Herbert!' I said."

"Who is that?" he asked—"that tall, dark fellow, just outside the window?"

I looked out. Cyril was there, in the gathering darkness of the fast approaching night, was the man whom I had lately been urged to consider in the light of a suitor for my hand—Cyril Vane.

CHAPTER V.

Seeing that he was observed, Cyril stepped in through the open window, and I introduced him to Herbert, and the two men bowed to one another somewhat coolly and stiffly.

As far as I could judge, it appeared to me as if Cyril was not in the most amiable temper.

I retreated to the fireplace, and Herbert followed me. The large photograph of Rose above the mantelpiece looked down upon us. I remember that, being in a fitful and gloomy evening with the utmost distinctness, for it was the last of my days of freedom. The chains were fast binding me; for I had no desire to meet him again. On the contrary, I had given him to understand that I had rather he did not, but he had persisted in forcing them on my notice.

It is quite true that I had not yet said "No" to him in plain words, but I had shown him with admirable diplomacy applied so far to my father and I begun to be; and I began to arrange matters for him. I am some flowers in our hand, and I began to arrange them.

"Rose would have liked those," said Herbert softly, "how fond Rose was of these, and she often used to wear them!"

"Mr. Vane has not been introduced to Rose," I said. Then I added, with something like contempt, "It is impossible you could have ever have even seen her."

My words were spoken almost in a whisper, yet Cyril at once caught them.

"I thought her beautiful," he said, with a sudden flash from his fierce black eyes which astonished me. "You are mistaken if you think I did not admire her."

"Every one admired her," said Herbert stiffly. "But I was not aware that you were acquainted with her," he added, still in a constrained tone. "I do not recollect having had the pleasure of meeting you any time when I was with her."

Cyril laughed softly to himself—it was almost a sneer.

"I think she had many acquaintances of whom you knew nothing," he said.

"Every one thought her handsome," returned Herbert, in his languid way. "But I had no occasion for jealousy, I assure you."

"Handsome!" repeated Cyril scornfully, flashing out again in a burst of admiration, fierce in its passionate intensity. "Handsome is no word for her. She was "'A daughter of the gods, divinely tall

And most divinely fair.'"

"Thank you," I said, turning to Cyril involuntarily, with almost the first smile I had ever given him. "That is a compliment which is worthy of her."

He did not reply; his eyes fell before mine, and he moved a step or two away from me.

I felt that for some unaccountable reason the atmosphere was getting stormy.

The two men were gazing at each other with disdain and hatred in their glances; they seemed to be on the brink of quarreling about a girl whose youth and beauty were now only a memory to us all.

"Who will open some of these English papers for me?" I asked, in order to create a diversion. "The mail is just in, and I have not had time to look at any of them yet."

Cyril at once took up a paper knife and hastened to obey my request. He showed an eager desire to please me, and I felt half troubled that I could not respond more gratefully to his desire to make himself agreeable to me. Herbert rose to go.

"I am going to have a talk with your father, Cathie," he said, as he moved away.

As he passed my chair he stooped a little and whispered—

"If what I hear is true, I confess I pity you. He seems to have an awful temper."

I took no notice of the words, and Herbert went out, humming—

"If she be not fair for me,
What care I for whom she be?"

* * * * *

At last—how can I bear to write it?—they wrung from me a reluctant consent.

The steady daily pressure brought to bear upon me both by father and Cyril Vane broke down my poor defences one by one and forced me at length to come to terms with the enemy. I need scarcely add, after saying this, that I did not love Mr. Vane, even though I had at last consented to become his wife. But then I did not love any one; I only felt a little more interest in one man whom I had once met than in any other; that was all.

I had no one to take my part in declining to accept Cyril Vane, and it was this which eventually compelled me to agree to his proposal. My father's was the iron hand in the velvet glove; he was not unkind to me, yet he would not allow me to have any will of my own. If Rose had lived, she would have stood by me, even against my father, and never would she have allowed me to be forced into a marriage that was distasteful to me. If Rose had lived! But Rose was gone.

"To where, beyond those voices, there was peace."

My father and Cyril hastened on the marriage. My father was anxious to sell his property and leave the Colony for England as soon as possible; I was an obstacle in the way to this, and the sooner I ceased to obstruct his path the better.

Mrs. Holland—oh, how she and I cried at the thoughts of parting!—was to stay for a time with some relatives of hers in town, and then she was to look out for another situation for herself.

She was too clever and superior a woman to have much difficulty in procuring one. I had wanted to take her with me to my new home, but Cyril, on being consulted, at once said "No."

I might have endeavoured to carry out my point, but my father considered that Mrs. Holland was addicted to spoiling and humoring me too much, and that it would be better she should be parted from me, for a time at any rate; so I had no choice but to submit.

I fancy he thought that I should make Cyril a more obedient and docile wife if I had no one to uphold me in any faint attempts at rebellion I might feel disposed to offer; so with many tears Caroline Holland and I made up our minds to say farewell.

This however was the only request of mine that Cyril ever dreamed of refusing.

In all other requests he consulted my wishes to the minutest item. Gladiator was to be sent over to Fern Brook—which was the name of Cyril's station—some days before the wedding; he was to have a luxurious loose box, and the utmost care was to be lavished on him in every way. Cyril had entirely refurnished his house in accordance with my taste, as far as he could gather what that was. He often brought me costly presents. My father constantly praised his devotion to me, and told me that he was a model lover.

At last the day drew near; I could make no further excuses for any longer delay. My father was to leave on the very day of my wedding, and to be on board the vessel the same night; his boxes as well as mine were packed and in readiness for a journey. Mrs. Holland had completed all my sewing, save what was done in town, and, with much sorrow on both sides, she and I had parted. Herbert Tempest had sent me a beautiful gold brooch studded with diamonds. His own wedding was to take place immediately after mine. Gladiator had been sent over to Fern Brook, and I had taken my last ride under my maiden name. A mad, reckless gallop across country had that last ride been, but it was over; my horse had taken better care of me than I did of myself.

The autumn evenings were now growing dark and chilly; the summer was quite over—even "the last rose of summer" had drooped and faded on its bough.

The mountains had given us one glimpse of their winter splendour. Pure snow-white and sharply defined, their lofty peaks stood out against a cloudless sky one bright sunny morning; the next day they had retired into a misty background of soft lilac haze once more. Still, they had given us a warning message of the coming winter.

The evening of the day before my wedding was very damp and chill; a bleak wind made one shiver as it moaned and sighed among the trees, and bent the pliable trunks of the blue gums. I had ordered a fire in my own room, and there I locked myself in. It was my last evening with my father for some time to come, but neither he nor I cared to spend it together.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"The Collector."

It is always the fate of a man who tries to collect an old bill to get snubbed. Now we think of it, the old bill collector who trudges painfully through the streets from day to day, trying ever to find the man who is ever trying to dodge him, ought to have more sympathy. His only business is to persuade delinquents to pay their just debts, and yet everybody looks on him very much as a sailor looks on a craft that has raised the black flag of piracy. Poor fellow! He has a hard time of it trying to catch sight of the man who has just gone round the corner, who will be back in five minutes, so the clerk says, but who never comes back until the old bill collector has gone. It is on record that by some strange fatality of fortune a collector found his debtor at home. Such a circumstance nearly took the collector's breath away, for, like the Wandering Jew, he had been flying from pillar to post for nearly a year, and had never once found the right man in the right place; but he took out his battered wallet and presented the account, yellow with age, and humbly asked for a settlement. "You must call again," was the stern, imperative demand of the man, who never intended to have money enough to pay that bill. The victim with the threadbare clothes and the worn out shoes suggested that it was not easy to go up three flights of stairs three times a day in order to find the ominous word "out" on the door. "Well," said the haughty debtor, "perhaps you would like to have me rent a room on the first floor for the sake of my creditors." The old bill collector uttered a deep sigh, put his wallet into his pocket, and walked into a a back alley where his home was, while the jaunty debtor sprang into his landau and went up to the park for a drive. Such is life.

The income of the London guilds is estimated at £5,000,000 a year.

Old Bets, a Sioux squaw, who died recently at the reputed age of more than a hundred, had been successively the wife of an army officer, an Indian chief, a border highwayman, and a Methodist missionary.

Fishing on the Amazon.

Much attention has lately been given to the wonders of the great river Amazon, or "the Amazons," as the people there call it. Its whole valley abounds in streams that help to make up the entire volume of waters. These spread out into lakes, lagoons, and swamps, that extend over large regions of country. This is especially so in the rainy seasons or flood times.

The channels and lakes are abundantly supplied with fishes. Even large fishes are often left in the swamp lakes and streams when the water is low. A hundred different kinds of fish can be bought in the markets of Rio, many of which come from the Amazon.

Those most valued are piranhas and piraruous. They are the largest, while there are numerous smaller varieties. The Indians catch the latter with hooks and lines or shoot them with arrows. But the larger fish are speared with a kind of trident. The men and even small boys acquire great skill in the use of these implements.

In the summer months the people come by hundreds to the lakes and channels to fish for the great pirarucu, and to prepare the fish much as codfish is prepared by the northern fishermen. Some of these fish are seven or eight feet in length. They are first dressed and cut into wide thin slices. These are well rubbed with salt and hung on poles to dry in the sun. The slices are taken under cover every night and carried out again in the morning. The stranger does not at once relish this dried fish, yet it is the standard flesh food of all the poorer classes throughout a large part of Brazil. During the fishing season the people build and live in little huts along the shores. Traders, in canoes, come with a stock of cheap wares to barter for the fish. Thus a trading community is formed which breaks up with the January floods. The piranhas are much prized and are easily caught, for they are greedy to bite at most anything, from a bit of salt meat to a bather's toe. Boys thrash the water with poles to attract these fishes.

The Tupi word piranha is a contraction of pira sainha, meaning "toothed fish." The same word is used by the Indians to describe a pair of scissors. There are several species of these savage piranhas, some being more than two feet long. They make nothing of biting an ounce or so of flesh from a man's leg. People are sometimes killed by them. Hence Brazilians are shy of going into these lakes and streams if they suspect the presence of these fish. The fishermen claim that piranhas will gather in schools against the larger fish and attack them. If one of their own number is at all wounded by mistake he is mercilessly set upon and devoured by his companions.

It is useless to try to use nets where this fish is found. They would spoil a net in a few minutes.

Another dangerous fish of these waters is the sting-ray. He lies flat on the bottom, his dark upper surface being hardly seen through the muddy streams. If left undisturbed the creature is harmless enough. But a careless wader in the shallows may step on the flat body, and then the great barbed sting inflicts a wound that benumbs the whole body and makes the sufferer speechless with pain. Persons have been lamed for life by such a wound.

A curious fish called Anableps tetrophthalmus is often seen there. Its eyes are divided, so that each has two pupils; of these the upper pair are for the air and the lower for the water. This singular fish swims near the surface and near the shore, and if chased does not dive.

A large fish named caruana is mostly taken at night. Men go out in boats with lighted torches and spear the fish with great skill and rapidity.

It is said you may often see a native with his bow and arrow standing like a statue on some overhanging bank watching for a fish to pass. When a fish comes near the bow is drawn quick as light, and the arrow hardly leaves a ripple as it cuts through the water. It requires the keenest skill to obtain fish by these means, and the fisherman must also allow for the refraction of the water, or he will certainly miss his mark. Yet many of the large piranhas are procured in this way. Good fishing depends, first, upon the flooding of the river, which fills all the valley lakes and channels with water and entices the fish out of the greater streams; then, second, such a falling of the floods as leaves many of these channels and lakes separated from the river. Thus the fish are imprisoned in shoal water and narrow quarters and more easily taken. Otherwise the present contrivances for procuring good fish by these native fishermen would be entirely inadequate.

Wallace, Smith, and others who have made recent explorations of the Amazon all speak of its prospects as a future highway of commerce. They also dwell much upon the abundant and even luxuriant natural resources of the entire region with which this great river and its tributaries are connected.

Those 'Verts

Every now and again a star, of more or less brilliancy, falls from the ecclesiastical firmament of the Episcopal Church, and startles the world by the train of newspaper comment and remark that invariably follows its descent. Such stars all gravitate, with very rare exceptions, toward Rome, and, to carry out our metaphor, the so-called "æsthetic" in worship is the power of gravitation that impels them in their course. These men are called converts or perverts, according to the standpoint of the individual who speaks of them, while the people who care not a fig either for the church abandoned or the church adopted, employ the non-committal term with which we have headed this article, and call the individuals in question 'verts.

It is only within recent years that this Romeward tendency has developed to such an extent as to attract attention or to arouse anxiety. No doubt the taste for elaborate and imposing ritual in the English Church is the reaction from the simplicity—almost amounting to baldness, of the services in Puritan times, and it may be predicted with a reasonable degree of certainty that as strong a reaction will by and bye set in, in exactly the opposite direction. This ebb and flow in matters of creed and ritual is one of the most marked features in the history of human belief. The question however is, at the present time, what, if any, cause of apprehension have Protestantism in general and the Church of England in particular from the present movement. Alarmists say that the faith of Britain is in danger, that there are numerous indications in the religious and political atmosphere of a return of the days when the Pope was more powerful in England than England's King, and they dwell with the emphasis of fear on the many perversions, as they call them, of leading clergymen in the Episcopal Church to Rome. We have no sympathy with such terrorist statements. The matter comes to be just a question of "survival of the fittest," and the creed, be it known by what name, or accompanied by what ritual it may, which contains the truth in greatest purity, will, without question, outlast and overcome all rivals. But those who know human nature will not be surprised to find that the religion that offers attractions to the eye and ear by a sensuous, brilliant and imposing ritual, secure for a time the lead in its influence with the masses. And by the masses we do not mean only the profanum vulgus, but those distinguished by rank, talent, and artistic taste as well. Such triumphs, however, are short-lived as a rule, for the mind, by and bye, becomes sated with display even when it is diversified in a manner that is hardly possible in a religious service, and naturally begins to long for something less sumptuous and more simple. Therefore those 'verts, we consider are not altogether such formidable, religious "Mother Carey's chickens," as some make them out to be. It would be a more dignified position for those panic-stricken Protestants who make an outcry against the genuflexions, vestments and crucifixes of the High Church party, to regard them with placid contempt, rather than assail them with vituperation, anathema and ridicule. As a worthy Presbyterian minister remarked regarding them; "Never bother yourself about Maconochie, Tooth, Darling, or Knox-Little, and their ceremonies. They amuse themselves and don't hurt us."

There is one most commendable outcome of the ritualistic movement, that it would be, in the last degree, unfair to overlook viz: the great earnestness and self-sacrifice displayed by ritualistic clergy, in missionary work among the masses, (strictly so called) of our large cities. Their opponents may call it a zeal for proselytising or what else they please, but one result of their work is very manifestly the elevation of the individuals composing those masses into a higher sphere of civilization, and such a result is worthy of the efforts and sympathy of all the churches and creeds. We confess to being somewhat indifferent to the means of purifying the atmosphere of the slums of our great cities, provided it be made more fit for man, made at first in the image of God, to breathe, instead of being like the concentrated vapours of the habitation of devils.

The Drinking Question.

The visit of the veteran temperance lecturer, Mr. John B. Gough, to our city, can scarcely fail to have a stimulating effect on the total abstinence sentiment and effort in our midst. On this subject, it must be conceded, whether we agree with his utterances or not, he gave no uncertain sound. After thirty-eight years of almost continuous labour in the lecture field, he is just as radical and ultra as he was at the beginning. His ringing speech the other evening at Shaftesbury Hall, whatever may have been thought of it in other respects, can scarcely have left any doubt in the minds of his listeners as to the thorough sincerity of the speaker. It is evident that he believes and therefore speaks. Besides he is himself a striking illustration of the doctrine to the advocacy of which he has devoted the greater part of his life. It is quite evident that he, at least, could not have been rescued from the horrible pit into which he had fallen by any other course than total abstinence. The milder means, which may have been effective in some less desperate cases, would have had no efficacy in his. Neither the light wines, nor the lager beer, in which some people have so much confidence, would have satisfied his inordinate craving for alcoholic stimulants, which was the result of immoderate indulgence on a peculiarly nervous and sensitive organization. His, beyond question, was a case which called for the most radical and heroic treatment. Every one acquainted with the pathetic story of his life must feel that he at least has a right to speak well of the cause of which he is the greatest living advocate, and by which he was himself rescued, like a brand plucked from the burning. It is this, no doubt, and the tone of sincerity, and thorough conviction which pervades all his utterances, almost as much as the inimitable style of his address, which disposes people to listen to him with sympathy and respect.

But sincere and hearty as were the demonstrations of respect and affection with which "the old man eloquent" has been greeted by the people of Toronto, our temperance friends must not be in too great a hurry in arriving at the conclusion that the doctrine advocated by him meets with universal acceptance, even in this community. By a singular coincidence, it so happened, that at the very time, or about the time that Mr. Gough was lifting up his voice so manfully in behalf of total abstinence, a counterblast was being blown by other parties whose utterances are scarcely worthy of less respect than his own. It is a rather significant fact that even so severe a moralist, and so active a social reformer, as the religious editor of the Mail has felt it to be his duty to utter an earnest protest against the unwarrantable extremes, as it appears to him, to which the churches are running, and the extent to which they are limiting the liberty of their members in respect to this matter. He is not, of course in favour of drunkenness; as he never gets drunk himself, he would not like to hear of anbyody else getting into this disreputable condition; but he distinguishes between temperance and total abstinence, and gives it as his opinion, that it is the abuse of alcoholic beverages, rather than their use, that is to be deprecated and guarded against. He admits, indeed, that people who cannot drink without getting drunk ought not to drink at all; but he thinks that, because there are people who cannot play with fire without being burned, there is no good reason why others should be deprived of the privilege of doing so if they see fit. And at the same that the great Conservative organ has been speaking on this side of the question, the pastor of the new St, Andrew's Church, one of the most eloquent and popular of our city ministers, has been letting his light shine to the same effect. Even in the Pan-Presbyterian Council, in Philadelphia, Mr. Macdonnell felt it to be his duty to lift up his voice in favour of larger liberty for the membership of the churches of his denomination, and in protest against the reproach which is often cast upon those who are engaged in the liquor traffic. No one would accuse this gifted preacher, any more than he would accuse the still more gifted editor of the Mail, of being the advocate of drunkenness; to this he is as decidedly opposed as any of his brethren, but he seems to think that this great evil can be as well, and perhaps more effectually, prevented by moderation than by total abstinence.

These sentiments, especially coming from such high quarters, can scarcely fail to have an effect upon public opinion. If our manners have grown a little too puritanic and ascetic, of late, we may, under the influence of such teaching, look for a speedy abatement of the evil. If the press and the pulpit of the country generally, should take their cue from these gentlemen, our austerity, probably, would soon be modified and the rigidity of our morality considerably relaxed. And even if they are left to labour alone in their several spheres, with the Licensed Victuallers' Association at their back, they need not despair of considerable success. The gentlemen of the Association, too, are decidedly opposed to drunkenness; they find that it injures their business and makes it disreputable; and if they had their way—the most respectable of them, at least,—they would never have a drunkard about their establishments. They would like to see drunkenness entirely done away, but they think the most effectual way of bringing about this desirable result is, to furnish the people with plenty of good wholesome liquor to be drunk in a moderate way. This Association is understood to be pretty well organized; it is said to have plenty of money, its agents are numerous and widely scattered, insomuch that their influence is everywhere felt; and its zeal is intensified by the feeling of self-interest. It is no wonder that, in view of these facts, some people have thought that the Association could have done its own work pretty effectually without the assistance of either Mr. Macdonnell or the Mail.

Indeed, some ultra Teetotallers go farther and say that, what they are pleased to call their special-pleading, in behalf of moderate drinking is not only uncalled for, but that it is mischievous. They say, moreover, that however specious their reasoning, it is shallow and false. They say, that moderate drinking is the cause of the evil which those people are looking to it to cure. They affirm that there are few, if any, who become immoderate drinkers or drunkards at once,—and that moderate drinking is the school in which drunkards are made. From the moderate drinkers, they say, the drunkards are recruited and their ranks are kept full. They go even so far as to say that, but for this moderate drinking, the whole race of drunkards would die out in a single generation. They say, too, that the transition from the moderate use of intoxicating drinks—from what is considered their use to their abuse—is so gradual and imperceptible that no one has ever been able to point out the exact line which separates them; and that the man who has come to be a moderate drinker, is not always aware himself when he is crossing the line which separates the class to which he thinks himself to belong, from that more advanced class, which he has been accustomed to look upon with abhorrence. They admit, indeed, that there are some people who, except so far as purely physical effects are concerned, may drink with impunity. There are cold phlegmatic natures which are scarcely susceptible of intoxication; but these, they say, never, as a rule, amount to much whether drunk or sober; and they contend that it is unreasonable to keep up the drinking usages of society for the gratification of these, when it can only be done at the imminent peril of a much better class; and that as the Church is the guardian of the weak, it can scarcely be too rigid in its exclusion of practices fraught with so much danger. Into this controversy we enter not, but having in a rough way placed it before our readers, we leave them to judge for themselves.

It is somewhat unexpected to find the great iron Chancellor of Germany unbending to the humanities of culture, and taking an interest both with purse and commendation in antiquarian researches in the heart of Central America. He has aided, through the Government, two German professors, Reiss and Hubel, in excavations after Peruvian antiquities in the Necropolis of Ancad, with a view to obtaining a knowledge of the civilization and industries of the extinct races of the ancient Incas, which he pronounced to be quite as valuable to mankind in the present day as the rusty nails and shivered goblets which the learned Schliemann and wife have been digging after at Mycenæ for years.

Since the institution of the Irish persecutions the St. James Gazette publishes the following:—"There is good reason to believe that the government, perceiving how rapidly the state of Ireland passes from bad to worse, and aware that its feeble action is exciting discontent amongst men of all parties, including their own, is considering the adoption of measures more immediately repressive than those lately contemplated. That they may adopt such measures without much remonstrance from even the most advanced of their partisans need not be doubted. Their own position is becoming too serious."

Sir John A. Macdonald.

One who has for more than thirty years occupied the prominent place in Canadian politics, and held the loyal attachment and enthusiastic regard of multitudes of Canadians as Sir John Macdonald has done, must in many respects be no ordinary man. To attempt to depreciate his original powers, or to belittle his varied achievements would be worse than foolish, and would necessarily result in something worse than failure. Here is the fact which nobody can deny that one who entered public life with no special advantages of any kind, with no powerful connections, no influential patronage, no personal reputation for either talents or acquirements, no wealth to bribe, no power to awe, and no social rank to attract, has yet for more than a generation been the foremost man, not only in his own province, but in the whole of British North America. The familiar and friendly references to John A. have for all the years been more frequent, and made by a larger number of persons than to any other in British North America. The owner of these initials, has, throughout his whole career, been an influential factor in the moulding of the legislation and determining the political action of his country, and during the larger portion of the period may be said to be all but omnipotent, for his plans and his purposes have apparently been carried out simply because they were his, and because his followers have seemingly come to the conclusion that what he advocates must be reasonable, and what he did could not possibly be wrong. Besides unexampled success have never so changed his nature, or his bearing as to alienate from him any considerable number of his adherents, while temporary failure has but shown more clearly what a hold he has upon his friends, and to what a large extent his opponents also have a kind word for the man, even when they most strenuously oppose the politician and condemn the minister. No Canadian within the memory of the living has been more trusted by his countrymen, more loyally served by his political followers, more tenderly judged in reference to much questionable personal conduct, more honoured by his sovereign, better known to the outside world, or more thoroughly identified in the estimation of all, with Canada in all her interests, all her powers, all her progress, and all her prospects. To attempt to explain all this without giving Sir John credit for more than average ability, or credit for anything above a certain degree of low cunning, and a large amount of reckless unscrupulousness, which would never allow him to be restrained by considerations of honour, not to say anything of the suggestions of conscience would be as foolish as it would be hopeless. Nobody uninfluenced by incurable prejudice and unblinded by increasing political hatred could possibly fall back upon such an explanation of the phenomenon, for it would bring the whole to the level of something very like miracle, and would render what is, in any point of view, quite out of the usual course, altogether unique in the history not only of this country, but of any other which could be mentioned. It is quite true that we have been informed on very high authority, that the world is governed with very little wisdom, and that men in general "are like turkeys driven with a stick and red clout to the market." But all this sounds better as an epigrammatic saying, than as a statement of sober fact, and a conclusion of actual experience.

HIS WONDERFUL CAREER.

It is not worth while to give in order a bald narrative of the external facts of Sir John's interesting career. This has been done already, with more than sufficient frequency, and often with more than ordinary dulness. Everybody is tolerably familiar with the date of his birth, the character of his education, his entrance upon his work as a barrister at 21, and his practical withdrawal from his profession at a comparatively early stage in his career, in order to make politics his life business, and statecraft his favourite study and principal weapon, both of aggression and defence. As a lawyer,—a successful and lucrative course was open to him, and no doubt had he kept to his profession, the highest prizes in it would, in all likelihood before this, have been secured. He preferred a different course, and, the result is now what we see—a powerful minister but a poor man,—an astute politician, but no great authority in law, one far better suited for political struggles than for forensic discussions,—nominally, in short, still a lawyer, but practically dependent upon others, both for his law and his learning.

HIS SUPPLENESS UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.

From the first Sir John has professedly been a keen Conservative, but at the same time he has been supple and accommodating, when the question was "power or no power;" and when the alternative has been presented of either carrying out, what he had opposed and denounced or going into the "cold shades," he has shown a readiness to "alter" which could not have been surpassed by some of the most ambitious and accommodating of the waiters on Providence in the Western States. He has had always the feeling of the Duke of Wellington, that Her Majesty's Government must be carried on in some way or another, and as he has had the full conviction that, it is better all round when he has a hand in the management, he has not been very careful about personal consistency, but has been quite willing if things could not go on in one way to try another even though it were the very opposite of that which he had originally advocated.

A PRACTICAL POLITICIAN.

He has, however, been true to himself as a "practical politician," who had no love for running his head against a stone wall and no admiration for a consistency which would have made him powerless to deal with the actualities of the present, except in a way that would have left him entirely out in the cold. He has thus carried not a few measures which he had opposed and denounced, and his admirers have even tried to have him honoured as the great promoter of what he had bitterly striven against till opposition was worse than folly, and till nothing but a somersault could save himself from defeat and his party from demoralization. Numerous illustrations of this accommodating turn of mind could be given, but everyone will at once think of the secularisation of the Clergy Reserves long ago, and the adoption of the National Policy cry in more recent times, as perhaps the most conspicuous examples of his suppleness and convenient power of noticing and acquiescing in the course of public opinion most likely to be successful, and, therefore, the most suited either for carrying him into power, or for keeping his position when already there. He has played off party against party, and prejudice against prejudice; has ever been ready to flatter if by this means he could gain a point; and has not scrupled sometimes to adopt plans and to follow courses which a high morality could not but condemn, and which a keener sense of personal honour would entirely have repudiated with indignation and scorn. We may not say that

HE HAS "LIED,"

for that is an offensive word, and is surrounded with unpleasant associations. But he has used phrases in a "non-natural" sense, and has systematically shown himself an adept in the use of weapons which were best suited for shooting round a corner. That he has been more lavish in promises than careful about the subsequent performance, his greatest admirers will be the readiest to admit. In the matter of bribery, as understood in its hardest and lowest sense, he has ever been an adept, always, however, stopping, as he himself most earnestly affirms, at that point which enabled him to say without any mental reservation, "Personally these hands are clean." Eloquent in the ordinary sense of the term, he cannot be said to be, though if true eloquence consists in the power of persuading an audience, then Sir John may justly lay claim to the gift, for he can generally feel the pulse of his hearers with unerring certainty, can so accommodate himself to their whims, and keep so fully on a level with their understandings, while good-naturedly tickling them under the fifth rib and putting them in good humour with the speaker and themselves, that even when he does not convince, he disarms opposition and goes a great way toward realizing his aims.

A READER OF MEN.

That he is either morally or intellectually a high type of man, could scarcely be said with truth. His whole career, both publicly and privately has shown the reverse. But he is shrewd in the discernment of character, fertile in resource, plausible and magnetic in personal intercourse, and beneath an exterior of levity which sometimes even verges on buffoonery never loses sight of the end for which he works and the policy which he is bound to carry through. Some people have said that his one policy is never to do to-day what can be delayed till to-morrow, but this is only very partially in accordance with facts. His power of playing with the passions and more selfish springs of action has always been remarkable, and has been assiduously cultivated. His system of "dangling" offices before expectants for a lengthened period has been deliberately adopted and is not a mere waiting for something to turn up. When necessity requires, or when policy suggests he can be swift enough both in creating a place and in bestowing an office. But he finds delay generally more in accordance with his nature and more helpful to his purposes, while we cannot but add that when at last he does decide he manages to make the disappointed almost as well pleased as the successful, and generally keeps them as loyal to himself, and as anxious as ever for the success of his plans and the permanency of his rule. He can refuse a favour with a better grace than many of his rivals can bestow an office, can make a disappointed suitor laugh and send away a place-hunter empty handed with the strong persuasion that "John A. is the prince of good fellows and the greatest of statesmen." Men may call all this the art of "humbugging" if they please. We rather think that that phrase is a favourite one with Sir John himself. It is, however, something more and something better. Not certainly the highest of gifts, but very precious and very powerful in the hands of every one who would lead his fellows as he finds them, and make them rejoice to follow his guidance, and carry out his will at whatever sacrifice.

WHOLLY GIVEN UP TO HIS BUSINESS.

We must not neglect to notice another influential factor in Sir John's success. He has given himself wholly to his work. He has made politics his business to which everything else has had to give place. Some would say that he is lazy, ignorant and superficial. Within his sphere he is really very much the reverse. That sphere is not a specially wide one except in politics in general, and specially in Canadian affairs, but within this, where is the man who is acquainted with a larger number of influential persons, who has studied them more carefully, and who knows them more thoroughly, both in their weaknesses and in their strength? We know of none such among the Conservatives, and now that George Brown has gone, Alexander McKenzie alone even approaches him, on the other side! Sir John's career draws to a close. It has been a distinguished one, but can scarcely be characterized as noble. No one could with truth speak of "John A." as an exalted type of either the man or the politician. Undoubtedly able, fertile in resource and plausible in address, he has yet not presented to the world such a model for the youth to imitate and the old to admire, as wisdom could recommend or virtue could applaud. Still he has done good work, and when the present mists of prejudice shall have been rolled away and his whole career shall be followed and guaged by persons uninfluenced by passion, and unswayed by either personal enmity or by private friendship, it may be found that Canada righteously puts him on the honour-roll of her illustrious, and that while not the Heaven-given and gifted minister, he is at present represented as being, he has been also not quite the moral reprobate, and the intellectual bankrupt his enemies have loved to describe. He leaves us no successor. He will not willingly withdraw from power, but when he does, either through physical infirmity or death, his following will break up, his system will be at an end. New questions will emerge, and new combinations will be formed. It is not pretended that any of his present followers can successfully step into his shoes. Certainly Tupper cannot, as little can Tilley. Galt might try to persuade himself that he could, but would equally fail if he tried. Besides this last we may say almost as much as Sir John, 'vixi.' The disintegrating process which is at present going on in the Reform party will as surely overtake the Conservative when Sir John gets to his coveted and conspicuous coign of vantage for watching the Canadian Pacific Railway and its management. New needs will cause new combinations, and in due time out of the struggles and overturnings of the house, the new leader or leaders will emerge suited to the character and prepared for the service of the future as the Kingston Knight has been for the past, and is, so far, for the present as well.

ECHOES FROM ABROAD.

The fares on Southern railroads average about six cents a mile. On one road, eighteen miles long, the fare is $2.

It is currently reported that the Duke of Westminster intends selling off his fine stud of racehorses and quitting the turf altogether.

On May 2, 1841, two young artists made their debut at a concert in Paris. The one, aged 22, was Jacques Offenbach; and the other, aged 12, Anton Rubinstein.

It is rumored that Count Wilhelm Bismarck, son of the German Chancellor, is to be married to the Countess Irma Andrassy, daughter of the famous Austrian statesman.

It is very probable that Sir Charles Dilke will succeed Mr. Adam at the Board of Works, of course with a seat in the Cabinet, to which latter distinction Sir Charles' claims are incontestable

The year 1881 will be an eventful one for the imperial families of both Austria and Germany, as its first three months will not have elapsed before the heirs to the thrones of both empires have entered into the bonds of matrimony.

Miss Eva Sothern, the only daughter of the well known actor, has been offered an excellent theatrical engagement, but as the young lady is a ward of the Court of Chancery it will be necessary to make application to the Court before she be permitted to accept the engagement.

The movement for the establishment of the Junior Reform Club in London has received the assent of a large number of the liberal members of the House. It is to be a self-supporting institution, will cost £100,000 or thereabouts, and will not be subsidized by donations from the wealthy members of the party. Its house accommodation will provide for the possibility of 3,000 members.

The action for libel brought by Mr. E. Lawson of the Daily Telegraph, against Mr. Labouchere, the proprietor, and Mr. Wyman, the printer, of Truth, will be heard early next term, in all probability before the Lord Chief Justice of England. Sir John Holker will be Mr. Lawson's leading counsel; Mr. Charles Russell, Q. C., will appear for Mr. Wyman, and Mr. Labouchere will conduct his own defence.

"Is it absolutely necessary," asks Mr. Edmund Yates, "that a prima donna should occupy in a hotel two rooms herself, have two rooms for her maid, and positively two rooms for—her dresses? Is it so necessary that an angelic singer, known for her sweet temper and her distinguished manners, should very nearly lose her sweet temper, and angelic reputation, and her winning ways? I cannot believe it!"

The meeting between Roberts and the generals at Candahar was rather a melancholy affair. Burrows felt that he had not come well out of the Maiwand business, although his personal gallantry at that ill-starred fight appears to have been deserving of the highest praise. As for General Primrose, he looked very down on his luck, as though he had not heard the last of those alarming telegrams of his, and of his precipitate withdrawal into the citadel.

The wedding of Prince Rudolf and Princess Stephanie being fixed for next February, a committee of Viennese merchants and manufacturers has been constituted for the purpose of receiving contributions toward a magnificent wedding present for the bride. The receipts already amount to 100,000 florins. The principal gift will consist of a magnificent casket, which is to be a masterpiece of Vienna art industry, and is to eclipse anything of the kind hitherto produced.

Sarah Bernhardt on a Bust.

A cable dispatch informed us a few days ago that Sara Benhardt brings with her to this country "a collection of her paintings, and an unfinished bust of M. Coquelin, which she hopes to complete on the voyage." "Such, indeed, was Sarah's intention, but the bust of M. Coquelin will not be finished on the voyage." The second day out the fair sculptor went to work at the bust, and a lurch of the vessel caused her chisel to slip, and away went a portion of old Coquelin's nose; pretty soon, one of his ears was amputated, and then Sara began to grow unsteady on her pins, and her chisel plowed a furrow across his face from the lobe of the left ear to the right eyebrow, and two or three more slips made M. Coquelin look as if he had been in a torchlight political riot. On the third day Sara lost all interest in art, and, believing she would die before morning, asked the captain if he wouldn't turn the vessel around and go back. Her request was refused, but the bust will not be completed on the voyage. This is reliable.

ART AND DRAMATIC ...

A Child of Moliere's—What do Bernhards live on?—French sole.

A son of the Compte de F... just made a wonderfully succ... appearance in Paris as a comic actor ... Francais.

Nilsson receives in Europe a ... stipend for a night's singing than P... the former being paid two hundred ... and the latter two hundred pounds.

Lord Dundreary's daughter, ... Sothern, is preparing for the stage ... blonde, beautiful, high-bred, and ... She makes her debut as Mova in the ... rove.

Turner seldom painted in the op... as the clouds, shadows, and hues are ... petually changing that he consid... attempt untrue to nature. He to... from which he elaborated his work ... ously in-doors.

As De Pasqualis was singing Ri... Rome he noticed a commotion in ... quet, and a woman was carried ... fainting condition. He sang on, ... plause encouraged him. When he ... home he found that it was his mot... had fainted. She was dead.

Surely the ways of theatrical ... peculiar. When a lot of tramps ... about the entrance to hear the ... the policemen drive them away, the ... telegraphs all over the country ... play is an immense success, and that ... are turned away from the doors.

Just after the successful first night ... Pere Prodigue a critic met Dumas ... ing, "Of course you intend your own ... by it?" "If I had met him," was ... ply, "I should have called the play Le ... Prodigue." Dumas fils has an in... about forty thousand dollars a year.

A young lady artist married a young ... tleman artist. The uncle of the bride ... a call upon them and found them sitting ... opposite corners of their joint studio, ... sulks, the husband saying that his ... waist was out of proportion, and the ... saying that her husband's nose ... small.

When Offenbach was in this count... friends gave him a supper at the Bruns... and requested him in due time to cut ... game pie, when instantly a cloud of ... birds rose in the air. At his funeral ... ly coffin and hearse were covered ... flowers and crowns from all the Eur... theatres; Sardou, Gustave Dore, and ... celebrities attended, and an attach... soldiers did escort duty.

Biographies of Sarah Bernhardt, the ... sational French actress, who is soon to ... pear on the boards of our eastern the... are published. There is one stud... sion in the fulsome sketches, and ... that, although she has never been ma... Sarah Bernhardt is the mother of the ... four children. That one scandalous ... ought to be sufficient to decide her fate ... candidate for popular favour in America.

Who, after this, will say that the ... lishman is entirely cold? It seems ... can sometimes shed a tear, and even ... Edmund Yates says:—"William and ... is at any rate an affecting piece. It ... sight to see the audience crying at St. J... Theatre last Saturday night. At one ... the whole house seemed convulsed ... sobs. One colossal friend of mine, a ... warrior too, after many struggles, gave ... as a bad job and fairly howled. He ... have spoiled his handkerchief, which ... reduced to a wet rag."

The man who comes into the theatre ... often stands long in front of you, slowly ... taking off his coat and patiently wa... the stage at that critical period in ... when you would give very much ... could see the stage yourself. At a ... the man with big feet and creaking boo... most always comes in, stamping and ... ing, while the player is performing the ... est parts. Why is it that the man ... comes in late and disturbs the audience ... rushing to his seat invariably has enor... feet?

Prime Minister Gladstone, in the mid... his Eastern and Irish cares, found time ... companied by his son Herbert, to att... Madame Modjeska's first appearance ... season in "Marie Stuart" at the C... Theatre, Mr. Warner's "Othello" at ... ler's Wells, with Lord Granville, and ... first representation of Wills's modern ... version of Douglas Jerrold's "Black-... Susan," at the pathetic portions of w... London journal says, "in common w... the female and the majority of the male ... of the audience, neither Mr. Gladstone ... his son could refrain from tears.

Actresses' Arts.

A great many tricks of stage co... spring from personal defects. In w... cut of waist Modjeska appears, there ... ways a bunch of flowers or a bow pla... the left of her open corsage. When ... device is not resorted to, a little sn... silk will be trailed across diagonally ... little fan of lace will suddenly spring ... the left corner, in order to hide a scar ... breast that looks as if it might be the ... of a wound from a poniard, a "souvenir ... a romance.

Poor Lucille Western was afflicted ... birth mark. She was a regular ... Esau. About her waist there was a ... growth of silky brown hair, which ran ... a point in front. Where it come above ... tops of her dresses it was carefully sha... but the skin always remained blue ... Lucille wore a huge cross dangling over ... portion of her anatomy.

Parepa Rosa had a deep vaccination scar ... down her robust arm, and when her sl... were very short a knot of ribbon or a ... of flowers used to cover it. Before she ... so extremely stout she wore a golden b... above the elbow to hide it, but when ... armlet had to be as big as a waistcoat ... abandoned this oddity. One night, speak... of this scar to an American girl, who ... her dressing room, the Yankee of... Parepa an immediate and effectual con... ment of the offending spot. She took ... the candles off the toilet table, and, hold... it above the arm, let one drop of the ... wax fall upon the place, and there wa... further need of concealing devices. A ... of flesh-tinted powder completed the ... and Parepa's make-up box forever ... contained a bit of wax candle.

Dr. T. Munson Coan has an intere... article in the November number of H... Magazine on "Securing a Competence," ... in which he states that "the average ... income in Great Britain, is $165; ... United States, $165; in the Low Coun... $130; in France $125; in the British Co... ies, $90; in Germany, and also in Scandi... via, $85. The annual accumulation of we... in Germany is 200 millions of dollar... Great Britain, 325 millions; in France, ... millions; in the United States, 825 mill... Since 1850 our annual accumulation has ... 825 millions of dollars, and therefore each ... cade adds more to the wealth of the Uni... States than the capital value of Italy ... Spain. Every day that the sun rises ... the American people it sees an ad... $2,300 000 to the wealth of the repu... Notwithstanding this rapid and vast acc... ulation of national capital, there are ... France three times as many people who ... on their incomes as there are in the Uni... States. We make money faster than ... people in the world, and spend it a ... deal faster.

A Turkish Joker.—The best kn... story of the traditional Joe Miller, of T... key, is that of his thrice fooling an assem... of true believers out of a sermon, by th... successive jocular replies. The first time ... ascended the pulpit he said, "O, true ... lievers, do you know what I am going ... say?" They replied, "No;" whereupon ... asked, "Of what use is it to preach to ... ignoramuses?" and came down from the ... pit. The next time, when he asked ... same question, they answered, "Yes ... know;" whereupon, he said, "Then ... useless for me to tell you," and came do... The third time, having taken counsel to... ther, the congregation prepared an an... which they thought would corner ... joker-preacher, and said, "Some of us k... and some of us don't;" whereupon ... promptly replied, "Let those who kn... tell those who don't," and once more ca... down.

London World:—"It is pleasant to lea... that the Queen has sufficiently recovered ... from the heavy sorrow which darkened ... life to be able to take pleasure in being pre... sent at a gillies' ball. It is ... Her Majesty's imperative du... to be p... sent at the State balls and co...certs which ... are given every season, and the invitations ... to which are still issued in the Queen's ... name; and next year I hope Her Majesty ... will agree to receive her distinguished guests ... in person at Buckingham Palace."

The Emperor Napoleon spent the night ... after Sedan in reading a novel. It was ... Last of the Barons.

... PUBLISHED ... FRIDAY MORNING

... Provincial ... County Business ... Matters and an Instructive ...

... in advance, $1 50 in three months ... paid till end of the year. No pa... discontinued until all arrearages are ... except at the option of the publisher, ... refusing papers without paying ... held responsible for the subscrip... they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year			$50 00
Half do	do		30 00
Quarter do	do		18 00
Eight ...	do		10 00
Cards ...	do		4 60
Six ...			50
... under, first insertion			15
... subsequent insertion			75
... to ten lines, first insertion			25
... subsequent insertion			8
... ten lines, first insertion per line			2
... subsequent insertion

... ber of lines to be reckoned by ... occupied measured by a scale of ... Advertisements without ... directions will be published till for... charged accordingly. All transitory ... advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday ... preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

D... ... RDY,

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, ACCOUCH... Eugenia P. O. 6-41.

Drs. Sproule & Carter,

Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c.

OFFICE.—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes,

Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound.

OFFICE.—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost.

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery ... &c., Owen Sound, have re... ... Flesherton, Office open every Thur... ...

Alfred Frost, J. W. Frost LL.B., County Crown Attorney.

James Masson.

BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW Master in Chancery, Owen Sound. Sept. 17, 1880.

James Lamon,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c. Money loaned at lowest rates on ... real estate. Land bought and ... buyer and seller introduced free of commi...

DUNDALK.

September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents

Wm. Brown.

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches ... tended to and carefully executed. N. B.—Money to Lend on Real E... ...rity.

Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880.

W. L. Smith.

GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursey Stock, Williamsford Station. Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent, Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farm... ...chants, and Land Sales ... ...ded to and charges mode... Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880.

George Corbet, Jr.,

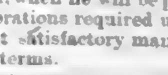
LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL A... Owen Sound. Money to Loan ... ...es of interest. Principal payable at ... ...l of a term of years, and interest half y... or yearly, or principal and interest repa... ...le in instalments.

A number of desirable Improved Farm... ...sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing.

DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator ... ...aford and Markdale. Having purch... ...ovincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin... ...tire stock of original Field Notes, ...ports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys ... ...e within the last fifty-five years, I ... ...pared to make Surveys in strict ac... ...ce therewith. Profiles and Estimates ... Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications ... Building Bridges, furnished on applica... ...n. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest ... ...ders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH ... ...rkdale, will be promptly attended to. Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Dentistry.



Mr. James J. White.

Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen S...

WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE Markdale, on the last Wednes... ...h month, when he will be prepared t... ...m all operations required upon the ... ...the most satisfactory manner, and ... ...sonable terms. 1

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE

MARKDALE.

Having leased the above hotel and ... ...ghly refurnished and refitted it, the tra... ...ng public will find every accommodation ... Only the best of liquors and cigars kept ... ...od stabling. Careful hostler.

JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor

Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL,

MEAFORD, Ont.

... J. McGIRR, Proprietor.

Every accommodation for the travelling ... ...blic. The bar is well stocked with the ... ...oicest Wines and Liquors and the best ... ...ands of Cigars. Free 'bus to and from all trains. Sept. 17, 1880. 1

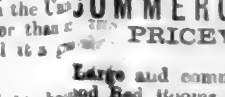
COMMERCIAL HOTEL,

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample R... ...ood Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and la... ...ll supplied with the best the market ... ...ds; good Stabling and attentive Hostler.

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.

McLEOD & WILSON,

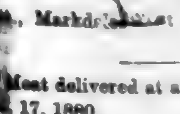


BUTCHERS,

..., Markdale, ... door to Expos...

Meat delivered at any house in to... Sept. 17, 1880. 1

Sheep and Cattle.



FARMERS having good fat Sheep ... Cattle to sell, will find it to their adva... to leave there names and address at ... ...son's Hotel, Revere House, Markd... the undersigned are still on the war pa... will positively pay the highest prices.

C. W. & A. SPEER

... 17th, 1880.

Markdale Standard,

VOL. I.—NO. 1. MARKDALE, ONT., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1880. WHOLE NO. 1.

The Markdale Standard IS PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING In time to meet the early mails. Contains the latest Foreign and Provincial News, Local Intelligence, County Business, Commercial Matters and an Instructive Miscellany.

$1 25 in advance, $1 50 in three months, if not paid till end of the year. No paper discontinued until all arrearages are paid, except at the option of the publisher, and parties refusing papers without paying will be held responsible for the subscription until they comply with the rules.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

One column, one year		$50 00
do	do	30 00
Quarter do	do	18 00
do	do	10 00
do	do	4 60
Lines and under, first insertion		50
Each subsequent insertion		15
Up to ten lines, first insertion		75
Each subsequent insertion		25
Over ten lines, first insertion per line		8
Each subsequent insertion		2

The number of lines to be reckoned by the space occupied measured by a scale of solid nonpareil. Advertisements without specific directions will be published till forbid and charged accordingly. All transitory advertisements must be in the office of publication by 11 o'clock on the Thursday morning preceding their publication.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL & BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Medical.

DR. ... ADY, PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, ACCOUCHEUR, EUGENIA P. O. 6-tf.

Drs. Sproule & Carter, Physicians, Surgeons, Accoucheurs &c. OFFICE—Medical Hall; residence at Markdale House. Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Legal.

Chas. R. Wilkes, Barrister at Law, - Owen Sound. OFFICE—Millers's building, over Robinson's store, Poulet Street. 1-y

Frost & Frost, BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c. Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore. ... Frost. J. W. Frost, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

James Masson, BARRISTER and ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Master in Chancery, Owen Sound. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

James Lamon, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, SOLICITOR IN Chancery, Notary Public, &c. Money loaned at lowest rates on personal and real estate. Lands bought and sold, buyer and seller introduced free of commission. DUNDALK. September 21st, 1880. 1

Conveyancers & Land Agents.

Wm. Brown, ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c., Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed. N. B. Money to Lend on Real Estate security. Markdale, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

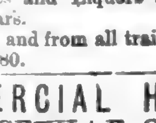
W. L. Smith, GENERAL AGENT AND DEALER IN Nursery Stock, Williamsford Station. Sept. 17, 1880, 1

Alexander Brown, ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate. Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

George Corbet, Jr., LAND, LOAN AND GENERAL AGENT, Owen Sound. Money to Loan at low rates of interest. Principal payable at the end of a term of years, and interest half yearly or yearly, or principal and interest repayable in instalments. A number of desirable Improved Farms for sale. 1-y

J. G. Sing, DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL LAND Surveyor, Draughtsman and Valuator, Meaford and Markdale. Having purchased the Provincial Land Surveyor Charles Rankin's entire stock of original Field Notes, Plans, Reports, Instructions, &c., of all his Surveys made within the last fifty-five years, I am prepared to make Surveys in strict accordance therewith. Profiles and Estimates for Grading Hills, Plans and Specifications for Building Bridges, furnished on application. Money to Loan at 8 per cent interest. Orders by letter, or left with G. J. BLYTH, Markdale, will be promptly attended to. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Dentistry.



Mr. James J. White, Assistant to Dr. Cameron, Owen Sound, WILL BE AT THE REVERE HOUSE, Markdale, on the last Wednesday in each month, when he will be prepared to perform all operations required upon the mouth in the most satisfactory manner, and upon reasonable terms. 1-y

Hotels.

MANSION HOUSE MARKDALE. Having leased the above hotel and thoroughly refurnished and refitted it, the travelling public will find every accommodation. Only the best of liquors and cigars kept. Good stabling. Careful hostler. JOHN VAN HORN, Proprietor. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

ROYAL HOTEL, MEAFORD, Ont. J. McGIRR, - - PROPRIETORS. Every accommodation for the travelling public. The bar is well stocked with the best Wines and Liquors and the best brands of Cigars. Free 'bus to and from all trains. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

COMMERCIAL HOTEL. PRICEVILLE, Ont. Large and commodious Sample Rooms: Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larder supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's. THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor. 8 greatly reduced

McLEOD & WILSON,

BUTCHER

... St., Markdale, next door to Expositor. Meat delivered at any house in town. Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Sheep and Cattle.

FARMERS having good fat Sheep or Cattle to sell, will find it to their advantage to leave there names and address at McIntosh's Hotel, Revere House, Markdale, as the undersigned are still on the war path, and will positively pay the highest prices. C. W. & A. SPEERS. Sept. 17th, 1880. 1-y

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup. LABORATORY, 77 W. 3d St., New York City. LATE OF JERSEY CITY.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Disease, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc. The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man! 70,000 AGENTS HAVE SOLD SINCE 1870 9.000.000 Bottles This Syrup Possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the Ptyaline in the Saliva, which converts the starch and sugar of the food into glucose. A deficiency in Ptyaline causes Wind and Souring of the food in the stomach. If the medicine is taken immediately after eating the fermentation of food is prevented.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It Regulates the Bowels.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Quiets the Nervous System.
It Promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the Old Blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin and induces Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the hereditary taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all manner of skin diseases and internal humors.

There are no spirits employed in its manufacture, and it can be taken by the most delicate babe, or by the aged and feeble, care only being required in attention to directions.

PRICE OF LARGE BOTTLES, ... PRICE OF SMALL BOTTLES, ...

Read the VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIALS of Persons who have been CURED by the use of the BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT. Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont. Dear Sir—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup has benefited me more for Despepsia and Liver Complaint, than any medicine I ever before used. MRS. M. J. BRIDGE.

SAVED HER LIFE. Kelvin, Brant Co., Ont. Dear Sir—I have been under the doctors' hands almost continually for eight years, this year being the first that I have not employed any physician. After using your Indian Blood Syrup for a brief space of time, I was enabled to do all my work. I truly believe it was the means of saving my life. MRS. MARY LEONARD.

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS. Burford, Brant Co., Ont. DEAR SIR:—In February, 1876, I was afflicted with a severe Cough which grew worse, confining me to my room, and was finally pronounced incurable by my physician. In Jan., 1877, I commenced using the Indian Blood Syrup, when I at once commenced to gain in strength, and in a short time I was enabled to do a fair day's work. My Cough is now entirely gone. ISAAC HORNER, J. P.

CURES ERYSIPELAS. Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can. DEAR SIR:—I was severely afflicted with Erysipelas for two years, and a short trial of your Indian Blood Syrup effectually cured me. MRS. JANET ANDERSON.

LIVER COMPLAINT. Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can. DEAR SIR:—I have used your great Idian Blood Syrup for Liver Complaint, and have received great benefit therefrom. I recommend its use to all similarly afflicted. MELSON CARR.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH. Mt. Forest, Wellington Co., Ont., Can. DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that your valuable Indian Blood Syrup cured me of Cramps in the Stomach. W. N. CURROW.

DISEASE OF THE STOMACH. Cross Hill, Waterloo Co., Ont. DEAR SIR:—I was troubled with severe Pains in my Stomach, and also with Loss of Appetite and was unable to get anything to relieve me until I took your Indian Blood Syrup which effected a speedy cure. I shall always give your medicine the praise it so justly deserves. NANCY LEE.

SCABBY HANDS. Neustadt, Grey Co., Ont. DEAR SIR:—My Hands became Scabby, and I was unable to tell what it was and went to a doctor, who gave me medicine, which did no good. I then procured some of your Indian Blood Syrup and had taken it only a short time, when the Scabs disappeared, and now my hands are as well as ever. I can safely recommend it as a valuable remedy. MRS. HENRY HUFF.

